2. The library to issue to teachers special cards which entitle the holder to six books at a time, in addition to those drawn on the ordinary card.

3. The collection of reference-books belonging to the library (some 7,000 volumes at the central library and several hundreds at the branches) to be resorted to periodically, and their use studied by teachers as well as by pupils, under guidance of library officials.

4. The library authorities, in co-operation with the school authorities, to compile and print lists of books for topical research and for reading supplementary to the school course. Larger works (e. g., art folios illustrating the costume or habits of a people or period or other aspects of civilization) to be exhibited at the library to classes coming under the guidance of teachers. In cases where recourse to the library is impracticable, books for topical research to be sent direct to the schools and left there on temporary deposit, to be used under supervision of the teachers.

5. The library to print a list of good "general reading" for children of the school age, which teachers may safely recommend to their pupils, and

6. For the distribution of these and other books each school to be constituted a delivery station of the public library, with periodic deliveries of books by the library teams.

Public Library of the City of Boston, Aug. 1.

THE NEW CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY.

Of the style of the Italian Renaissance, it is constructed of the purest white granite, quarried at Concord, N. H. The inner courts, however, were furnished by Maryland. The floor space, exclusive of cellar, covers nearly eight acres, and, with inner courts fronting on four streets, is lighted by about 2,000 windows. A massive staircase with a granite balustrade over an arched porte-cochère forms the approach to the edifice, and above the three entrance doors three carved spandrels represent, in female figures, art, science and literature.

The roofing is of sheet copper, the whole finished by a carved balustrade of granite. The dome—at apex 195 feet from the ground—is covered with gold leaf twenty-three carats fine, and above the lantern at the top the gilded torch of science burns perpetually. Sixteen elaborate pillars in front and twelve columns in each corner pavilion give an imposing effect. Upon the keystone of thirty-three window arches on the four sides are carved in granite as many human heads, types of races. Below the roof of the center pavilion on the west front four heroic figures represent Atlas, surmounted by a pediment, with American eagles forming the center of an emblematic group.

On the ground floor four wide corridors extend, one on each side, vaulted in masonry, with walls lined with choice marbles. The reading-room is approached through a marble vestibule with gilded ceiling. On each side is a marble stairway, the newel posts carved in festoons of flowers and finished by bronze lamp-bearers. The reading-room is nearly circular, eight noble pillars of Tennessee marble rising forty feet to the blue concave above. These are surmounted by two shades of marble, finished by heroic statues.

Twenty-four grand arches are inserted with pilasters and architraves in classic carvings, and above these fifty-three more arches, surmounted by a balustrade, run entirely around the hall. The concave above is decorated with stucco work, in which figures in relief are seen, while the center is frescoed with an allegorical group. The whole is lighted by eight semicircular windows thirty-two feet wide, and will seat 250 readers, giving each a screened desk and allow four feet of room. On the library floor above the corridors have white marble wainscotings, arched with paintings, and in nine circular tympanums on the walls are frescoed the Muses.

Opening from each side of the library-room is a book repository filled with iron cases of nine tiers sixty-five feet high, each tier being but seven feet, placing any book within reach. The floors are of white marble and the stacks are lighted by 200 windows of solid plate glass. The adjustable shelves are of rolled steel, smooth as satin, and, if placed end to end, would reach forty-three miles.

Sixteen bronze statues for the reading-room will represent art, history, philosophy, poetry, science, law, commerce and religion, besides nine immense granite busts occupying the central front of the façade above the pediments and in the circular windows above the grand entrance. The remaining space of this floor contains copyright record-rooms, office and committee-rooms, lecture hall and private reading-rooms.

The second floor is devoted to an art gallery, with a glass roof for works which have been acquired by copyright—many of them the choicest of engravings—and a map-room already possessing over 15,000 maps.

A restaurant and kitchen for use of the attendants and readers is provided in the attic. Seven passenger elevators and lifts for books, etc., are furnished, while an underground tunnel connects the building with the Capitol. In the basement are found rooms for bookbinding, for unbound books, periodicals and pamphlets, package and storage-rooms. The library will accommodate 4,500,000 volumes, and the entire cost of the building will be about $6,000,000. E. K. B.

CURRENT THOUGHT.

AT HOME.

The Golden Rule replies to The Churchman's anxiety about the "enormous" expense of the annual Christian Endeavor conventions, estimated by the latter at over $1,000,000, with the statement "that the total expenses of the Washington convention, including all the car fare, very carefully estimated, sleeper tickets where necessary, meals on the train and board at Washington, was not over half a million dollars, . . . an average of $25 for each delegate outside the city. Almost always our Christian Endeavor delegates are self-sent. . . . Does any one believe that this half a million dollars would have been given to the missionary boards or to Armenia, provided the Christian Endeavor Society were annihilated? . . . The figures for only the last year showed gifts from the Endeavorers to church work and missions amounting to over half a million dollars, and undoubtedly little of this would have been given without the stimulus of the Christian Endeavor movement. Aside from the conversions made at Washington and from the deepening of the spiritual life of many thousands—beyond price—we believe that the convention will pay for itself solely in the increased gifts. . . . Your own denomination will buy enough bicycles this year to double their foreign mission work. . . . But if the young people of this country choose to spend twenty-five dollars each on a religious convention instead of using three times that sum to buy a bicycle, don't you think we might as well let them?"

This interesting intelligence comes from the Review of Reviews: "Nothing is more remarkable than the emergence of India as the dominating military factor of the southern half of the Eastern hemisphere. For some time past Sir H. H. Johnstone has recruited his bodyguard in Nyassaland from the Sikhs of northern India. The construction of the East African railway has been placed in the hands of Indian contractors, who will execute it by Indian labor, protected by Indian troops. Suakim is now garrisoned by 4,000 Sepoys, and nothing is more probable than that the relief of Bulawayo will ultimately be effected by an Indian army landed at Beira. Mr. Rhodes dreaded this in the days when he regarded the Cape as his natural base. It is possible that he may take a different view of matters now. The fact that the whole of East Africa will be more or less under the military and industrial dominion of India lends great importance to the discussion which is raging as to whether or not the Indian exchequer should be saddled with the cost of the Suakim garrison. A paper has been published giving the opinions of the Anglo-Indian authorities on this subject, but there is very little doubt as to how the question ought to be decided. Africa ought to pay its own way. If it can call upon India for trained troops in case of need, it ought to pay for them. India is not a country that can afford to pay the cost of expeditions to other continents."

Remarking upon the many hundred thousand young men who leave Great Britain every year, the North American Review describes them as "the restless class; most of them have proved themselves totally unable to accept the conditions of modern life; they hate the desk, they hate books, they cannot pass examinations. For these young men, who in other respects are often the very flower of the flock, there are places where they can live without books. . . . Now, just exactly what England was formerly to the Angle or the Jute, so is such a new country as South Africa to his descendant of the present day—the land of enterprise, the land of wealth, the land of fighting, the land of possibilities. There are other places. British Columbia is not yet filled up. Canada, Western Australia, Tasmania, could support a tenfold present population. That is not, however, the question. Things repeat themselves because we are the descendants of our ancestors. The Frisian came over and settled in England 1,500 years ago; he made the place his own; he imposed his laws, his customs, his religion, and told the Britons to become absorbed or to disappear. It is discovered that our young brother does just exactly the same thing. He is in America; he is in Australia; he must move on; he must make for himself a new nest; he must fight for it if necessary."

Comparing English and American novels, Harry Thurston Peck says, in The Cosmopolitan: "That the English influence is still strong upon us is seen with sufficient clearness in some statistics lately published, which show that twice as many English as American novels were sold in the United States during the past twelve months; and this state of things might conceivably go on forever in the face of all the magazine articles that any one can write and get published. There is not the slightest use in telling the public what it ought to read. It will read exactly what it wishes to, and it will read English in preference to American novels just so long as it finds the English novels the more entertaining. Precisely why they are more entertaining is, of course, a well-worn subject of discussion; but the real explanation is certainly not the one that is oftenest given. It may be that the life depicted by the English novelist offers a field peculiarly well suited to the purposes of the fiction writer; that the clearly defined distinctions of its society afford especially effective contrast; and that its social picturesqueness appeals with unusual force to the imagination of the American reader. But this cannot be absolutely true, for, if it were, no American writer who draws his material from his own environment would ever succeed in overcoming the prepossession of his readers, and all alike would be destined to perpetual failure. That this is not the case is seen in the universal applause accorded to Miss Wilkins, for instance, and the earlier stories of Mr. Howells. Hence the real reason why our novels of American life do not hold their own with the public for whom they are written is to be found in the novelists themselves. These think that they are national because they draw their themes from American life, but they will never be truly national until they write with a perfect unconsciousness that there is any other life at all; until they cease to keep an anxious eye on English models, and until they give up their absurd attempt to produce English effects with American materials."

Charity Chance.*

A Serial Story by Walter Raymond.

III A PLIANT HOUR.

THE sweetest eventide that ever lighted upon hill or sank beyond the sea followed the rain. The pinks and mignonette were beaten down, the petals from the white rose lay strewn upon the ground. Yet the air never smelt so sweet, for the brown earth itself breathed forth a freshness and fragrance of its own. And every bird that had a tongue, from the thrush upon the tree-top to the blackbird hidden in the holly bush, burst into song.

So the party was over—thank goodness for that!

Miss Graham had gone upstairs, and Charity stole into the garden. She was quivering with emotion, and longed for the fresh air to cool her throbbing temples.

Up on a ladder by the window was John Sprake, putting a nail where the magnolia had been torn away by the storm.

"Massey 'pon us, Missie! There were a pity to be sure," he shouted at the top of his voice. "Why so much as ever you'd 'a 'had time to zwank round like, and show one another your new vrocks, when comed down cats an' dogs. Made 'em turn tail an' run to hole like rabbits. Iss did. Ay, so did, sure 'nough."

A fine philosopher and observer of human manners, John Sprake. He was at Babblecombe before Charity, and she liked to talk to him. But now she hurried by without reply.

"Ah, put 'em out a bit. I'll warr'nt did. To 't would, sure 'nough," he chuckled to himself, as he turned to the wall.

She strode quickly into the shrubbery, where the high bushes hid her on all sides. Alone at last, her pent-up indignation found a voice. What did these people mean who looked upon her so coldly? They were no better than she. Better, indeed! There was no one of them could do anything she could not do. And yet, in some indefinable way, they slighted her as a person of small account. Because she was an orphan—adopted, brought up on charity. Her spirit rose in revolt against the narrowness of this little Babblemouth world. She hated them all—every one. Her heart told her there was a nobility of which they knew nothing—somewhere, beyond this little coombe, in the great city, perhaps. She was not one with these people. She was not of the same blood. She longed to meet a human soul suffering disadvantage, to give sympathy and receive it. As to Theodosia Mortimer, she wanted Graham Poltimore, and made eyes at him. That was at the bottom of her behavior.

She walked restlessly on. At the end of the path a wicket gate opened into the wood, and against this she leaned. The place was quite solitary, and she remained so still that a rabbit in the copse went on feeding undisturbed a few yards from her feet.

Graham Poltimore loved her madly—she had no doubt of it. He gave her no peace, and she could no longer procrastinate. On the April morning, with the sun shining between the clouds, when he came to say "Good-by," his last whisper had been of love. Today, on his return, his first words beneath the copper beech were a passionate appeal.

It was heartless to refuse a love like that. She thought she could almost love him if he would only leave her alone, or do something more than hunt or shoot, and hope that he might just scrape through, as he called it; something noble and great—that she could worship. She would have him a scholar—a soldier. In fact she did not want to marry—unless—

To hear the Mortimer girls, one would think there was no aim in life but to catch a husband by hook or by crook, and she hated that. Her dream was of an irresistible passion, carrying all before it. Then an icy fear swept over her like a northeast wind. She had no feeling, no heart, no soul, no gratitude. That was why people were cold to her. That was why she did not return Graham's love.

Yet surely she did love Graham Poltimore. How could it be otherwise? When last winter a returning huntsman, riding slowly through the coombe, left word that young Poltimore had been thrown and hurt, did her heart hesitate? She blushed to think how she had run breathless into Babblemouth—so that even now people tattled and laughed. They said she wanted to catch Graham Poltimore—the fools! Sour-faced Mrs. Mortimer warned her of this—out of kindness, as she said.

The voice of John Sprake broke in upon her thoughts. Her ear could not distinguish the words, but his sing-song shouting seemed to fill the coombe. Miss Graham might be asking for her. She must go in. At thought of the little cripple, tears came into the girl's eyes.

The golden eventide rested like a crown upon the head of the wood, and every sentiment which could soften her into acquiescence burst into life and warmth within her bosom.

Dear Miss Graham! How good she had always been. And this marriage would be the one perfect joy of her life—the happy ending to an idyl which was no mere dream of the imagination, but a story in living flesh and blood. For Miss Graham had created her—made her what she was—brought her up as a flower with infinite tenderness, sheltered from the wind of adversity and protected from the biting frost of the world's unkindness. For such a friend could any sacrifice be too great? And she was capable of sacrifice—adored it, longed for it—some great and noble sacrifice! If he had been the cripple she would have married him without a moment's doubt, only to comfort his crumpled form against her bosom.

Suddenly the rabbit in the pathway raised itself alert and listened. If she married him her future was secure. He, at least, did not care who she was or whence she came. He was too generous for that. How angry all the Mortimers would be—at first, and then obsequious.

There came a quick step upon the gravel. She turned, and he was by her side. He had walked quickly, and his face glowed with health and careless irresponsibility.

"Sprake told me you were in the garden, Charity," he burst out, "and I came to find you at once. I was afraid you might be indoors, and that I should not see you alone at all."

"I was just going in," she interrupted him, nervously, turning toward the house.

"But not now. Not until you have told me. Charity, I think of nothing else. It is the dream of my life. I cannot live without you. And I cannot go on like this without knowing. If it is hopeless you must say so. I come and go—at Easter I came down and went again; but you managed—you always manage—to evade me. I cannot go on like this. If you know you will never love me I will go away and never come back. I will turn my back upon the place forever and go abroad. I do not care what happens to me—whether I live or die"—

In his excitement words failed him. He had spoken with the wild exaggeration of young romance, and yet it was all so real. How madly he worshiped her! A womanly pity pleaded for him against her doubt. It were no better than heartless cruelty to remain unmoved by such a love as that.

"But I am not sure," she faltered, "that I—that I care for you enough for that."

"But you love me a little."

"I am very fond of you, Graham," she replied, in a firmer voice. "You have always known that. But it seems different. Not like what you mean. Not like what you say you feel yourself."

"But that will come—that will come," he urged, eagerly.

"If I could be sure of that!"

The cry leaped straight from her heart and was tender with regret. There were so many reasons why she should love that this coldness troubled her.

"Charity!" he cried passionately, "how can you doubt it? You do love me, I know you do. I can hear it in your voice; and you say yourself you are fond of me. We were made for each other, and it is the one wish of poor Aunt Helen's heart. Why should we delay? It is not as if we could marry tomorrow, and I were asking you to bind yourself beyond all recall. But promise me now. Let us go in and tell her tonight. She will be glad beyond everything. And I will make you happy, Charity. I love you so much I cannot help making you happy."

His words almost persuaded her, but she remained silent, and turned to lean against the gate again.

"Let me tell her, Charity"—

"No, no," she answered, in a voice low but very clear. "Do not say a word, Graham. But, if you want to please me very much, go away quite early and I will tell her myself."

He could scarcely believe in his good fortune.

"Then—then, we are engaged?" he cried.

"Yes. I suppose we are engaged."

He threw his arm around her neck and would have kissed her. But she drew back.

"Not now—not now, Graham, dear," she said, quickly. "Come, let us go into the house. There is the bell."

* Copyrighted, 1896, by Walter Raymond.

IV. THE MINIATURE.

They were in the drawing-room, and a maid was bringing in the lamp when Graham Poltimore rose to go. He had scarcely spoken to his father since his return, he said, and Miss Graham accepted the explanation without one word of question. During dinner conversation had been scanty, and the little lady's quick gray eyes, glancing from one to another, became at first perplexed and then sad. She felt that something had happened, and to her, as well as Charity, his departure came as a relief.

"You may leave the shutters awhile," she said, turning to the maid with nervous impatience. "The room becomes so warm when the windows are closed. Bring the book, Charity, and come and sit by me."

It was customary every night for the girl to read or sing, and sometimes they remained quite late, forgetful of time and place in the bright illusions of poetry and romance. Beside the sofa where they sat, upon a small round table, stood the lamp. But tonight the reading was slow to begin. Charity waited long, the book unopened in her hand.

"Did you mark the place, dear?" asked Miss Graham, with quiet self-repression; then, melting into sudden tenderness, she drew the girl toward her and fell to stroking the bright hair.

"Never mind, child," she whispered, sadly. "I understand it all quite well. When I longed for it so much, I only meant if it could really be—not against your heart's inclination, dear—not if it harbored a doubt. Nothing can ever lessen my affection for you, Charity—nothing. You may always rest assured of that."

"But you do not understand, aunt. Graham asked me again tonight and I accepted him."

"Then why did he go?"

"I wanted to tell you myself—all alone."

"And you are quite happy?"

"More than happy."

It was true. The delicacy of those tender assurances had gone straight to Charity's heart. They touched her deeply, and in an ecstasy of gratitude and gladness she threw her arms around the little cripple's neck. What if this promise were a sacrifice? The very doubt, which just now held her halting, filled her soul with joy. She also had something to give—some return to make for these years of kindness. She was conferring happiness upon the human being she most loved. Her quick, tell-tale face, ever ready to betray emotion, glowed with triumph at the thought.

To little Miss Graham this was all natural. She interpreted that look of joy in her own manner. Her eyes beamed brighter than ever, as they filled with tears of joy.

"Charity, darling!" she cried, with wild excitement and delight, "it has made everything right. All I have will be Graham's some day. Half of it should be his now, in justice to his mother. And he shall have it at once. There is no need to wait. Let him go back and get his degree, and you can be married next summer. I know what love is. There shall be no long engagement. I know what love is—at second-hand—always at second hand."

As she repeated the words, her voice sank into a wail of regret; then she paused a moment, and went on, in a deep, rapid whisper: "Charity, I cannot help talking to you tonight. Within this wretched, misshapen little body is a real woman's heart. It makes no difference, child. It is something of the soul. For the most perfect that ever walked under God's sun had no more capacity for loving, no greater longing to be loved, than I, who only hobble from chair to sofa, or hide my back and truckle along the road on wheels. I tell you, child, I was made living, and knew that I could never live."

BUT SHE DREW BACK.

Again she stopped. Her thin fingers eagerly unpinned the miniature upon her breast, and she held it toward the lamp, gazing lovingly upon the face.

"Look, Charity! Look at her, child! She loved. How she used to come and tell me! You could never have taken her for my sister—so well grown and graceful. But she hurt me; without knowing it, she hurt me. She would talk of him by the hour, and always as if I could not understand. Yet it was I who did it when they thwarted her. She could only sit and cry. She had given way until I stirred her into revolt and quickened her with my spirit. And so she followed her heart's desire, and married Poltimore in spite of all. What is it Thekla sings, child?

Ich habe genossen das irdische Gluck,
Ich habe gelebt und geliebet!

But what a little while she lived! And I, the useless one, to stay on all these years!"

With a sigh she laid down the portrait upon the table, and, turning toward the girl, placed a hand upon each shoulder.

"After she had gone the loneliness fell heavy upon me. It haunted the quiet, proud old house; the street was full of it, where everybody was a-stir, so quick and strong. Her marriage was a madness, they said. I was not even allowed to speak her name. One night a letter came—that was when Graham was born, and as I sat thinking there crept into my heart a longing. I knew that I, too, was made for maternity—I, who was never to bear a child. I wanted to know. I wanted to feel the warmth of it upon my bosom. And every day it grew and grew from a little loneliness to a great despair, until at last I found you, child. And ever since my one thought has been set upon today. Year by year I watched you grow up like a flower—and waited. You were so bright and warm, I could put my cheek against your hair and feel the day coming when you would love and live and learn it all. The hope kept my heart young. The touch of you kept my blood warm. It was like food and fire to keep a starving soul alive. And now you are to marry—you two, who are all the world to me. Kiss me, Charity. It shall be next year, and you shall live here. Kiss me, dear. I planned it all from the day when you first ran. And he has grown up such a man! Only sometimes I feared he did not care enough about things—books and poetry, I mean—to please you. Do you feel it cold, child?"

She stopped abruptly and glanced toward the still open window. A great moth had come in and was fluttering around the lamp. Moonlight fell across the lawn and glistened upon the dark beech tree. The rain had left a humid chilliness in the night air. But not from that did the girl shiver. The eagerness of the little cripple's words had moved her sympathies and made her shake like an aspen.

"No, no," she said, quickly; "the air is close." "Yet, shut it up; and at the same time ring. We will not read tonight. It has been a long and wearying day, but a glad day, Charity, both for you and me."

"Yes, the gladdest of all," cried the girl, carried away by her emotion.

"My stick has fallen. Come, give me your arm, dear, and we will go upstairs. You must be tired, too."

But Charity was not tired. Alone in her room she sat down in the square window, quaintly projecting over the porch and curtained off like another chamber. Never was sleep further from her eyelids. Never were her senses more alert. The slanting moonlight glanced between blind and mullion, and she eagerly drew each cord until a flood of light filled the place from floor to ceiling. She looked down the quiet coombe at the roof of sleeping Babblemouth. Upon one higher than the rest, standing just under the hill, the smooth slates were shining like silver. How well she knew it—that largest house in the little town—the home of the "Babblemouth people"; tonight it stood out from the rest with an import strange and new.

Half-way over the gap and above the open sea hung the full moon. Neither fleeing cloud nor passing ship broke the serenity or burst in upon the solitude. The ragged bushes on the brow of the cliff lay flat and dark against the sky, and nothing moved but the broken ripple of the running tide, where the moonbeams danced down a broad trackway into the harbor mouth. The hollow under the hill lay hidden in gloom and mystery. Many times before she had looked out upon this moonlit sea, but tonight transcended all experience. The surpassing beauty held her senses captive—the wonder stirred her soul to some unknown, unfathomed depth.

Graham Poltimore's words came whirling through her memory: "Charity, I think of nothing else." "I cannot live without you."

The reality of his passion startled her. It agitated her like a wild strain of some strange music once heard and wanting interpretation. But it awakened no responsive echo in her heart. There was no triumph in this love. For him she felt a pity of the imagination, and for herself a fear. And the passionate yearning of her helpless little friend, longing for more than life could give, haunted her like a sad, sad song.

Her intention did not waver. She loved these people both and would make them happy. One way lay before her, straight and clear as that path of light, and she knew of no other. But there had come to her an undefined longing for something beyond all she knew.

She stood there, still in her white frock, until the moon had sunk behind the sea and the great black cliffs grew dim.

(To be continued.)

Prof. James Hardy Ropes of the Harvard Divinity School has called attention to the fact that the class of ten men recently graduated from that school and receiving the degree of Bachelor of Divinity is the largest class so honored that has ever been graduated. He points out the fact, which we called attention to some time since, but which is most significant and is not yet thoroughly understood, that of the class graduated this year one was a Baptist, three Trinitarian Congregationalists, two Methodists, one a Presbyterian and three Unitarians. He also calls attention to the fact that a number of the courses of the divinity school primarily intended for divinity students are now, through Radcliffe College, open to women.

President Warren of the Boston University School of Theology points out, in an open letter to New England Methodists, the ominous fact that of the thirty-eight young men just graduated from that institution not one came from New England, while Ohio sent thirteen, Maryland and New York three each, etc. He believes that the fundamental trouble lies as far back as the denominational academies and preparatory schools in New England, which are not keeping pace with the growth of the denomination in New England.

A WOMAN IN A MAN'S COLLEGE.

BY KATHARINE MORDANTT QUINT, M. A.

Miss Katharine M. Quint, a daughter of Rev. A. H. Quint, D. D., graduated from Wellesley College in 1889. Since then she has taught school in South Berwick, Me., and at Tabor Academy in Marion, Mass. Desiring to become a specialist in certain branches, she ventured to apply for admission to the post-graduate department at Dartmouth College, and after a thorough consideration of her claims the authorities received her as the first woman student in the history of the college.

Perhaps the title is not exactly accurate, but I accept it because it has been assigned to me. It may imply too much. The woman was admitted only to the graduate work and not to the undergraduate. The Wellesley B. A. was amply an equivalent of the latter. After some experience in teaching I had a strong desire for a more advanced course in Greek and English literature. Still I may venture to say that one of my pupils at Tabor Academy had, not long ago, been admitted, without a condition, to Harvard in Greek on examination and soon after had been placed in the honor division, but perhaps he will be better known from the fact that the young giant was almost immediately chosen to the football team and fought with distinction in the last great contest with Yale.

Naturally my mind had turned to the college of my father and brothers, the college which in my childish days had been to me the occasion of sorrow because I could not enter it. It continues to be true that Dartmouth does not admit girls to the undergraduate course; but this is balanced by the fact that Wellesley does not admit boys. Dartmouth has recently adopted a system of graduate work in various departments of high character, and the course which I wished to enter was the first put completely into operation under the new system. I had been pursuing advanced study in private, but a year's residence was necessary to obtain a degree, and I wanted the degree of Master of Arts. The opportunity for work was there. The only question was whether a woman could be allowed these privileges in the college. I think that the vote of the faculty was warmly in favor. But charters are awful documents and the trustees were a year in deciding. My appeal to the charter, which reads in a certain place "that there be a College erected . . . by the name of Dartmouth College for the education and instruction of Youth of Indian Tribes . . . ; and also of English Youth and any others," resulted in a favorable decision. For, although I was not an Indian, I felt sure that, if "English youth" was not broad enough to include me, "any others" ought. So I was admitted.

First experiences were not unpleasant. At White River Junction a student, whom I already knew, aided me in finding the proper train, and at Norwich he piloted me to the coach and found my luggage for me. I was not such a "new woman" that I did not gladly accept his help.

To get to Hanover one crosses the Connecticut, beautiful and picturesque. Then one climbs a long, wearisome hill to a plateau where the college is situated. Hanover is beautiful at any time, and at this time of the year was particularly charming in the crimson and gold of its many trees. The village seemed full of men and boys all shouting to each other "Hello," "When did you come?" and "Where are you rooming?"

Where to board? That was an important question. The town makes no provision for women in the capacity of boarders. People who take boarders have students, and the boys usually object to the female element at table. Finally I came to the conviction that the hotel owned by the college must be my abiding place for the year, and that I must there join the lady who was the efficient first assistant in the college library and the lady who was doing successful work as the high school principal, each of whom had had the same experience. One soon became accustomed to a dining-room which had in it less than ten ladies and five times as many men; for our table was our own and, although I believe there was a slight curiosity at first, the Dartmouth students were soon really courteously indifferent. When I think of the football team, which I am proud to say gained the championship, there comes before me a picture of the captain in that dining-room snapping grapes at the man who sat at the other end of the "training-table." He was an excellent shot.

It was not quite agreeable to have one's picture in a New York magazine, but whether the unpleasantness was lightened by the fact that the picture was not one of me at all, but that of a decidedly good looking woman, with showy diamond earrings, I am not quite sure. I had an appreciative letter from a scientific physician, who was an entire stranger, commenting very favorably upon the shape of the head, the breadth of the brow, the earnestness of the eye and much more; but, alas! it was all based upon that picture. A young girl from a neighboring town who became a pupil of mine at first thought that she was not talking to the right person. She had imagined a woman with short hair, very mannish, and six feet in hight, instead of an unpretending person of less than five feet three, and slender at that. A rumor or two came to me of an attempt at "snap shots," but a very few days made everything extremely prosaic. I became simply a student, attracting no peculiar notice and treated always with unobtrusive courtesy. Perhaps my surmise is correct that a new feather duster was brought into the Greek room, and it is not unkind to say that a few times, if a student in the great library reference-room had his feet upon a table, he instantly returned to ordinary methods when any lady entered. The kindness of the professors' families never abated. Indeed, one of the first to welcome me was the eminent ex-president, Samuel C. Bartlett, who honored me with an early call. When the Greek professor gave a lecture to seventy Sophomores at his invitation I attended, but it was in a group of several ladies and under a kind escort. At church a place was provided for the new student by a family which came to be regarded by me with the deepest affection. It was a privilege to go to the beautiful Rollins Chapel Sunday afternoon at college prayers, which I did with ladies from the faculty or other homes, and there specially listened to the always inspiring words and absorbed the elevating thoughts of President Tucker, whose influence over the students was simply commanding. "William Jewett Tucker," said one of our professors, "has a suave manner, but underneath is an iron will directed toward the right." It is not surprising that under his care the new classes are rapidly increasing.

A month after my entrance a Smith graduate appeared and, although we were not in the same studies, the novelty was still further abated. The Greek professor, on the day after my arrival, kindly came to me and outlined the beginning of my work. On the same day I made the acquaintance of the professor of English literature. To be placed under the instruction of these two distinguished scholars and teachers was an event in life. The courses of study under the new system, which made graduate work essential to degrees, had been carefully formulated with a view to great thoroughness, and to as much breadth as the time could allow.

In Greek the work for this year was that of the Greek tragedy. Euripides, Sophocles and Æschylus were, of course, the authors, the first named receiving the most attention. I had special occasion, also, to read something in Aristophanes, although it was comedy. I think that this course, which was in itself almost severe, was made so by the authorities to give character to the graduate system of study. The same is true as to the department of English literature. I am very sure that the Greek work was not in any way made lighter because one of the students was a woman. Certainly it was extremely exacting. The perfect impartiality as to sex was very gratifying. The recitations were held in the Greek seminary room in old historic Dartmouth Hall, and I could not help thinking of the fact that my father had been a boy in that room when he was in college. My recitation work was usually with one fellow-student, but during the winter term there was a "seminary" once a week, in which nine Juniors were kindly allowed the privilege of joining us. During the year at least two dozen original papers were required upon assigned topics in the study of the Greek tragedy. All through this year of hard work I found the advantage of the admirable Greek discipline of Wellesley.

The course in English literature took the American division, in which the professor has such a brilliant reputation. During the first term we had studies in the social history of the United States as a foundation for a knowledge of the literary history of the American people. We read Captain John Smith, Bradford, John Winthrop, Sewall, Jefferson, and plenty more. During the second term we had Webster, Emerson, and others, and during the third term we had poetry, including Bryant, Longfellow, and the like. It is needless to say that this work was thorough for the object proposed. For convenience our small graduate class met at the professor's house. Hawthorne will always call to my mind a glowing open wood fire in a charming room, rich with many books. Poe will bring back the sun dancing on the dazzling snow. The "romantic movement" will suggest to me a piazza in early spring with the scent of lilacs in the air and, through the valley, the view of the beautiful Vermont hills.

It is not to be forgotten that the traditional character of Dartmouth as a college for boys is not changed. The departure is in the fact that the remarkable advantages which it affords to graduates of colleges are opened to a graduate of any college of suitable rank, without raising the question of sex. I hope I have made it clear also that the presence of a woman in such advanced studies came quickly to be regarded as a matter of practical indifference. If she attended to her own work, preserving the proprieties which belong to womanhood, nothing but courtesy would be experienced.

If I have written with almost apparent egotism, it seemed to be inevitable in writing at all about the admission of the first woman to the great privileges of Dartmouth, and to be due to the college which gave such facilities. But I am not sure that the amount of work which the graduate courses place upon the professors can be exacted without an addition to the teaching force.

When Commencement Day came in the old church it had much meaning. The exhibition of kindness was universal. The occasion honored Wellesley as well as Dartmouth. And was it weak in a daughter to cherish a pleasure in the thought that her diploma was given on the fiftieth anniversary of her father's graduation in the same old church, and that he was present to see not only the giving of this diploma, but the wonderful change which in these fifty years had occurred in the higher education of women?

IS THE AMERICAN PUBLIC SCHOOL HOLDING ITS OWN?

BY REV. ALBERT E. WINSHIP, EDITOR JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

Albert E. Winship, editor and publisher of the Journal of Education, is a native of West Bridgewater, Mass., born Feb. 24, 1845. He studied for teaching at Bridgewater State Normal School, and taught in Newton, Mass., and in the Bridgewater Normal School, identifying himself actively with educational matters, State and national. He studied for the ministry at Andover and was settled over Prospect Hill Church, Somerville, Mass., for nine years, when he was called to the associate secretaryship of the New West Education Commission, in which work he was engaged for three years. He has been for eleven years editor and proprietor of the Journal of Education. Mr. Winship is active in all educational associations and identified with their kindred interests. He is president of the American Institute of Instruction, the oldest educational association in America.

No amount of research, no array of statistics can determine whether or not the American public school is holding its own. This must be largely a matter of opinion based upon extended observation backed by reasons that shall satisfy the reader.

There are three fairly distinct public school ideas in the North. East of the Alleghanies all school support comes directly from the people, with the school district, the township or the borough as the unit. From the Alleghanies to the Rockies the county is the unit, yielding to State control and receiving State aid beyond the Missouri. In California the State is the unit, paying the same salaries in the mountain fastnesses of Shasta as in Pasadena, all county superintendents being State officials.

One of the satisfactory phases of these socialistic times is that the schools lose nothing by the revolutionary movements, Governor Altgeld of Illinois, with all his anarchistic notions, being an excellent friend of the public schools from the kindergarten to the university, as he is of all eleemosynary institutions. Beyond question the public schools are holding their own west of the Mississippi.

In the East, and in some conservative centers between the Alleghanies and the Mississippi, one cannot say, off hand, that this is true. There are two sources of danger—one from the conviction of parents who are suspicious of its ethical influence, the other from the sentiment of those who are dissatisfied with the æsthetic conditions.

Prior to the Treaty of Paris (1763) there were no elementary or secondary schools, public or private, that met the æsthetic demands of parents of wealth and culture, and their children were educated in England. The revolt of 1763–76 required no greater sacrifice than in the matter of the education of American youth, and no other influence was more potent in making Tories than the educational conditions that independence made inevitable. There seemed no way open through which wealthy Americans could furnish their sons and daughters the needed æsthetic educational opportunities if they broke with England. No sooner did friction between the colonists and England manifest itself than the Congregationalists, representing the ethical and æsthetic elements, began the establishment of New England academies. About 1820 the Methodists, dissatisfied alike with the public schools and the New England academies from the religious standpoint, began to found conference seminaries. Baptists, Universalists and Episcopalians soon after began to educate their children largely in denominational schools. Sixty years ago the tuition in academies and private schools in Massachusetts was one-third of a million dollars.

With the educational reform, which began about 1835, all this changed, and at the close of the Civil War the academies and private schools were very generally apologizing for their existence, and only here and there was to be found an academy that did not live at a "poor dying rate."

But the war changed many conditions. It Americanized the Irish-American citizen, whose loyalty and soldierly success won him many friends and universal respect. He also reaped the greatest advantage from the flush times which followed. The afflictions of Ireland had impoverished multitudes who sought relief in this country. Men had come here in honest poverty, had fought an honorable warfare with adversity, using every spare dollar to bring their families and friends from their old home. These conditions largely prevented their affiliations with their new neighbors till prosperous times and opportunity to make a record for heroism adapted them to the new conditions, and they became Americans in a new sense.

Ten years after the war these citizens had a prominence, political and industrial, that commanded the attention of the public, and for reasons not wholly clear their religious leaders suspected the public schools of antagonizing their religion. Their convictions did not differ materially from those of other sects, but their action was more intense and their antagonism was directed to the elementary schools, whereas with others it had been confined to the secondary. The other sects charged the public schools with neglect; these leaders charged antagonism to their faith, and between 1870 and 1885 parochial schools were opened in all centers of large Irish-American and French-Canadian population in which were educated nearly all their children of the lower grades.

For a time it looked as though there was to be a serious challenge of the public schools, but a variety of causes led to an early culmination of this reaction, and for ten years there have been few new schools established, and not a few of those already started have been abandoned.

There is reason to think that there is now no purpose to antagonize the public school, and there is no cause to fear that the public school will lose its prestige if they should. With the war and with the prosperity that the country has enjoyed most of the time for thirty years, great fortunes have been made and social ambitions developed which have made demands for special recognition. No problem has been greater with the families of large wealth than that connected with the education of their children so as to give them a distinct advantage. This has led to the opening of many private schools for the purpose of giving an æsthetic flavor which the public schools do not give. There was a demand for art and etiquette which should differentiate the graduate of —— school from the graduate of the public high school. For a while this threatened to jeopardize the school system, for, should the time come when the public school does not give to the children of the common people as good education as money can buy, it is only a question of time when the contrast will rob the schools of their popular support; for the public schools must never be for the poor, for the rich or for the middle class, but for Americans. There will always be room for the best of private schools and academies adapted to special domestic conditions and to special intellectual requirements, but they can never be for classes without the public school being for the masses, in which case the public school will fail of its mission.

Already there are indications that this ambition of wealth for extra æsthetic advantages is to prove a blessing to the common schools. One instance will serve as a type: Brookline, Mass., is probably the wealthiest town of its size in America. It is the home of a large number of people of great wealth and social distinction, and of very many poor people. For twenty years and more the society leaders did not patronize the public high school, and people of limited means made heroic efforts to send their children to private schools that had certain social advantages.

Six years ago the school board determined to have a high school with every conceivable æsthetic attraction. Today there is a beautiful building with every comfort and luxury, with every laboratory and scholastic advantage, and the walls of every classroom, hall-way and reception-room are adorned with choice pictures and statuary. The wealthiest and most socially ambitious families not only patronize the school, but have given large amounts for the adornment of the building. All the schools of the town have one session, which custom had proved so fashionable with private schools; and in the kindergarten a woman is employed a half-hour before and after school to look after wraps and overshoes of the children, so that the teacher shall in no wise be considered a servant. In Boston and in every suburb there is the same general tendency, and the latest glory of the public school system has come from what threatened to be the source of greatest concern.

If the public school is not holding its own in any direction, it remains for some one to call attention thereto. Apparently it has a vitality that is enduring and an elasticity which adjusts it to all necessities.

LEADERS OF CHILDREN IN CONFERENCE.

The Summer School of Clark University, Worcester, now has behind it four successful seasons, of which this summer's session, July 13–25, has been the most unique and enthusiastic and marked by the largest attendance. The total registration for the two weeks was between 300 and 400, almost double that of last summer. This includes transient visitors from local towns, but it is safe to say that about 200 students, coming from more than twenty States of the Union, were in regular attendance for the purpose of serious study, and were capable of doing high grade work. California sent twelve, and such distant sections of the country as Utah, Oregon, Colorado, Louisiana, Tennessee and Minnesota were represented.

Instruction was given largely in the form of lectures and laboratory work, but a helpful feature of each day was the conference, when the students had an opportunity to ask practical questions and to exchange ideas and suggestions among themselves. This affords an excellent occasion to study the personnel of the school. Normal school presidents and teachers predominate, but there was a plentiful sprinkling of college instructors of psychology and mental philosophy, superintendents and principals of city schools, kindergartners and educationalists of every sort. A good number, fully one-third, were men, while a large proportion of the remainder were young women.

In other respects the school has taken a great step forward since last year. It has dropped mathematics and physics, for which the demand was slight, and focused attention this season entirely upon pedagogy, psychology, and the kindred subjects of biology and anthropology, under the charge of six of the regular professors of Clark University, some of whom have won a wide reputation as scientific experts. The prominence given to child study has been the novel and attractive feature of this season, and Pres. G. Stanley Hall's lectures on this subject, embracing such topics as Foods and Appetites of Children, Fears, Anger, Toys and Games, Musical Education, the Religious Nature, Experience and Training of Children, have been unique and exceedingly popular. Much of his material represents an original contribution to science based on thousands of replies to a series of syllabi on such subjects as these. The study of fundamental facts along this line suggests a genetic method radically new and transforming for the study of ethics and psychology, and will, in Dr. Hall's opinion, eventually determine all the work of education. Rather more technical were the lectures on neurology by Dr. C. F. Hodge, whose researches in the line of fatigue of the brain have made him distinguished, on pedagogy by Dr. W. H. Burnham, a specialist in the science of instruction, on experimental psychology by Dr. E. C. Sanford, and on anthropology by Dr. A. B. Chamberlain, the first man to receive a doctor's degree for work in this science.

Perhaps the most eventful day was that devoted to the discussion of kindergarten methods, when the regular attendance was swelled by a number of the leading kindergarten teachers of the country. Dr. Hall predicted that in the next decade there will be a reconstruction of the practice in kindergarten work, particularly in the use of gifts. He says: "The understanding of the pyschology of toys, of dolls, which shows what an enormous educational value these things have, the study of children's feelings for natural objects and what comes from sympathy with nature, will work great changes in the kindergarten." So manifest were the advantages in child study made that the kindergartners present passed a resolution which practically closed the breach which has existed between them and the child study philosophers. It is hoped that this alliance will result in more rapid progress in both lines of educational effort.

POINTS WORTH MAKING.

The Christian Register quotes the following story of ignorance of the Bible from an English newspaper:

A contemporary tells the story of a man in a midland town in England who was deeply exercised in reconciling different Bible statements, especially those about the ark. "I do not like," he said, "to refuse to believe in its size or its build or in the number of animals it contained. That is all quite conceivable, and doubtless correct. But when I am asked to believe that the children of Israel carried it about for forty years in the wilderness, well, my faith breaks down.

So many people seem to think that the Bible needs no help from the dictionary!

Titus Munson Coan, worthy son of a noble sire, naturally objects to the statement of a correspondent from Honolulu writing to the New York Evening Post, who said, "They have had their morals corrupted . . . by the men who brought the bottle and the Bible in either hand." To which aspersion upon his father and the other noble missionaries to the Hawaiian Islands Mr. Coan replies:

No statement could be more absolutely opposed to the truth. I know from long residence at the islands that one of the chief efforts and anxieties of the missionaries was to keep alcoholic drinks out of the hands of the natives. Drink was one of their besetting sins, and for forty years or more the missionary crusade against it was unceasing. The missionaries themselves were to a man not merely temperate, but total abstainers from alcoholic drinks of every description; there was no exception to this rule. . . . If the Hawaiian missionary had one task more arduous than another, one toil more unremitting, it was to keep the pliable islanders from debauching themselves over the bottle that was offered them by the trader. It was by him that the Hawaiians "had their morals corrupted." It was with the Christian trader and sailor that the hardest struggle of the Hawaiian missionary was made.

In Olive Schreiner's absorbingly interesting article on South African race and sex relations, in the July Fortnightly, she tells of a Bantu who once said to her, "You say the devil is black, but I picture him as a white man with blue eyes and yellow hair"; and she tells of a native Christian preacher who said, "I know that the Lord Jesus Christ was a white man, yet I could not pray to him and love him as I do if I did not picture him as black and wool like myself." So much depends on point of view and upon racial and national standards. Thus, to cite the latest testimony from a land far removed from South Africa, viz., Japan, listen to Lafcadio Hearn in the August Atlantic, who tells of his experiences in spreading out before Japanese children copies of European illustrated papers. He showed some drawings from life in a New York periodical. The child asked, "Is it true that there are people like those pictures?" "Plenty. Those are good, common faces, mostly country folk, farmers." "Farmers! They are like Oni [demons] from the jigoku [Buddhist hell]." "No, there is nothing very bad in those faces. We have faces in the West very much worse." "Only to see them," she exclaimed, "I should die! I do not like this book."

Pilgrimage Letters. VIII.

Scrooby, Austerfield and Gainsborough, the Humble but Precious Shrines of Congregationalism.

During our stay in Lincoln we took that memorable drive to Scrooby and Gainsborough through a region more replete with religious history than any other part of the United Kingdom. It was a glorious morning and the lovely English landscape, with its wealth of green hedgerows, waving fields of grain brilliant with poppies, noble trees, winding streams and the little town of Epworth visible in the distance, never looked more fair to mortal eyes. With reverent feet we made our way to the old manor house in Scrooby where Brewster was born. Its former grandeur has passed away, and it was difficult to imagine Elizabeth and other sovereigns halting here on their royal progress up to Scotland, or the great Wolsey spending weeks in retirement beneath its roof. But little cared we just then for the doings of kings and cardinals. The one grand figure which loomed up from the past was the elder of Plymouth Colony, whose memory we shall revere anew after standing on ground hallowed by his feet and within the humble parish church in which he was baptized. The baptismal font has been removed to the New England Church in Chicago, but the carved oak which formed the Brewsters' family pew and other objects of interest are still to be seen.

SCROOBY.

Halting at Bawtry for refreshments, we pushed on next to Austerfield, the birthplace of Bradford, and again the past wove its magic spell about us. Impressive, indeed, was the quaint little church with its old Norman font, used for a time as a pig trough, but reclaimed from such base uses by the parish vicar. The restorations now in progress will rescue the fine Norman arches from the modern wall built into them on one side of the church, and when the work is completed this ancient house of worship at Austerfield will be one of the interesting relics of the Norman period.

BRADFORD'S COTTAGE, AUSTERFIELD.

The old register, too, opened for our inspection at the page which records the baptism of Bradford, was an object of absorbing interest. Still, the culminating point of all our journeying seemed to have been reached when we descended into the cellar of the humble Bradford cottage where, doubtless, the early Pilgrims convened for worship, as did the Christians of the first century in the Catacombs. We can imagine with what heavy hearts plans may have been laid here for leaving the mother country. Fifteen of us, perhaps, crowded into the little cell-like inclosure, and we felt the presence of saints from the Celestial City as we sang:

O God of Bethel, by whose hand
Thy people still are fed,
Who through this weary pilgrimage
Hast all our fathers led, and the tender, fervent prayer of Dr. Richardson brought us still closer to the heart of the Eternal.

A graceful feature of the drive that day was when we were arrested by the inmates of a pretty cottage by the wayside, not with hostile intent, but to present each pilgrim with a basket filled with fresh roses and strawberries, and a bunch of forget-me-nots daintily laid on top. How beautifully symbolic was the offering of all that has been done for us in

This land of such dear souls, this dear, dear land,
Dear for her reputation through the world!

The flowers faded with the day, but the deed will be forever enshrined within our grateful hearts.

These rich experiences of the morning formed a fitting prelude to the grand occasion in the afternoon at Gainsborough. This is one of the most interesting of old English towns, the scene of The Mill on the Floss, St. Oggs, along whose banks Tom and Maggie "wandered with a sense of travel," being none other than the Trent. The town was gayly decorated, and the British and American flags were everywhere in evidence. The presence of many distinguished English guests, as well as Ambassador Bayard, drew a throng of people from the neighboring towns, and it was an imposing scene when the Urban District Council, on a raised platform in front of the Town Hall, welcomed the ambassador. The square was packed solidly full, the windows of surrounding shops were filled with eager faces and shouts rent the air at the conclusion of the address and responses.

SCROOBY MANORHOUSE.

We then adjourned for luncheon to the Old Hall, one of the most picturesque structures of its kind that we have seen in all England. For several centuries it was the residence of the lords of the manor, and there is reason to believe that the church to which John Robinson ministered held services there. It is certain that Wesley preached in the banqueting hall, but the house ceased to be used as a dwelling about 150 years ago. Within fifty years it has been restored by the present owner, Sir Hickman Bacon, who claims descent from the great Francis, and through whose hospitality we were permitted the rare privilege of feasting beneath its ancient roof. Oriental hangings adorned the walls and over the windows were curious armorial devices. Alderman Joseph Thompson of Manchester presided at the luncheon and proposed the first toast to the Queen. All rose and sang a verse of the national hymn, and in rising we heard murmurs from several loyal subjects of "The Queen, the Queen! God bless her, God bless her!" Earl Brownlow proposed the toast for the President of the United States. Ambassador Bayard responded, and a verse of America was lustily sung.

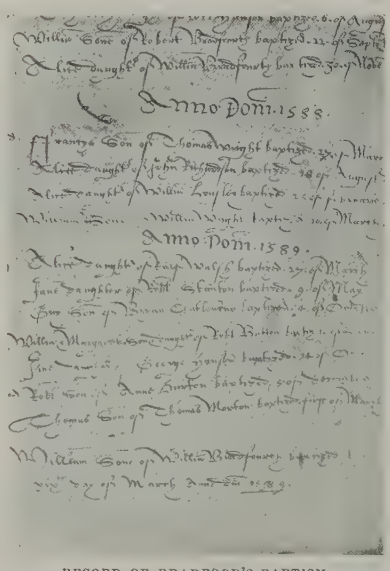
The next objective point was the site of the new John Robinson Memorial Church, whither we marched in a body, accompanied by civic authorities in official robes, denominational leaders in academic cap and gown, Sunday school children with banners and the Britannia band. The crowd had augmented, if possible, and a passage for us was kept clear not by armed sentinels but by little girls holding a rope of ribbon. Platforms were erected for the speakers and members of the Sunday school and Rev. J. Morlais Jones, chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, presided. After devotional exercises Rev. Hugh Griffiths presented Mr. Bayard with a silver trowel, a gift from the Gainsborough church, suitably inscribed and ornamented with a design of the Mayflower, also a scene representing Robinson kneeling on the beach in prayer with his fellow-pilgrims before leaving Delfshaven. With this beautiful implement he performed the ceremony of laying the corner stone of the church. The difficulty of hearing in the open air detracted greatly from the enjoyment of the ambassador's really admirable speech and the addresses which followed from Dr. Mackennal and Rev. Morton Dexter. An enthusiastic mass meeting at Wesley Church in the evening, at which Albert Spicer, M. P., presided, and Dr. Guinness Rogers, Rev. C. A. Berry and others spoke, closed the exercises of this most phenomenal day.

F. J. D.

CHURCH IN AUSTERFIELD.



RECORD OF BRADFORD'S BAPTISM.

ST. PAUL.

St. Paul evermore beheld the world of suffering beneath and beside the world of joy, the innumerable multitude of the wretched, the forgotten, the lonely, benumbed by their long despair. His place was with them. His portion was their tears and toil. His affection was serious, patient, deliberate as that of a heart touched to its core by the universal woe in its length and breadth and hight. He was as one to whom the world was a great hospital and himself an unwearied nurse by the bedside of the patients. He strove to heal the wounds that from generation to generation remained unclosed, and he met each emergency as it arose with the calm wisdom which comes to saintly souls who have explored all and have looked at the worst in the light of reconciling love. He carried in his heart that inward Presence which was one day to be revealed. He saw the fires of love rising up from under the soil in the midst of a frozen world. He was willing to be accursed from Christ for his brethren, his kinsmen according to the flesh. Before him life spread as a great shipwreck. Existence was made up of pain. Men and women wore the burning crown. He possessed the secret, the anodyne that would turn the racking agony into peace, and wherever men needed healing or wherever the healed needed to be taught patience and strength, he was busy—bearing upon him the care of all the churches, coming out in every trouble with all his faculties roused and stimulated, knowing what to say and what to do, as a mother, by some divine instinct, knows by the bedside of her ailing child. It was typical of his life that he stood forth in the doomed ship in Adria, in the darkness and despair of the tempest, to take command and speak the word of heartening and hope.—British Weekly.

LUNCHEON IN THE OLD HALL, GAINSBOROUGH.

THE UNBELIEF OF BIRDS AND MAN'S UNBELIEF IN GOD.

The creatures treat me as I treat God—I mistrust him, they mistrust me. I talked to the squirrels and begged them to confide in me and allow me to come near to them, but they would have none of me and hid themselves. Then I begged the deer to let us look each other in the face, that they might see and know that I had nothing but love to them, but they shook their heads and would not endure my near presence. After that I went to the birds and said to them, "I am your lover; I abhor the gun and the snare, and will not infringe on your freedom; both you and your large liberty are sacred to me." But they refused to hear me and fled. Then the Spirit said, "When your race recover their relationship to God and confidence in his love, the creatures will recover confidence in them." We and they are in one case. Our unbelief has severed all links and filled us with suspicion, fear and unrest. Could we but grow up into love, universal love, and become forms, not of self-love, but of love, all the links would become attached to each other—the links between us and God, between us and the angels, between man and man all over the world and between man and all the animal races of the earth.—John Pulsford.

Study and Devotion at Northfield.

An Editorial Review of the Summer Gatherings There.

The Northfield summer work comes to its culmination with the Bible, or General Workers' Conference, which extends from July 30 to Aug. 16, bringing together speakers and hearers from the whole Christian world, with a yearly increasing attendance and interest. It has been preceded, as usual, this year by a college conference, attended by 600 young men from the universities of this country and Canada, and by a similar conference of young women from the colleges and from the Y. W. C. Associations of the cities, with 300 in attendance, including a delegation of sixty from the one city of Lowell, Mass.; and also by an all summer school of Bible study, whose sessions are merged into the separate conferences as they succeed each other. The General Workers' Conference began with an audience of over 900 on a stormy night, and will average from 1,500 to 2,000, with perhaps twice that number sharing some part of its opportunities. And the increasing numbers are not due to the new comers and curiosity seekers merely, but grow out of additions to a permanent nucleus made up of those who are able to return year after year.

A NORTHFIELD STREET.

Perhaps the newest and most typical sign of the times to this observer was a new edition of the Bible, the Northfield edition, consisting of one of the best of the English editions, in large print and well bound, without help or comment but fully interleaved. It carries a suggestion of study, of help from all quarters concentrated upon the simple English text, and of intellectual and spiritual accumulation by each student for himself, which is a fine expression of the Northfield educational idea.

The conference work has passed well beyond any necessity for sensation, and impresses the visitor by an increasing air of purpose and solidity rather than by any startling change of method or of scope. The speakers change, indeed, from year to year, but the central figure is still here, present at all the meetings and evidently, though quietly, holding the helm in his own hands. Over Mr. Moody himself some change has come. The old fire burns, but it burns more quietly. The abrupt and fiery speech survives, but it punctuates a quieter, more conversational and simpler manner. In personal appearance the great evangelist has also changed. When one sees him driving his guests about the village, or pointing out the special beauty of a view to a chance group, or guiding strangers to the short cuts of the seminary campus, or watches the animated play of his features in some moment of humorous illustration in his platform work, one ceases to think of the gray hair and the soberer look that follows in moments of repose.

Next in interest to Mr. Moody on the platform leading the work of the conference is Mr. Moody in his chair on the floor, watching with keen eyes the progress of the speaker and intent upon his thought. In these two attitudes we have the leader of men and the leader through men, a part of whose great life work is the modern Northfield, with its institutions and its summer schools and conferences. It is a rare and most instructive application of the practical American business spirit to the wise organization of spiritual and intellectual effort. The organizing business spirit too often fails to concern itself with Christian work; the power of spiritual impression too seldom has its way cleared and leveled by practical business sense and intuitive knowledge of human nature.

Mr. Moody's opening of this fourteenth conference was characteristic of his methods and perhaps suggestive of one reason for his success. By insisting upon the highest spiritual aims and the closest study of the Bible he secures unity of effect; by keeping always in reserve the element of variety and surprise he insures expectation. It was an unfavorable night when the conference began, with a thunderstorm moving across the broad river valley from east to west and making the village paths both dark and wet. Nevertheless, the central portion of the great auditorium was so largely filled that there was no sense of loss from the untoward weather or the tardy appearing of the late comers. Mr. Moody's taste is for the best in the rather heterogeneous collection of Gospel Hymns, and the appropriate first selection of the evening was the stately Scotch paraphrase:

NORTHFIELD FROM THE WESTERN BANK OF THE CONNECTICUT.

> All people that on earth do dwell,
> Sing to the Lord with cheerful voice, an utterance of pure and cheerful praise, followed by prayer of consecration and a characteristic sermon on humility from the text, "Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls."

In this Mr. Moody struck the keynote of the purpose and faith of the whole series of meetings, the high note of devout trust in God arming itself by self-forgetful prayer and study for service. The practical element is never long out of view when the real leader of the conference is speaking, as was shown again on the first Sunday morning, when the theme was Rest, a subject appropriate enough to the mood of many of his hearers, which he treated in his own strong and vital way as a necessity for the best use of the conference opportunities and for the work of life. The heart at rest in God is the heart prepared alike to learn and teach.

In these earlier meetings Dr. Torrey preached a strong sermon on the power of prayer, and Dr. Chapman, whose visit to the conference was brief, two on the Love of the Spirit and Grieving the Spirit, and the note of expectancy of Christ's coming, which is never obtruded but never omitted in these meetings, came early to the front. Of the three speakers from over the sea who gave its special character to last year's conference, only Dr. Meyer of London returns this summer. Mr. Webb-Peploe, for a gracious and inspiring personality and a remarkable knowledge and memory of Scripture, and Rev. Andrew Murray of South Africa, who seems to have left the deepest impress of devotional depth and suggestiveness of thought, will be much missed. Other men whose names and work are held in specially delightful memory are Professor Drummond and Dr. A. J. Gordon, whose growth with and service in Northfield are somewhat too slightly recorded in his recent biography. These two are the most affectionately remembered names after that of Mr. Moody among the habitual frequenters of Northfield in the conference season, but Mr. Moody himself is the most universally and permanently popular of all.

Cool winds from the north by day and showers at night have made the beauty of the Connecticut Valley doubly a delight in these summer days. The contrast of river meadow and rocky hight, each at their freshest and clearest, is before the eyes of the people as they come and go, and many climb the auditorium tower to enjoy the view. It is a mist take to think that there is nothing in progress in Northfield but Bible study and conference services. There are abundant opportunities of worship—six, at least, on Sunday—in the main program, but no one loses caste, even with the most devout, if he does not attend them all. The livery stables do a thriving business. "Lovers' retreat" and the other wood walks, with their frequenters going up in pairs, suggest the days of Noah, and the keepers of the ice cream booths seem to think that life has a smiling side. Nevertheless, the atmosphere of the place is distinctly devotional. The talk drifts naturally to Bible themes, and the presumption always is that the strollers are on their way to the next meeting. One may wander in the woods and climb the hights, indeed, without escaping the opportunity of worship, as the writer found when, at the end of a stretch of pine woods and the steep slope of a clearing, fragrant with sweet fern and tempting with ripe and abundant blackberries, he found himself courteously invited at the top to join a meeting of campers held on a great rock in view of the wide world of mountain and valley; and listened to an earnest and practical talk on the opportunities of the conference and its preparation for Christ's service in business life from one of the young men, followed by earnest prayer and song. The outdoor meetings, indeed, are perhaps the most characteristic of the whole conference. There is a delightful informality, especially about the twilight gatherings on the hill called Round Top, when the auditors stand or recline in a circle on the greensward, and the speaker stands in their midst, which is extremely attractive. Not one of the hearers, probably, but thinks of the Sermon on the Mount, and the desert audience beside the lake who were strengthened by the bread which our Lord broke and increased to the measure of their need.

Through the day, and from day to day, the effect of the meetings is cumulative. There may be criticism of a speaker's thought or manner, but it is seldom captious criticism; there may even be distinctly false notes struck on the platform, but day by day the impression of the reality of God's presence and the power and happiness of his Spirit's indwelling grows, and the ministers and teachers who have come for help go back to their work prepared to offer help to others. On the one hand—to borrow a convenient word—Northfield offers the opportunities of a "retreat"; on the other, it serves as the best of normal schools for Christian teachers. Men come up to meet with God in quietness that they may be prepared to bear a fuller and a more single-hearted witness in the tumult of the world. And out of the annals of the few years in which the conferences have been held instances of this marked deepening of spiritual life and enlargement of spiritual power might easily be multiplied; for always the receptive spirit is carried on to long for the blessing of those who give.

I. O. R.

INTERIOR OF THE NEW AUDITORIUM.

Some would have us think that fewer eyes are looking upward in reverent gratitude than in other days. But, however this may be, I feel sure that more eyes are looking around in loving desire to help the needy than at any previous epoch. And the happiest thought of all is that these eyes are young, observant and unwearied. To endeavor along Christian lines to increase the sum of human happiness seems to me to be not only the greatest, but the most evangelical, thing in the world. To begin to do is an end of controversy. The severed body of Christ comes back to unity the moment it ceases to preach and begins to practice.—Frances E. Willard.

The Home

COMFORT OF THE FIELDS.

What would'st thou have for easement after grief,
When the rude world hath used thee with despite,
And care sits at thine elbow day and night,
Filching thy pleasures like a subtle thief?
To me, when life besets me in such wise,
'Tis sweetest to break forth, to drop the chain,
And grasp the freedom of this pleasant earth,
To roam in idleness and sober mirth,
Through summer airs and summer lands, and drain
The comfort of wide fields unto tired eyes.

By hills and waters, farms and solitudes,
To wander by the day with willful feet;
Through fielded valleys wide with yellowing wheat;
Along gray roads that run between deep woods,
Murmurous and cool; through hallowed slopes of pine,
Where the long daylight dreams, unpierced, unstirred,
And only the rich-throated thrush is heard;
By lonely forest brooks that froth and shine
In bowldered crannies buried in the hills;
By broken beeches tangled with wild vine,
And log-strewn rivers murmurous with mills.

In upland pastures, sown with gold, and sweet
With the keen perfume of the ripening grass,
Where wings of birds and filmy shadows pass,
Spread thick as stars with shining marguerite;
To haunt old fences overgrown with brier,
Muffled in vines, and hawthorns, and wild cherries,
Rank poisonous ivies, red-bunched elderberries,
And pied blossoms to the heart's desire,
Gray mullein towering into yellow bloom,
Pink-tasseled milkweed, breathing dense perfume,
And swarthy vervain, tipped with violet fire.

To feast on summer sounds; the jolted wains,
The thrasher humming from the farm near by,
The prattling cricket's intermittent cry,
The locust's rattle from the sultry lanes;
Or in the shadow of some oaken spray,
To watch, as through a mist of light and dreams,
The far-off hayfields, where the dusty teams
Drive round and round the lessening squares of hay,
And hear upon the wind, now loud, now low,
With drowsy cadence half a summer's day,
The clatter of the reapers come and go.

Far violet hills, horizons filmed with showers,
The murmur of cool streams, the forest's gloom,
The voices of the breathing grass, the hum
Of ancient gardens overbanked with flowers.
Thus, with a smile as golden as the dawn,
And cool, fair fingers radiantly divine,
The mighty mother brings us in her hand,
For all tired eyes and foreheads pinched and wan,
Her restful cup, her beaker of bright wine.
Drink, and be filled, and ye shall understand!

—Archibald Lampman.

THE STEP FROM HOME TO COLLEGE.

BY MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

In these summer days many young girls are happily and eagerly anticipating their first real departure from the shelter of the home and the brooding care of the mother, a flight from the nest full of importance and full of possibilities for the future. Mothers, too, are wistfully and tenderly regarding the daughters for whom they desire the broadening influences and the intellectual discipline which college life affords. These fast flying weeks, for the girl the last of her childhood, for the mother the last of her daily eye-to-eye and hand-to-hand watchfulness, are very sweet and sacred.

"What will college do for this girl of mine?" the mother asks, in the solitude of her own chamber, in the hallowed silence of her closet. And the twin question follows closely, "What shall this daughter of mine do for her college?" Reciprocal obligations and interchanged impressions are the order in our life as fellow-beings. We cannot be entirely independent, nor is it desirable that in any social life on earth we should be. Probably to all eternity we will go on, mutually helpful, often modifying one another, growing by what we give, giving from soul to soul.

For the young girl who steps from her quiet home into the great world of a large college, the first lesson is perhaps a recognition of, in a certain sense, her personal insignificance. She is no longer a dictator to younger brothers and sisters, no longer even the first person thought of and considered, as in the household economy of an ordinary home the dear eldest girl is apt to be. One of a great number, she falls into line as the soldier on drill does, and presently she finds herself merging individual preferences and petty ambitions in the class feeling. She is of her class and for it, and insensibly she slips the sheath of home narrowness and unfolds like a bud into sweeter bloom. Next she becomes aware of certain things, strong and fine, but alien to her previous experience, for no young person can be admitted into a social environment to which North and South, East and West, send their representatives without learning that much of good exists beyond her former pale. Provincialisms drop off. The general speech becomes refined and homogeneous. The strength and sweetness of certain professors are infused into the very manner of the girls who study under them. Timid girls develop qualities of leadership hitherto unsuspected, and bolder spirits become gentler and less aggressive. The college does for its students very much more than it outlines in its catalogue. It carries them far on the road towards success in life, and not merely by teaching them the lore of the ages or the science of the period.

Does it seem a contradiction that the girl, at first conscious almost to the point of surprise that she counts for little, is able to do something definite for her college, indeed cannot avoid doing something for it, the measure of accomplishment being the measure of her own character? To the college of her choice each new student brings all that her home has made her, and her influence, apparently limited to the little group of her intimates, is felt through the whole assemblage of girls, not the less really that it is silent and imperceptible to the outward eye. No sincere girl carries her consistent Christian life to college without being a torch-bearer. No true hearted, high-minded girl but impresses her noble ideals, her pure thoughts, her singleness of aim on all the rest. Good has a vitality surpassing evil, and every mother who sends a sweet, pure, consecrated daughter from her own care to that of the college is sending a blessing to the mothers' daughters of the land.

We have arrived at the days, long familiar to youth of the other sex, when mothers and daughters belong to the alumnæ associations of colleges, and when a mother, taking her child to the dear scenes of her own girlish struggles and triumphs, renews her pleasant memories of the past. None the less is the step from home to college a step to be prayerfully contemplated, though joyfully taken. God bless the dear girls who are soon to make it. From their ranks will be drawn the most influential women of the future.

Parents who cannot throw themselves into the life of their children and live on that kind of equality in which the only superiority is intrinsic, the superiority of greater knowledge, more settled goodness and more reasoned love, do not achieve much in the work of training. —Robert F. Horton.

BENITO'S MIRACLE.

BY JAMES BUCKHAM.

A dark, sinister face peered in at the door of the little American mission school in the Mexican village of Santa Monica. The weather was warm—as it almost always is in Mexico—and all the doors and windows were wide open, so the owner of the forbidding face did not have to knock. He simply put one foot on the stone doorstep, bent forward and thrust his head into the room.

A low murmur of dismay caught the busy teacher's ear. She looked up, and saw the eyes of her pupils all staring at the door. Rising, she stepped from her little platform and confronted the stranger. He was a morose, cross-looking man about forty five years old.

"What dost thou seek, senor?" she asked politely, in Spanish.

"Carramba! I seek my boy, Benito!" savagely replied the man. "This is the third time he hath run away to thy heretic school. Let me but lay hands upon him this once, and he shall pray never to see another Americano!"

A low cry of distress came from the farther corner of the little schoolroom, and Miss Glover, the American teacher, saw her latest and most interesting pupil, Benito Perez, half-crouching, with hands stretched out to her for protection. She went immediately to him, gently raised him to his feet, threw an arm about his shoulder, and in this protecting attitude drew him forward until the pair confronted the angry father.

"Thou mayest take him," she said gently, yet firmly, "but thou shalt do him no harm."

"Be that as I will," was the surly response. The man took the boy by the arm and dragged him away. Miss Glover returned to her desk with troubled heart. She knew that Benito had come to school against his father's will, and she also knew how little authority or power she had to withstand the parent's will in this matter. Her school was simply an educational mission under the auspices of a Protestant religious organization. It had no support from the government, either local or state. In fact, the local Mexican authorities, being Catholics, were openly hostile to it, and the village padre lost no opportunity to condemn it in the ears of his flock as a "viper's nest of heresy." Pupils could be obtained only by the consent of parents in conjunction with willingness to come on their own part. No compulsion, or even undue solicitation, could be used. These were among the rules to which Miss Glover had pledged herself.

When, therefore, Benito's father appeared at the door and demanded his boy, Miss Glover knew at once that the child must go. It might endanger the welfare, the very existence of the school should she attempt to detain him. But it was with a sore heart that she saw the boy pass over the threshold. He was by far the brightest, the most interesting and enthusiastic of her pupils. During the few days when he had contrived to be present, Benito had shown such a passion for knowledge, such aptitude and quickness in learning and such winning gratitude for his teacher's efforts in his behalf that Miss Glover's heart had gone out to him. She would rather have lost any other six of her pupils—though they were few enough at most, heaven knows—than this bright-faced, ambitious boy. "What a pity," she thought, "that fate should have assigned him to such a father—so prejudiced, so malicious, so determined! Why mightn't he have been born of one of the more indifferent, indolent village idlers, who, in spite of the padre, would rather have his child infected with heresy than take the trouble to watch him and keep him away from the mission school?" But, if Benito had been born of such a father, perhaps he would not have been Benito—very likely not!

For days after this sudden disappearance of her favorite pupil Miss Glover neither saw nor heard anything from the boy. Then, one evening, he came stealing up to the porch of the little mission house, where she lived, with a book, yes, a real English text-book, hugged tightly under his well-worn velvet jacket. It was a First Reader, which an American gentleman had given Benito, at the boy's own request, in return for a day's service as guide among the surrounding hills. And the boy was bringing it to Miss Glover to beg her to help him master its contents, by teaching him occasionally in the evening, when he could manage to steal away from his suspicious father. The American lady's heart was deeply touched by this evidence of the boy's earnestness and devotion, and she gladly promised to do as he wished.

And so for weeks the clandestine lessons went on. Benito mastered the First Reader and began to struggle with the deeper mysteries of the Second, a gift from Miss Glover. And he had just entered upon acquaintance with the fascinating art of penmanship when his father discovered what was going on. Thereupon the enraged Mexican determined to wreak his vengeance upon the school and its "heretic teacher," and so put an end at once to the "spell," as he superstitiously called it, which had been laid upon his boy.

One dark, windy evening four men gathered stealthily in the padre's chapel. They met there because they thought that in that sacred place they would be more secure from interruption or discovery than elsewhere. One of them was the padre himself. One was Jorge Perez, Benito's father; and the other two were swaggering, bullying, idle characters about the village, who were always ripe for any mischief that might be going, from stealing chickens to cutting a man's throat.

That they were there to plot mischief could easily have been guessed from the hang-dog expression and uneasy manner of the group. But, cautious and suspicious as they were, they little dreamed that another was present, all unseen, into whose intently listening ears every word fell as distinctly as if shouted through a trumpet. Benito that very afternoon had overheard the padre say to his father, "I will bring two of the devil's children, who have served angels before now! The chapel will be open after vespers. There we will meet thee."

Benito's heart sank within him as he heard these words. He knew that no good would come of that meeting, and he more than half-suspected that it was the school of the Americanos they were plotting against. At all events he would find out. So he stole into the chapel before vespers and concealed himself beneath the trailing altar-cloth.

It was even as the boy feared. The destruction of the American school was to be attempted that night. The padre advocated fire. The American school was not adobe, but wood. It would burn readily and quickly, he said.

"But not before helpers came!" cried Jorge Perez. "The building might be saved. Nay! let us do the work so it will need no mending. I have two sacks of the black mining powder in my closet. We will blow up the school!"

"Good!" said the padre, grimly. "Then they may pour water on what remains—the Americanos, the heretics!"

"And as for time, the second hour after midnight" whispered one of the dark-browed confederates. "Men sleep then, and even the stars are dim."

"So be it," said Perez. "Come to my house the first hour after midnight and I will go with thee. The good father may seek his couch, as is his wont. Such a deed ill befits his garb. But we will wake him merrily enough before cock-crow!" And with a croaking laugh the four men went out into the night.

To be blown up with powder! The school he loved, and that very night! Benito could hardly stir he trembled so. And yet he was the only one who knew of the plot. If the school were saved he must do it—but how?

He crawled out of one of the insecure windows of the chapel and ran blindly away into the night. He scarce knew where he was going till he came to the thicket 200 yards away, where he had left his little Mexican broncho. Once in the saddle, his mind seemed to clear; for a Mexican off his horse is like a sailor off his ship. He would go immediately to Miss Glover. She would tell him what to do.

Miss Glover had not retired. She was reading in her room when she heard rapid hoof-beats approaching. They stopped in the street below. Thrusting her head out the window, she saw a boy's face looking up. "Is that you, Benito?" she asked.

"Yes, signora. Will you come down? I have something to tell you very secretly."

Miss Glover turned pale when she heard Benito's story; but a woman thinks quickly, and often has inspirations in emergencies when men are helpless. Her face suddenly brightened with a thought that seemed to come to her from heaven.

"We will outwit them yet and use no force," she said, half to herself. Then, turning to the boy, she added, "Do you know where your father keeps this blasting powder, Benito?"

"Yes, signora. It is in a small closet, next to my room."

"Could you reach the bags without your father knowing it?"

"Yes, signora. I could remove a board between my room and the closet. But it would not be wise to take the bags, for if my father found them gone he would surely provide some other way."

"Yes, Benito, I know it. I had thought of that. We will take the bags, but we will put others in their places. Listen! In the mission storehouse at Tezcuco there are bags so like your father's powder-bags, for I have seen both kinds, that one would scarcely know the difference, unless he examined them carefully by daylight. And in those other bags there is also a black powder, but it is not explosive. It is called fertilizer and is for enriching the soil. Now, Benito, you see my plan. I will give you a note to Mr. Richards at the mission house in Tezcuco. He will hand you two of these bags without delay. You will take them home with you and exchange them for your father's powder-bags. Then we will see what will happen! But it is a long ride and there are only three hours before midnight. You will have to gallop as you never did before. Is the pony fresh? And will you try it, for my sake, little friend?"

Benito gathered himself up and a glad, proud light shone in his eyes. "Yes, signora!" he said, eagerly. "I will try my very best, since you trust me."

"Wait, then, just a minute, and I will bring you the note," cried Miss Glover, as she sped up to her room again. Five minutes later the clatter of hoofs on the hard, white street of the village told that Benito was off.

It was twelve miles to Tezcuco. Twenty-four miles the boy must ride in three hours, or a little more, besides the time spent in getting the bags. Could he do it? That remained to be seen. He would try, anyway, with all the faith and courage of his soul!

There were dark clouds in the sky as he galloped off. The air was damp and smelled of the distant sea. If it should storm—but he would not think of that! He would simply fix his mind and his will on Tezcuco, and ride, truly, as he had never ridden before. The little broncho fairly flew over the ground. A low, white building flashed on the left, and then faded into the darkness. It was the so-called "haunted ranch," a low adobe building on the trail to Tezcuco. Benito knew, as he passed it, that he had covered three miles of the twelve.

On he sped. Presently the wind began to sough dismally through the tall grass and scattered trees. Then there were a few warning drops of rain. Benito only urged his pony the faster. In a few minutes the storm overtook him. How it did rain! The black heavens seemed to bend down and trail themselves over the earth. The rising gale drove the rain in sheets about the flying broncho and his rider. Still they kept their wild pace. Another landmark fell behind them. Ten miles had been covered.

But now why does the boy suddenly draw rein and gaze, astounded and dismayed, into the blackness before him? Why does the pony stop, with one forefoot extended, with drooping head and shivering form? They had come to the bank of the creek that crosses the trail a mile north of Tezcuco. And behold! the little stream was a raging torrent already, and the bridge had been swept away!

For a moment Benito was on the point of turning back. Then he thought of the good American teacher, how kind she had been to him, and the peril of the school she loved so well. The next instant he had forced his trembling pony into the water, and the frightened creature was swimming for its life. How the current swept them! But the stream, though strong and swift, was narrow, and in a few minutes the pony emerged, snorting, on the opposite bank, and away they galloped for Tezcuco again.

It was a quarter of eleven by the mission clock when Benito turned back with the two bags given him by Mr. Richards. The storm, which had proved to be a passing cloud-burst, was over, and the moon was struggling out through rifts in the ragged sky. It was not such a frightful thing to swim the creek a second time, with the storm hushed and the moonlight shining on the opposite bank.

Off sprang the stout little pony on the homeward track. At half-past twelve Benito saw the light shining in his father's window. There was but a short time to spare. As silently as possible he led his broncho behind the stable and tethered him there. Then he stole softly to his own room, with the bags under his cloak. How he feared his father would hear him and surprise him in the passageway! But the door of Jorge Perez's room did not open. Benito heard his father pacing heavily to and fro. Already he was nervously awaiting his confederates.

Once in his own room, Benito breathed easier. But he did not waste a moment of time. Very cautiously and slowly he began to work at the loose board between his chamber and the closet. After five minutes' careful work it yielded at the bottom, and Benito drew it toward him and thrust his arm through the opening. Yes, the bags of powder were still there! Quickly the boy drew them out, and substituted the bags he had brought from Tezcuco. Then he replaced the board, and hid the powder bags in the straw of his rude bed.

Scarcely had he done this, and flung himself upon his couch, when he heard steps outside and a low whistle. It was the two confederates. Benito's father spoke softly to the men, and then the boy heard him go to the closet and drag out the bags. Before he went away, Jorge Perez slyly opened the door of his son's room and peered in. Satisfied when he saw Benito stretched on the couch, he cautiously left the house.

When the footsteps of the plotters died away Benito rose and followed. Though he could not see the men in the darkness he knew where he should find them, and went straight to the mission school. There they were, kneeling down, and packing the powder bags under the wall. Jorge Perez took a double handful of the black substance and laid a train up to the mouths of the bags. Then the men all drew back, and Jorge touched a light to the farther end of the train. All fled at the top of their speed for a hundred yards or more, and then turned to look. There was no light, no blaze, no crash! The men, waiting, whispered together anxiously. Then they all stole back. The charred fuse lay where it had fallen in the powder, but not a grain was burned.

"The holy saints defend us!" exclaimed Jorge. He lit another taper and dropped it in the powder. With a strange fascination the superstitious men watched it burn out and die.

Jorge Perez crossed himself, and the others hastily followed his example. "The Holy Virgin protects them!" whispered Jorge, in an awed voice. "It is a miracle that dry powder will not burn. The place is sacred. Come, let us be going!"

The four men stole silently and swiftly away. And thus it was that the American mission school in Santa Monica was miraculously saved.

AFIELD WITH YOUNG NATURALISTS.

A FEW FAMILIAR FERNS.

BY EMILY TOLMAN.

The study of ferns is a fascinating pursuit for a summer vacation, nor need it be limited to the vacation season, since many of our wild ferns are quite easy to cultivate. I know a city back yard in which are growing twenty-one different kinds, the gradual accumulation of many outings.

In entering upon any new pursuit it is well to proceed from the known to the unknown. Perhaps no fern is more generally known and admired than the maidenhair.

> Those lowly sprays of quivering gauze
> Aërial in their slenderness

may owe their popularity partly to the fact that they are less common than many of our ferns. They hide away in deep glades and lonely ravines and escape the opprobrious epithet "brakes," given by the farmer to most of our larger ferns. While nearly every one can call the maidenhair by its common name, probably not one in twenty knows its manner of fructification, by which it is distinguished from other ferns. Look at the back of a fertile frond in July or August, and you will see that the edge of each lobe is turned back, covering the sporangia or spore cases.

The fern that is most nearly allied to the maidenhair, though strongly contrasting with it in general appearance, is the eagle fern, the common brake or bracken of our woods and thickets (Pteris aquilina). In this the entire margin of the fertile frond is turned back over the sporangia. The eagle fern is one of our largest and most widely distributed ferns, being found on sunny hillsides or wet woods nearly all over the world.

> The heath this night must be my bed,
> The bracken curtain for my head, sings young Norman of Armandave in The Lady of the Lake.

One of our most common and beautiful ferns is the aspidium spinulosum, or shield fern, whose dark green, twice-pinnate fronds are found in many a damp woodland. It is like a fine piece of lace. One is constantly tempted to gather and press the lovely fronds, though at a loss what to do with them when pressed. They seem a little stiff for decorative purposes, while the more graceful maidenhair looks well in a vase all winter. The fertile fronds bear on their backs the round fruit dots characteristic of the genus aspidium, with the shield-shaped indusium or covering membrane which gives them their name, aspidium meaning a small shield. By these fruit-dots they may be readily distinguished from the spleenworts, which are known by their oblong fruit-dots, with the indusium opening lengthwise along the edge. The common shield, or wood, fern (aspidium spinulosum) and the common lady fern (asplenium Filix-fœmina) are very much alike in general appearance. I have had a large, handsome plant of the former in a pot all winter. It did not grow, but kept fresh and green, and was much admired.

An easy fern for the beginner in this interesting study is the evergreen shield fern (aspidium marginale). The fertile fronds are very common and the fruit-dots are conspicuous. It is dark green, of a thicker texture than the spinulosum, and grows not only in rich woods, but on rocky hillsides and along country roads. I have found in August, on a plant growing out of an old stone wall, fronds in various stages of development, from that in which the fruit-dots were covered with a greenish white indusium to maturity, when a perfect imprint of the frond was left in copious brown spores upon the paper in which it was pressed. A third well-known aspidium is the Christmas or sword fern, whose rigid, evergreen fronds are sometimes used in Christmas decorations. It is common in woods, often growing around old stumps, and is easily cultivated in a shady yard. Closely resembling the last in general appearance, though smaller, is the common polypody, often called rock fern, since it is usually found growing on rocks. Its fronds are less sharply toothed than those of the Christmas fern, and the fruit-dots have no covering.

A dainty, fragile fern resembling in shape the aspidium spinulosum, but of a thinner texture and more delicate color, is the Dicksonia or hay scented fern. It withers quickly when gathered, but makes a pretty specimen for the herbarium, where it long emits a pleasant odor like that of new-mown hay. The fruit-dots are inclosed in a minute, cup-shaped indusium attached to a reflexed tooth of the frond. The Dicksonia is very common in moist, shady places.

Were my title favorite, rather than familiar, ferns, I should omit the onoclea, which grows like a weed in wet meadows and thickets, sometimes taking possession of low pastures almost to the exclusion of other vegetation. It does not tempt the ordinary fern-gatherer. It has neither the airy grace of the maidenhair, nor the lacelike beauty of the spinulosum, nor the delicate fragrance of the Dicksonia. Like some homely people, however, it possesses a sensitive nature. It is, in fact, called the sensitive fern from its tendency to fold together on being handled. The sterile fronds are pale green and broadly triangular. The fertile fronds bear no resemblance to them, and may easily be mistaken for another plant. I have one before me now, a stout, smooth, green stalk bearing a raceme or spike of small, hard nutlets. Though the sterile fronds wither with the first frost, the fertile fronds stand all through the winter and may be found with the new growth of the following spring.

The three osmundas, or flowering ferns, so called from their peculiar manner of fructification, are conspicuous for their size and abundance. They grow in low grounds, damp woods, and sometimes along dry roadsides. The first of these, the royal fern, is well deserving of its name, and is worth transplanting into our gardens. It is a large, handsome plant, with smooth, pale green (reddish when young), twice-pinnate fronds, attaining a hight of four or five feet. The fruit is borne at the summit of the fertile fronds, which are found in May or June. The other two osmundas are difficult to distinguish from each other, unless one sees the fertile fronds. In Clayton's, sometimes called the interrupted, fern the middle divisions of some of the fronds are fertile, bearing sporangia which turn from green to brown. In the cinnamon fern, the most common of the osmundas, separate stalks covered with cinnamon-colored fruit may be found in June among the tall, green, sterile fronds.

We have many other native ferns, but these twelve are among the most familiar, and may serve as an introduction to a delightful study, which will lure us into fields and meadows and charming woodland nooks.

The longer on this earth we live
And weigh the various qualities of men,
Seeing how most are fugitive
Or fitful gifts at best, of now and then,
Wind-wavered corpse-lights, daughters of the fen,
The more we feel the high, stern-featured beauty
Of plain devotedness to duty,
Steadfast and still, nor paid with mortal praise,
But finding amplest recompense
For life's ungarlanded expense
In work done squarely and unwasted days.

—James Russell Lowell

Closet and Altar

Let prayer be the key of the morning and the bolt of the evening.

We are to be but channels through which God's blessing shall flow past us to some other thirsting soul. To withhold our richness of comfort is more than selfish. It is absolute wrong done not only to God but to our fellowmen. It is the most sorely wounded spirit who should be able to give out the richest experience.

The light of eternity flashed in my face
As a loved one entered the gate.
I saw the work that remained for me
As in the vineyard I wait.
The hearts to gladden, the souls to win
That stumble along the way;
The eyes, now heavy with tears of sin,
To cheer with tidings of day.

Nothing is worthy of the name of comfort that is not strengthening, invigorating, inspiring. Life is a struggle and he who lacks courage lacks comfort in life's contests. He who would give comfort must in some way give strength and courage, and he who would have comfort must avail himself of aids to courage and strength. The promise of our Lord to his disciples was of the Holy Spirit as the "Comforter" in all their tribulations and conflicts. The word here translated "Comforter" is more literally "Stand-by." Its suggestion is of one ever at hand, ready to give support and help. All of us ought to have comfort—strength and courage—in the consciousness that the divine Stander-by is ever at our side and is sure to sustain us to the end. And if we ourselves are comforted we shall be a means of comfort to others.—H. Clay Trumbull.

Thou in mortal anguish lonely
Gavest thy life our hurts to heal.
Count not this my suffering only!
Woes of all who weep I feel.
Take our human consecration!
Help some sad soul through our pain!
Thou, whose wounds are our salvation,
Let no heart have bled in vain!

Blessed be thou, O God, who hast comforted us in all our tribulation that we might comfort others. We praise thee that when we have been cast down thou hast lifted us up, and we ask that this experience may give us wisdom and strength and cheer to help others in their extremity. Direct us toward those whom we can comfort and uplift, and open our eyes to discern the secret want and longing for sympathy in commonplace lives. Remembering him who bore our griefs and carried our sorrows, may we not refuse to give ourselves to others, dear though the cost may be. Help us to be patient with weakness, not forgetting thy forbearance with our infirmities. Give us large measure of faith and love that we may share largely with the troubled and afflicted of earth. And as thy sympathy arms us for trial and endurance, so may the comfort which we give be for the strength and not for the weakness of the souls we would help. O, cleanse us from all folly and self-seeking that we may become transparent mediums for the shining of thy light, and let us draw back from no experience of loss or loneliness or distress needful for thy purposes of help through us. And thine be all the glory, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

Tangles.

[For the leisure hour recreation of old and young. Any reader who can contribute odd and curious enigmas, etc., of a novel and interesting kind is invited to do so, addressing the Puzzle Editor of The Congregationalist.]

69. NUMERICAL.

"How 1-2-3-4-5 I make
My garden?" he would ask,
And 3-4-5 must undertake
To help him with his task.

The 5-6-7 he measured round,
Just ten feet by eleven,
But wondered how he could this ground
Best 3-4-5-6-7.

"5-6-7-8" of crops he knew
That he would like to grow;
At last he chose COMPLETE, that grew
In fragrant row on row.

1-2-3-4-5-6-7-8
He raised a mighty heap;
Indeed, to view the aggregate
Might make a Stoic weep.

70. AN ODDITY IN FRACTIONS.

A friend gave me last season a number of eggs, of which I unfortunately broke one-sixth of an egg more than one-sixth; when the others were set, one-fifth of an egg more than one-fifth of those set failed to hatch. One-fourth of a chicken more than one-fourth of the entire number of chickens hatched soon died. Of the survivors one-third of a chicken more than one-third have been marketed for the table; and eight, which is one-half a chicken more than half of all remaining, are now laying. How many eggs were given me? J. J. C.

71. METAGRAM.

(Example: Hart, part.)

As a ship that has weathered a storm-tossed sea,
Drifting for days
Over trackless ways,
Comes into a calm, still haven alee,
So come I, dear Father, at last to thee.

As a cloud, dear Father, sailing all day
With a PRIMAL fringe,
Loses its tinge
In the FINALED gold of the sunset sea,
So would I lose myself in thee.

CEPHAS.

72. BIBLICAL NUMERICAL.

1-8-5-4 is something Jesus effected for a woman. 3-4-2-1-4 is something Jesus left to his disciples. 5-7-9-2 names a town in Palestine where was great weeping. 6-2-7-9-2-6 is a king's prime minister in the Old Testament. 8-5 was a land east of Palestine. 9-7-6-6-2 was food in the wilderness. Whole, of nine letters, was a city in Palestine. E. P. A.

73. CHARADE.

(Partly phonetic.)

Brilliant in hue, but harsh in voice and note,
The FIRST darts swiftly through the summer air.
But when no more we see his gaudy coat
Nor hear his cry, when all the fields are bare,
When from the granary the golden corn
Has all been carried to the rumbling mill,
Within the storehouse—empty and forlorn—
He who shall seek will find the SECOND still.
Once WHOLE a-weary slept beside the way,
His pillow nothing softer than a stone,
Yet to him night was brighter made than day,
And sights none other ever saw were shown.

E. B. HILL.

ANSWERS.

66. Goal, gaol.

67. Assassinate (63 points); imaginability (242 points); oophorectomy (142 points). Total, 447 points.

68. 1. Haws, wash. 2. Plums, lumps. 3. Melon, lemon. 4. Pears, spear. 5. Peach, cheap. 6. Limes, smile.

Among answers received to July Tangles were: C. Jacobus, Springfield, Mass., 62; M. F. P., Cottage City, Mass., 62, 63; Rover, Providence, R. I., 62, 63; E. P., Newton Center, Mass., 61; Mrs. M. A. Harrington, Webster, Mass., 62; Mary E. Thomas, Forest Grove, Ore., 59, 60; W. S. Branch, Jr., Parker, S. D., 60.

Two or three lots of "Characteristic Initials" arrived too late to compete for the prize. Some of those from W. S. Branch, Jr., are particularly good, as these specimens will show: Alessandro Volta—Anchored Velocity; John G. Saxe—Jocund, Graceful Sage; John H. Vincent—Justly Helps Virtue; Samuel T. Coleridge—Strange Tale Constructor; James Russell Lowell—Justified Refined Literature; Samuel F. B. Morse—Sent First Brief Message; Lindley Murray—Language Molder. But the author's meaning is not quite clear in "Salmon P. Chase—Slavery's Pronounced Champion."

The Gist of It.

Alum costs between 3 and 4 cents a pound, but it is unwholesome.

Cream of tartar costs 25 cents a pound, but it is a fruit product and perfectly wholesome.

Cleveland's baking powder is made of pure cream of tartar; no alum, no ammonia, no tartaric acid, no phosphate, no adulteration of any sort.

That's why Cleveland's costs more to make than others; but it is worth more; it is wholesome and makes wholesome food.

She kneads it; you need it too—

"Duluth Imperial" Flour.

It answers every need and makes "better bread and more of it"—20 loaves more in every barrel—light, white and delicious.

If your grocer doesn't keep it, and won't supply you, don't get another flour—get another grocer; or send us a postal and we'll tell you where to get it.

DULUTH IMPERIAL MILL CO., Duluth, Minn.

The Sunday School

LESSON FOR AUG. 23. 2 Sam. 15: 1–12.

ABSALOM'S REBELLION.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

David founded a splendid nation and admirably administered it. But he could not manage his own household. His weakness in governing his family not only brought misery on himself and disaster to his kingdom, but prepared the way for its disruption and final destruction. Here we are called to consider the dark side of the life of a great man and the consequences of his evil deeds in family life and in the wider affairs of the nation. Absalom's rebellion is only one illustration of the conditions which could not have come to pass but for the sins of David. It points us especially to those evils prevalent in modern society and our own country:

1. Lack of family discipline. David had six sons born to him in Hebron from six mothers. Three of these six sons appear only in the mention of their birth. The other three are chiefly known because of their criminal conduct. David did not consider it wicked to have many wives. Polygamy under Old Testament morals was permitted and the greatest saints, as Abraham, Jacob and Gideon, practiced it. In this matter, as in many others, we have learned better things than the chosen people of God knew, and the instructions given to them in these matters have been superseded by worthier laws and precepts suited to our times.

But polygamy carried with it a lax regard for marriage, which promoted licentiousness and the train of vices which goes with it. David had stolen the wife of one of his bravest soldiers and to avoid the shameful consequences of his crime had caused her husband to be killed in battle. While David's public repentance in a degree averted the evil influence of his sin on the nation, he still kept Bathsheba as his favorite wife. When, then, his eldest son, Amnon, did a shameful wrong to his sister Tamar, David could not punish him as the law of Moses commanded, for in doing that he must have condemned himself. It was left to Absalom to avenge his sister, and again David, through his own lawlessness, could not administer law in his own household. Absalom fled to live three years with his grandfather, and then returned to his father's court out of favor, where his purposes grew ripe for rebellion.

It is well to dwell for a time on this wretched history, because it shows how bad government in families makes a badly governed nation. Parents are the chief guardians of the public welfare. When they with kindness and firmness maintain order and obedience in their homes, they serve their country well and help forward the kingdom of God. The marriage covenant involves solemn obligations to one's country as well as to God. It should always be entered into with religious ceremonies. One of the most important lessons to be impressed on young people is that upon the recognition of the sacredness of marriage depends the welfare of the state.

2. Selfish ambition in young people. David fostered it in Absalom. He allowed him to go and live idly at the court of his grandfather when he deserved to go to prison. When the young man came home again his father furnished him with plenty of money, with no worthy object to occupy his mind. He lived like a prince, with a royal retinue, because David was weak enough to allow it. Many rich parents are doing just this for their children. Their fathers are too busy making money and their mothers are too much absorbed in society to look after them. There is no more dangerous class in this country than rich men's sons and daughters, growing up with plenty of money and nothing to do. Every father exposes his country to peril who does not provide some business for his children and teach them to attend to it habitually, living within their means.

The people, too, did their part to spoil Absalom. He was very handsome and everybody told him of it. He had winning ways, also, and because he was without principle his gifts became a curse to himself and to the people. Too many young men are growing up with the idea that their country is to be used to promote their ambition rather than to be served for the public good, and our Government is in a measure responsible for it. It would be better not to have public schools than to have only those which teach that natural gifts and acquired knowledge are to be used for selfish ends. No country is safe which does not aim to teach its children that these things are trusts, which add to one's obligations to serve God and his fellowmen. The inheritance of free men in America is the privilege of devoting themselves to make a righteous nation. Absalom has many imitators among us. Unchecked in the use of his father's property and the usurpation of his father's honors, he came to mistake his prospect of inheritance for the right of ownership. He went to work to satisfy his ambition by lying to every man he met. He was skillful in the arts of the unscrupulous politician. He made it his business to meet men in whom he pretended he had an interest which he did not feel. He pronounced judgment on their grievances without investigation. Being faithless to his father he became faithless to every one. Then he pretended to be pious, and asked permission to go to Hebron and sacrifice to God, when he wanted to go there to sacrifice his father. One who is aiming to win honor for himself by being untrue to his friends is an enemy to the state, and votes which can be bought for him are millstones around the neck of the nation to sink it.

3. Well-meaning citizens careless of their responsibilities. These are only less dangerous than those who use them to further selfish political schemes. When Absalom went to Hebron to begin a civil war he found 200 men of some prominence in Jerusalem ready to follow him without knowing what he had planned. Probably they were invited to some sort of a feast, and sold themselves for a dinner. When they got there and discovered the plot of course they could not go back without suspicion, and their only resource was to cast in their lot with Absalom. It is astonishing how many men there are who are ready to help put a man into office without knowing his purposes, simply because they are attracted by his plausible speech and popular presence; and how many more there are who count their responsibility as nothing and refrain from voting. Absalom's 200 are to be found this year in many a city, ready to support any leader if only he abounds in promises and compliments and has a fine appearance.

4. Traitors in office. Ahithophel had earned and won a high place. But he betrayed his trust when he thought the people were going to desert David and turn to Absalom. Among the greatest perils to a nation are leaders whose chief aim is to be on the winning side. Men worthy to be followed must be ready to be losers in defense of principle. Such were Washington, Sumner, Chase and Lincoln—more eager for justice to all than for popular honors. They would sooner be with David fleeing than with Absalom when it seemed as though he would gain the throne.

Our country needs a party devoted to high aims and with wise and true leaders. O, for statesmen who make platforms, not to win votes, but to secure a rallying ground on which defenders of righteousness can stand together; for those who will maintain the education of youth which will make the noblest men and women; real freedom for those of every race; citizenship for all who intelligently accept it as a trust, and no others; the banishment of intemperance from the whole land; the bestowment of public office on those best fitted to discharge its duties, and loyalty everywhere to the law of God.

Don't Rub
Your Clothes
to tatters in a vain attempt to clean them with poor soap. Save your time and health by using Sunlight Soap
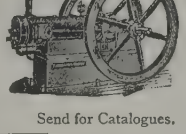
It makes home brighter.
Lever Bros., Ltd., Hudson and Harrison Sts., New York.

WHEATLET
Is Delicious for Breakfast Mush.
TRY IT!
Sold in 2-lb. packages by all leading Grocers.

SOMATOSE a perfect food, tonic and restorative for the invalid or convalescent. Send for free pamphlets.
SCHIEFFELIN & CO., New York.

Busy Women should use— WHITMAN'S INSTANTANEOUS CHOCOLATE.

A GOOD WATER SUPPLY
For GENERAL FARM USE, COUNTRY RESIDENCES, IRRIGATION, Etc.
IS INSURED BY A PROPERLY ERECTED
ECLIPSE WINDMILL —OR— GASOLENE ENGINE.

Eclipse Wooden AND Fairbanks Steel Windmills & Towers.
TANKS.
Send for Catalogues.


FAIRBANKS-MORSE GASOLENE ENGINES.
2 TO 75 H. P.
For Pumping or Power. Send for Catalogues.
We have every facility for putting in complete WATER SUPPLY AND POWER OUTFITS, and will submit estimates upon application.
CHARLES J. JAGER COMPANY,
174 HIGH ST., BOSTON, MASS.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
NOTICE NAME THIS LABEL ON AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM.

OUR OWN WORK.

Our Great Opportunity in China. All eyes are turned upon China, where the prospect grows brighter and brighter every month. Each fresh letter from the American Board's Foochow Mission brings added cause for rejoicing in the phenomenal turning toward Christianity. Miss Child, who so recently visited this field, gives a graphic picture in Life and Light of the present conditions, the result of this remarkable religious movement and the needs and opportunities of the work at this point. Churches, chapels and schoolhouses are dangerously overcrowded, missionaries have their hands more than full, and the supply of native helpers is pitifully inadequate to the demands of the villages, who send deputations "to invite Christianity." Under date of May 11 Mr. Beard writes: "At the communion held in the third Chinese month of this year—the month just closing—we count 145 additions to the churches, without having heard from Mr. Hubbard's field (the Chang Loh region) or from the Shao-wu field, and nearly as many candidates as were admitted were asked to wait until the next communion." Those who are inquiring as to the Christian doctrine are numbered by the hundreds, but the missionaries are extremely cautious about receiving only persons who appear to have the highest motives for becoming Christians and who give proof of genuine conversion. The aisles of the churches are filled with stools and the vestibules with benches, but they fail to accommodate the eager crowds. In the girls' boarding school ninety pupils and teachers have been occupying a schoolroom thirty-two by twenty feet large; three pupils sit at desks made for two, and in some recitation-rooms the girls stand huddled together because there is not room for seats. But the greatest need at present is workers, and particularly women workers. Miss Child was much surprised to find that the work for the Chinese women is far behind that for men. Of the seventy-nine who united with the church in February not more than half a dozen were women. Our Woman's Boards are supporting but three single lady missionaries in this region, while the Methodists have twelve and the English mission fourteen.

Bright Little Indian Pupils. The importance of planting Indian schools where the parents of Indian pupils can visit them is illustrated in a recent letter of Miss E. Jean Kennedy, one of the teachers at our Indian school at Oahe, S. D. She writes: "Our school doors at Oahe are closed for the summer and the pupils gone to their homes, to put into practice we hope the lessons learned and not to forget the longings for better things which inspired some of our older pupils this year. On the last Sunday we were together two of our girls were received into the church. The home influence of the school has been felt more by the older girls than it was last year, for they must know their teachers before they give their confidences to them. We have also succeeded to some extent in making the working hours as enjoyable to the small children as their play time, and often when they were making the little garments for the exhibition at the close of school the children have asked to have the work time extended, so eager were they to see them finished. It was a treat to watch the expressions on the faces of parents and children as the little people showed their own work to admiring friends and relatives and assured them, "I did sew every bit of it myself; she only cut and baste it for me." This was the time to speak out the joy and pride which filled the hearts of the relatives, and the little ones were duly rubbed down and patted and told in plain Dakota that they had done well. The parents listened quietly to the literary part of our program, expressing their pleasure in broad grins and low grunts which gratified the children, although the adults understood little of the songs and recitations."

From the Scene of the Latest Massacre. A long letter from Dr. Reynolds, dated June 23, describes the horrors of the recent massacre at Van, Turkey, and gives the latest news about this new distress. At the first alarm of danger the frightened people took refuge in the mission compound, and in describing the experiences of one terrible night our correspondent says: "We wended our way among the sleeping thousands who covered almost every inch of ground on the place, and the bright moonlight revealed the faces of men, women and children, some with bedding to cover them and some without. At least two acres of ground were covered as thickly as human beings could be packed, probably not less than 1,500 persons making up this aggregate of suffering humanity. One accustomed to the sight of the decks of Mediterranean steamers can form some idea of the scene. Houses, school buildings, stables, sheds, were thickly packed, over 1,000 persons being under the roof that usually finds it enough to shelter the lady missionaries and the girls' school." After quiet and order had been restored through the wise, prompt and heroic action of the British consul, aided by our American missionaries, and the announcement of the sultan's pardon had been made to the people, the crowds dispersed. "And so is ending, I trust," writes Dr. Reynolds, "this terrible week of suspense, terror and suffering. Our gardens are a waste, our houses are like pigsties. But O how thankful we are to have been able to minister in some measure to the safety of this community! The condition of the villages is likely to prove unutterably sad. Hundreds have already come in naked, starving and wounded, adding themselves to the hungry, houseless throngs for whom we must contrive in some way to provide. We need money as never before, but I fear the good people have become weary of giving and I do not see what is before these wretches."

THE WORLD AROUND.

A Protestant Preacher Honored in Italy. Almost at the same hour that Mr. Bayard, surrounded by the descendants of the Pilgrim Fathers and representative English Free Churchmen, was delivering a noble tribute to the "men of the Mayflower" at the laying of the foundation stone of the Robinson Memorial Church in Gainsborough, another company, standing for similar principles and including veterans of the wars of Italian independence, was assembled in the English cemetery at Rome, at the unveiling of a monument to Father Gavazzi, the Italian soldier, reformer and preacher, and friend of Garibaldi. The ceremony was marked by an unconventional simplicity befitting the personality of one whose "noble strength on fire" was consecrated to the glorious mission of emancipating Italy in civil and religious concerns from the thrall of Rome. The principal inscription on the monument reads: Ashes of the Christian patriot, Alessandro Gavazzi. Born at Bologna, March 21, 1809. Died at Rome, Jan. 9, 1889. At the back: Conducted the Roman Crusade to the wars of 1848. Defended Rome in 1849, and after ten years' exile followed his friend and leader, Giuseppe Garibaldi, in all the Italian wars until Mentana. On the right side the inscription is as follows: Minister of the gospel. Fought with eloquent words and with praiseworthy writings the errors of the Papal Church. Founded, with other patriots converted to Christ, the Italian Evangelical Church, of which he was head until his death. Among the autographic treasures of the writer that of Gavazzi's is specially prized, with the appended verse in the Italian tongue, "So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also." Assuredly Gavazzi belongs to the priesthood of freedom whose record will stand the test in the supreme court of time.

Chinese Students Here. An evidence of the changed sentiment in China regarding foreign influence and education is the recent arrival of thirty young Chinese lads to be educated in this country. They are under the care of Rev. Hule Kin, a Presbyterian minister in charge of a mission in New York, who went to China a few months ago to make arrangements for this experiment. The boys are children of farmers, who represent the middle class in China. Their parents were willing to make sacrifices in order to give them an American education, and have agreed to the payment of sixty dollars annually for the education of each student. The lads' ages range from twelve to sixteen years, and they are described as exceptionally bright and eager for an opportunity to receive educational advantages. During the summer the party will be given employment on a farm in Metuchen, N. J., but in the fall they will begin courses of systematic study at the mission in New York, and after receiving a preliminary education they intend to enter college. Eventually they will return to China, well equipped to promulgate foreign educational methods in their native land. Three of the boys are already Christians. It has been fifteen or twenty years since a similar purpose brought several Chinese youths to the United States, some of whom were seen in our New England colleges.

PEN AND SCISSORS.

The absurd charges made by the Turkish Government against Rev. George P. Knapp are printed in the current Missionary Herald, and are worth reading to show what lies the Turk can invent.

A summer home for foreign missionaries at Old Orchard, Me., known as Minnie's Seaside Rest, was dedicated last month, several eminent missionaries taking part in the exercises and Dr. Cyrus Hamlin presiding. The building was erected by Mrs. Charles Green of Baltimore as a memorial to her daughter.

District Secretary Hitchcock of Chicago is pushing a scheme which he calls the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Quick Relief Fund, to obtain in small sums from these young people's organizations money enough to retain the native preachers and teachers of the American Board who are now left unsupported on account of reduced appropriations.

For the first time in its history the Baptist Missionary Union is obliged to hold back well-equipped and experienced missionaries from their fields for want of funds. The past three years the society has been burdened with heavy debts, amounting one year to the immense sum of $203,000, and in spite of repeated reductions in expenditures a deficiency of about $163,000 still remains.

The French correspondent of one of the English papers prophesies the probable recall of M. Laroche, French Resident-General in Madagascar, who is accused of over-deference and amenity in dealings with Queen Ranavalona. The real difficulty, however, is in regard to religious matters. M. Laroche is a Protestant and, therefore, his enemies argue, is more in touch with the sphere of British religious influence, and he has showed an unsectarian willingness to acknowledge the great services rendered to the cause of civilization by the Norwegian and English Congregational missionaries.

I hope that more and more in our American education the ideal of the well-trained and vigorous body will be maintained neck-and-neck with that of the well-trained and vigorous mind as the two co-equal halves of the higher woman's education. The strength of the British empire lies in the strength of character of the individual Englishman, taken all alone by himself, and that strength, I am persuaded, is perennially nourished and kept up by nothing so much as the national worship, in which all classes meet, of athletic, outdoor life and sport.—Prof. William James of Harvard.

The Great Education Fiasco in England.

By the English Representative of The Congregationalist.

The English people have just been experiencing the sharp shocks of an educational earthquake. The stormy petrels of the great crisis were those two notoriously able and restless gentlemen, Mr. R. Diggle and Mr. Athelstan Riley. Mr. Diggle was for years chairman of the London School Board. In order to devote himself to the duties of this important position, which he occupied with indomitable zeal, he abnegated his "orders" as a clergyman of the Church of England. Mr. Riley is a wealthy and influential member of West End society and an intimate personal friend of the Archbishop of Canterbury. He is one of the most implacable sacerdotalists living, though a layman. These two gentlemen and their followers for three years fought hard to convert the London School Board into an instrument for the rapid promotion of sectarian tests in popular education. All through that time the public mind was bewildered by embittered controversies which kept the board in a constant ferment. When the new Tory government came into power last year it was felt by the High Church party that at length they had found their long-desired opportunity for the virtual repeal of the Act of 1870.

That beneficent act is generally spoken of by old politicians as "Forster's Act." Its great object was the emancipation of the public teacher, for the first time in English history, from clerical control and theological tests. It was under the operation of that memorable measure that school boards were instituted all over the country. But it was carefully provided that side by side with the new board schools, which were rapidly built, the old voluntary schools should continue to exist wherever they could prove their efficiency. As long as this was done a certain amount of public money was annually voted as a subsidy in aid. School boards were elected wherever the voluntary schools of the Church of England and other denominations could not overtake the needs of the increasing population. The voluntary schools are supported by private subscriptions and the allotted public grant. Of course they must submit to regular government inspection, but otherwise they are under no control of local ratepayers. The board schools give education at the entire expense of the ratepayers, and therefore they are subject to the jurisdiction of popularly elected local authorities.

The famous conscience clause was a chief feature in the Education Act of 1870. By this clause it was provided that, in all schools aided by the government grant, the children of any parents who objected to the religious instruction imparted should be exempt from such teaching. This is constantly alluded to as the "compromise clause." It has been a complete success, for it has oiled the educational machinery so efficaciously that the greatest harmony has prevailed throughout the country in consequence. But all the time the majority of the bishops and clergy have been nursing animosity to the system, and for some time a conspiracy has been forming for the destruction of it. The head centers of this conspiracy have been the archbishops of Canterbury and York and the prime minister. Lord Salisbury is a typical representative of the proud Cecil family, which from the days of Queen Elizabeth has striven for the privileges of the aristocratic and priestly castes against the popular progress. It is impossible to understand the meaning and the motif of this struggle over popular education without taking all these factors into account. The conflict belongs to the long war between the devotees of class exclusiveness on the one hand and the aspirants after democratic freedom on the other.

Now, as was inevitable, the voluntary schools have of late years greatly suffered in the competitive race with the board schools. Subscriptions have tended to fall off in arithmetical ratio. Therefore the cry was raised for the subvention on a liberal scale of these schools, while it was strenuously demanded that they should remain under sectarian control. This was the genesis of the new bill.

Sir John Gorst is now one of the most famous men in England. To him, as minister of education, although he has no seat in the cabinet, was committed the charge of the matter. But it so happened that on education affairs Sir John is far more advanced than most of his Conservative colleagues. He was not only compelled to incorporate in the measure all the cherished ideas of Lord Salisbury and the bishops, but he went in for a stupendous attempt to revolutionize everything educational. He brought out a measure of such amazing complexity that he soon succeeded in stultifying "clever Mr. Balfour," the leader of the House of Commons, as well as himself. The country rang with the laughter of popular derision—the very thing certain to kill any bill—as it became day after day fully evident that Sir John did not fully understand his own bantling, and that Mr. Balfour was in such confusion that he actually confessed he "knew little about education." Mr. Balfour has much astonished the country by taking to the plea, in the most artless manner, of childish ignorance on more than one subject of great public importance. Surely in the whole of parliamentary history there was never submitted to the House so complicated a measure. Its multiplicity of clauses related not only to elementary but to higher education, with which the Tories had never before shown any sympathy, and with which they did not want Sir John to meddle. Technical education and secondary schools were provided for, and these clauses were excellent. But it was at once contended that such matters would have been more appropriately dealt with in a special enactment.

The design to attack Nonconformity was so plainly the raison d'être of the whole scheme that a tempest began to rage forthwith. Indeed, one of the fiercest politico-religious controversies of the nineteenth century has convulsed the country, in the press, in society and in the churches. Certain phrases which have been uttered by eminent parties to the strife have become catchwords which will often be quoted. Lord Salisbury, unluckily for himself, talked of "capturing the board schools" in the interests of Anglicanism, as one of the prime objects to be aimed at. He also blurted out before a great meeting that a "threepenny rate" should be the financial standard for popular education. He has by such utterances so incensed multitudes of progressive minds that it will be long before he ceases to be assailed with the echoes of his words. The favorite expression of the clergy is that their voluntary schools are being subjected to "an intolerable strain."

The two distinctive points of the bill which overshadowed all others were contained in the now notorious fourth and twenty-seventh clauses. Round these two citadels of controversy the storm of conflict raged for weeks, until the government despaired of passing the bill, and at length suddenly withdrew it. The fourth clause was that on which the clergy generally laid most stress. It was simply financial, providing four shillings extra for each child in the voluntary schools. The twenty-seventh clause was in relation to spiritual matters, for it stipulated that henceforth if any reasonable number of parents desired any particular sectarian teaching, such teaching should be permitted. The appalling result which would accrue from this extraordinary arrangement is too obvious to need indication. It would turn school after school into a veritable bear-garden. The clergy welcomed the bill with acclamations as far as the fourth clause was concerned, but they were dismayed at the prospect opened up by the twenty-seventh, for they saw that heretics of all shades would be able to secure admission to church schools. Other clauses of this ponderous bill provided for the creation all over the country of curious mongrel committees. New controlling bodies were to be constituted in the most complicated manner, and the great central Privy Council in London was to be shorn of much of its prerogative. No wonder that after a few days mutterings of discord were heard in the ranks even of the Tory party. Nonconformists were everywhere up in arms. Dr. Guinness Rogers, Dr. Clifford and Mr. Price Hughes lifted up their voices with such eloquence that Sir Richard Tangye of Birmingham declared that between them they had killed the bill. The attempt to force the measure through Parliament was such an astounding failure that whereas the first informal reading was carried, with the help of the Irish Roman Catholic Home-Rulers, by a majority of 267, yet, when the second reading came on, the government, with all their supposed invincibility, never succeeded in carrying through more than the first twelve words of the first clause! On some of the amendments the divisions resulted in majorities which were sinking lower and lower, so that signs of defeat loomed ahead for this "strongest government of modern times." It soon became apparent that the bill was producing two effects. It was splitting the church party, and it was uniting the Liberals and Nonconformists into a compact whole. In this country it has long been known that Nonconformist homogeneity is irresistible. The small wing of the Liberal clergy attacked the government bitterly, and so did some High Churchmen. The radical Archdeacon Wilson of Manchester was as vehement as the ritualist, Canon Nunn. Lord Cranborne, son of the prime minister, actually expressed very different views from his father on some essential details. Strangest of all, the Archbishop of Canterbury was rebuked by the Archbishop of York for pushing things much too far in the attempt to make the most of the opportunity, while the Bishop of Hereford, the very broad-minded Dr. Perceval, loudly dissented from the utterances of the Bishop of London.

The government collapse was complete. Mr. Balfour announced, after secret consultation with his following, that it would be impossible to carry through the bill in face of the flood of amendments and of the garrulity of the House, about which he was very sarcastic. The bill would be hung up till January. Even the expected expedient of an autumn session was not proposed. That, of course, would block the grouse shooting, so precious especially to the Tory gentry. No government with a huge majority has ever experienced a greater rebuff at an early stage in its career. Far-seeing people are of opinion that the plan that must ultimately be adopted as the religious basis of popular instruction is for the Bible to be read, and if possible explained, without any dogmatic creeds or sectarian instruction. This is exactly what prevails in Canada, although the priests there of course desire to upset it, especially in Manitoba. Dr. Parker and a few other Nonconformists have advocated a purely secular system, but this finds no great favor.

BIBLICAL STUDY IN THE COLLEGES.

BY REV. JOHN W. BUCKHAM, SALEM.

Many readers of The Congregationalist are perhaps familiar with the experiment recently made by the president of a Western college to discover how much the entering class knew of the Bible. Using selections from Tennyson which contain Biblical allusions, he found that of the thirty-four young men in the class, nine did not understand the quotation: "My sin was a thorn among the thorns that girt thy brow." Eleven did not know what was meant by "the manna in the wilderness." Sixteen were ignorant of the "wrestling of Jacob with the angel." Twenty-six were at a loss to explain "Joshua's moon," and twenty-eight had no light regarding "Jonah's gourd."

Such a revelation of ignorance of the Bible reflects upon the home and the Sunday school as well as upon the youths themselves, and points an emphatic lesson. It also suggests the question why instruction should not be given in the college itself, not so much in these elementary matters, but in the Bible as literature; so that during the college course some conception might be gained, not only of the literary grandeur of Homer and Cicero, and Goethe and Shakespeare, but also of Isaiah and Job and Paul.

This question has been made exceedingly pertinent by an editorial utterance of Charles Dudley Warner, not long ago, which awakened much attention. He says: "Now, wholly apart from its religious or from its ethical value, the Bible is the one book that no intelligent person who wishes to come into contact with the world of thought, and to share the ideas of the great minds of the Christian era, can afford to be ignorant of. It is not at all a question of religion, or of theology, or of dogma, it is a question of general intelligence. A boy or girl at college, in the presence of the works set for either to master, without a fair knowledge of the Bible, is an ignoramus, and is disadvantaged accordingly."

To ascertain some facts indicative of the extent to which instruction in the Bible as literature is afforded in our higher institutions, letters were sent to a number of the leading colleges and universities of New England asking for information touching this point. The colleges addressed were Amherst, Bowdoin, Dartmouth, Harvard, Middlebury, Williams and Yale.

President Gates writes that instruction in the Bible as literature is given at Amherst. From the catalogue it appears that this is an elective in the first and second terms of Junior year and the third term of Senior year. He adds: "A course of lectures was given last year, at the request of the students, by members of the faculty, upon these themes: The Bible and History, The Bible and Biology, The Bible as Literature, The Bible and Political Economy, The Bible and Practical Ethics, The Bible as the Source of Life. President Hyde of Bowdoin writes: "There is a course in the New Testament conducted by the professor of Greek, and regarded as a portion of the regular course in Greek, which covers four hours a week for one term. In addition there are occasional voluntary classes conducted by some of the professors."

President Tucker of Dartmouth writes: "There are three courses on the Bible bearing on this point: (1) History of the English Bible—lectures and study of the literary content and language of Wycliffe's New Testament; (2) New Testament Greek—introductory lectures upon the New Testament language and the oldest manuscripts, with readings from the New Testament; (3) Old Testament history." At Harvard, "except that in some of the courses given in Semitic the Bible is studied, it is studied nowhere except in the divinity school." At Middlebury and at Williams no such instruction is given apart from Sunday Bible classes.

The report from Yale is as follows: "Since October, 1887, with the exception of one year, regular instruction has been given in the English Bible, or in portions of it, from a literary standpoint. The principal course in Biblical literature in English is a two years' course, purely elective, covering two hours a week, one year covering the ground of the history and literature from the earliest times down to the captivity, and the second year beginning at the captivity and covering the history and literature of the remainder of the Old Testament and of the New. Besides this main course there are usually offered three or four courses in English, which take up in a more thorough and detailed way the study of specific portions of the Old and New Testaments; for instance, for the current year there is a course of one hour a week on the minor prophets, and a course of one hour a week on the Hebrew wisdom writings, and a course of one hour a week on the Pauline epistles. In addition to these courses there are the usual opportunities for beginning or advanced studies of Greek or Hebrew or the Semitic languages."

Of the seven colleges addressed it will be seen that four report regular instruction in Biblical literature. Ten years ago such an innovation had hardly been thought of. Today our colleges, many of them, are giving the Bible, not only a formal, but a real recognition as a body of literature, to be studied not only for its religious and moral effects, but also because of its extraordinary literary interest and educational value. Among those who have done most to bring about this result should be mentioned President Harper and President George S. Burroughs, whose article upon The Bible in the College in the Andover Review for September, 1892, brought the subject to the attention of educators.

Hitherto the inference has been that, unique as the Bible is religiously, it has no other value and ought not to be degraded by literary or critical treatment. Yet if such disclosures of ancient ideas and customs and manners had been found in any other collection of ancient literature, it would have been seized upon and examined with avidity by our institutions of learning; and if such passages of literary power and beauty as, for instance, the 104th Psalm, or Isa. 60, or the prayer of Habakkuk, or the Sermon on the Mount, or 1 Cor. 13, or portions of the Apocalypse had been found in profane literature, they would have been held up before the student of literature as the consummate flowers of human thought and expression. When extrinsic values are magnified, intrinsic are in danger of being overlooked. Not only as life, but as literature, the Bible must be allowed to stand on its own intrinsic merits. Thus will its inspiration be most clearly discerned by the student.

There are, of course, serious difficulties in the way of the study of the Bible in colleges. Sectarian and denominational differences may intrude. The secretary of Harvard University writes: "Some years ago an attempt was made by the English department to give a course of study in the Bible, treating it purely as literature. The attempt gave rise to so many difficulties, because of the varying creeds of students attending the course, that it was abandoned." This is, however, a bugbear which is rapidly disappearing, and would hardly be met with in most institutions.

A more serious difficulty is stated by President Tucker. "In regard to the general policy of studying the Bible as literature in the colleges," he says, "I have not yet arrived at a clear decision. My difficulty is the amount of time required for anything like a fair understanding of the critical questions involved. Very few college students are interested in these questions. These questions belong to the seminary and even there largely to specialists. Still they are necessary to a proper understanding of the Bible as literature."

It will be noticed that in the case of every institution above cited the study which we are considering is an elective, as President Tucker suggests, and not a part of the required course. Only a very general treatment of parts of the English Bible, with a fragmentary study of the Greek Testament, can, it is true, be made. But even this cannot fail of being of great value to the student. In recent examinations of one of our leading theological seminaries, the most marked and remarked defect of the students examined was their lack of knowledge of the English Bible. And yet, as was said by one of the professors, that is a deficiency which the seminary itself, with all its other branches of study, cannot well supply. For this training, so essential, not only to the minister but to every well-educated person, we have a right, it would seem, to look to the home, the Sunday school and the college.

A Morning in the Armour Institute.

By Rev. E. F. Williams, D. D.

"It may be interesting to know how this work began," said Dr. Gunsaulus, the president. "We had the mission, with thirteen or fourteen hundred children, on our hands. Plymouth Church was doing its best with them, through meetings on Sunday and during the week. Mr. Armour provided everything for the neighborhood—reading rooms, a fine Sunday school library, kindergartens, a free dispensary, every possible moral and religious influence, but the boys were going to ruin. They were well taught, but they did not know what to do with their hands. Their bodies were full of passion. They could not control themselves. We saw that they must learn how to take care of themselves. It was almost as bad with the girls. Many of them were very pretty. They were going down town for work, and by reason of their small wages were exposed to great temptation. So the institute was started to teach boys and girls the secret of self-help and self-control. The result has been all that we could expect, more than we had anticipated. There are now about a thousand pupils in the institute. Our buildings are not large enough. More pupils apply than we can receive. The institute has changed the entire character of the region. In fact, its influence extends over the whole city."

THE ARMOUR INSTITUTE.

The impression made by the buildings and their equipment is that money has been used with princely generosity. Yet nothing has been spent for simple ornament, only for that which is absolutely necessary and of permanent value. The building for the institute proper, with its furnishings, cost $438,000. The yearly expense of the establishment, $75,000, and of the mission opposite is met by the income of 250 flats, which occupy the entire block on which the mission is located and half the block set apart for the institute. Tuition is so moderate, and so many are taught who are unable to pay anything, that the income from this source is hardly counted. Everything about the premises is neat and attractive. The corridors are ornamented with rare engravings, which are changed every month. Under each picture is a short description of its meaning. Splendid mineralogical specimens, instead of being gathered together in a museum rarely visited, are also found in these halls and are passed many times a day by the students.

AN INTERIOR VIEW.

The library is a source of great power. It is under the best possible management. The school of library science connected with the institute has acquired a fine reputation. It has at present eighteen students, but applications for graduates exceed the ability to meet them. The library contains about 15,000 volumes, and is steadily growing. It is rich in English literature, and in the technical books which students in the different departments of the institute need to consult. The reading-room is nearly always full, and its treasures are much in demand. In order to create an interest in good books thirty traveling libraries, containing ten volumes each, have been provided. These are children's books of the best class. Saturday afternoon a young woman goes out with one of these libraries to a home in the vicinity, gathers the children about her, allows them to invite in other children to the number of ten, and then reads to them from one of the books. Mothers are thus interested. They want to hear the story or the history which is read. They are anxious to borrow one of these books. This they are allowed to do. Inquiries are soon made about the cost of books, and parents who desire to purchase for themselves are helped to obtain them at a low price. As these libraries are frequently changed, and as they are all in constant use, their elevating influence can easily be inferred. Dr. Gunsaulus believes in the educating and refining effects of art. One of the special features of the institute is its frequent art exhibitions, free of cost, for poor and overworked mothers. These are given in such a way as not to interfere with the work of the students, and so as to make the impression that special pains have been taken to prepare an exhibition of real value. For this purpose some of the choicest works of art from Mr. Armour's house and Mr. James W. Ellsworth's gallery are borrowed, and descriptions of them given the visitors which do not fail to create a desire to look at the pictures carefully. Many surprising revelations have been made in the questions which these toiling women ask when in the presence of some of the choicest of these paintings or engravings. "Do artists think that beautiful? We have always thought such things beautiful, but we did not think that artists thought as we do."

The institute is connected through its kindergarten department with the Chicago Free Kindergarten Association. The mornings of five days in the week are therefore set apart for the children, who, to the number of at least 150, are gratuitously taught. In the afternoon there is a normal class for kindergarten teachers. The instruction is of the most thorough kind, and is resulting in the raising up of a large number of teachers whose future influence on the little children of the poorer classes in the city will be productive of untold good. There are at present about 125 in this normal kindergarten class.

Special attention is paid in this school to the physical culture of the pupil. Indeed, no one is received whose parents or guardians object to regular exercise under competent instruction in the gymnasium. It is surprising what changes in the appearance of a pupil are often brought about by this simple regulation. Bent forms, round shoulders, a shuffling gait, total inability to manage one's limbs, both on the part of girls and boys, soon disappear. In their place come ruddy cheeks, upright forms, brisk, elastic movements indicative of health and perfect control of one's self. It is not so much that these pupils need exercise; they require the training which gymnasium work alone can give. The room set apart for the gymnasium is on the top floor, and is large, light and airy. On this floor, also, are rooms for the drawing classes, which are always full. As an elevator is in constant use there is no trouble in reaching them.

The cooking school in this institute enjoys a high reputation. It is patronized by the daughters of the wealthy and by housekeepers, as well as by the daughters of the poor. Instruction is scientific and exact. Only one lesson is given a week. The course extends through three terms of twelve weeks each. So this school is making itself felt, not only in the homes of the poor but in those of wealth and culture also. As a test of the ability of the young ladies receiving instruction, Dr. Gunsaulus frequently asks a few gentlemen to a lunch which two of the young ladies are chosen to prepare. One of them is taken from a home of comfort and plenty, the other from one of poverty or neglect. Connected with the kitchen is a model dining-room. China and linen are of the best. The table is spread with the utmost neatness, and as good a lunch as can be provided with the money which the Doctor furnishes is expected.

As an illustration of what is sometimes accomplished an actual occurrence may be mentioned. At a lunch given some time ago, the daughter of a man who may be called O'Flarrity was one of the two who served. Her associate was a young woman who knew how a table should be set, and how gentlemen should be waited upon. Miss O'Flarrity went home and began to think. Her mother was dead, the care of the house was in her hands. Her father worked hard. He was in the habit of coming home tired, drinking a great deal of beer, soon falling asleep, and then throwing himself upon his bed in the clothes which he wore during the day and which he usually kept on through the night. One evening the father came home, as usual, and found the table nicely set. A clean white cloth covered it. The daughter said: "I want you to sit down here. We are going to have things a little different. We will begin with soup." "But I don't want any of your soup." "But this is very nice. All respectable people eat soup. You must taste it." The father tasted it, liked it and ate a second dish of it; perhaps a third. Other food followed. After that supper no beer was wanted. That night Mr. O'Flarrity slept in his bed like other men. Soon he wanted a better tenement, and now is paying $25 a month for one of the Armour flats, and his daughter, of whom he is justly proud, and who has made a new man of him and filled him with new ambitions, is a teacher in the mission and universally respected and honored. All this was brought about, as the father assured Dr. Gunsaulus, by an Armour Institute lunch.

The sewing school is also working a revolution in the ideas of the people whom the institute seeks to reach. There are classes for beginners with the needle as well as for those who wish to learn dressmaking thoroughly. The same is true as respects millinery. There are five classes a day of an hour each. The course for beginners lasts three months. Skillful teachers are employed, women from the best establishments in the city. Of twenty-five girls in the highest or "order department," where work is done for those who order it, fifteen young ladies are supporting themselves, and thus, by their own energy, are enjoying the advantages of the institute. This department has been so skillfully managed as to prove a source of small profit. For these special departments special fees are paid.

The institute, both in its academical work, which is extremely important and made very prominent, and in the college course, gives unusual attention to English literature. Other branches are not neglected, but it has been thought that the pupils of this institution would be profited even beyond those in most other schools by a thorough knowledge of the literature of their native language. They are fortunate in their professor, who is an enthusiast in his department. The course begins with the first term of the preparatory academy and is carried through at least two years in the college course. At the end of this long period of training the student is enabled to appreciate the beauties of an author, and to write according to the laws of the language which he speaks. It is one of the drawbacks to the work of the institute that so poor instruction in English literature is given in the grammar schools of the city. Among the many things which the professor in this department teaches is the use of books. The works of great authors, the makers of literature, are studied, and in the later years of the course rhetoric and logic.

The school is strong on its practical side. Its electrical course is extensive and thorough. No institution west of Cornell University has a better electrical equipment. Its graduates are in demand everywhere. Into this department alone $68,000 of apparatus have been put. Experiments requiring the greatest skill are here performed, and experts even are willing to receive suggestions from its teachers and to give instruction themselves if need be.

The department of physics, in which instruction is of the best, has removed to the flats across the street. Here, too, Latin, in a flat of its own, is taught. Class rooms for the modern languages are still found in the institute building. While all the work of the institute aims at teaching young men and young women how to make their way in the world, the most practical departments of all, perhaps, are those in which about one hundred pupils are taught how to work in wood and iron, steel and brass. After three months of handwork in wood, three months' work in iron are required. By junior year a student is almost an expert. He is fitted to go into a shop and become a master of every department of his trade in a very short time. Opportunities for work in iron and wood are as good as could be desired, and the results of the training given and earnestly sought are exceedingly promising.

Not long ago there were two students in chemistry who boasted of their anarchistic sentiments. They said they were learning how to manufacture and use dynamite at Armour's expense. They were allowed to remain in the institute. No attempts were made to change their opinions, although they could scarcely fail to perceive that few agreed with them. The fifth of July, 1894, one of the awful days of mob rule in Chicago, Dr. Gunsaulus was in one of the upper stories of the institute looking down on the mob below. It was surging along the railroad tracks, threatening destruction wherever it went. All around were burning cars. Some one cried out, "These are old Armour's buildings." No attempt was made to destroy them. Dr. Gunsaulus went down to the mob and selecting ten men from it asked them to go with him through the building, and see what Mr. Armour had done for the laboring people. They were shown everything. They were permitted to meet the anarchists who were at work in the laboratory. Nothing was said about the strike. The buildings suffered no injury during the disturbances. Later the young men essentially modified their opinions, and while they would now probably call themselves Christian socialists, they are as grateful as thousands of others are to Mr. Armour for the privileges they have enjoyed.

From what has been said it will be inferred that the institute is divided into departments, each with its own corps of teachers. There are six of these departments—the scientific academy, the technical college, and the departments of domestic arts, of commerce, of music and of kindergartens. The technical college includes the departments of mechanical engineering, of electricity and electrical engineering, and that of chemistry and chemical engineering, each requiring a four years' course of study. It includes, also, the departments of architecture and of library science. By arrangement with the Art Institute instruction in artistic and technical work is given in the rooms of the Art Institute at the foot of Adams Street on the Lake Front, while Armour Institute furnishes scientific and mathematical instruction.

It is not true that the institute was designed for any one section of the community, least of all for those alone who are too poor to avail themselves of the advantages offered by other institutions. Mr. Armour has desired to create a desire in young men and young women for a liberal education, and while enabling them to preserve their self-respect to make it possible for them to secure such an education. If the sight of the more than 1,500 young people, chiefly from the poor, in Armour Mission Sunday school first gave rise to the purpose to found an institution where they might receive suitable instruction, the purpose steadily grew broader, till now any are received who are fitted to enjoy its advantages. The aim is declared to be "broadly philanthropic." It seeks to give knowledge, skill and culture. Manual training, while a part of the technical course, especially in mechanical engineering and in the department of domestic arts, is not regarded as an end in itself. The school is avowedly a Christian school. It is the week day complement of Armour Mission, and is intimately connected with it in sentiment and association, if not in name. It recognizes "the standards of Christian culture," of course in no denominational sense. Great pains are taken to elevate sentiment, purify the taste and refine the manners.

Twenty-two hundred pupils are now connected with Armour Mission Sunday school. While there is no church organization here, preaching services are held twice each Sunday. There are prayer meetings, mothers' meetings, meetings for boys and girls, clubs for young men and young women—in short, organizations for every kind of work which is carried on in the best and most active of our churches. There are three Societies of Christian Endeavor. The mission has a pastor of its own.

Dr. J. H. Hollister, one of our best physicians, for many years superintendent of Plymouth Mission, out of which Armour Mission grew, and the first superintendent of the new mission, now has it in charge. For several years it was under the care of E. B. Smith, Esq., an enthusiast in the work, who now resides in a distant quarter of the city and is engaged in Sunday school service nearer home. The property of the institute and the mission, situated at the corner of Thirty-third Street and Armour Avenue, is beautiful to look upon. Its value cannot be far from $2,000,000. It is set apart for the support of the mission and the institute. For the mission $100,000 were left by Mr. Joseph F. Armour, to which his brother, Mr. P. D. Armour, has added a far larger sum as the needs and possibilities of the work have opened before him. The property is in the hands of trustees, who are pledged to see that its income secures the object which the donors have had in view.

The Sunday school met in the Armour Mission buildings the first time Dec. 5, 1886. Six years later, Dec. 24, public announcement was made of Mr. Armour's gift for the institute. About three years' work has been done in the latter. That thousands have been taught the way of life in the mission, and other thousands encouraged to try and get an education, is a fact which those who have known the history of the work in this once desolate and depraved section of the city joyfully recognize. They are thankful, too, that one so competent in all directions, so fully in sympathy with Mr. Armour on the one hand and with young people on the other, as Dr. Gunsaulus is at the head of the institute. He is imparting to it something of his own enthusiasm and impressing his own rare personality upon it. It is also a matter for gratitude that Plymouth Church stands so loyally back of its pastor, and by its generous gifts renders it possible for him to furnish clothing and tuition to not less than 300 persons every year, who but for such aid could not be in the institute at all. The part which Plymouth Church has taken in the work of the mission, and is now taking through its sympathies and its contributions in the work of the institute, deserves a recognition which it rarely receives. The three years' work above reviewed is only the beginning of what the friends of learning and religion hope for.

MASSES AND CLASSES.

A WRONG AND HARMFUL DISTINCTION.

Writing in the Boston Transcript, Barrett Wendell of Cambridge utters this warning against the growth among us of antipathy between capital and labor, and points his lesson with a reference to the late ex-Governor Russell:

Masses and classes are new words in American politics, and words which no patriotic American can welcome. That the well-being of any fixed body of our citizens can coincide with anything but the well-being of the commonwealth is a fact not contemplated by our institutions. Nor does any one seriously believe even now that a state of affairs disastrous to capital can benefit labor, or that one disastrous to labor can really strengthen capital. As the wealth of our country has increased, however, the inevitable inequalities of fortune which growing wealth involves insidiously affect the temper of rich and of poor alike. Insensibly the classes and the masses begin to think and to live in manners which tend to differ more and more. This is not a moment to enter into discussion of what has happened to emphasize these differences, nor yet of what may happen in the future. Of one thing, however, all sincere and rational people must feel sure: Whatever fundamental, ineradicable differences may arise between masses and classes, these are by no means the whole question. The very differences of life and of education which are bound to exist between people of ample means and people of straitened means are bound to give rise to endless innocent, mischievous lines of mutual misunderstanding. In such event, masses and classes alike will always welcome a public figure whom both alike can comprehend. Such a figure we have lost in Russell. The profound sense of public bereavement so spontaneously evinced, then, is no trivial fact; unconsciously, perhaps, but for that very reason all the more sincerely, it expresses how classes and masses alike realize the transcendent value of an interpreter.

The only cure for erroneous criticism is more and better criticism.—Prof. Marcus Dods.

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Aug. 23–29. The Duty and Joy of Church Membership. Matt. 10: 16–33.

Connection with an organization is a duty, and becomes a joy only when one is in thorough sympathy with its principles and aims. No amount of argument can convince me that it is my duty to join, or that I should find any pleasure in belonging to, a fire-engine company or to the State militia or to a farmer's grange. For such organizations, when properly conducted, I have a great respect, but just at present I have other and more absorbing interests. It is just as vain to labor with a man with reference to church membership, unless he cares in a hearty, earnest way for Christianity. And if he has become a Christian he ought not to need much urging.

If his Christian life be at all deep and strong and purposeful, he will go where he belongs. What Christ, his Master, wants him to do will weigh considerably with him. What most of his fellow-believers have done will also have its influence. He will reason about it in the same sensible fashion which he has used in settling other relations. He has allied himself with a certain political party, not because its opinions as expressed in its platforms are in every minute particular his own, not because the party is absolutely free from men whom he dislikes and distrusts, but because, on the whole, he wishes to be counted among those who are known as believers in certain political doctrines, and because he thinks that through such an alliance he will be better able to fulfill the duties of a patriotic citizen. In short, the true disciple of Christ does not usually hide behind excuses which are simply pretexts. He is too manly and straightforward to indulge in a specious kind of reasoning, which if applied to other human relations, would cut him off entirely from all formal association with his fellowmen.

Now and then, let us frankly admit, we find exceptions—men who are humble and sincere Christians and yet not connected with any church. But what is the most frequent and the best excuse which these friends of ours have to offer? Is it not this, that they think they can be just as good Christians without joining the church? Possibly they may be so different from the rest of their kind that this claim of theirs is true. Perhaps they are superior to the help and inspiration of the church. Its noble worship, its stately hymns, its blessed sacraments, its history and traditions, the thought of all its saints and martyrs may carry no appeal to such a one; but if he cannot be persuaded by considerations of his own need of the church, will he not remember that others weaker than he are by his example deprived of the strength which might come through church membership. And the better the man is who stays outside the more harmful is his influence, for others point to him as one who is "just as good as your church members and a good sight better than many of them."

As respects the joy of church membership, it will be real and large according to the strength of our purpose to make much of it. If we look upon it as one of the most sacred and precious relationships of our lives, we shall find it yielding greater and more solid satisfactions day by day.

Parallel verses: Ps. 24: 3; 43: 3; 84: 10; 93: 5; Isa. 60: 13; Acts 2: 47; 20: 28; Eph. 5: 25; Col. 1: 18.

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING.

Topic, Aug. 16–22. The Hymns of the Church. Ps. 150; Col. 3: 15–17.

Their history; their private and public use. What are your favorite hymns?

(See prayer meeting editorial).

The Conversation Corner.

DEAR CORNERERS: I have one other picture to show you which I brought from my native town. It represents a part of the wall in the "front room" of an old farmhouse situated on the road leading from the falls on "the long river," referred to last week, to Vermont. It is only a quarter of a mile from the Common, and the house on the corner of it shown you two weeks ago, and I used to go past it very often in my boyhood. But, curiously enough, I never saw or heard of the pictured room then, I suppose because the house was occupied by an invalid lady, who kept everything very quiet; perhaps the "best room" was almost never opened. Her father, who had died years before, was a physician, well educated but eccentric. He was also the old-time postmaster of the village, and the little building beside the main house, which was still standing in my boy-hood, my father called "the old post office." It was never opened, but we boys understood that it was full of all sorts of curious canes which the old doctor had collected.

But now for the pictured room. It was the northeast room and must have been cold enough in the "old-fashioned winter." Of course there was no "air-tight" stove then, but the fireplace was open and the bellows in frequent use. The story about the pictures is that in the War of 1812 a deserter from the British army strayed into the interior and was kept, if not secreted, by the old doctor. To while away his time, or perhaps in part payment for board, he painted the walls of this room. The groundwork is buff, with ferns in blue, and with uncounted clusters of strawberries. It was a curious freak of the artist that no two clusters were alike, either the number or the grouping being different.

The picture over the mantel was evidently the artist's masterpiece. It is certainly a very unique combination of scenery. The ship, the brig, the schooner, are all under full sail in a land-locked harbor, with a four-horse coach, larger than one of the houses, close by. The tradition is that he intended it as a reminiscence of Boston Harbor. Be that as it may, a party of soldiers appeared one day, arrested the artist, handcuffed him and took him away, and the family never heard of his fate. In contrast with this bit of old-time romance of sea and war, we have now a boy's vacation letter from the seaside, close to a famous navy yard:

NEW CASTLE, N. H.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am keeping the names of most all the vessels that come in. I have the names of lots of schooners and other different boats. When we got here there was a five-masted schooner in the harbor, and it just got through unloading coal at Portsmouth this noon. A government boat, named Geranium, came in and we rowed out to it and looked all over it. Edward and I have been fishing and rowing. We had our boat painted since last year. It is painted different and is not so pretty. I just found the name of a schooner yacht with some opera glasses, and found it was Widgeon. A brick barge just came in, named the Elliot. Edward is down on the beach playing now. HARRY T.

I was just thinking about you, Harry, and Portsmouth, this morning, when I saw a newspaper clipping about the old ship Constitution there, and that there is a plan to have her "repaired and taken to Washington next year, which is the 100th anniversary of her launching." Have you ever boarded her?

BETHEL, CT.

My Dear Mr. Martin: I am a little girl seven years old, and want to become a Cornerer. I live about two miles from Putnam's Park, which is located on the camping grounds of Putnam's army in the war of the Revolution. The old fireplaces are still in place, and a large monument has been erected, also log cabins such as the old settlers used in 1776. Who knows any facts about Gen. Israel Putnam's life? PAULINE S.

BRIDGEPORT, CT.

Dear Mr. Martin: I thank you very much for the certificate. Will you please tell me why the eagle is our national bird? Also, why it is used as a book rest upon the lectern in Episcopal churches? HERBERT G.

A bright thought has struck me while I have been copying these letters. Here are three questions, all of a historic and patriotic character, which we ought to know about. So I propose to you to write on these three subjects: The Story of the Frigate Constitution; The Story of General Putnam; The Use of the Eagle as a National Emblem. You can write on one subject or all. You are limited to 500 words, making it shorter if you wish. Mr. G. U., of last week's Corner, is shut out of the competition because he is ninety-eight years old, and all others over eighteen. You can have until Sept. 15 to write and mail your letters. To the boy or girl writing the best article on either of these subjects, I will send a Corner Scrap-Book (illustrated, paged, indexed). If the winner has one already, I will substitute some other book of similar value. The lectern part of the eagle subject need not be considered, although I presume some one will answer that question.

Mr. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

Presidents of the United States. The last president of the nineteenth century is to be chosen by the people of the nation in November next. The election is perhaps more important to the public welfare than any since the close of the Civil War, and the campaign will be a vigorous and exciting one. Although most of us Cornerers cannot vote and need not shout, we ought to be interested in the election and know something about it. Thinking it would be useful for us to remember who have occupied this great office in the past, I have prepared for you a list of all the presidents in their order, with the date of inauguration, the State from which they came, their age at inauguration, and the political party by which they were elected. A * indicates those who died in office. In those cases names that follow are of men who were elected as vice-presidents. The dates show what presidents continued in office for two successive terms. Fed. stands for Federalist, Dem. for Democratic, Rep. for Republican:

1. Washington,	1789	Va.	57
2. John Adams,	1797	Mass.	61	Fed.
3. Jefferson,	1801	Va.	57	Rep.
4. Madison,	1809	Va.	57	Rep.
5. Monroe,	1817	Va.	58	Rep.
6. J. Q. Adams,	1825	Mass.	57	Rep.
7. Jackson,	1829	Tenn.	61	Dem.
8. Van Buren,	1837	N. Y.	54	Dem.
9. W. H. Harrison,	1841*	Ohio	68	Whig.
10. Tyler,	1841	Va.	51	Whig.
11. Polk,	1845	Tenn.	49	Dem.
12. Taylor,	1849*	La.	64	Whig.
13. Fillmore,	1852	N. Y.	52	Whig.
14. Pierce,	1853	N. H.	48	Dem.
15. Buchanan,	1857	Pa.	65	Dem.
16. Lincoln,	1861*	Ill.	52	Rep.
17. Johnson,	1865	Tenn.	56	Rep.
18. Grant,	1869	Ohio	46	Rep.
19. Hayes,	1877	Ohio	54	Rep.
20. Garfield,	1881*	Ohio	49	Rep.
21. Arthur,	1881	N. Y.	50	Rep.
22. Cleveland,	1885	N. Y.	47	Dem.
23. Benj. Harrison,	1889	Ohio	55	Rep.
24. Cleveland,	1893	N. Y.	55	Dem.

Remarks on the List. Washington was elected unanimously both times, receiving the entire electoral vote. This has never occurred again, although Monroe at his second election received every electoral vote but one, a New Hampshire elector casting his vote for John Quincy Adams, in order, it is said, that Washington alone might have the glory of a unanimous election! John Q. Adams was elected by the House of Representatives, none of the (four) candidates receiving a majority of the electoral votes. Washington was elected without reference to party. The four presidents from Jefferson to J. Q. Adams were elected by the "Republican" party, although they were not at all identical with the present Republican party. That was organized as a national party in 1856 to oppose the encroachments of slavery.

Questions on the List. Can you give at sight the full names of all the presidents? Of all the vice-presidents? How many were elected to a second term? What State has the honor of producing the largest number? Who of the list were elected on account of their military achievements? What is the constitutional age of a candidate for the presidency? What has been the average age of our presidents? Who in your opinion was the best president of all? Who in your opinion will be inaugurated March 4, 1897?

N. B. Cut out this column for your Scrapbook. Add to the list the names, etc., of the present candidates.

L. M. M.

Literature

BOOK REVIEWS.

THE LIFE OF DR. A. J. GORDON.

It would be hard to find a more significant example of Scotch blood ripening in New England surroundings than is afforded by Adoniram Judson Gordon, whose biography has been prepared by his son, Ernest B. Gordon. The strength of the New Hampshire hills and the clear beauty of its skies and streams seemed reflected in a singularly single hearted, pure and helpful life, richly blessed in years of service to his church, the city of his adoption, and his generation in America and the world. It was no singular or partial praise which made Dr. Withrow, now moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly, but for ten years a Boston Congregational pastor, say of him, "He impressed me as being the most Christlike man I ever met." It was the blending of strength with unselfishness, the simplicity of faith with high courage and persistency which made him stand for so much as a leader of spiritual energies.

Dr. Gordon's life was not in the ordinary sense of the word eventful. A boyhood on the farm, an education made possible by the self-sacrifice of the family, study at Brown University and Newton Seminary, a suburban pastoral apprenticeship and a city church made up the outward events of its history, but Dr. Gordon was a man who would have made any surroundings heroic.

A man of intense and often unpopular convictions, sternly opposed to many of the usages of his own church, and exceedingly plain spoken, it must not be imagined that he was narrow minded or forbidding. The large men are humor-loving men, and Dr. Gordon was no exception, nor has his biographer denied us some of the good things which he enjoyed. A Calvinist of the strictest school, he was one of the most genial of companions; a firm believer in the pre millennial and speedy coming of our Lord to reign in person on the earth, he neither made that belief a test of fellowship nor gave it a larger than its proportionate share in his pulpit teaching. It colored his theory of missionary work, but not so as to hinder his becoming the most trusted of advisers and coadjutors. He was a believer in the authority and historical trustworthiness of the whole Bible, and yet he had no harsh word to speak of the "higher critics," realizing with characteristic good sense that the only way to work a problem of this kind out is to let men think it through. He was the trusted friend and co-worker of Wendell Phillips and of D. L. Moody, hymn writer, musician and composer of doctrinal and practical books of the first order, one of the most popular preachers to college boys in the country—surely a large and widely-gifted soul well worth studying in the pages of his biography, now that he has gone from our midst.

The book is, for the most part, admirably and carefully done, though in style and matter it is marked by a few youthful indiscretions. If Mr. Gordon could have spared us his French it would have been an improvement. His handling of Emerson and the transcendental movement seems to us shallow and unfair, resting upon an imperfect knowledge of the history of New England thought and undervaluing the spiritual side of Emerson's teaching. In like manner he misreads and misunderstands a chance remark of Hawthorne. Dr. Gordon's relation to and growth in the Northfield work seems to us to have hardly its full share of space. Worst of all in a book of the significance and importance of this one, a topical index is wholly lacking. We hope this indispensable matter will be attended to in a second edition. When we have said this we are done with fault-finding, and can heartily commend the book as a well-balanced record of a remarkable life. [Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.50.]

EDUCATION.

The ceaseless broadening and deepening of American university education finds a witness in Graduate Courses, a Handbook for Graduate Students. It is all the more significant because it is prepared under the supervision of the Federation of Graduate Clubs, an organization of the post-graduate students themselves for common needs and advantage. Mr. C. A. Duniway of Harvard is the editor-in-chief, and is assisted by twenty-four assistant editors representing as many different institutions of learning. Four of these represent Barnard, Bryn Mawr, Radcliffe and Wellesley among the women's colleges, and more than half of the others are co-educational. The book is strictly a hand-book, covering the courses offered for 1896–7 in the different institutions, together with some useful statistical information in regard to the courses and teachers. The result is a book on much the plan of the German "Universitäts Kalander," which is the inseparable companion of every student and which is studied eagerly with a view to making the most of the university opportunities. To the tendency already visible in American college life to go from university to university in order to get the courses of a famous or favorite teacher this hand-book will add strength, while it is worth careful study as an index to the growing work of our schools of pure learning. [Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. 30 cents.]

Teaching the Language Arts, Speech, Reading, Composition, by Prof. B. A. Hinsdale of the University of Michigan, belongs to the International Education series. It is edited by W. T. Harris, LL. D., United States Commissioner of Education, who adds an appreciative introduction. The book is a careful and suggestive study of the arts of speech with reference to the teacher's work and to possible and needed improvement of method in the schools. In his own preface the author discusses the causes of the backward state of English composition among our boys and girls, and finds it partly in the lower intellectual tension of American society and partly in the ineffective methods of the primary work. The discussion is valuable and the whole book clear and helpful. [D. Appleton & Co. $1.00.]

A convenient hand-book for teachers is C. W. Bardeen's Manual of Common School Law. This is a new and revised edition of a useful book. Its references are especially to New York statutes and decisions, but its scope has been enlarged by references to the decisions in other States. [C. W. Bardeen. $1.00.]

STORIES.

The Governor's Garden. A relation of some passages in the life of his Excellency, Thomas Hutchinson, sometime Captain General and Governor in Chief of His Majesty's Province of Massachusetts Bay, by George R. R. Rivers. The title of this book renders its purpose plain. It is an attempt to do justice to the very able but much maligned colonial governor of Massachusetts, whose loyalty to the king exasperated his contemporaries in New England against him and led to his practical banishment from the country he loved so well. Under the guise of fiction, but with strict regard to historical accuracy, the author has managed to convey a good many wholesome lessons of which the reading public is in need, and by skillfully delineating his characters has given us a picture of the troublous years of 1774–5, upon which it is very pleasant to look. The love story is finely managed, and the adventures of the lover presented in a way to suggest thoughts of the Arabian Nights. Mr. Rivers has made an interesting and attractive book and one which should find many readers. [Joseph Knight Co. $1.50.]

In A Parting and a Meeting Mr. W. D. Howells returns again to his experiences among the Shakers. An engaged couple visits one of the Shaker settlements and the man is fascinated by the neatness, industry and business success of the colony and then and there decides to join the order. This brings about the "parting" of the title. In old age, the girl, grown to be a grandmother, returns to visit the settlement, and the power and pathos of the book is in its description of their meeting and discussion of what might have been. [Harper & Bros. $1.00.]

In The Victory of Ezry Gardner, by Imogen Clark, we have a strong, simple, lovable character. A lonely, Nantucket-reared fisherman, Ezry, goes through life despising himself as a coward, because, in the Civil War, he could never overcome his physical fear. He broods over his weakness, confessing it to his one love—a beautiful white pony—and, unknown to his fellows, longing for affection and recognition. These came to him at last, when, without a moment's hesitation, he risked his life to save a stranger, and, with amazement, he found himself loved and applauded as a hero. [T. Y. Crowell & Co. 75 cents.]

A Stumbler in Wide Shoes is the sad story of a weak man and a strong, noble woman. After years of sorrow and self-sacrifice, through which the neglected wife never wavers in her love, at last she rescues her husband from his weakness and after that marriage means happiness for both. The scene is in Holland and England by turns, and the story is often thrilling in its intensity. [Henry Holt & Co. $1.00.]

TEXT BOOKS.

HISTORY.

The Oxford Manuals of English History, edited by C. W. C. Oman. The hurry and preoccupation of the age makes brief handbooks by masters of science necessary and desirable, and nowhere more than in the domain of history, where the longer works discourage too many readers by their bulk and detail. We have three volumes of this series, out of six which are projected by the editor—The Making of the English Nation, by C. G. Robertson, lecturer in modern history, Exeter College; King and Baronage, by W. H. Hutton, fellow and tutor of St. John's College, Oxford; and King and Parliament, by G. H. Wakeling, fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford. The style of the books is necessarily very much condensed, but the authors have not sacrificed the flavor of good English. By grasping the human interest and putting the emphasis of the description upon the development of character and work in the great personalities they have, indeed, succeeded to an astonishing degree in making the narrative interesting. It is not the student alone who will appreciate these manuals, nor the seeker of a swift method of getting at the bare facts of history, but those who are already familiar with the subject will find them a delightful recapitulation of what they already know. Two volumes of the three now under review deal with periods remote from present interest, and the only evidences of bias which we have discovered are in the color favorable to modern Anglican claims of continuity of church usage given to parts of Mr. Hutton's book. The third deals with the still glowing controversy of the Stuarts and the Puritan revolution and is fair and candid in its treatment. The volumes are all fully indexed and the maps are helpful. [Charles Scribner's Sons. 3 vols. Each 50 cents.]

MUSIC.

The First, Second and Third Readers of the Educational Music Course, by Luther Whiting Mason, James McLaughlin, W. W. Gilchrist, George A. Veazie and Nathan Haskell Dole, make half the course contemplated, without counting additions of a primer at the beginning and six charts to be added at the end. Paper and print are admirable and the form is convenient, and the substance is clear in method, carefully graded and well done both musically and in the literary handling of the songs, which are written or adapted by Mr. Dole. Altogether the books are both attractive and promise to be useful. [Ginn & Co. 3 vols., 35, 35 and 40 cents.]

LANGUAGE STUDY.

Practical Rhetoric, by John D. Quackenbos, emeritus professor in Columbia, is a text-book for students' work, but not at all like the old dry and repellent text-books which made rhetoric a word of horror to so many scholars. It is founded on an æsthetic basis, and shows a fine appreciation of literary beauty throughout. Approaching the subject from this side, the pill of study having to do with the tools of expression is sugar coated. In the hands of a good teacher, and in connection with careful language work and actual independent practice, the book seems to promise much. [American Book Co. $1.00.]

Views in Africa, by Anna B. Badlam, of which we have Parts I. and II., belongs to a series of geographical reading-books called The World and Its People, edited by Larkin Dunton, LL. D., head master of Boston Normal School. In a series of chapters an attempt is made to give a good idea of the physical nature, scenery, history and life of Africa. It is a large subject and the idea of furnishing material for school reading had to be kept in view throughout. The idea is a commendable one and has been comprehensively carried out, but the author's style has neither the elevation nor the limpidity which is desirable for the use of learners, and the effect is rather scrappy at times. Nevertheless, she carries her load of varied information with astonishing facility. [Silver, Burdett & Co. 2 vols. 48 cents each.]

All the Year Round, Part II., Winter, is rightly called a Nature Reader. It is compiled by Frances L. Strong and illustrated by Gertrude A. Stoker, both of St. Paul, Minn. We are glad to see that it emphasizes the independence of teachers and their duty of originality in teaching, for which the well-written and selected natural history studies give ample scope. The illustrations are effective and most of them reasonably artistic. [Ginn & Co. 35 cents.]

Pets and Companions is a Second Reader by J. H. Stickney. The note of interest in the life of the world about them finds expression in reading matter and pictures of a sort which is sure to interest children. We wish the pictures might have been better, and the chapters of suggestion for teachers are not models of careful or melodious English, but the reading matter for the children is good in substance and in manner. The book has a very taking cover which will delight the little folks. [Ginn & Co. 40 cents.]

GEOGRAPHY.

Home and School Atlas, by Alex Everett Frye. This is a cheap and admirable reference atlas, with an added series of relief and special maps, and a useful table of pronunciation for geographical names. A special chapter on the United States, with a series of illustrative maps of climatic and industrial conditions, adds to the value of the book. [Ginn & Co. $1.15.]

The Oswego Normal School is one of the most successful in the State of New York, and Mr. Amos W. Farnham, its teacher of geography methods, has issued The Oswego Normal Method of Teaching Geography. It is condensed and practical, and will be useful to teachers, especially in the primary grades. [C. W. Bardeen. 50 cents.]

MATHEMATICS.

Elements of Geometry, by Professors Andrew W. Phillips and Irving Fisher of Yale University. Founded upon the work of the late Professor Loomis, this treatise is, in arrangement and method, essentially new. The illustrations are of high quality and admirably illustrative, and the mechanical execution of the best. We have not recently seen a better specimen of advanced text-book making and printing. [Harper & Bros. $1.75.]

Composite Geometrical Figures, by George A. Andrews. This is a book presenting material for supplementary and original work, and for use in reviews. It grew out of the author's experience as a teacher, and will be helpful to others. [Ginn & Co. 55 cents.]

A School Algebra, designed for use in high schools and academies, is a practical and complete text-book of algebraic principles and practice by Emerson E. White, LL. D. It is the fruit of long experience and should prove useful. [American Book Co. $1.00.]

FOREIGN TONGUES.

School and college texts are The Plutus of Aristophanes, edited by Prof. F. W. Nicholson of Wesleyan. It is beautifully printed with notes at the bottom of the page, and the stage hints so essential to the understanding of the movement of the comedies of Aristophanes are added in English. These changes seem to us modifications in the interest of good sense and the comfort of scholars. [Ginn & Co. 90 cents.]

Selections from Viri Romæ, edited by Robert Arrowsmith and Charles Knapp, professor of Latin in Barnard College. Here, too, the notes are in sight, maps and illustrations are clear and helpful and half the book is devoted to exercises for translation into Latin. [American Book Co. 75 cents.]

Die Vierzehn Nothelfer, by W. H. Riehl, edited for school use by K. E. Sihler, Mount Holyoke College. These pleasant German stories are attractively printed with notes and a vocabulary and make a useful book for students. [American Book Co. 30 cents.]——From the same publishers comes Krambambuli, von Marie v. Ebner-Eschenbach, and Memorien eines Offizierburschen, von Oskar Klausman, edited for school use by A. W. Spanhoofd. [30 cents.]

NOTES.

—— Mr. H. C. Bunner has made Prof. Brander Matthews his literary executor.

—— A memorial bust of Dr. Thomas Arnold —"Arnold of Rugby"—has just been placed in Westminster Abbey.

—— Mrs. Rundle Charles, better known as the author of the Schönberg-Cotta Family, has written a book of autobiographical reminiscences which will be published in England in the autumn.

—— In August, 1897, the International Geological Congress will be held in St. Petersburg. The czar has promised a free pass to members during their stay, good upon all the railroads of the country.

—— Something like a systematic exploration of the remains of Indian burial mounds and the relics of the earlier Mound Builders in Louisiana is to be undertaken by the State Historical Society in connection with Tulane University, New Orleans.

—— The family of the late Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe request that any persons having letters of Mrs. Stowe will send them to Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 4 Park Street, Boston, or to A. P. Watt, Esq., Hastings House, Norfolk Street, Strand, London, with reference to their possible use in a contemplated Life and Letters of Mrs. Stowe. These letters will be carefully returned to their owners after copies have been made of such as are found to be available.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

City Street Department. Boston.
ANNUAL REPORT FOR 1895. By courtesy of B. M. Wells, Superintendent. pp. 432.

Eaton & Mains. New York.
BETTER THINGS FOR SONS OF GOD. By G. T. Lemon. pp. 184. 75 cents.

American Book Co. New York.
A SCHOOL ALGEBRA. By E. E. White, LL.D. pp. 394. $1.00.

Funk & Wagnalls. New York.
THE PROHIBITION HANDBOOK. By G. B. Waldron. pp. 158. 50 cents.

A. J. Rowland. Philadelphia.
SONGS TRIED AND PROVED. Edited by R. H. Conwell and T. E. Perkins. pp. 192. 30 cents.

Flood & Vincent. Meadville, Pa.
THE GROWTH OF THE FRENCH NATION. By Prof. G. B Adams. pp. 350. $1.00.
FRENCH TRAITS. By W. C. Brownell, pp. 316. $1.00.
A STUDY OF THE SKY. By Prof. H. A. Howe. pp. 340. $1.00.
A SURVEY OF GREEK CIVILIZATION. By Prof. J. P. Mahaffy. pp. 340. $1.00.
A HISTORY OF GREEK ART. By Prof. F. B. Tarbell. pp. 295. $1 00.

PAPER COVERS.

Ginn & Co. Boston.
MONEY AND BANKING. By Horace White. pp. 488.

Fords, Howard & Hulbert. New York.
THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO JOHN. Edited by Pres. R. D. Hitchcock. pp. 48. 10 cents.

Cassell Publishing Co. New York.
THE THIRD VOLUME. By Fergus Hume. pp. 356. 50 cents.
SONS OF BELIAL. By William Westall. pp. 294. 50 cents.

University of Wisconsin. Madison.
THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC AND THE EARLY AMERICAN REVOLUTION. By Victor Coffin, Ph.D. pp. 288. 75 cents.

MAGAZINES.

July. AMERICAN UNIVERSITY.—OUR DAY.—BABYLAND.—BULLETIN OF BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY.
August. ART AMATEUR.—NORTH AMERICAN.—FORUM.—CENTURY.—NEW ENGLAND.—McCLURE'S.—REVIEW OF REVIEWS.—POPULAR SCIENCE.—DONAHOE'S.—AMERICAN KITCHEN.—PREACHER'S.—MUSICAL RECORD.—BOOKBUYER.—JOURNAL OF HYGIENE AND HERALD OF HEALTH.—UNITARIAN.—CHAP-BOOK.

A GERMAN CRITICISM OF AMERICAN EDUCATION.

To see ourselves as others see us is sometimes an amusing, often an instructive and too frequently a humiliating experience. In reading the reports of foreign visitors to America at the time of the Chicago exposition made to the home authorities on their return and translated for us in the report of the Commissioner of Education, perhaps educators will find most instruction, though the elements of amusement and reproof are by no means lacking. We have not space to summarize them here, but may follow some of the opinions and suggestions, and especially those of Professor Hausknecht of Berlin, whose paper shows him to have been a peculiarly close, fair and accurate observer.

Naturally enough it is coeducation which excites most comment and discussion. The fact that boys and girls sit in the same room and follow the same studies together all the way from the primary to the university courses awakens an often expressed surprise. Professor Hausknecht's comment, for example, is as follows:

> As a makeshift coeducation is better than nothing. As a principle it entirely ignores the needs of the separate sexes arising from the difference in the development of boys and girls. Boys and girls in the ages from fourteen to eighteen must be differently treated, both in regard to the intellectual and the emotional nature. Coeducation is possible, however, in America more than in Germany or elsewhere, because custom and education have given to the girl and the woman greater freedom and determination in their manners and appearance, and have also given them strong protection against encroachment and improprieties.

This is high praise for our social system from an unexpected quarter, and goes far to offset the criticism and even to reconcile us to some of the other effects of this freedom which sometimes make us doubt its value.

Next to coeducation the preponderance of women in the profession of teaching seems to have been the astonishing fact, and, as both cause and result of this, the comparative instability of the profession. A teacher's work in Germany is a professional career, with a fixed social position, ending in retirement and a pension; in America both men and women make it a step to something else in which permanency is sought.

An intelligent German, studying the conditions of physical training, could not help feeling the difference between the outdoor sports which absorb so much of the time and interest of American boys and girls and the more purely gymnastic work of his own home schools, and this strikes him on the whole favorably, though he not unnaturally comments on the luxurious appointments sometimes provided in connection with sports and gymnasiums, devoting a footnote, for example, to an appliance in one of the woman's colleges for drying the hair quickly after a bath.

The method of modern language study in the high and grammar schools Professor Hausknecht condemns unreservedly (with the exception of that employed in the Boston schools). "It is a waste of time and calls for no intellectual labor on the part of pupils and teachers," he says. The effects of the absence of religious instruction in the primary schools he finds not unfavorable to religion. "It cannot be said that therefore an atheistic atmosphere prevails in schools and society. Nowhere is religious life as active and intense as in America." The teaching of self-reliance he finds admirably developed and fed by the presence everywhere of books of reference, to which the pupils are encouraged to resort.

The most important criticism which he makes upon the American school system, however, is its lack of coördination and its waste of time in the primary grades through inefficient teaching. In Germany a child's destination is settled from the first and his studies directed accordingly. In America there is no such determination and supervision. Of the plan pursued the professor says:

> While thus, in theory, the course through the American common primary, grammar and high school leads to the college, the facts do not correspond to this everywhere. The colleges distrust the education of the high school, and, indeed, the transfer from a high school to a college is possible only when the former has observed the conditions of admission required by the college and when it stands in more or less intimate relations to the respective college.

And the same is true, he adds, in the relation of the grammar schools to the better class of high or preparatory schools.

Perhaps amusement and instruction are best combined in the paragraph in which Professor Hausknecht describes the causes of the universal American desire for education. After speaking of that freedom in the change of occupation at any time of life which is always such a puzzle to the old world people, he goes on:

> Every inhabitant of that country has an exalted opinion (mostly exaggerated) of his own capacity, hence it is not to be wondered at that the intense aspiration toward an "education" for practical reasons permeates all the laboring classes. Every sensible workman who likes to speak of the equality of all citizens, and yet instinctively feels the inequality caused by difference in social position, aspires to be, or at least wishes to be, considered a gentleman in his appearance, manners and actions. As a gentleman he does not drink liquor, and smokes little or not at all. However [he adds in a footnote], chewing and spitting seem to be allowed to a gentleman. Children, even young girls (but scarcely of the better classes) chew gum or nibble popcorn.

We have quoted thus fully from Professor Hausknecht's report because it seems to us to bring out, in a very interesting way against the background of the Prussian fixed and strenuous system, both the strength and the weakness of our American education. It is strong because it rests upon a fixed popular purpose and ambition, which has cleared away the obstacles of conventionality and left it free to develop in its own way under the conditions of life in America. It is weak because a disproportionate amount of care has been given to the superstructure, and not enough to the foundation. We are working from the university downward, but we need also to work from the primary grade upward. And the greatest delusion of the century in education is that economy in teachers can ever be permanently justified by results. Until teaching in the lower grades becomes more fully a permanent and honored career, the best results of training must ever remain out of reach.

Ten students from the University of Wisconsin, Northwestern University, the University of Indiana, Harvard and the University of Chicago are to work in Chicago under the direction of the Bureau of Charities during the summer. They will reside at the several settlements—Hull House, Elm Street and Northwestern University settlement—and study especially the condition of the poor, present methods of improving their condition and the charitable institutions and societies of the city.

CHAUTAUQUA AS AN EDUCATIONAL CENTER.

There may yet be some people who look upon the Chautauqua movement as a distinctively religious and narrow sectarian affair, making a superficial effort to touch on subjects of general education. For such the only remedy is a visit to the assembly where the whole work started in 1874, and where from a small beginning it has developed into one of the strongest educational forces in America.

When it is remembered that there were no Christian Endeavor Societies, no institutional churches and no college settlements when Chautauqua made its beginning, one can realize how it may have been an important aid in reconciling diverse elements and making public opinion favorable to new departures in church and social life. In the early days of the assembly, and even after the collegiate department was started, college men were inclined to shake their heads over education thus popularized. Now ministers and teachers who wish their own work to have power in the communities where they are placed visit Chautauqua to study the methods of presentation which have made great subjects popular there. The work at Chautauqua has two distinct departments, which are blended harmoniously during the assembly season.

The C. L. S. C., the work of the various clubs and the general assembly program are in charge of Mr. George E. Vincent, and together are known as the assembly department. The C. L. S. C. course continues popular, thousands of new names being enrolled every year. The assembly program is arranged with due reference to the reading for the current year. This season Prof. J. W. White of Harvard University has given a series of illustrated lectures on Old Greek Life, and Prof. Shailer Mathews of Chicago University has described the period of the French Revolution. These courses will be especially helpful to those who read the Greek and French history prescribed for the coming year.

The collegiate department, of which Pres. W. R. Harper of Chicago University is principal, includes twelve schools open to students for six weeks during July and August at Chautauqua and the correspondence college, designed to aid students at home throughout the year. The twelve schools offer more than a hundred different courses, with the eighty instructors employed. The most popular courses are those in pedagogy and in the arts and sciences, nearly one thousand pupils, or almost two-thirds of the whole number present, being found in these classes. About sixteen hundred were registered for the first half of the six weeks' course, and a still larger number will be in attendance for the remainder of the season. The meeting of the National Educational Association at Buffalo early in the summer brought many visitors to Chautauqua, a large number remaining for the entire season.

A proof of the public appreciation of the work done at this great summer school is the appropriation made for it by the New York legislature. Three summer normal institutes were established last year at Chautauqua, Glens Falls and the Thousand Islands, and together these receive $6,000 annually; presumably, since Chautauqua attracts the larger number of pupils, it receives a corresponding share of the appropriation. In accordance with this arrangement over two hundred and fifty teachers from the State of New York have been enrolled here this year. They are admitted for one month without fee to the grounds and to any two courses in the collegiate department.

The college building has a library of about fifteen hundred volumes for general reference. Other books are loaned each season from the State library at Albany. Instructors furnish a list of books which will be required in their departments and these are sent to the library early in the spring, and the books are forwarded to Chautauqua in ample season for the summer work. Mr. Dewey, the State librarian, co-operates with the Chautauqua faculty in every way in his power.

The geographical distribution of students in previous years may be taken as a guide for the present season. The majority come from Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York, while all other States have representatives. Among religious denominations Presbyterians lead, while Methodists, Baptists and Episcopalians are about equal in numbers, and almost every other sect has some adherents.

That Chautauqua's first object was Bible study and the more thorough preparation of Sunday school teachers is not forgotten. The schools of sacred literature offer courses in the study of the English Bible, New Testament, Greek, Hebrew, etc. A normal class for primary Sunday school teachers is conducted by Mrs. Mary C. Foster. Rev. J. L. Hurlbut, D. D., began his normal class for Sunday school teachers the first Monday in August. President Harper leads a large congregation in Bible study every Sunday forenoon at nine o'clock. At three in the afternoon a general exercise is held in the amphitheater, and then the different sections separate for Bible study.

Secretary W. A. Duncan is an important officer of Chautauqua, having been connected with it for twenty years, at first with the Sunday school work and now for thirteen years as secretary and general superintendent of the grounds. Notwithstanding his care of business details Dr. Duncan has not forgotten his interest in the Sunday school, and this year has aided in starting a new branch known as the home class. This is arranged at an hour convenient for the college students and others who have charge of the rooms, wait on the tables and are employed in other capacities at the time of the regular Bible study. Moreover, a thorough canvass of the cottages is made to invite all residents on the grounds to attend the regular classes. The missionary spirit naturally prevails at Chautauqua, and each Sunday an organist and teachers, provided with lesson helps, go to settlements near by, outside the assembly grounds, to conduct Sunday school exercises.

Less rigid in their requirements than the classes in the collegiate department, but with some form of organization, the various clubs form an important part of the assembly work. There are daily classes for Bible study for very little people, for the older boys and girls and for the grown up people. Then there is a woman's club, the outlook for girls over fifteen, the junior outlook for those between seven and fifteen, a kindergarten, a boys' club and a glee club. All these are educational and yet have a valuable social influence in such a community where the population is constantly changing. A weekly census for the season would show an average population of over ten thousand persons, though it is estimated that the average stay of individuals is not over ten days.

The only persons unprovided for by the clubs are the business men—for there is a ministerial club—and yet there seem to be many of them at Chautauqua. But the community itself, and the way it is conducted, affords many lessons in municipal housekeeping to citizens of similar communities. This is the more wonderful when it is remembered that only for a quarter of the year is the town to be lighted, supplied with water, and the garbage and sewage to be disposed of, that the necessary machinery, instead of working continuously, must be started promptly and at the close of the season left in good condition for another year.

The permanency of Chautauqua is indicated by the care bestowed upon these details, and also by the quality of the buildings more recently erected. Higgins Memorial Hall contains a lecture-room seating 400 and reception rooms. The building is made of pressed brick with terra-cotta trimmings and is a great addition to the assembly grounds.

The subjects considered at many of these club meetings are closely connected with home life, and this year a new interest was given to such matters by a conference on domestic economy. This was planned and carried out by the Cooking School Teachers' League formed last year at Chautauqua through the efforts of Mrs. Emma P. Ewing, who has had charge of the cooking school for more than a decade. A committee was chosen to forward the progress of domestic science by preparing schedules for the necessary outfit, courses of study and suggestions for its proper correlation with other branches of instruction.

As an indication of the practical tendencies of the time, it is worth noting that a Harvard professor, who came to deliver a lecture upon psychology, after attending to his part of the program was not ready to leave until he had taken a practical lesson in bread making at the cooking school. Another professor from a Western school takes his daily lesson in the art of cookery.

Sociology appears to be a favorite subject with Chautauqua's speakers, and directly and indirectly receives considerable attention. It is not an easy matter to decide what class of people are in the majority here; still it is evident that there is nothing here to attract any but those ready to work for themselves and for others. The kind of society described by Dr. Gunsaulus as "a lot of minus quantities adding themselves together evening after evening in a vain effort to produce a plus" is not found here.

The lectures by Dr. Gunsaulus upon Savonarola and Oliver Cromwell abounded in epigrammatic sentences and brilliant word pictures of the social conditions at those periods of the world's history.

For the Sunday morning service the great amphitheater has few vacant seats, and an audience of 6,000, with a chorus of 500 voices to lead the singing, is an inspiration for any minister. On the first Sunday in August the sermon was delivered by Rev. George A. Gordon, D. D., on the reality of the invisible and the power of unseen forces on man's outer and inner life.

Though Chautauqua audiences are always enthusiastic, few speakers received a heartier welcome than did Rev. Booker Washington. The handkerchief salute was given with good will, and the applause throughout his address was evidence that his points were well made. In such a large audience it is curious to note the second wave of laughter and applause from those who do not catch an idea quickly.

That there is no bigoted sectarian spirit at Chautauqua is indicated by the announcement made each week for the Sunday services, including a meeting for Roman Catholics at the college chapel. This was a new departure last year, and apparently gives satisfaction to all concerned. A priest comes from a neighboring city, and the service is attended by about one hundred believers of that faith.

Chautauqua does not admit visitors on Sunday; no steamer touches the pier on that day even to bring the mail. On any other day the lake front is a lively place, for pure recreation and athletic education are by no means neglected at this school. In the evening there are out-of-door concerts by the band, electrical displays from the power house and a flash light, which sometimes proves embarrassing to the young men and maidens who prefer to spend the evening on the lake front instead of in the amphitheater.

There is an atmosphere of education surrounding everything which makes Chautauqua altogether different from the ordinary summer resort. Even the popcorn man on the steamboat peers over the shoulders of a group of people who are examining a book of photographs of the Holy Land, and later, when he sees that the book is closed, comes back again to discover its title.

There are some carpers, of course. Two theologians were heard to discuss the program and to decide that there was not a name of national reputation to be found upon it; presumably this was because their own sect was not sufficiently represented, or that their individual merit had not been recognized. One could not but wonder where men like President Eliot, Prof. George Adam Smith, Booker Washington and many others were to be classed. Moreover, it is not always the men and women whose names are best known who will have the most influence in a school like Chautauqua.

No account of Chautauqua would be complete without mention of the man from whose inspiration it is an outgrowth. Bishop Vincent established Chautauqua with the desire of bringing education to those who could not otherwise attain it. He has grown with the movement to be one of the large-minded men of his age. No speaker is more cordially received by a Chautauqua audience, and his words are always few but leave a lasting impression.

President Miller and Chancellor Vincent are no longer young men, save in spirit, and the fear has been expressed that the Chautauqua movement would not outlive them, but their sons, who have grown up in the work and are now actively engaged in it, are men of the same purpose as their fathers. Moreover, the Chautauqua idea of today is too large to be made or marred by any one man or group of men of whatever party or creed.

Those who see signs of degeneration in the human race will have more hopeful visions if they will spend even a few hours at Chautauqua. That it stands for the most hopeful tendencies of American life and will aid in solving vexed questions in the future was apparent to all who witnessed the flag-raising exercises a few days ago. Veterans of the Civil War, Union and Confederate, walked side by side in the procession and heartily applauded the addresses by Hon. C. R. Skinner, superintendent of public instruction of the State of New York, and Bishop Vincent. Then in the afternoon the same men were ready to greet Booker Washington. Chautauqua attracts many from the Southern States and socially breaks down prejudice on both sides.

A similar work has been done between religious denominations. In the words of Bishop Vincent: "When folks of different denominations look into each other's eyes and shake hands it does away with much religious prejudice, and when we have destroyed such prejudice in connection with the public schools we have done more than anything else to establish them." The aim for the future of Chautauqua was thus expressed by Bishop Vincent within a few days: "Chautauqua looks for mutual grounds of sympathy and co-operation and she finds them. . . . This is her lofty idea: One church; one Jesus Christ; and for the present as many varieties of external organization as are necessary to administer to the convictions and preferences and tastes of the people; one nation with one flag; a small army, gradually diminishing; no more war here or elsewhere; and a devotion of one humanity to the great ends of culture, personal and universal."

A. B.

The Assembly at Keuka College, N. Y., is in session Aug. 6–19 and is able to announce on its program such speakers and lecturers as Rev. A. C. Dixon, D. D., Col. G. W. Bain, John G. Woolley, Rev. J. L. Maile, Rev. C. C. Creegan, D. D., Rev. N. M. Calhoun, president of the college, and Dr. Kate Bushnell. The regular fall work will begin Sept. 8 and the prospects are bright for a good Freshman class. The college will stand for thoroughness and cheapness. Lectures by experts on topics of vital interest will be a prominent feature. The Bible training department is designed to meet the wants of Christian workers and to furnish helpers for pastors. An industrial department is to be opened in the near future.

Facts and Opinions About Education.

—— The recent international Socialist Congress held in London passed resolutions demanding free education for all, from kindergarten to university.

—— Syracuse University will receive $10,000 from the estate of the late Nathan F. Graves, thus assuring an income which will perpetuate the annual course of lectures on missions hitherto paid for by Mr. Graves.

—— The last American Newspaper Directory lists 170 journals devoted to educational propaganda in the United States and Canada. Of these about ten have a general circulation throughout the country. The others are local.

—— The library of the State of Michigan has co-operated heartily with the "study clubs" of that State during the past year, reports from many of which, with programs of the year's work, have just been published in a bulletin prepared by Mrs. Mary C. Spencer, the State librarian.

—— The Railway Review says complaints are heard on all sides of an apparent decrease in the supply of skilled, all around machinists in this country. The result is attributed to the development of specialists, owing to the methods of dividing labor; and the remedy suggested is a renaissance of the old apprentice system.

—— American money builds the memorials of European authors and scientists erected on European soil. Again and again has it been demonstrated that we are more appreciative and generous than other folk. Thus of $5,000 recently contributed to erect a statue as a memorial to the late Wilhelm Mayer of Copenhagen, the largest sum, $1,500, came from the United States.

—— John Morley recently seconded Freeman's dictum that "the finished historian must be a traveler, and must see the very spots where great events have occurred." He also is impressed with the light that archæological discovery and interpretation sheds, not only upon the social life of ancient and remote communities, but also by its revelations respecting "the mysterious modes and simple faiths of the older world."

—— Georg Frese, instructor in singing at Harvard University, Radcliffe College and Andover Theological Seminary, is in Europe, making a special study of methods of instruction in vocal music. During his six weeks' stay in London he received courtesies at the Royal College of Music, as well as at the hands of Dr. Bridge, choir master at Westminster Abbey, Dr. Martin, organist and choir master at St. Paul's, and other leading musicians. He is now on the Continent, receiving like courtesies and enjoying fine opportunities for adding to his store of knowledge.

—— The report of the Chicago Public Library for the year ending June 1 shows that 1,173,586 volumes were circulated from the library and its sub-stations during the year. The city of Manchester, Eng., had a circulation of 975,944. Boston follows next, with 847,321; and Birmingham, in England, had 818,312 volumes. This statement shows that Chicago leads the world as a reading center. Its public library contains 217,203 bound volumes, and this indicates that each volume was read by an average of over five persons during the year. Here are impressive figures taken in connection with the facts which Mr. Putnam sets forth elsewhere in this issue.

—— President G. Stanley Hall of Clark University, Worcester, in a recent talk to educators, pleaded for natural methods in teaching music to children. "First instruction," he says, "should be acted song-stories taught by imitation. There should be plenty of animal noises, interjections of the ding-dong, chu-chu, pat-a-cake, hurrah order, with onomatopœsis and Mother Goose and other forms of speech-music prominent. As the story element grows and action decreases, the songs should be first read affectively. Wide intervals, like Scotch songs written in the old five-note scale and in any key suitable to the child's voice, can be used. Notes should never intrude at this stage between the mind and its object; music and words should be kept together, should be divorced as little as possible."

—— In connection with the reference of Rev. A. E. Winship in his article on another page to the common school system of Brookline, Mass., it is of added interest to consider the latest reports of the assessors of this, probably the richest, town in the country. Its total valuation is set at $60,912,000, consisting of $15,129,300 personal, $16 640,600 buildings and $29,142,100 land. The increase in real estate balances heavily against the shrinkage in personal property, leaving a net gain of $1,909,400. The increase in polls assessed gives a total of 4,556. The tax rate is $12.40 Brookline's public library, under the management of Charles K. Bolton, a son of our old editorial associate, Mrs. Sarah K. Bolton, is increasingly useful to the community, there being twice as many children who visit it this summer for purposes of study and reading as in any previous year.

—— A special commission to investigate the eyesight of the children in the public elementary schools of Great Britain has just reported to the British education department that out of 8,125 children tested only 3,915 were found to have normal vision. Commenting on one interesting aspect of the problem, namely, the inferior vision of city children, the report says:

The visual power of London children is not cultivated by their environment. They see the other side of the street in which they live and the carts and omnibuses of the thoroughfares. With a country child the case is widely different. He has an expanse of landscape before him, presenting numerous objects under visual angles rendered small by distance. He finds attractions in every hedgerow, flowers, insects, birds, nests, many of them disguised by their resemblance in color to their surroundings and requiring close scrutiny in order that they may be distinguished.

—— Chauncy Hall School, Boston, has long been recognized throughout the United States as one of the finest preparatory schools in the country. In consequence of the death of its senior principal it has now become consolidated with the Berkeley School, which has been coming rapidly into public favor since 1884. In deference, however, to the age and fame of Chauncy Hall that name will be retained, together with the best elements of both schools, thus giving Boston a private institution peculiarly adapted for fitting pupils not only for Harvard and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, but for all collegiate and professional schools. There is also a post-graduate course open to graduates of high schools and to others of mature age, whereby students may be perfected in languages, literature and mathematics, or prepared for professional schools without going through college. The principals, Messrs. Taylor, De Meritte and Hagar, Chauncy Hall School, Boston, will furnish all necessary information. Mr. Taylor is a well-known and active Congregationalist, being particularly prominent in Sunday school work.

—— The third annual session of the Biblical and Sociological Institute of eastern Washington, held at Medical Lake, July 15-23, was full of interest and profit. The books reviewed were Gordon's Ministry of the Spirit, Ely's Social Aspects of Christianity and Bradford's Heredity and Christian Problems. The missionary day and Sunday school and Christian Endeavor day were devoted to practical subjects pertaining to the work here. The evenings were given to lectures, Professor Hauerbach of Whitman College speaking on The College as a Social Leveler, President Bryan of the Agricultural College on Social Problems, Rev. A. J. Bailey on The Home Missionary Meeting at New Haven, Rev. W. C. Fowler on Ethics of Gambling, Dr. Semple, superintendent of the Insane Asylum, on Heredity and Environment, Rev. J. Edwards on How the Bible Came to Us. This institute is the only attempt made in eastern Washington to have a summer gathering of this nature. So far it has been managed by Congregational ministers, but it is now proposed to invite the co-operation of other denominations and continue the annual sessions on a broader basis.

—— Vacation schools in New York city, originating in 1894 through the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, with the co-operation of the Board of Education, which gives the use of the schoolhouses, have largely vindicated the wisdom of the experiment. The first year there were three schools with 933 attendants; the second year six schools with 3,296 attendants and eighty-four teachers; this year 5,762 applied at the opening of the doors July 20, and hundreds had to be turned away for want of room. These thousands of boys and girls are every day taken from the crowded tenement houses and filthy streets of the slums, compelled to be cleanly, orderly and respectful without severe discipline, and are taught, not chiefly book knowledge, but carpentry, carving, modeling in clay, designing, drawing, sewing, singing, etc. The small expense is met by private donations, and the givers who have kept informed of the work's progress have felt repaid manifold for their outlay, though only a beginning has been made in an enterprise whose possibilities for good to thousands of tempted and hitherto neglected boys and girls can hardly be imagined.

—— One of the most interesting and significant of recent events was the decision of the French Government to make such concessions respecting the admission of American students to French universities as it is hoped will result in the departure of not a few American students for French as well as German universities. Dr. Harry Furber, Jr., to whom most of the credit for the matter must be given, in a recent interview said:

The changes brought about through the efforts of the committee in Paris are quite radical. They have removed the restrictions considered most irksome by foreign students, and allow many of the privileges accorded by the German universities. The movement in this country will be in the hands of distinguished men. The members of the American branch of the Franco-American committee are: Presidents Low of Columbia, Dwight of Yale, Eliot of Harvard, Gilman of Johns Hopkins, G. Stanley Hall of Clark University, Schurman of Cornell and Whitman of Columbian University, Washington; Professors Gould of Chicago, Ill., Simon Newcomb, Washington, and Messrs. G. Brown Goode, W. T. Harris, S. P. Langley, Carroll D. Wright and the Hon. Andrew D. White. Our movement is not designed at all to interfere with the universities of Germany. Indeed, I certainly do not think that our students have acted unwisely in going to Germany, and would regret if the present enterprise should affect the clientele commanded by those institutions. At the same time the French present a far different idea of culture. They are the best representatives of the Latin element in our civilization. Intellectual relations between the countries would be closer and more intimate as a result of this movement.

—— Helen Keller, the famous deaf and blind girl, who expects to enter Radcliffe College next fall, in a most remarkable speech made at the recent meeting of the American Association to Promote the Teaching of Speech to the Deaf, said:

If you knew all the joy I feel in being able to speak to you today, I think you would have some idea of the value of speech to the deaf, and you would understand why I want every deaf child in all this great world to have an opportunity to learn to speak. . . . It brings me into closer and tenderer relations with those I love and makes it possible for me to enjoy the sweet companionship of a great many persons from whom I should be entirely cut off if I could not talk. I can remember the time before I learned to speak, and how I used to struggle to express my thoughts by means of the manual alphabet, how my thoughts used to beat against my finger tips like little birds striving to gain their freedom, until one day Miss Fuller opened wide the prison door and let them escape. Of course it was not easy at first to fly. The speech wings were weak and broken and had lost all the grace and beauty that had been theirs; indeed, nothing was left save the impulse to fly, but that was something.

One can never consent to creep when one feels an impulse to soar. But, nevertheless, it seemed to me sometimes that I could never use my speech wings as God intended I should use them; there were so many difficulties in the way, so many discouragements; but I kept on trying, knowing that patience and perseverance would win in the end. And while I worked I built the most beautiful air castles, and dreamed dreams, the pleasantest of which was of the time when I should talk like other people; and the thought of the pleasure it would give my mother to hear my voice once more sweetened every effort and made every failure an incentive to try harder next time. So I want to say to those who are trying to learn to speak, and those who are teaching them, "Be of good cheer." Do not think of today's failure, but of the success that may come tomorrow.

It will be remembered that Mr. Charles Dudley Warner recently said that in his opinion Miss Keller "is the purest minded human being who ever existed"—excepting Christ, of course—and the above quotation certainly justifies his other statement that her superiority is due to the fact that she has never known other than the best literature and never come in contact with other than noble people. "Her mind is not only vigorous but pure . . . in love with noble things and noble thoughts." And no wonder he uses her case as a text for the remark: "If children in the family and the public school were fed with only the best literature, if their minds were treated with as much care in regard to the things sown in them as are wheat fields, what a result we should have."

CURRENT HISTORY NOTES.

Lady Tennyson, who died at her home in Aldworth, Sussex, Monday, was an invalid during the larger part of her married life, but her intellectual and spiritual qualities made her a fit companion for the great laureate.

Strikes in Cleveland and among the tailors and garment makers in New York have been accompanied with violence and intimidation. In neither case has a settlement been reached.

The record for the swiftest passage from Southampton to New York is now held by the St. Louis of the American line, which made the run last week to Sandy Hook in six days, two hours and thirty minutes.

The verdict in the railroad collision near Atlantic City exonerates the tower man and holds the engineer of the express guilty of carelessness. He expiated his carelessness by dying at his post, as we have elsewhere noted. Four of the jurors, however, blamed the tower man and both the engineers.

The Volksraad of the Transvaal Republic has taken one step toward meeting the complaints of the Uitlanders whose children may now learn their mother tongue in the schools where all instruction hitherto has been in Dutch.

By way of St. Petersburg it is stated that the Korean Government has granted a concession to an American company to build a railroad from Seoul to Chemulpo and for the development of the mineral resources along the road. As this comes from what seems to be the headquarters of influence in Korea at present we suppose it is trustworthy.

News from the Churches

Benevolent Societies.

THE CONGREGATIONAL HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY is represented in Massachusetts by the MASSACHUSETTS HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY, No. 9 Congregational House, Rev. Joshua Colt, Secretary; Rev. Edwin B. Palmer, Treasurer.

WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Room No. 32, Congregational House. Office hours, 9 to 5. Annual membership, $1.00; life membership, $20.00. Contributions solicited. Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Treasurer.

AMERICAN BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS, Congregational House, No. 1 Somerset Street, Boston. Frank H. Wiggin, Assistant Treasurer; Charles E. Swett, Publishing and Purchasing Agent. Office in New York, 121 Bible House; in Chicago, 153 La Salle St.

WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS, Rooms 1 and 2 Congregational House. Miss Ellen Carruth, Treasurer; Miss Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Bible House, New York. Missions in the United States, evangelistic and educational, at the South and in the West among the Indians and Chinese. Boston office, 21 Congregational House; Chicago office, 153 La Salle Street.; Cleveland office, Y. M. C. A. Building. Donations may be sent to either of the above offices, or to H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer, 108 Bible House, New York City.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH BUILDING SOCIETY—Church and Parsonage Building. Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., Secretary; H. O. Pinneo, Treasurer, 59 Bible House, New York; Rev. George A. Hood, Congregational House, Boston, Field Secretary.

CONGREGATIONAL EDUCATION SOCIETY.—(Including work of former New West Commission.) Aids four hundred students for the ministry, eight home missionary colleges, twenty academies in the West and South, ten free Christian schools in Utah and New Mexico. S. F. Wilkins, Treasurer. Offices, 10 Congregational House, Boston, 151 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. Address, 10 Congregational House, Boston.

CONG. SUNDAY SCHOOL & PUBLISHING SOCIETY.—Contributions used only for missionary work. Rev. George M. Boynton, D. D., Secretary; W. A. Duncan, Ph. D., Field Secretary; E. Lawrence Barnard, Treasurer, Congregational House, Boston.

MASSACHUSETTS BOARD OF MINISTERIAL AID.—Treasurer, Mr. Arthur G. Stanwood, 701 Sears Building, Boston Address applications to Rev. A. H. Quint, D. D., Congregational Library, 1 Somerset Street, Boston.

MINISTERIAL RELIEF.—In order to afford a little timely aid to aged and disabled home and foreign missionaries and ministers and their families, the committee of the National Council asks from each church one splendid offering for its permanent invested fund. It also invites generous individual gifts. For fuller information see Minutes of National Council, 1892, and Year-Book, 1893, page 62. Secretary, Rev. N. H. Whittlesey, New Haven, Ct.; Treasurer, Rev. S. B. Forbes, Hartford, Ct. Form of a bequest: I bequeath to the "Trustees of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States" (a body corporate chartered under the laws of the State of Connecticut) [here insert the bequest], to be used for the purpose of Ministerial Relief, as provided in the resolution of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States at its session held in Chicago in October, 1886.

THE CONGREGATIONAL BOARD OF PASTORAL SUPPLY, established by the Massachusetts General Association, offers its services to churches desiring pastors or pulpit supplies. Careful attention is given to applications from without the State. Room 22A, Congregational House, Boston. Rev. Charles B. Rice, Sec.

THE BOSTON SEAMAN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, organized 1827. Chapel and reading-room, 287 Hanover St., Boston. Open day and evening. Sailors and landsmen welcome. Daily prayer meeting, 11 A. M., Bible study, 3 P. M. Sunday services, usual hours. Meetings every evening except Saturday. Branch mission, Vineyard Haven. Is a Congregational society and appeals to all Congregational churches for support. Send donations of money to B. S. Snow, Corresponding Secretary, Room 22, Congregational House, Boston. Send clothing, comfort bags, reading, etc., to Capt. S. S. Nickerson, chaplain, 287 Hanover St. Bequests should read: "I give and bequeath to the Boston Seaman's Friend Society the sum of $——, to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said society." Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS.

We record this week two instances of sermons being read by laymen during the pastors' vacations. While we would not lessen the opportunities for preaching so sorely needed by unemployed ministers, it seems to us that in churches whose means will not admit of paid supplies a ringing sermon by some great preacher, rendered intelligently and with reverence, is an excellent substitute. Barren indeed would be the soil that would fail to respond to such seed sowing.

The prosperity of that Minnesota church, so long a weak and timid dependent of the H. M. Society, shows the wisdom of heeding the apostolic injunction to "stablish the things that remain, that were ready to die." From the same State come also tidings of an agricultural project for raising a building fund.

Together with the expressed wish of a church, heard from a few weeks ago, that its supplying preachers for the summer should not travel on Sunday, might go a word from the preachers that the people should not run away from their own services if they spend the vacation at home.

A western pastorless church, which has been besieged by applicants for filling the pulpit, may, perhaps, consider the latter explanation given in the item as carrying most weight, but may also regard itself as one of many parishes which are thus sought.

A certain Michigan community is quite as deserving of a meeting house as any other place, and yet without it the work seems unusually progressive.

A church whose pastor relieves it of all responsibility of his support is indeed placed in a novel situation. Such is the condition in an Illinois parish.

A western Massachusetts church has held its own as to membership much more firmly than the town has maintained its population.

An Ohio field worker receives a present than which no better choice could have been made for his convenience.

An Interior city furnishes a good suggestion as to co-operative work which can be accomplished by C. E. Societies.

A revival in midsummer, however unusual, is not unheard of. Note one started in an Indiana town.

NEW ENGLAND.

Boston.

Park Street. Last Sunday notice was given of a special meeting of the church to be held Aug. 13, to act upon the relations of the church and society with the pastor, Dr. I. J. Lansing, and upon matters of pecuniary interest. It is understood that, owing to some technical flaws in previous proceedings, a new course of action will be begun.

The program of preachers in the city pulpits last Sunday included a number of strangers, among them Dr. Charles Wood of Philadelphia at the Harvard Church, Brookline; Dr. C. I. Scofield of Northfield, Mass., at the Second Church, Dorchester; Rev. Walcott Fay of Arlington, Mass., at the Old South; Dr. J. L. Withrow of Chicago, Ill., at Park Street; Dr. H. M. Tenney of Oberlin College at Shawmut; and Dr. S. S. Mitchell of Buffalo, N. Y., at Walnut Avenue.

Massachusetts.

LYNN.—North. During a thunder shower last week the spire was struck and set on fire, resulting in damages of only $50, however.

ASHBY.—The church has recently been thoroughly renovated at a cost of $1,500. The organ has been brought from the rear gallery to the front, new pulpit and pews have been put in, beside a steel ceiling. All bills are paid and the treasury is in excellent condition. During the four years' pastorate of Rev. W. J. Robinson over 50 persons have been added to the church. While the population of the town has decreased the church membership has increased.

BELCHERTOWN.—The new pastor, Rev. G. I. Newton, has arrived on his new field of labor. He was formerly at Cohasset, where he went in 1895 to be pastor of the Beechwood Church of that place and of the First Church, Scituate.

PITTSFIELD.—First. Pres. W. J. Tucker, D. D., of Dartmouth preached last Sunday and a number of his college students were present to hear him. The day was observed as "hospital Sunday," a large donation being raised for a local object.

WESTFIELD.—First. The meeting house was reopened last Sunday after being unused four weeks. ——Second. The house of worship will be closed for three weeks.

SHEFFIELD.—Rev. E. W. Bond has opened his work auspiciously with this church. His classmate, Rev. W. W. Wallace of Bridgewater, Ct., who is under an appointment from the American Board, gave a missionary sermon Aug. 9.

Maine.

NORWAY.—First. Mr. W. B. Tuthill from Hartford Seminary has been engaged to supply the pulpit during the absence of the pastor, Rev. B. S. Rideout, on his vacation. The people feel that they are fortunate in securing this service during vacation.——Second. Rev. B. S. Rideout, pastor of this church also, has been here nearly nine years. Two fires have deprived the church of a place of worship 16 months in the past four years. Now there is a fine house of worship completely furnished. Pastor and people are working harmoniously.

ASHLAND.—The church has been incorporated and has bought a lot which will be occupied by a church building as soon as possible. At the July communion there were three baptisms. The interest in Sunday and evening services is excellent, and numbers increase steadily.

CUMBERLAND CENTER.—Rev. Addison Blanchard of Denver, Col., who has been visiting his native place, gave a Bible reading while here which was much enjoyed.

CRANBERRY ISLES.—Rev. C. E. Harwood returns invigorated, and preached on four islands last week, holding seven services.

New Hampshire.

MONT VERNON.—The annual meeting of the society was held Aug. 3. The building committee made its final report in detail, showing the finances to be in an excellent condition, leaving no embarrassing burden of debt. The money pledged at the dedication has been nearly all paid in, also several generous subscriptions made since. It is hoped this fine equipment in its completion will inaugurate the beginning of a happy era of spiritual prosperity, greatly enlarging and strengthening the church. The 300 summer visitors already in town furnish large congregations and inspiration to the pastor, Rev. T. J. Lewis.

HOPKINTON.—The pastor, Rev. J. S. Curtis, has felt the warm-hearted influence of sympathizing friends, as shown by a well-filled purse of money lately given him as a testimonial of tender feeling for him on account of the severe illness of his wife. Rev. C. E. Harrington, D. D., who is resting at his summer home in town, supplied for him Aug. 2.

WINCHESTER.—The pastor, Rev. H. A. Hanaford, is giving a series of three sermons on revivals, briefly sketching those of the Old and New Testaments and those of later times. He emphasizes as the great need of the church today the enduement of the Holy Spirit. After Aug. 16 the pastor will take a vacation of three or four weeks.

MERIDEN.—During the vacation of the pastor, Rev. C. F. Robinson, the pulpit was supplied by Rev. Dr. Bacchus of Brooklyn and Rev. Burdett Hart, D. D., of New Haven. About $9,000 are already pledged for a new stone meeting house, to take the place of the one in this village destroyed by lightning two years ago.

By the new members to be received in East Alstead at the last communion three generations were represented from the grandmother down.——The Alton church is saddened by the death of its chorister, D. M. Mooney, after 25 years of service.——The Lyme church receives $100 from the late Deacon G. W. Randlett.

Vermont.

The Newport church has filled a box for shipment to Armenia.——A contest in oratory by the old folks of late was an occasion of much interest in Hardwick.——The outing of the Sunday schools of Franklin and Grand Isle Counties recently in Swanton was attended by 3,000 persons.

Connecticut.

THOMPSON.—This church has recently observed several anniversaries. The last Sunday in April the centennial of the ordination of Daniel Dow was suitably recognized, papers being prepared by Rev. Messrs. S. W. Dike, J. P. Bixby, Prof. Williston Walker and Miss Larned. Dr. Dow's pastorate lasted nearly 54 years. The second Sunday evening in July, Miss Larned presented a historical paper on The Ten Meeting Houses of Thompson, as connected with its growth. The occasion was the 40th anniversary of the dedication of the present house of worship. The pastor, Rev. G. H. Cummings, spent the last two weeks of July with his family at Hampton Beach, N. H. On his return he found a fine bicycle at the parsonage, with a note of presentation from a group of friends, mostly summer residents. The church paper, The Monthly Record, has an abstract of Miss Larned's paper in its August issue. The village is unusually full of summer visitors.

MONTVILLE.—This church, Rev. G. H. Morse, pastor, has closed its house of worship for internal improvement. The walls are to be newly painted, the pews varnished and the ceiling is to be frescoed. Meanwhile services are held in the neat and commodious chapel.

TERRYVILLE.—As a result of special solicitation for the Armenian relief fund $110 were raised for the cause at a recent meeting.

ROCKVILLE.—Union. Rev. A. S. Walker, D. D., who occupied the pulpit a week ago Sunday, was pastor of the First Church, now united with Second to form Union, thirty years ago. On his coming here he found the church in a discouraged state and the members about ready to unite with the Second Church. He aroused them to make one more effort, money was pledged and the church started forth anew. During his stay the church paid off a debt of $7,000 and the church building was much improved. Dr. Walker was warmly welcomed by a number of his former parishioners.

WHIGVILLE.—Rev. Mr. Holden of Burlington has inaugurated a series of open air meetings on the schoolhouse lot that are largely attended and a source of much comfort to those who are far removed from the churches.

STONINGTON.—Second. The flower committee recently sent to the flower mission in New York 345 bouquets.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

ROCHESTER.—Rev. E. P. Armstrong, who has been for two years superintendent of the Central Presbyterian Sunday school, closed his labors there Aug. 2, to enter upon pastoral work again. At the farewell mass meeting about 1,000 persons were present. Hearty expressions of affection and appreciation were offered to Mr. Armstrong. During his term of service 821 new members have been added to the school, and the average attendance has increased by nearly 100. Moreover, 263 new members have been added to the church from the school. This period of work has fitted Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong specially well for the pastoral service for which they are now available.

Pennsylvania.

PHILADELPHIA.—Central has fully canvassed the question of individual cups for communion and by a unanimous vote decided to use them. The form of service decided on is that made by Rev. J. G. Thomas at Lima, O. Dr. C. H. Richards, the pastor, is dividing his vacation between his former Western home and his native town, Meriden, N. H. During July the church was supplied by the two former pastors of the church, Rev. Edward Hawes, D. D., and Rev. J. R. Danforth, D. D. During August the house will be closed for repairs and cleaning.

THE INTERIOR.

Ohio.

CLEVELAND.—By co-operation between the Endeavor Societies of Pilgrim Church and the North Ridgeville Church pleasant country vacations have been secured for a number of poor children from the former in generous homes at Ridgeville. Pilgrim Church has recently added to its other means of ministering to the neighborhood a stone watering trough, which is in almost constant use by passing teams. It stands near the drinking fountain erected and maintained by the Pilgrim Endeavor Society. Rev. C. S. Mills spends a two months' vacation in the Adirondacks and New England. The church offices and reading-room are open daily through the summer, and both morning and evening services are held every Sunday in charge of Rev. I. W. Metcalf.——The City Missionary Society has secured an option on an eligible lot for the Lorain Street Mission. A dwelling house on the lot has been fitted up for the temporary use of the mission, and regular Sunday school and preaching services are held there every Sunday in charge of Rev. Rufus Apthorp, who is doing efficient work in this needy and growing neighborhood. Money to complete the purchase of the lot and to erect a chapel is greatly needed.——Olivet. Rev. Joseph Wolfe has closed his labors as temporary supply, and the pulpit is acceptably supplied at present by Mr. Erasmus Thomsen, a Berea College student who is spending his vacation in this city.——Archwood Avenue, formerly Brooklyn Village, under Rev. J. W. Hargrave's efficient lead, is going ahead with a greatly needed and extensive enlargement of its building. Services will be held in a public hall until the building is ready.

HUDSON.—The social-room and kitchen of the meeting house have been repapered and painted. The pastor, Rev. C. H. Small, has just returned from his vacation, spent in Washington and Chautauqua.

Rev. A. T. Reed, State evangelist, is holding successful meetings during the summer with Ohio country churches. From 10 days to two weeks are spent at each stopping point. Places recently visited are Hampden, Thompson, North Madison, Grafton, Rockport and Greenwich. Friends in the Medina church, of which he was formerly pastor, have presented him with a fine bicycle for use in his work.

Illinois.

WAVERLY.—From 25 to 30 applicants for this pastorate within a month of Rev. Dr. Fairbank's farewell indicates a plentiful supply of preachers, or a particularly attractive field. The church proposes to make extensive improvements upon its building before calling a pastor. Preaching services are suspended for the present, but the Sunday school and Y. P. S. C. E. meetings are kept up.

SPRINGFIELD.—Hope is fortunate in its pastor, Rev. J. M. Darrah, a mechanic, chosen right out of the shop where he supports himself by his labor. The superintendent of this Sunday school also has wide repute as a worker.

GRAY'S LAKE.—The present pastor, Rev. J. C. Dazey, has received 42 persons to the church during his pastorate. In many ways, notably the missionary offerings, is the general prosperity of the church marked.

Indiana.

INDIANAPOLIS.—South Side. Rev. F. E. Jeffery, who comes to this important field, was from 1890-4 a missionary of the A. B. C. F. M. in Madura, India. Later he took charge of the Ewing Street enterprise, Chicago. Matters of health compel a longer residence at home. Mrs. Jeffery is advised by her physician to defer return to the tropics. Mr. Jeffery formerly labored in Indiana as a student with Hosmer church and later he inaugurated the movement which culminated in the Second Church, Terre Haute. He is gladly welcomed by his many friends to the leadership of the new church providentially brought into fellowship with us from the Christian Disciple connection. He is a young man 34 years old. He graduated at Knox College in '87 and at Chicago Seminary in '90. Mrs. Jeffery was her husband's classmate at Galesburg. He has been enthusiastically received by his new parishioners.

AMBOY.—Rev. W. A. Walker lives on a farm, labors with his own hands, and is thus enabled to supply the pulpit without home missionary aid. Thus has it been for three years. The church is anxious for him to live in town and devote his whole time to his ministry, which is acceptable to all. There are prospects at two other places of organizing Congregational churches, if this can be done. The home missionary brethren of the State would gladly aid in this forward project, but on account of straitened finances are compelled to postpone taking up the work.

WASHINGTON.—The church has recently paid up all its obligations to the C. C. B. S. The church is now moving toward the erection of a parsonage. Rev. Rockliffe Mackintosh accompanied his wife to New York, Aug. 3, where she took passage for England for an extended visit. Mr. Mackintosh will after a short vacation in the East return to his work.

ELWOOD.—Rev. Richard Powell is providing catechetical instructions for his Sunday school and the young people. One of a series of questions is answered by the scholars at the close of each Sunday school session. A like course is pursued at the final service of the after meeting Sunday evening.

BRIGHTWOOD.—Rev. C. E. Grove is rewarded for earnest presentation of the truth by the breaking out of a revival of some extent. Recently 14 new members have been welcomed. The house is not large enough to accommodate the crowds which are attracted.

Rev. D. Q. Travis, formerly of Indiana, now pastor at Pocatello, Idaho, is taking his vacation with a camping party of church people in Yellowstone Park during August.——Rev. J. S. Ainslie of Fort Wayne will visit Boston to confer with the Education Society about Ridgeville College and spend some time at the White Mountains and Ithaca, N. Y.——Rev. H. T. Sell has supplied for several Sundays the La Porte Presbyterian church.——Rev. W. C. Rogers of Brecksville, O., is visiting his father, Deacon Clayton T. Rogers, of Alexandria.——Rev. Prof. A. M. Hall, late of Butler College, Irvington, has closed his supply of the Worthington Christian church and has gone to Paris, Ill., for a few weeks before going to New Haven, Ct.——Rev. W. E. Davidson of Delavan, Wis., is visiting his friends during August in Central, Ind.

Michigan.

LEWISTON.—Within four years the changes which have taken place are marked by a church building and parsonage. While the pastor, Rev. J. M. Warren, has been here, no communion has passed without accessions.

CENTRAL LAKE.—The meetings of Evangelist Gordon have resulted in 16 or more conversions. This will encourage the earnest home missionary work of the region.

BIG ROCK.—At this place there are three church memberships, five preaching points and five Sunday schools, but no church edifice.

Wisconsin.

ANTIGO.—Owing to the call of the pastor, Rev. C. C. Campbell, to a position in Ripon College, his parishioners to the number of 200 recently gathered at his home and protested against his acceptance. The action was of avail, and this important church is happy in the pastor's decision to remain. The work touches five Sunday schools besides its own local field.

TOMAH.—The meeting house is greatly improved by a recent expenditure of $300. The pastor, Rev. E. L. Morse, spends August at Durand with his family.

THE WEST.

Iowa.

MANCHESTER.—The 40th anniversary of organization was celebrated Aug. 3, with addresses by prominent ministers and laymen, and the reading of letters from others. The original membership of eight has been increased to 281. Rev. H. W. Tuttle is the present pastor.

CLARION.—Five persons have become members recently, all heads of families and all on confession. The pastor, Rev. Edwin Ewell, has been doing good work among the people in outlying neighborhoods. At present he is taking his vacation at Clear Lake.

EMMETSBURG.—The corner stone has been laid of a new house of worship, which has been greatly needed to accommodate the congregations. Services will be held in the Court House during its erection.

GRINNELL.—A promising Intermediate C. E., called the Plymouth Society, has been organized. It includes many who, too old for the Junior grade, do not feel at home in the Senior society.

DECORAH.—Rev. Mahlon Willet of Oakland, Cal., just called to this pastorate, spent his boyhood here, was converted and united with this church during the ministry of Dr. Ephraim Adams.

BELLEVUE.—Church and Sunday school audiences are well sustained during the summer heat. The pastor, Rev. G. W. Sargent, does not expect to take a vacation this year.

IOWA CITY.—The pastor, Rev. M. A. Bullock, remains at home during the summer, preaching each Sunday morning. In the evening the various congregations unite.

ALLISON.—The church mourns the loss of one of its charter members, Mr. H. N. Walker, whose death occurred Aug. 1 at his home in Butler Center.

Evangelist Williams is now at Marshalltown conducting special union meetings.——A new church building is well under way at Newburg, and will be ready for dedication soon.——A new five-foot cement sidewalk around the church and parsonage lots is a recent improvement at Rock Rapids —— The Garner people have improved the church property by an addition to the parsonage.

Minnesota.

MINNEAPOLIS.—New Brighton. During the summer the evening service has been put in charge of the C. E. Society, while Rev. T. H. Lewis preaches at Mayflower Church, also under his care. Financial skies are brighter on account of the opening of one of the packing houses and the prospective opening of another.——First Scandinavian. Rev. L. C. Johnson has closed his pastorate of five years to take up work among the Lutherans. An edifice has been erected, a church formed to which there have been occasional accessions, and considerable advance has been made, though the crowding of other denominations into the field after the formation of this church has somewhat retarded growth. A new minister will be secured.

BRAINERD.—Second. The meeting house is too small and plans are forming for a larger edifice. This church, frequently pastorless, sometimes disbanding its Sunday school, sometimes a prey to dissensions, has been held up for years by the H. M. S., almost against the advice of the brethren. At present the city has taken a new start. Changes in business and population, the incoming of new families and a minister just adapted to the field have made the enterprise hopeful. All church services, including prayer meetings, are well attended, and it is hoped that a larger building will be secured before snow comes. The lumber company has agreed to sell material at the lowest price and to make a donation besides.

WALKER.—This new town on the shore of Leech Lake is beautifully situated, is the center of a lumber trade with Indians and is destined to be a summer resort and, probably, a county seat. A missionary was sent there a few weeks ago, a little church of five members was organized by Rev. C. B. Fellows, being recognized by council in orderly fashion. A meeting house is nearly inclosed, and the infant church, with no other English-speaking church of any denomination within 40 miles, is building the kingdom of Christ on no other man's foundation.

BIG LAKE AND ORROCK.—These two churches were greatly afflicted last winter by the loss of their pastor by death. They have kept up the salary to his widow for several months, the pulpit being supplied by neighboring ministers. Recently a lay evangelist has visited them and they are trying to secure him as pastor.

LYLE.—This church, which a few years ago had only a name to live, is just losing its pastor, Mr. E. E. Day, who goes to Yale Divinity School. It has begun the erection of a parsonage and hopes soon to have it completed and occupied by a new pastor who has just been called.

FAIRMONT.—Since the coming of Rev. J. P. Dickerman interest in missions has developed. The Y. P. S. C. E. takes a fourth share in the Howard Roll of Honor, and plans are developing to interest the whole church. A new house of worship is needed.

ST. PAUL.—Hazel Park. On a recent Sunday 12 children were presented for baptism and four adults received into fellowship. The total membership, including these accessions, is less than 30. This is the only church in a territory of four square miles.

BARNESVILLE.—Rev. L. C. Frost has preached at two country appointments, and plans have been made for forming a church. Five persons have united upon confession. The home department of the Sunday school is vigorous.

BELLEVIEW.—A Sunday school has been formed, and plans have been made for organization and building. The H. M. Society has made arrangements to man this field and other destitute points near.

KRAGNES.—A site has been selected for an edifice. Organization will follow soon. A quarter section of land has been set apart to be cultivated next year, the proceeds to go to church building.

LAKE BENTON.—Repairs costing $100 have been made upon the church. The pastor preaches at Lake Stay and at Tyler. At the latter place there is an encouraging increase of interest.

ST. CHARLES.—Ten accessions to the membership, with a number who are trying privately to lead Christian lives and whom we expect later to see brought into fellowship, are reported.

Nebraska.

HAVELOCK.—The church has been pushing its Sunday school work of late, especially the home department, which is superintended by an active and thoroughly consecrated woman, whose visits do much good. A Gothic alcove has been built at the south end of the edifice to give increased ventilation and more room for the pulpit platform. The audience-room has also been neatly papered and the Ladies' Aid Society is making regular payments on the debt for the assembly chairs. The Y. P. S. C. E. has charge of the public evening service during July and August, and a delightful twilight meeting for prayer and meditation is deepening spiritual interest. Three persons have lately committed themselves to the cause of Christ. Rev. Samuel Wood is pastor.

LINCOLN.—Vine Street. The Young Ladies' Missionary Society, in the absence of the pastor, took entire charge of the morning service July 26, and the church met with the Endeavor Society at the evening service and listened to a report of the Washington convention.——At Butler Avenue the Ladies' Missionary Society had charge Sunday afternoon, July 26, Mrs. L. M. Bross, secretary of the State W. H. M. U., giving an address.——First. Rev. Lewis Gregory preached Aug. 2 for the last time before his vacation, and expects to be absent in the East for the rest of the month. The pulpit will be supplied by Rev. Messrs. Wilson Denney and G. E. Taylor, and Supt. Harmon Bross.

LONG PINE.—All the services of the local church for the two Sundays of the Chautauqua assembly were omitted, but a conference was held with Superintendent Bross with reference to continued work and it was decided to take steps at once to secure a pastor. It is expected to unite this with some neighboring church to form a field. All debts are paid except a small sum due the C. C. B. S. on the parsonage.

STOCKVILLE.—This church, unable during the hard times to support a regular pastor, has been ministered to efficiently by Rev. A. H. Bartlett, who lives on a farm near the village. The meetings are held in the Methodist building, alternating with the services of that denomination. Arrangements are in progress for securing more of Mr. Bartlett's time.

SPRINGVIEW.—This church, which has been pastorless for some time, with an occasional supply by Missionary Paske, has maintained its working power with commendable persistence. A union C. E. Society includes the young people of the Methodist Episcopal church.

HARVARD.—This church, ministered to for the summer by Mr R. H. Potter of Yale Divinity School, is encouraged at the progress already made. The Y. P. S. C. E. has bravely undertaken to raise between $60 and $70 toward the expenses of the summer campaign.

CURTIS.—The pulpit is to be supplied for several Sundays by Emory Ellis, a Doane College student, during the vacation of Rev. C. W. Preston.

North Dakota.

GRAND FORKS.—Since the coming of Rev. I. B. Tracy to this field the church has been greatly encouraged and strengthened. The congregations are much larger and several persons have become members.

HEBRON.—This is an important out station in connection with the work at Glen Ullin. Rev. F. C. Emerson regularly ministers to this field and a church will probably be organized in the near future.

NEW ROCKFORD.—Rev. N. W. Hankemeyer has resigned the pastorate of this church and gone to New Mexico on account of the failing health of his wife. The work has progressed under his care.

The work at Abercrombie has greatly prospered since Mr. W. A. Wilkinson assumed the pastorate.

Supt. E. H. Stickney has made an extended trip in the western part of the State in the interests of Sunday school work, and has found large opportunities for service.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

SAN FRANCISCO.—The Monday Club, which has led a somewhat languishing existence of late, shows a marked improvement in attendance and spirit. Its list of topics for the next six months is most suggestive, embracing historic, denominational, doctrinal, practical and educational subjects, and also touching missions, the Salvation Army and the home At a recent meeting Mr. Straus, formerly a deacon of First Church and an artist of reputation, read a paper on Christ the Inspiration of Art, drawing his material from experience as well as from history.

CLAYTON.—Rev. Francis Watry, formerly a Roman Catholic priest, now a Congregational pastor, publishes a readable, anti-Romanist paper, The Searchlight, which finds its way into many homes.

SANTA ROSA —A cordial reception was given Rev. L. D. Rathbone and wife by their new people. All the pastors in the city, including the Episcopal and Roman Catholic, were present.

Rev. J. A. Jones of Adin and his flock are rejoicing over the provision of individual communion cups.

Oregon.

PORTLAND.—First. Rev. F. B. Cherington, D. D., of Westminster Church, Spokane, Wn., supplied the pulpit July 12 to Aug. 2. Rev. A. W. Ackerman, Sheffield, Ill., has been called to this church. Evening services will be omitted during August.——Hassalo Street and Sunnyside will suspend all services this month.——Mississippi Avenue. This church now has the second largest Sunday school in the State, the average attendance being 150 for the past four months. The church finances are in good condition.——Sylvan. This is a new church in the suburbs, organized with seven members. The field is promising, there being no other church within a mile. City Missionary Gray has it in charge. A flourishing Sunday school has already been gathered.

SALEM.—First. July 26 was the 44th anniversary of the organization. Special services were held, with large attendance, and an old debt of $1,000 was liquidated to signalize the event, a success beyond the hope of the most sanguine. Dr. W. C. Kantner, the devoted pastor, whose ill health in the spring promised to become serious, has nearly recovered, and is able to do his regular work.

RAINIER.—A new house of worship is being erected to be ready for occupancy Oct. 1. Prospects are bright, though the field is difficult. The pastor, Rev. C. W. Wells, divides his time with the Cathlamet (Wn.) church, 25 miles distant.

SHERIDAN.—A new organ has just been put in. The pastor, Rev. F. O. Krause, recently from Yale, is encouraged by the promise of permanent results in response to his efforts. Congregations are good and constantly increasing.

OTHER CHRISTIAN WORK.

Rev. Dr. A. J. Diaz, the Cuban patriot and exile, has just returned to Boston to fill his engagements. His post office address for a few days is: Care, J. S. Paine, 48 Canal Street, Boston.

Great Britain has accepted the award of the arbitrator, Portugal, and resigned her control of the little island of Trinidad off the coast of South America, which she had occupied as a telegraph station. The larger Trinidad, off the mouth of the Orinoco, which is indisputably her property, must not be confused with this small and barren island, which now reverts to Brazil.

[Publisher's Department.]

Abbot Academy, Andover.

The town of Andover is widely noted for the number and character of its educational institutions. Situated about twenty-three miles from Boston on the slope of a hill, it commands an extensive view of the picturesque valley of the Merrimack. Nowhere could be found a more ideal spot where nature is so in keeping with the spirit of culture and learning.

One of the most prominent institutions is Abbot Academy for young women, named in honor of Mrs. Sarah Abbot. Imbued with the spirit of its founders, it has always been distinctively Christian in its instruction and influence, and aims to prepare girls for useful, earnest lives by providing opportunities for thorough culture and by endeavoring to secure the best development of character.

From the establishment of the academy in 1829 until 1853 the principal was a man, frequently a student of the theological seminary. In August of that year Miss Nancy J. Hasseltine accepted the principalship, and it was under her care for six years. In 1859 Miss McKeen took charge and remained as its head for thirty-three years. During this unusually long term of service she saw the school grow in strength and proportion under her guiding hand. After a wonderfully successful administration she retired in 1892, to be succeeded by Miss Laura S. Watson, under whose able leadership the school is today.

The grounds comprise twenty-three acres. In one part of this the buildings are grouped, facing a beautiful lawn. Behind the academy, but entirely within its own grounds, is a large grove of stately oaks whose branches shade the numerous gravel walks, thus affording abundant opportunity for healthful and pleasant outdoor exercise, which is required of all.

MISS LAURA S. WATSON.

The equipment of the school in reference to its buildings is most complete. Abbot Hall, the old academy building, contains the assembly hall, class rooms, laboratory and gymnasium. Draper Hall, the newest of the buildings, named in honor of Mr. W. F. Draper of Andover, who made the largest donation toward its erection, is one of the most artistic school buildings in the country. It furnishes boarding accommodations for all pupils pursuing English and German. There are separate floors for music and art, a commodious well-lighted reading-room and carefully selected library of five thousand volumes. The building is lighted by electricity, and the arrangements for ventilating are admirable; it is heated by the Mills hot water system, and the appliances to be used in case of fire are exceptionally complete. The larger number of rooms are en suite, allowing parlor and bedroom for two young ladies. There are also a few single rooms. Each pupil has a single bed, her own bureau, closet and toilet conveniences.

The music rooms are confined to one end of the third floor. There is a large room which is used by the instructor. Adjoining this, but separated by corridors, the walls of which are padded and entrances guarded by double doors, are a number of practice rooms. The whole department is isolated from the rest of the house by the same method of deadening sound, thus giving absolute freedom in vocal and instrumental practice.

The art rooms in the upper story are lighted from above, and are arranged with special regard to the accommodation of the different departments. The collection of art illustrations numbers over three thousand. Ample facilities are afforded for painting in oils and water colors and clay modeling.

In the very top of the building is stationed the infirmary, recently equipped by the Abbot Academy Club of Boston. Everything that would add to the comfort and speedy recovery of the patient has been thought of. It is apart from the activity of the school and under the supervision of a competent nurse.

Smith Hall, the home of the French students, affords very pleasant accommodations. The rooms are arranged for the most part singly. A pleasant dining-room and parlor are for their exclusive use. French is the language of this family. Especial thought and care have been taken to make the department of modern languages as strong and efficient as possible, and it is to accomplish this end that the French students, as just stated, all live in Smith Hall with the French teacher, while those pursuing the German course occupy, with their instructor, one wing of Draper Hall, and are provided with special tables in the dining-room where German is almost invariably spoken.

The faculty which Miss Watson has secured to assist her are able scholars, and the instruction in all the courses, which include a general, classic, modern literature and college preparatory, is of the best. That Abbot Academy has always stood for the highest literary attainments is evinced by the number of her alumnæ who are among the prominent writers of today, among whom are "Octave Thanet," Anna Fuller, Kate Douglas Wiggin and Lily Dougall.

In the character of instruction and the class of students Abbot Academy holds an enviable reputation among the leading institutions for young ladies in the country. Under its present management there is excellent reason to believe the future will show even greater advancement in the education of young women at Abbot Academy than its brilliant history of sixty-seven years has already shown.

ABBOT HALL. SMITH HALL. DRAPER HALL.

WEEKLY REGISTER.

Calls.

ACKERMAN, Arthur W., Sheffield, Ill., to First Ch., Portland, Ore.
BILLINGS, Evangelist C. S., to Third Ch., Los Angeles, Cal. Accepts.
BLAIR, David G., Ransom and S. Jefferson, Mich., to Kinderhook. Declines, to accept a call to remain with his present charge.
CAMPBELL, Andrew, Andover Sem., to Deerfield, Mass. Accepts, to begin at once.
CAMPBELL, Clement C., Antigo, Wis., to be financial agent of Ripon College. Declines.
DICKERSON, Orson C., Godfrey, Ill., to N. Aurora. Accepts.
DORODING, W. H., Chicago, Ill., to Lunenburg, Mass.
DREW, Chas. E., Plymouth, Ill., to Farmington. Accepts, and has begun work.
HANNUM, H. O., Minneapolis, Minn., to Southwick, Mass. Accepts.
JEFFERY, Franklin E., Galesburg, Ill., to South Side Ch., Indianapolis, Ind. Accepts.
JENKINS, J. Alex, Mt. Carmel, Pa., declines call to Williamstown.
LAMB, Sam'l G., Marshall, Ill., to Highland, Cal. Accepts.
LINCOLN, Winfield S., Richfield, O., to Detroit, Minn.
MARTIN, A. A., Arbor Vitæ, Wis., to Pittsville. Accepts.
MILLER, Albert P., late of Dixwell Ave. Ch., New Haven, Ct., to Lincoln Memorial Ch., Washington, D. C. Accepts.
NEWTON, Benj. G., Plymouth, Pa., accepts call to Franklin Ave. Ch., Cleveland, O.
SWAIN, Carl J., Sauk Rapids, Minn., to Lyle.
TERBORGH, Isaac, Ada, Minn., to Portland, Mich. Accepts.
WILLETT, Mahlon, Pilgrim Ch., Oakland, Cal., to Decorah, Io.

Ordinations and Installations.

BEDDOES, Arthur E., o. p. Maplewood Ch., Chicago, Ill., June 30. Sermon, Rev. J. C. Armstrong; other parts, Pres. C. A. Blanchard, Professor Strong and Rev. Messrs. A. M. Thome and J. H. Parr.

Resignations.

BLOMFIELD, Frank, Dexter, Mich.
BROWN, Aurelian L., Dayton and Ranchester, Wyo.
DAY, Ernest E., Lyle, Minn., to study at Yale Divinity School.
DAZEY, Jona. C., Gray's Lake, Ill.
ECKLES, Jno. G., Porterville, Cal., to take effect Oct. 1.
HANKEMEYER, Nath'l W., New Rockford, N. D.
HENDERSON, Thos. H., Paso Robles, Cal.
JONES, Burton H., Windsor, Mo., to finish his studies. Resignation will take effect Sept. 1.
NOSTROM, Jno. O., Swedish Ch., Ottumwa, Io.
PARSONS, Jas., Vacaville, Cal.
PEIRCE, Albert E, Liber Memorial Ch., Portland, Ind.
VOORHEES, J. Spencer, W. Winsted, Ct., to take effect Nov. 1. He will engage in post-graduate work at a theological seminary.
WASHINGTON, Alonzo G., Nevinville and Good Hope, Io., to take effect Oct. 1.

Churches Organized.

TEMPE, Ariz., (Mexican)—
WALKER, Minn., rec.—, five members.

Miscellaneous.

BROWN, Victor F., was recently given a picnic by his people at Strawberry Point, Io., in honor of his twenty-seventh birthday. Mr. Brown and his wife are now making a vacation tour in Iowa, Illinois and Wisconsin.
CAMPBELL, W. A., pastor at McPherson, Kan., is spending a few weeks in Colorado for needed recuperation.
CURTIS, Jno. S., has received a purse of money from his people in Hopkinton, N. H., as an expression of sympathy in the severe illness of his wife.
LAYFIELD, Robert L., the evangelist, has regained his usual health and is now holding open air services at Siloam Springs, Mo. His permanent address is 1019 Michigan Avenue, Kansas City, Mo.
PRATT, Parsons S., and wife, of Dorset, Vt., celebrated their golden wedding July 22, all their children being present. They were also cheered by numerous and valuable gifts from their parishioners.

Deaths.

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

CALDWELL—In West Palm Grove, Fla., the wife of Rev. A. Caldwell. She went in bathing one afternoon and died at midnight, leaving a family of small children.

CURTIS—Entered into life immortal in Marlboro, Mass., July 18, Deacon John E. Curtis, aged 67 yrs. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

HYDE—In Jamestown, N. Y., Rev. William L. Hyde, a retired clergyman, aged 77 yrs. He was graduated from Bowdoin College and Bangor Seminary, was in the ministry from 1849 to 1862, served for three years as chaplain of the 112th N. Y. Vols., and spent the last of his life in literary work.

MATHER—In Hartford, Ct., Aug. 5, of paralysis, Mrs. Sarah J., wife of Roland Mather. She was for many years president of the Hartford Branch W. B. M., and active in various local charities.

SOULE—In Somersworth, N. H., Aug. 9, Sherrod, Jr., son of Rev. Sherrod Soule of Naugatuck, Ct., aged 1 yr., 7 mos.

REV. EPHRAIM W. ALLEN,

Who died in Newark, N. J., on Sunday, May 17, was born in Newburyport, Mass., Oct. 9, 1813. He was graduated at Amherst College in 1838. He studied theology one year at Andover and two years at Yale, being graduated from the Yale Divinity School in 1841. He was ordained to the ministry and installed as pastor of the Congregational church at North Reading, Mass., May 17, 1843, and was settled afterwards successively at Salem, Mass., South Berwick, Me., Haverhill, North Middleboro and East Taunton, Mass.

His last charge was relinquished Sept. 15, 1890, after nearly fifty years of active service, and he died on the fifty-third anniversary of his ordination, leaving his companion of more than fifty years, two sons and two daughters to mourn his loss here and to anticipate a reunion with him beyond. The father of Mr. Allen, who bore the same name in full, was for many years editor and publisher of the Newburyport Herald. As a child the son was often under the care of William Lloyd Garrison, who was apprenticed to his father and was a member of the household for several years. Mr. Garrison was aided by Mr. Allen, Sr., in his first newspaper venture, the Newburyport Free Press.

Coming of such stock and having such early associations, Mr. Allen would be expected to be, as he was, a man of pronounced opinions on the rights of man, without limitations on account of color or class distinctions. On the outbreak of the War of the Rebellion he strenuously maintained the cause of the Union, and thereby incurred the enmity of certain influential members of the church and community where he was settled. But none of these things moved him. His entire life was marked by an unflinching performance of duty and a readiness for self-sacrifice when occasion called for it.

He never feared to declare his convictions, nor lacked ability to maintain them whoever might oppose. He was no time server nor trimmer. As a preacher his matter was excellent for he was a student, and his manner was spirited and convincing for he believed what he was saying and was anxious to persuade others to accept his message. They who heard him in his latter years were astonished both at the vigor of his thought and the force of his delivery, and will always think of him as "that old man eloquent."

With all this, from first to last, he had the gentleness of a child and the affectionateness of a woman. Indeed, to the last there was a youthfulness and a sprightliness about him that, notwithstanding physical infirmities, seemed to set age at defiance and defer "the inevitable hour." One day, when the writer expressed this idea to him, he replied, "Yes, but some day I shall not be here." It was plain that "all his serious thoughts had rest in heaven."

He was the most loving and lovable of men, and, unlike many of those who pass the fourscore limit, is mourned and will be missed as are they who die young.

On the day of his death he rose in the morning as usual, breakfasted, conducted family worship and prepared partially for church. He was seized with nausea, became unconscious and remained so until early in the evening, when he passed away.

The manner of his death befitted his life and character. It was not like the setting of the sun in clouds and gloom with the darkness of the night to follow, but rather like the merging of the day-star into the glory of the dawn.

He sets as sets the morning star,
Which goes not down behind the darkened west,
Nor hides obscured amid the tempests of the sky,
But melts away into the light of heaven.

E. N. P.

JONATHAN E. PORTER.

In North Brookfield, Sabbath, Aug. 2, Jonathan Edwards Porter, son of Colonel Moses and Amey Porter of Hadley, aged eighty-one years. He was the great grandson of President Edwards, and trained in the doctrine and piety that name represents. In all his long life, pure in principle, upright in conduct, strong, steadfast, Christian in character, he gave to various enterprises in public life and in civil and Christian benevolences a wise and constant service. In the church he was as James and Cephas, "who seemed to be pillars," constant in worship and in prayer meetings, for many years a teacher and superintendent in Sabbath school, and with open hand helpful in all church affairs and charities. His end came through gentle decline. The natural desire to live gave place to a sweet, childlike longing to be taken home to Jesus. He is survived by his wife, C. C. (Haskell) Porter, and a daughter, the wife of Rev. S. D. Gammell of Tallmadge, O. W.

NOTEWORTHY FORTHCOMING MEETINGS.

Chautauqua Assembly, Chautauqua, N. Y., June 27–Aug. 24.
Northfield Y. M. C. A. Camp, Northfield, Mass., July 1–Sept. 1.
School for Systematic Bible Study, Northfield, Mass., July 6–Aug. 24.
Association for the Advancement of Science, Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 24–29.
American Social Science Association, Saratoga, N. Y., Sept. —.
Annual Congress of the National Prison Association, Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 26–30.
American Board, Toledo, O., Oct. 6–9.
American Missionary Association, Boston, Mass., Oct. 20–22.
Convention of the Open and Institutional Church League, Hartford, Ct., Oct. 20, 21.
National W. C. T. U. Convention, St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 13–18.

It Induces Sleep.
Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. S. T. LINEAWEAVER, Lebanon, Pa., says: "It induces a quick sleep and promotes digestion."

"A STITCH IN TIME SAVES NINE.—So a few doses of Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam taken when there is noticed the first symptoms of throat soreness, or a cough, will save pain, illness, loss of time and even life itself. It cures in every instance. Sold everywhere.

SURE TO WIN.—The people recognize and appreciate real merit. That is why Hood's Sarsaparilla has the largest sales in the world. Merit in medicine means the power to cure. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures—absolutely, permanently cures. It is the one true blood purifier. Its superior merit is an established fact, and merit wins.

HOOD'S PILLS are easy to take, easy to operate. Cure indigestion, headache.

Pure

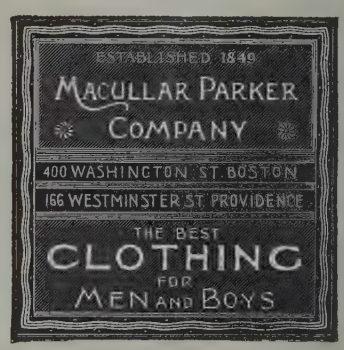
Rich blood is the basis of good health, and Hood's Sarsaparilla purifies, vitalizes, and enriches the blood.

"I was suffering with salt rheum, and have taken three bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla and it has cured me. I am thankful for what it has done for me. I can say I believe it will cure the diseases for which it is recommended."—ABBIE BRUMMETT, Cochituate, Mass.

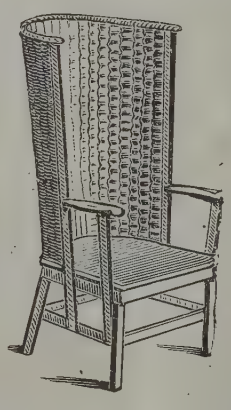
HOOD'S
Sarsaparilla

Is the One True Blood Purifier. All druggists. $1. Prepared only by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Hood's Pills cure nausea, indigestion, biliousness. 25 cents.



SCREEN CHAIRS.



You recall the remark of the gallant Mormon: "You can't have too much of a good thing."

The only objectionable feature in connection with a visit to our exhibition of Summer Furniture is the fact that you can't have enough of it. You can't own all the chairs you see there, and choice is difficult. But remember the Mormon's logic, and do not be content with less than half a dozen at least. The cost is a mere trifle.

We have so many novelties that it is almost invidious to select any one pattern for description here. As a random choice we take this Screen Chair. It is interesting, for it is the only chair of its kind in this country, and positively cannot be bought except of us.

The frame is of Malachite Oak, but the rest of the chair was made in the East Indies and imported expressly by us. The entire back is a curious weave of the tough, long-fiber Indian grass, and is as stout as the heaviest rattan work.

JUST ISSUED.—General Catalogue for 1896-97. Square octavo, 256 pp., 300 illustrations. Sent to any address on receipt of five 2-cent stamps for postage.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,
48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.

NOTES.

The parties organized at great expense at home and abroad for observation of the total eclipse of the sun seem to have been only partially successful, because of cloudy weather at the critical moment. The English observers in Norway appear to have been more fortunate than the American party in northern Japan, but full details of success and failure have not come to hand as we go to press.

The opening of the largest canal lock in the world in the Sault Ste. Marie Canal calls attention to the magnitude of the commercial interests of that waterway. As compared with the Suez Canal it passed in 251 days 17,956 vessels against 3,434 passing Suez in 365 days, with almost exactly double the tonnage. In other words, the Sault Ste Marie Canal is by far the greatest artificial waterway in the world.

Electricity is not to have a clear field as a motor for cars in city streets. Several of the transit companies in New York, where the trolley has never been admitted, are experimenting with compressed air, and apparently with satisfactory results. The removal of the dangerous trolley wire from our thoroughfares would be desirable, but any new system must offer speed, security and economy to enter into the competition. In Washington, after a hot contest, the trolley was rejected for all streets within the city limits, so that now on the electric road at the capital overhead wires are not in evidence until a prescribed boundary of the city is reached. If the underground electrical connection now in use at Washington is found to work successfully why should not other cities insist upon its adoption.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

An appeal has been sent out asking 2,000 societies of the Interior to give $5 each to the American Board before Sept. 1 toward a Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Quick Relief Fund, in order that it may not be necessary to discharge native teachers and preachers, and thus cripple important work.

The campaign against Sunday baseball has been joined by the local union of Providence, R. I., as its members have refused to attend games of the Providence club until the Sunday engagements are canceled. The union of Springfield, Mass., is preparing literature to send to societies in the places where such action is needed.

The good literature committee in the society at the International Institute, San Sebastian, Spain, sends to former members a monthly letter giving information of interest about the society, as well as other matter about Christian Endeavor. The Sunday school committee has done good work by making and distributing books to children in the day school.

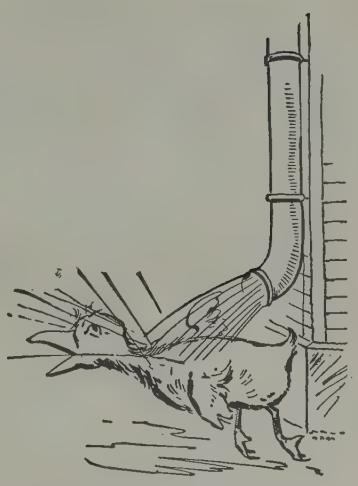
The lookout committee of the local union of Toledo, O., lately arranged a reception and conference for the corresponding secretaries of the State. The committee has sent to each society a request that at every meeting some time be set apart for prayer for special objects, one object being assigned for each meeting, and the list including different officers, committees and meetings, associate members, church loyalty and greater faithfulness to Christ.

The preaching services on Sunday evenings, sustained by the society at Madanapalle, India, have been attended by audiences numbering 7,500 in the course of the year. Members of the girls' school at Fatehgarh take, as part of their work, the reading of the Bible to persons that are blind or cannot read and the teaching of the Sunday school lesson to children in the orphanage. A junior in Mainpuri, fearing that another might not keep his pledge, took care to read the Bible with him a few minutes every day after the close of the school.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. WILLIAM H. BELDEN, D. D.,

Secretary of the International Missionary Union, which held its annual meeting at Clifton Springs, N. Y., last June, died suddenly at his home in that town, July 31, of apoplexy. Five years ago, while pastor of the Congregational church in Bristol, Ct., he was struck down by the same disease, but was so much improved in health this year that he was able to perform in large measure his arduous duties as secretary of the union. His death last Friday evening was very sudden. Mr. Belden belonged to a family of educators, and was himself a man of fine attainments and of marked facility as a writer. He was born in Newark, N. J., Aug. 3, 1841. He graduated from Yale College in 1863 and from Union Theological Seminary in 1867. Five years later he was ordained to the ministry at Branchville, N. J., and became a missionary of the American Board in 1879, purposing to devote himself to the publication department as editor of the mission paper, the Zornitsa. He was connected with the New York Tribune before going to Bulgaria in 1879. His connection with the Board closed in March, 1881, and after his return to this country the same year he became a pastor in Bridgeton, N. J., and subsequently in Bristol, Ct. Before his death he had made excellent progress in the preparation of a concordance of the New Testament in Bulgarian.



Under the Weather.

That is the common Spring complaint. You feel "logy," dull. Your appetite is poor. Nothing tastes good. You don't sleep well. Work drags. You cross every bridge before you come to it. There's lots of people have felt like you until they toned up the system by taking the great spring remedy

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

It's been curing such cases for 50 years. Try it yourself.

Send for the "Curebook." 100 pages free.
J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

ESTABLISHED 1836.
ISAAC RILEY,
Successor to Baird & Riley,
PLUMBER AND SANITARY ENGINEER,
85 Joy St., Near Cambridge St., Boston.
Telephone, Haymarket 294.

IN CORRESPONDENCE SUGGESTED by announcements in our ADVERTISING COLUMNS, please mention that the advertisement was seen in The Congregationalist

Hay Fever time is here

Don't exile yourself to the mountains for relief. Don't stay at home and sniffle and sneeze. Thousands were cured last year by the Australian "Dry-Air" Treatment, Booth's which "cures by inhalation" Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the respiratory organs. Don't dose your stomach — try nature's way. Price, by mail, $1.00.

"Hyomei,"

Mayflower Cottage, Kattskill Bay,
East Lake George, N. Y., July 31, 1895.
Enclosed please find $1.00 for two extra bottles of Hyomei. I am entirely cured of Hay Fever, but I do not like to be without your remedy.
(Mrs.) R. A. Linendoll

Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb. 8, 1895.
Booth's Pocket Inhaler works like a charm. The first inhalation gave relief. It is a blessing to humanity and I am sorry it is not better known I add my name to the "Pass-It-On-Society,"
Sincerely yours,
(Rev.) J. M. Farrar, D. D.

Hyomei is a purely vegetable antiseptic, and destroys the germs which cause disease in the respiratory organs. The air, charged with Hyomei, is inhaled at the mouth, and, after permeating the minutest air-cells, is exhaled through the nose. It is aromatic, delightful to inhale, and gives immediate relief. It is highly recommended by physicians, clergymen, public speakers and thousands who have been helped and cured.

Pocket Inhaler Outfit, Complete, by Mail, $1.00, to any part of the United States; for foreign countries add $1.00 postage; outfit consists of pocket inhaler, made of deodorized hard rubber, a bottle of Hyomei, a dropper, and full directions for using. If you are still skeptical, send your address; my pamphlet shall prove that Hyomei cures. Are you open to conviction? Extra bottles of Hyomei inhalant by mail, or at druggists, 50 cents. Hyomei Balm, for all skin diseases, by mail, 25 cents. Your druggist has Hyomei or can get it for you if you insist. Don't accept a substitute.

London Office:
11 Farringdon Ave., E. C.,

R. T. BOOTH, 23 East 20th Street, New York.

CHURCH CARPETS AT MANUFACTURERS' PRICES. JOHN H. PRAY, SONS & CO., CARPETS AND UPHOLSTERY, 658 WASHINGTON ST., OPP. BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

The fall trade has begun to appear in a slight increase in the distribution of goods. The volume is considerably less than a year ago, and in some departments trade is almost lifeless. Men are taking counsel of their fears, with the result that merchants throughout the country are only buying for immediate wants. The extreme heat in the West and South has also been a deterrent influence upon the movement of merchandise.

Iron and steel continue extremely dull, and in spite of the curtailment of production the stock of pig iron is understood to be steadily increasing. Prices are not firm and on large lots concessions can be obtained. What is true of iron is also true of the cotton and woolen industries. The cotton yarn mills have agreed to reduce their production by fifty per cent. during the current month.

A summary of the situation shows that financial and mercantile interests are so doubtful of the future that they are restricting their operations to actual necessity. Merchants do not propose to be caught with a large stock on hand in case of a storm. Money has tightened considerably, and even if business men were disposed to operate on a more extensive scale they could not obtain necessary accommodation from the banks. Time money is unobtainable under six per cent., even where the collateral is gilt-edged. Banks are not buying new paper and refuse to renew old, except where they are obliged to do so.

The stock market has been in bad shape, some stocks selling below the panic price of 1893. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy stock has declined to the lowest price since 1861, and the price today discounts a reduction or absolute passage of the dividend. Manhattan has also gone off badly, but both these companies have been showing constantly declining net earnings.

THE NEW ENGLAND FAIR.—The "New England Fair" is an institution holding an honored place in the esteem of all true New Englanders, and its growth has been of such a steady character that the exhibition now embraces every known contrivance which trends to benefit and improve the methods in agriculture besides the display of stock and produce, which alone is of sufficient prominence to attract thousands Rigby Park is the ground upon which the "New England Fair" will be held on Aug. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and every effort has been made by the management to make the Fair a memorable success. Rigby Park is but a few miles from Portland, and the exhibition grounds are so arranged and perfected as to place them among the best hereabouts. It might be said that there are a thousand and one attractions, which are, every one of them, unique and interesting and well worth seeing. Racing, as usual, will be a prominent feature, and for both the horse and bicycle races there are many crack entries. Johnson, the famous world's champion bicyclist, and many noted English and French, as well as the best American, experts are entered. Tuesday is Press Day; Wednesday, Grange Day, Thursday, Governor's Day; and Mayor's Day will be on Friday. Band concerts, balloon ascensions, parachute drops and divers other novelties are on the list for amusements, while talks of a practical nature will be given at City Hall by persons of no less renown than Olive Thorne Miller, Col. J. H. Brigham, master of the National Grange, and others. The famous cattle from Hood's Farm will be exhibited, and the French coaching horses from Sanborn's stables will be shown off to the best advantage. There is to be a "Midway" far more complete than last year's, with many new attractions, and, taking all in all, it is the greatest show of the season. From every station on the Boston & Maine System tickets will be on sale, which include an admission to the Fair Grounds. Information regarding rates can be obtained at station ticket offices.

Financial.

8% First Preferred Gold Certificates

Guaranteed. Issue Limited. 25 per cent. subscribed in Advance. Remainder allotted in order of application, at par.

MUTUAL REALTY & LOAN CORPORATION, 100 Broadway, New York.

Financial.

7 PER CENT. NET.

First Mortgage Loans on Improved Farms in the Wonderfully Fertile Red River Valley

and in North Dakota and Minnesota. 20 years of experience in the business, and an actual residence of over 8 years in the Red River Valley and of over 22 in Minnesota and North Dakota. A personal knowledge of lands and values. Loans only made to industrious, thrifty farmers, on well improved farms. I give my personal supervision to the business. Loans made in your name and interest coupon-notes and mortgages and applications sent to you and held by you. Interest collected by me and forwarded to you by New York Check. Funds now earning you only 2, 3, or 4 per cent. in Savings Banks will here earn you 7 per cent.—about doubling your income. Remit funds for investment by New York or Boston Draft, or by personal check payable to my order. Address

E. P. GATES,
3628 Portland Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

Free Coinage and Prosperity.

The original champion of the Free and Unlimited Coinage of Silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation on earth.

The Rocky Mountain News,

T. M. PATTERSON, Editor, DENVER, COL.

Daily Circulation, 27,000.
Sunday Circulation, 35,000.
Weekly Circulation, 5,500.

The largest, handsomest and best edited daily paper in the West. Employs the best artists—its cartoons arouse the admiration of all its readers. Publishes all the important news from the gold and silver camps of the world.

IT'S AN EDUCATOR.

Clear and convincing on the silver question. By mail, 65 cents per month; three months, $1.90; one year, $7.50.

A Profitable Medium for Advertisers.

£ A BANK ACCOUNT IN LONDON for users of Cheque Bank Cheques, which are available everywhere.

Send for circular. Agency of United States Cheque Bank, L'd. 40 and 42 Wall Street.
Fred'k W. Perry, Manager.

A SOLID INVESTMENT.

—Stock of the—

East Tennessee Lumber & Mfg. Co.

For Sale at Par—$25.00 per Share,

By JAMES I. BROOKS & CO.,

246 Washington St., Boston,
Rooms 16 to 20. Send for Circular.

YOU SELL WE BUY

DO YOU WANT TO SELL A Western Mortgage on Western Land—avoid foreclosure costs—stop sending good money after bad—get a good 5% investment instead. State exact location, condition of title, and your lowest price. Over $2,000,000 in Western securities successfully handled by the present management of this corporation. THE BOSTON REALTY, INDEMNITY AND TRUST CO. Send for our Bond List. 33 Equitable Building, Boston.

8% Interest in sums of $50 to $1000 1 year or over. Gilt-edged mortgages on improved Indiana real estate. No finer investment when absolute safety is considered.
O. H. HOVEY Indianapolis.

Hotels and Travel.

Egypt and Palestine.

H. GAZE & SONS, Ltd.,

In whose hands were intrusted The Congregationalist's Oriental Tour of 1895 and the Pilgrimage to England and Holland of this year, ANNOUNCE a delightful and comprehensive tour under personal escort, sailing from New York Oct. 3d, per North German L. S. S. Ems, visiting Gibraltar, Algiers, Italy, Egypt, Palestine, Constantinople and Greece.

STRICTLY FIRST CLASS.
113 DAYS. ALL EXPENSES, $860.

Annual 'Round the World Party leaves in September, via San Francisco.

For program and particulars apply to 113 Broadway, New York. H. Gaze & Sons, Ltd., 201 Washington St., Boston.

Railroads and Excursions.

THE NORTH-WESTERN LIMITED

LEAVES CHICAGO 6.30 P.M. DAILY VIA THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE C. & N. W. RY. ARRIVES ST. PAUL, MINNEAPOLIS, THE SUPERIORS AND DULUTH EARLY THE FOLLOWING MORNING

NEW COMPARTMENT SLEEPING CARS
NEW BUFFET SMOKING AND LIBRARY CARS
NEW STANDARD SLEEPING CARS
NEW DAY COACHES
NEW DINING CARS

ALL AGENTS SELL TICKETS VIA THE CHICAGO & NORTH-WESTERN R'Y.
PRINCIPAL AGENCIES—NEW YORK, 423 BROADWAY—BOSTON, 5 STATE ST.—CHICAGO, 208 CLARK ST.

UNION PACIFIC

The Overland Route—World's Pictorial Line.
THE ONLY LINE WEST OF MISSOURI RIVER RUNNING BUFFET SMOKING AND LIBRARY CARS.

THE ORIGINAL OVERLAND ROUTE.

It was the Route in '49!
It is the Route Today, and
Will be for All Time to Come!

'49 '96

Fastest Train to the West,
"THE OVERLAND LIMITED,"
CHICAGO to SAN FRANCISCO daily in 3 Days from Chicago.
21-2 Days from Missouri River.

Pullman Palace Sleepers; Dining Cars; Free Reclining Chair Cars; Buffet Smoking and Library Cars.
For tickets and full information call or address any Union Pacific agent, or E. L. LOMAX, Gen. Pass. and Tkt. Agt., Omaha, Neb.

THE A LA CARTE DINING CAR SERVICE OF THE CHICAGO GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY.
Popular Route BETWEEN CHICAGO ST. PAUL MINNEAPOLIS DES MOINES ST. JOSEPH KANSAS CITY
F. H. LORD G. P. & T. A. CHICAGO
NEW YORK OFFICE 319 BROADWAY
THE MAPLE LEAF ROUTE
UNEXCELLED

THE ST. DENIS,

Broadway and Eleventh Street,
Opposite Grace Church, - NEW YORK.
EUROPEAN PLAN.

"There is an atmosphere of home comfort and hospitable treatment at the St. Denis which is rarely met with in a public house, and which insensibly draws you there as often as you turn your face toward New York."

Guaranteed 25 Years.

With
HOLMES & EDWARDS,
Sterling Silver Inlaid

Spoons and forks you have a well furnished table.

A piece of solid silver is inlaid in the back of the bowl and handle before plating.

See that the trade-mark is on each article.

E. STERLING INLAID HE.

For sale by all Jewelers.

The Holmes & Edwards Silver Co.,
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

New York Salesroom, 2 Maiden Lane, 2d door from Broadway. 50

Beautiful muslin for wedding trousseaux—"as fine as linen, as soft as silk."
For sale by all leading retailers.

Shirt Waists

After the busiest season in Shirt Waist selling that we ever saw we find several small lots left on our counters, and now offer them at prices which practically give them away.

These Waists are all right in every particular, and in the lots are included some of the more stylish patterns that have been in greatest demand.

$2.50 Shirt Waists, closing out price only $1.25

$2.00 Shirt Waists, closing out price only . . . . . 98c.

$1.25 and $1.50 Shirt Waists, closing out price only . . . . 69c.

Wm. S. Butler & Co.,
TREMONT STREET, BOSTON.

Established 1857.

The Great CHURCH LIGHT

FRINK'S PATENT REFLECTORS for electric, gas or oil, give the most powerful, softest, cheapest and best light known for churches, halls and public buildings. Send size of room. Book of light and estimate free.

Don't be deceived by cheap imitations.

I. P. FRINK,
551 Pearl Street, New York.

IT WILL SERVE THE INTERESTS of all concerned if, in correspondence suggested by announcements in our ADVERTISING COLUMNS, mention is made of the fact that the advertisement was seen in The Congregationalist.

THE SOLUTION OF THE NEGRO PROBLEM.

A little while ago a ship sailed for Liberia with 500 Negro emigrants. The news flashed through the country—this is the solution of the Negro problem! But they forgot—they forgot entirely—to take into consideration that the very morning the ship sailed before breakfast 500 more Negro children were born in the South. So the problem was not got rid of in that way.

Hon. John Temple Graves of Atlanta said to me that the real way to solve it is to set aside a territory in the West and colonize all the colored people there, and let them prove to the world their capability of self-government. There are two difficulties in the way of that solution. In the first place, you'd have to build a wall all around that territory to keep the blacks in, and in the second place, you'd have to build another higher wall around it to keep the white man out. If you were to build ten walls about Africa you couldn't keep the white man out of Africa—especially if he heard there was any gold there.

A gentleman I met on a train the other day said that his solution is that the Negro is fast bleaching out, and would in time be merged in the white race. But he did not consider what you know is the fact, that the moment a man is proved to have a drop of African blood in his veins he becomes a Negro—falls to our pile every time. So we're a stronger race than the white race, you see—we have a stronger power of attraction.

So the problem can't be solved in that way. There is only one way to solve it. That is Hampton's way; that is God's way. Simply treat the Negro as a man—no more, no less—that's all.—Booker T. Washington.

MYSTICISM.

The legitimacy of mysticism forces itself on every thoughtful spirit. Reflecting on ourselves, we perceive that in every true thought there is something which goes beyond its logical expression. There is ever in our desires something which eludes thought; the heart has its reasons, which cannot all be put into words. Light is not enough for us; we need warmth; to demonstrate the existence of God does not satisfy; we must have acquaintance, contact with God, which logical proof cannot give, even granting that, without such contact, such proof exists. The reason will not allow us to grant that this thirst may remain forever unsatisfied; for reason is but the affirmation of a harmony between the mental structure of man and the laws of the universe, without which pre-established harmony all knowledge would be impossible. Reason, I said, but logic should have been the word; for reason is mingled with the thirst we speak of. . . . Legitimate mysticism is the corrective, the natural counterpart, of legitimate skepticism. We can demonstrate nothing, but we see and we believe.—Charles Secretan.

The Vassar
Is one of the famous
S·H·&M·
REGISTERED TRADE MARK.
BIAS VELVETEEN SKIRT BINDINGS.

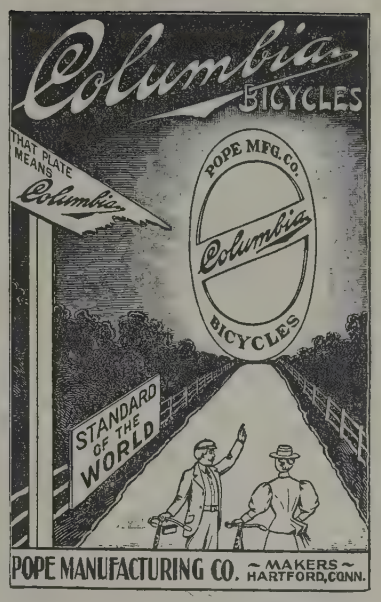
A bias corded velvet with a cord edge especially rich and elegant for finishing silk skirts.

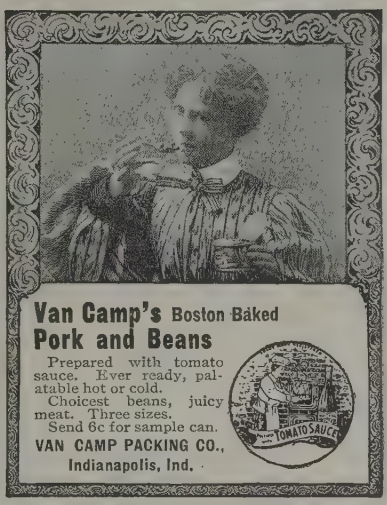
If your dealer will not supply you we will.

Samples showing labels and materials mailed free.

"Home Dressmaking Made Easy," a new 72 page book by Miss Emma M. Hooper, of the Ladies' Home Journal, tells in plain words how to make dresses at home without previous training; mailed for 25c.

S. H. & M. Co., P. O. Box 699, N. Y. City.





Van Camp's Boston Baked Pork and Beans

Prepared with tomato sauce. Ever ready, palatable hot or cold.

Choicest beans, juicy meat. Three sizes.

Send 6c for sample can.

VAN CAMP PACKING CO.,
Indianapolis, Ind.

INVESTORS' ATTENTION.

A live young church wishes a loan of $2,500 for 10 years at 4 per cent. Security first-class. For particulars address L. F. M., care of The Congregationalist.

Subscribers' Wants.

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

Desired, a position as teacher of French, German and English. Smith graduate. References furnished. Apply Box 105, Granby, Mass.

Religious Notices.

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, etc., published under this heading at ten cents a line.

THE POST OFFICE ADDRESS of Rev. ISAAC C. WHITE is Plymouth, Mass.

LAY COLLEGE FOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS, Station R, Boston, fits for all kinds of Christian work.

THE REV. DR. FRANCIS E. MARSTEN, of Columbus, O., may be addressed by correspondents until Oct. 1 at Attleboro Falls, Mass.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: To improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the Society at New York.

JAMES W. ELWELL, President.
REV. W. C. STITT, Secretary.
W. C. STURGES, Treasurer.

The "Harris" Method of Giving

This little tract has been of immense service to the churches in suggesting systematic methods of giving. It was first published as an article in the Congregationalist, and attracted wide notice. Many large editions of the "True Method of Giving" in its present form have been sold. Price, 100 copies, $2.50; 35 copies, $1.00.

For sale at the office of The Congregationalist, Boston

CLERICAL YARNS.

Rev. Samuel Bradburn, one of the early Methodist preachers in England was a poor man, and Wesley once inclosed a five-pound note with the following letter: "Dear Sammy: Trust in the Lord and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt also be fed." To this Bradburn sent answer: "Rev. and Dear Sir: I have often been struck with the beauty of the passage of Scripture quoted in your letter, but I must confess that I never saw such useful expository notes upon it before."—Indian Witness.

OUT OF THE QUESTION.

Rose: "Couldn't we get up a lottery for the benefit of the church?"

Daisy: "A lottery! Our minister is so opposed to lotteries that he has conscientious scruples about performing the marriage service."—Brooklyn Life.

NO SUPERSTITION THERE.

A minister, while evangelizing in the South, one day passed a cornfield and was surprised to see long strings of pawpaw bark knotted together and tied to stumps. He asked his guide what it meant, and was informed that it was "to bring luck."

"And does such a foolish superstition exist all over this community?" asked the minister.

"O, no," said the mountaineer, "the old preacher over in the settlement yonder says pawpaw vines don't do no good."

"Intelligent man!" interrupted the minister. "I'm glad to find one man who isn't lost in ignorance."

"Yaas, sir," the native continued, "he 'lows that yarn strings beat pawpaw strings all holler when it comes to bringin' luck. Fact is, he don't use nothin' but yarn strings."

A STARTLING PULPIT ANNOUNCEMENT.

A clergyman anxious to introduce some new hymn-books directed his clerk to give out a notice in regard to them immediately after the sermon. The clerk, however, had a notice of his own to give out with reference to the baptism of infants. Accordingly, at the close of the sermon, he rose and announced: "All those who have children they wish to have baptized please send their names at once to the clerk." The clergyman, who was deaf, assuming that the clerk was giving out the hymn-book notice, immediately rose and said: "And I should say, for the benefit of those who haven't any, that they may be obtained at the vestry any day from three to four o'clock; the ordinary little ones at one shilling each, and special ones with red backs at one shilling and fourpence."—Vermont Chronicle.

A young man went to the country to spend Thanksgiving at the old farm in the hills where an uncle and aunt had succeeded the grandparents. On Thanksgiving morning the sermon was admirable, but to the young man's embarrassment the old gentleman presently lost consciousness and slept evidently and audibly.

"Shall I wake uncle up?" he whispered to his aunt.

"O, no," she returned hastily, "on no account. Let him be. The only good sleep he ever gets he gets in church."—Christian Intelligencer.

A CONSERVATIVE LIBERAL.

Wife: "I don't see why you think the minister is so narrow-minded. I am sure he rides his wheel to church every Sunday."

Husband: "But nothing on earth could induce him to ride another make."—Portland Transcript.

Surely nothing in ancient alchemy was more irrational than the notion that increased ignorance in the elective body will be converted into increased capacity for good government in the representative body; that the best way to improve the world and secure rational progress is to place government more and more under the control of the least enlightened classes. The day will come when it will appear one of the strangest facts in the history of human folly that such a theory was regarded as liberal and progressive.—W. E. H. Lecky.

MISTAKEN KINDNESS TO THE "YOUNG BROTHER."

A phase of the problem to the discussion of which we have given much space recently is touched on by Rev. Dr. H. L. Wayland in the Examiner:

I am attending a council to consider the question of ordaining a young brother. The candidate has been examined; there is no charge against his character; but there is no evidence that he has been called to the ministry, that he is fitted for the work, that he can edify a church, or that he can secure in the ministry a maintenance for himself and his family. His general education has been very slight, professional education he has had none. He proposes to go into a pastorate directly from the paths of business or labor; the church has called him and has called the council to ordain him, and wants him ordained, now, this evening, and has provided supper for the council. To affirm that the brother is wanting in preparation for the ministry, to recommend that he spend some further time in study, would hurt his feelings, and the feelings of his friends, and also her feelings, and the feelings of her mother, and the feelings of the church; and, besides all this, supper is ready, and you can smell it in the adjoining room; and the people want to get the things cleared away so that they can attend the ordination services in the evening. The usual motion is made, a few discreet brethren oppose the motion, or ask for delay, a few brethren of experience urge that the crying need of the denomination at the present time is not an increase of uneducated and unprepared ministers, that we do not need a larger number of ministers so much as we do a number of larger ministers. But brethren, good-natured, impulsive, sympathetic, kindly disposed, not imbittered by experience, sustain the motion, and it goes through. Methinks, this would have been a time when the remarks about the dignity of the ministerial office, and about standing by our views, even when we are in the minority, would have been in point.

Have You Tried TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT. TRADE MARK REGISTERED.

It cures Constipation, Sick Headache and Biliousness in such a gentle, coaxing way that the unpleasant results of more active remedies are avoided. Sold by Druggists for 50 years.

"IT TASTES GOOD, TOO."

How to Disinfect.

We desire to mail you free, a valuable illustrated book prepared at great expense. Simple directions on disinfecting in cases of contagious diseases and in everyday life—sinks, sewers, etc. Send your address.

* * * "Sanitas" Co. Ld., 636 West 55th St., N. Y.

THE GENUINE DR BLAUD'S IRON PILLS

have been prescribed with great success for more than 50 years by the leading physicians of Europe, in the treatment of female patients. Specially recommended for Poorness of the Blood and Constitutional Weakness.

Imported by E. Fougera & Co., N. Y.

To avoid imitations BLAUD is stamped on each pill.

Does Your Hair Fall Out?

Is it getting thin—lessening in volume? If so, I can help you. If totally bald do not write. Select family patronage for ten years. Send self-addressed stamped envelope to Miss RACHEL T. WYATT, Centerville, Mass.

CORNS—big, little, old, new, hard, soft—all yield to A-Corn Salve. As harmless as it is sure. 15c. box—druggists or by mail. GIANT CHEMICAL CO., 305 Cherry St., Phila.

Both Liquid and Powder. In every package a bottle of liquid Sozodont (use daily), a box of fine Sozodont powder (use twice a week). No other dentifrice so complete, so safe, so certain to give the best results.

Sozodont FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH.

A sample of liquid Sozodont by mail, provided you mention this publication and send three cents for postage. Address the Proprietors of Sozodont, HALL & RUCKEL, Wholesale Druggists, New York City.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

IN TYPHOID FEVER.

DR. JOHN W. WILLIAMSON, Boydton, Va.: BUFFALO LITHIA WATER meets some most important indications in the treatment of Typhoid Fever. Of prime importance, it affords a guarantee of a perfectly pure water. It aids digestion, and especially prevents and allays nausea, and thus preserves the integrity of the stomach. It insures healthful action of the kidneys, and prevents distention of the bladder. It is a gentle excitant of the nervous system, and a permanent nerve tonic.

Sold by Druggists. Pamphlet free. Proprietor, Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.

PRICE REDUCED FROM $25.00 to $10.00.

The Electropoise TRADE MARK

CURE WITHOUT MEDICINE.

THIS MOST WONDERFUL TREATMENT now within the reach of all.

The above price is ordered from July 1 to Oct. 1, 1896. $10.00 by Express, $10.25 by Registered Mail, with Book of Directions complete. Do not miss this opportunity.

L. A. BOSWORTH, 36 Bromfield St., Room 18, Boston, Mass., General Agent for New England States.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST
AND BOSTON RECORDER.
The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
Paragraphs 209
Compulsory Worship in Our Colleges 209
Redeeming the Hard Times 210
American Honor in Turkey 210
The Hymns of the Church 210
A German Criticism of American Education 239
Current History 211
Current History Notes 242
In Brief 213
CURRENT THOUGHT 215
CONTRIBUTIONS:
The Public Library and the Common School. Herbert Putnam 214
Charity Chance. Chaps. III., IV. Walter Raymond 215
A Woman in a Man's College. Katharine Mordantt Quint, M. A. 218
Is the American Public School Holding Its Own? Rev. Albert E. Winship 219
Pilgrimage Letters. VIII. Scrooby, Austerfield and Gainsborough. F. J. D. 221
The Great Education Fiasco in England. Albion 231
Biblical Studies in the Colleges. Rev. J. W. Buckham 232
A Morning in the Armour Institute. Rev. E. F. Williams, D. D. 233
THE HOME:
Comfort of the Fields—a selected poem 225
The Step from Home to College. Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster 225
Benito's Miracle. James Buckham 225
Afield with Young Naturalists. A Few Familiar Ferns. Emily Tolman 227
Closet and Altar 228
Tangles 228
Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 236
Corner Scrap-Book 236
THE SUNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for Aug. 23 229
Y. P. S. C. E.—Topic for Aug. 23-29 235
Notes 247
PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM 230
LITERATURE 237
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 242
Weekly Register 246
MISCELLANEOUS:
The New Congressional Library 215
Leaders of Children in Conference 220
Points Worth Making 220
St. Paul—a selection 222
The Unbelief of Birds and Man's Unbelief in God—a selection 222
Study and Devotion at Northfield 223
Masses and Classes—a selection 235
Chautauqua as an Educational Center 239
Facts and Opinions about Education 241
Deaths 246
Noteworthy Forthcoming Meetings 246
Biographical 247
Business Outlook 248
The Solution of the Negro Problem—a selection 249
Mysticism—a selection 249
Clerical Yarns 250
Mistaken Kindness to the "Young Brother"—a selection 250

THE CONGREGATIONALIST
AND BOSTON RECORDER.
The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849.

Published every Thursday,
At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.
PER COPY, 6 CENTS. PER YEAR IN ADVANCE, $3.00.
TWO YEARS IN ADVANCE, $5.00; FIVE YEARS, $10.00.
IF PAYMENT IS DELAYED, $3.50 PER YEAR.
ONE OLD AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION, $5.00.
CLUB OF FIVE, ONE AT LEAST BEING NEW, $10.00.
On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 Cents.

RECEIPTS for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.
DISCONTINUANCES.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

ADVERTISING RATES.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 112 inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.
READING NOTICES, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston.

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd.

STARVED to death in midst of plenty. Unfortunate, yet we hear of it. The Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is undoubtedly the safest and best infant food. Infant Health is a valuable pamphlet for mothers. Send your address to the New York Condensed Milk Company, New York.

TIME attests the virtues of Pond's Extract. It is unsafe to use spurious imitations.

A NOTEWORTHY EXHIBIT.—In another column of this paper is the announcement of the summer exhibition of the Paine Furniture Company. This is an annual feature with this house, and consists in a display of the many curious and interesting articles of rattan, willow, rush and grass furniture which they have manufactured or collected from all parts of the world. There are many pieces in the present exhibition never before seen in America. Prices are exceptionally low this season.

YOU and your grandfather are removed from each other by a span of many years. He traveled in a slow-going stagecoach while you take the lightning express or the electric car. When he was sick he was treated by old-fashioned methods and given old-fashioned medicines, but you demand modern ideas in medicine as well as in everything else. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the medicine of today. It is prepared by modern methods and to its preparation are brought the skill and knowledge of modern science. Hood's Sarsaparilla acts promptly upon the blood and by making pure, rich blood it cures disease and establishes good health.

Photography Simplified.

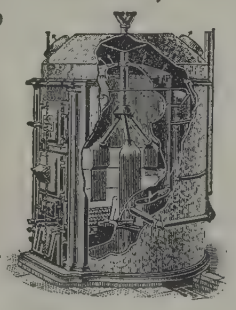
Picture taking with the Improved Bullet camera is the refinement of photographic luxury. It makes photography easy for the novice—delightful for everybody.

LOADS IN DAYLIGHT with our light-proof film cartridges, or can be used with glass plates. Splendid achromatic lens, improved rotary shutter, set of three stops. Handsome finish.

Price, Improved No. 2 Bullet, for pictures 3½ x 3½ inches, - - - - - $10.00
Light-proof Film Cartridge, 12 exposures, 3½ x 3½ - - .60

EASTMAN KODAK CO.
Booklet Free. Rochester, N. Y.

What's in a Name?



A great deal. Past reputation—Future possibility. You know them both when you hear the name

"MAGEE"

The name "MAGEE" is a synonym of quality, the standard by which others are judged. Magee Furnaces and Ranges increase the heat, save fuel, and insure good cooking and warm homes. Economical because best. Housekeepers everywhere testify to these facts. INSIST ON GETTING THE GENUINE MAGEE. Sold by leading dealers. Descriptive circulars free.

MAGEE FURNACE CO.,
32-38 Union Street, Boston.
Pacific Coast Agency, 27 New Montgomery St., San Francisco.
Western Agency, 86 Lake Street, Chicago.

THERE'S A BEST IN EVERYTHING
HAVE YOU SEEN THE NEW STEARNS-BICYCLE
THE YELLOW FELLOW
E. C. STEARNS & CO. MAKERS SYRACUSE, N.Y.
TORONTO, ONT. BUFFALO, N.Y. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

For conscience sake, tuck those shoes under your skirt, or use Brown's French Dressing
For Ladies and Children's Shoes

"Say aye 'No' and ye'll ne'er be married." Don't refuse all our advice to use. . . . . SAPOLIO

Lasell Seminary for Young Women,

AUBURNDALE, MASS.

Founded forty-five years ago, by Prof. Edward Lasell of Williams College, in the conviction—then far from general—that facilities for the best scholarly work and intellectual freedom were the right of girls as surely as of boys. The noble gentleman and scholar chose wisely his location; secured ample grounds on an elevation near the beautiful and quiet Charles River, and within easy reach of a city rich in resources for elegant culture; builded also wisely for the time and his means, but lived to see his work only just begun.

Today the wisdom of his choice is well approved. The ample grounds, still comparatively quiet and rural, furnish space for outdoor recreation—for tennis courts and basket ball and all pleasant games. The quiet river is there for the boating clubs of the more vigorous womanhood. The near city, with its concerts, lectures and rich museums, is an inspiration toward all that is best, and also a standard-bearer for accurate and broad scholarship, furnishing readily accomplished teachers in every department of work.

The early building is scarcely recognizable in the additions for the larger need. The gymnasium is modern, ample, well equipped under the supervision of Dr. Sargent of Cambridge and directed by ladies trained in his school. The swimming tank and bowling alley, the laboratory for practical work in scientific cooking, the sewing room and isolated music rooms, are the results of the broadening ideas of womanly education. So also are the well-furnished sleeping rooms, the society rooms, the large and beautiful studio. Few private houses have so luxurious equipment in pictures and rare adornings, gathered by the principal in foreign tours; few homes are so thoroughly comfortable, with abundant light of sun and electricity, with steam heat and open fires, and an abundantly furnished table, where boarding school complaints are not heard. A resident nurse and an infirmary for the seclusion of the temporarily ill complete the comfortable and safe abode prepared that girls may pursue their studies most successfully.

Since colleges for men, and a few universities, were opened to women Lasell has had some representatives in them, giving assurance of the accurate and thorough training in her curriculum; but, for the majority of girls, it is believed that the six or eight years required for college preparation and work may be more wisely used in a course arranged with reference to home and social service. A thoughtful and persistent effort has been made to present ideals of the distinctive possibilities of womanly culture. Ladies of wide experience have spoken for all that is noble and pure and sensible in homes, for patient devotion and fidelity, for the large and cheering results in home and society when home-makers see their high calling and inspire the outworkers by their sympathetic understanding and refresh them for the stress of life by the home steadily kept to the lofty ideal.

To look toward homes, to consider how to make them better, to be an inspiration toward all that is best, whether at the head or an inmate, has been a large part of the influence of Lasell. Many topics come legitimately into this plan for girls. Considering the large, independent properties now often held by women, careful instruction has for many years been given in so much of law as concerns women. Practical suggestions are made, various legal papers explained, witnessing, signatures, bank accounts, etc., carefully reviewed and tests made of their clear comprehension.

An eminent lawyer of Boston, appreciating the idea, made a success of this course of lectures by giving them for several years. A lady, well known for her gifts as presiding officer, has given practical instruction in the organization, etc., of ladies' societies. The best obtainable lectures on home sanitation and village improvement, on charities, dress, manners, etc., have been given every year.

From very many homes words of warmest approval have come for these useful daughters and wives, and the surer testimonial of applicants beyond the receiving capacity of the school.

A PATRON.

MAIL ORDERS FOR DRY GOODS

in great numbers come to us from every quarter. Our system, by careful study, has been brought to almost absolute perfection. Orders are filled promptly and accurately as soon as they arrive. Customers are assured of entire satisfaction or the prompt return of their money. We call attention to some especially attractive offerings:

BLACK DRESS GOODS.

FIGURED MOHAIRS AND SICILIANS AT REDUCED PRICES.

FANCY BLACK MOHAIR—38 inches wide, in twelve designs. Reduced from 37½ cents per yard to . . 25c

ENGLISH BLACK MOHAIR—38 inches wide. Considered excellent at 37½ cents per yard; our price . 25c

FANCY BLACK MOHAIR—39 inches wide, in eight designs. Reduced from 65 cents per yard to . . . 50c

FANCY BLACK SICILIAN—44 inches wide, in seven designs. Reduced from $1.00 per yard to 68c

FANCY BLACK TAMISE MOHAIR — 42 inches wide. Reduced from $1.00 per yard to 75c

ENGLISH BLACK SICILIAN—1½ yards wide. Considered excellent at $1.00 per yard; our price . . . 75c

TAILOR-MADE COSTUMES

AT CLOSING PRICES.

WOMEN'S TAILOR-MADE COSTUMES—of all wool Serge, two styles of coats, full, wide skirt, lined with light cambric. Early price, $5.00; now $3.00

WOMEN'S TAILOR-MADE COSTUMES—of Fancy Mixtures, Tuxedo coat, wide, perfect-hanging skirt, choice colorings. Early price, $9.00; now $5.00

WOMEN'S COMBINATION TAILOR-MADE COSTUMES—cutaway coat of fine Worsted Serge, lined with silk, deep sailor collar, wide skirt of fancy plaid, lined with rustle cambric. Early price, $15.00; now $7.50

WOMEN'S CAPES AT NOMINAL PRICES.

CAPES—of fine, light-weight Kersey, lined with silk, trimmed with braid. Reduced from $10.00 to . . $2.00

SHORT CAPES—of Silk, with deep ruffle of lace. Reduced from $10.00 to $3.50

CAPES—of fine Kersey and Cheviot, lined throughout with Taffeta silk. Reduced from $15.00 to . . . $5.00

STRAWBRIDGE & CLOTHIER = PHILADELPHIA.

Volume LXXXI

Number 34

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Boston Thursday 20 August 1896

ELY CATHEDRAL.

Visited by The Congregationalist's Pilgrims, June 27. (See page 267.)

ONE of the best views of the cathedral is from the railroad station; looking northwestward, we see it in the near middle distance, and realize its enormous length, the grace of its octagon and the stern majesty of the tall tower which rises like a great cliff in a land where man might well build cliffs since nature had built none. . . . But there is, in truth, no spot whence the great monarch of the fenlands may not be admirably seen until we get so far off that it drops behind the horizon's rim. Wherever, however, it may reveal itself, it is always immense, imposing, majestic; and only upon the plains of Egypt or Mesopotamia has nature assisted the effect of man's work by such entire suppression of herself.

The most clearly and typically expressive of English cathedrals do not hold a strong military position or rise close above the steep steps of a city's roofs, and are not pressed upon by the homes of laymen and the crowds of street and market place. They are set about with great masses of foliage and isled in wide, peaceful lawns, the very norm and model of England's verdure, although the fragmentary walls and crumbling gateways which keep distant guard around them testify that they were not built in such piping times of peace as ours.—Mrs. Van Rensselaer.

Ribbons

To offe the newest and most desirable Ribbons at the lowest prices is our aim. Let these specials tell you how we succeed in our purpose:

Taffeta Ribbons—

3¼ inch wide, in pink, blue, green, white, cream, nile, new purple lilac, per yard . . . . 16c.

No. 16 Taffeta, heavy quality; also Nos. 16 and 22 All-Silk Satin and Gros Grain Ribbons, in white, cream, blue, pink, etc., per yard . . . . . 12½c.

Not more than 5 yards to any customer

These are the Lowest Prices in Boston.

Black Satin and Velvet Ribbons At About Half the Usual Prices

Nos.	2	3	5	7	9	12	16	22
Price Yd.	6c.	8c.	10c.	12½c.	16c.	22c.	25c.	29c.

Mail Orders Promptly Filled.

Wm. S. Butler & Co.,

TREMONT STREET, BOSTON.

Hotels and Travel.

CHICAGO GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY
THE MAPLE LEAF ROUTE
THE VERY LATEST PULLMAN PRODUCTIONS IN COMPARTMENT, DRAWING ROOM VESTIBULED SLEEPING CARS
EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR
F. H. LORD, Gen'l Pass'r & Ticket Agent
Quincy Building, CHICAGO.

Egypt and Palestine.

H. CAZE & SONS, Ltd.,

In whose hands were intrusted The Congregationalist's Oriental Tour of 1895 and the Pilgrimage to England and Holland of this year, ANNOUNCE a delightful and comprehensive tour under personal escort, sailing from New York Oct. 3d, per North German L. S. S. Ems, visiting Gibraltar, Algiers, Italy, Egypt, Palestine, Constantinople and Greece.

STRICTLY FIRST CLASS.

113 DAYS. ALL EXPENSES, $860

Annual 'Round the World Party leaves in September, via San Francisco.

For program and particulars apply to 113 Broadway, New York. H. Caze & Sons, Ltd., 201 Washington St., Boston.

THE ST. DENIS,

Broadway and Eleventh Street,

Opposite Grace Church, NEW YORK.

EUROPEAN PLAN.

"There is an atmosphere of home comfort and hospitable treatment at the St. Denis which is rarely met with in a public house, and which insensibly draws you there as often as you turn your ace toward New York."

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER.

The Recorder founded 181- . The Congregationalist, 1849

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
- Paragraphs 257
- The Power of the Deepening Life 257
- Remedies and Nostrums 258
- Our Literary Sentinels 258
- Christian Giving 258
- Current History 259
- In Brief 260

CURRENT THOUGHT 268

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE:
- New York 261
- The Interior 262

CONTRIBUTIONS:
- Charity Chance. Chap. V. Walter Raymond 263
- Two Kinds of Ownership. Rev. Henry van Dyke, D. D. 266
- Pilgrimage Letters. IX. Guests of the Dean of Ely. F. J. D. 267

THE HOME:
- Dirge for a Sailor—a poem. Clinton Scollard 269
- Paragraphs 269
- Snap-Shots at My Fellow-Travelers. Elizabeth Cumings 269
- How Esther Sees Stars. Lucy Noble Morris 270
- Within—a selected poem 270
- Hurrah for Old New England—a selected poem 271
- An American Queen and an English Princess. F. J. D. 271
- Closet and Altar 271
- Mothers in Council 272
- Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 273
- Corner Scrap-Book 273

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for Aug. 30 274

Y. P. S. C. E.—Topic for Aug 30–Sept. 5 281

Notes 280

LITERATURE 275

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES:
- How One Church Reaches Young Men 277

MISCELLANEOUS:
- They Went to Church After All 266
- George Adam Smith at Chautauqua. M. B. Fuller 268
- Noteworthy Forthcoming Meetings 280
- An Open Letter 280
- Business Outlook 282
- A Big Bill—a selection 282
- Education 283
- Australian Christians Believe in Brotherhood—a selection 283
- Marriages and Deaths 283

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849

Published every Thursday,

At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.

PER COPY, 6 CENTS. PER YEAR IN ADVANCE, $3.00.

TWO YEARS IN ADVANCE, $5.00; FIVE YEARS, $10.00

IF PAYMENT IS DELAYED, $3.50 PER YEAR.

ONE OLD AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION, $5.00.

CLUB OF FIVE, ONE AT LEAST BEING NEW, $10.00.

On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 Cents.

RECEIPTS for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.

DISCONTINUANCES.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

ADVERTISING RATES.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 11½ inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.

READING NOTICES, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston.

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd.

Church Equipment.

Two-thirds of the Church Cushions in this country are made by us. If your church has our Patent Elastic Felt Cushions, the most they will ever need is new covers. After forty years' use in All Souls' Church, New York, the Pastor writes: "In excellent condition, and likely to outlast those who sit on them."

Our book, "Church Cushions," and a two-foot sample cushion sent for the asking.

OSTERMOOR & CO.,
116 Elizabeth St., New York.

CHURCH REMODELING.

THOMAS W. SILLOWAY, Church Architect,

10 Park Square, Boston.

Mr. Silloway's long practice in building or remodeling over 400 church edifices enables him to save and utilize all the valuable parts, and for a comparatively small outlay produce a building preferable to a new one of much greater cost. He proposes to continue the work of remodeling as a specialty, and tenders his services to committees who would practice economy, and where the means are limited.

THE CINCINNATI BELL FOUNDRY CO. CINCINNATI, OHIO. SOLE MAKERS OF THE "BLYMYER" BELLS FOR CHURCH, SCHOOL, FIRE ALARM &c. Catalogue with 2500 testimonials, Prices and terms FREE.

Blake Bell Foundry

Established in 1820.

Successors to WM. BLAKE & CO.

Manufacture bells of every description, single or chimes, of Copper and Tin. Address

BLAKE BELL CO., Boston, Mass.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS in the World.

PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).

Send for Price and Catalogue.

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church & School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

Subscribers' Wants.

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

Teacher. Wanted, by a high school graduate, a position to teach Algebra, Geometry, or Pianoforte, with the opportunity of study in higher Mathematics. Correspondence solicited. Miss A. S. KEZER, Kittery Point, Me. Gerrish Estate.

Religious Notices.

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, etc, published under this heading at ten cents a line.

LAY COLLEGE FOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS, Station R, Boston, fits for all kinds of Christian work.

THE REV. DR. FRANCIS E. MARSTEN, of Columbus, O., may be addressed by correspondents until Oct. 1 at Attleboro Falls, Mass.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the Society at New York.

JAMES W. ELWELL, President.
REV. W. C. STITT, Secretary.
W. C. STURGES, Treasurer

Educational.

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY.
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established, 1855.
3 EAST 14TH STREET, N. Y.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.
4 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; and Los Angeles, Cal. 100-page Agency Manual free. EVERETT O. FISK & CO.

THEOLOGICAL.

MAINE, BANGOR.

BANGOR THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

Choice between two courses of study, Classical and English Biblical, in Junior year; one course in Middle and Senior years. Optionals in Hebrew and Cognates, and in Greek. Entrance examination on Wednesday, Sept. 2, 9 A.M. Apply to Prof. C. A. Beckwith, or Prof. G. W. Gilmore, Bangor, Me.

Educational.

THEOLOGICAL.

MASSACHUSETTS, ANDOVER.

ANDOVER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
Term begins Sept. 16. Opening lectures at 4 P. M. For catalogue or further information apply to GEORGE HARRIS, Pres. of the Faculty.

OHIO, OBERLIN.

OBERLIN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
62d year opens Sept. 23d. With special advantages in the College and the Conservatory of Music. E. I. BOSWORTH, Sec.

CONNECTICUT, NEW HAVEN.

YALE DIVINITY SCHOOL.
Term opens Sept. 24. The School offers many University advantages. For catalogues or information, address Prof. GEO. B. STEVENS, New Haven, Ct.

CONNECTICUT, HARTFORD.

HARTFORD 63d Year Opens Oct. 7, 1896.
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY,
Unexcelled Advantages or College Graduates. HARTFORD, CT.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.

Union Theological Seminary
700 Park Avenue, New York.

The next Term will begin Wednesday, Sept. 23, 1896. Students entering will meet the Faculty in the President's room, at 9.30 A. M.
Rooms will be drawn at 2 P. M.
The opening address, by PRESIDENT HASTINGS, will be delivered in the Adams Chapel, Thursday, Sept. 24, at 4 P. M. E. M. KINGSLEY, Sec'y.

MAINE.

MAINE, WATERFORD.

DOUGLASS SEMINARY FOR GIRLS.
Pleasant location. Home care. Thorough and extensive courses. Expenses low. 18th year begins Sept. 9. Miss DOUGLASS, Prin.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

NEW LONDON, N. H.

COLBY ACADEMY.
$200 to $250 a Year. Coeducational. 44th Year. Send for Catalogue. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, President.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, MERIDEN.

KIMBALL UNION ACADEMY,
Meriden, N. H. Fall term begins on Wednesday, Sept. 9, 1896. For catalogues, or any information relating to the school, apply in person or by letter to W. H. CUMMINGS, A. M., Principal.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, EXETER.

THE PHILLIPS EXETER ACADEMY.
The 114th year begins September 16, 1896. Eighty Scholarships awarded to students of high standing. For catalogue and illustrated supplement, address HARLAN P. AMEN, Principal, Exeter, N. H.

VERMONT.

VERMONT, ST. JOHNSBURY.

ST. JOHNSBURY ACADEMY.
The 53d year begins Sept. 1. DAVID Y. COMSTOCK, A. M., Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS.

MASSACHUSETTS, DUXBURY.

POWDER POINT SCHOOL (FOR BOYS).
F. B. KNAPP, S. B., Duxbury, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, SOUTH BYFIELD.

DUMMER ACADEMY (Home School).
Founded 1763. Thorough training for College and Technical Schools. PERLEY L. HORNE, A. M.

MASSACHUSETTS, AMHERST.

OAK GROVE HOME SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
Amherst. Reopens September 23d, 1896. Certificate admits to Smith and Wellesley. Miss VRYLING WILDER BUFFUM, A. B., Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.

Boston Normal School of Gymnastics.
Established in 1889, by the late Mrs. Mary Hemenway. Eighth year will begin September 29th. Address AMY MORRIS HOMANS, Director, 9 Appleton St., Boston.

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.

MISS KIMBALL'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
Worcester, Mass. Thorough preparation for College. Intermediate, Academic and Special Courses. Send for Illustrated Circular.

MASSACHUSETTS, BRIDGEWATER.

STATE NORMAL SCHOOL,
Bridgewater, Mass. Regular and special courses for the preparation of teachers. Entrance examination, Sept. 8-9. For circulars address ALBERT G. BOYDEN, PRINCIPAL.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL,
New Hall, Ashburton Place,
Opens Oct. 7. Boston, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, MARION.

Tabor Academy,
MARION, MASS.

Five teachers; classical and general courses; prepares for all colleges. Tabor Hall is heated by steam, furnished with bath room, etc. Accommodates young ladies. Young men room in private houses, but may board at Tabor Hall. Minimum expense, $175 per annum. Send for catalogue.
Prin., DANA M. DUSTAN, A. M.

Educational.

MASSACHUSETTS.

MASSACHUSETTS, DANVERS.

WILLARD HALL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
Tenth Year begins Sept. 22.
College Preparatory and Elective Courses.
Principal, SARAH M. MERRILL.

MASSACHUSETTS, ANDOVER.

ABBOT ACADEMY
For Young Ladies. Begins its 68th year September 17th, offering enlarged opportunities. Three Seminary courses of studies and a College-fitting Course. Address Miss LAURA S. WATSON, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, BRADFORD.

CARLETON SCHOOL for Young Men and Boys. College preparatory and general course of study. Individual teaching. Gymnasium bowling alley, etc. Circulars. I. N. CARLETON, Ph. D.

MASSACHUSETTS, ASHBURNHAM.

CUSHING ACADEMY,
Ashburnham, Mass. Co-educational. Six courses of study. New buildings. Large Gymnasium. Fine Laboratories. $200 a year. Send for catalogue to H. S. COWELL, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, DANVERS.

MAPLEBANK HOME SCHOOL
For Boys. Best of care and instruction guaranteed. Small boys a specialty. Send for catalogue containing full information. Address HENRY N. DE NORMANDIE, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, FRAMINGHAM.

STATE NORMAL SCHOOL,
Framingham, Mass. Entrance Examination TUESDAY, September 8, 1896. For Circulars address Miss ELLEN HYDE, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, BRADFORD.

BRADFORD ACADEMY.
Founded 1803. For the higher education of young women. Classical and scientific course of study, also Preparatory and optional. Year begins Sept. 16, 1896. Apply to IDA C. ALLEN, Principal, Bradford, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.

HIGHLAND MILITARY ACADEMY,
Worcester ("The Academic City"), Mass. 41st year. Best preparation for College, Professional or Business life. Healthful location. Careful selection and supervision of students. Small Classes. JOSEPH ALDEN SHAW, A. M., Head Master.

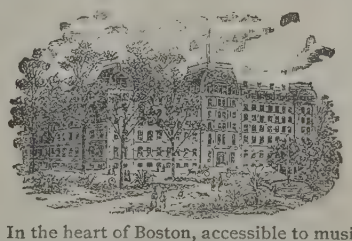
MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.

SCHOOL OF DOMESTIC SCIENCE
and Christian Workers. Courses for Teachers, Matrons, Home-Makers, City Missionaries, Pastor's Assistants, Y. W. C. A. Secretaries, etc. Ninth year. Address for circulars Miss L. L. Sherman, Principal (formerly principal D. L. Moody's Training School), 52 Berkeley St., Boston, Mass. (B. Y. W. C. A.)

GORDON MISSIONARY TRAINING SCHOOL
Clarendon and Montgomery Sts., Boston.
REV. ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D. D., President.
REV. F. L. CHAPELL, Resident Instructor.
Associate Instructors.
REV. JAMES M. GRAY, D. D.
REV. JOHN A. MCELWAIN.
JULIA MORTON PLUMMER, M. D.
PROF. R. L. PERKINS.
MRS. ABBY CLARK-BERTHOLF.
Special Lecturers { REV. ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D. D. REV. ROBERT CAMERON.

Designed as a condensed and efficient course of preparation for men and women having a Divine Call to Christian Work.
Inter-denominational, Evangelical, Spiritual, Practical.
Eighth Year opens Oct. 7, 1896. Tuition Free. Expenses met by Free-Will Offerings.
For catalogues address Rev. F. L. Chapell, Flemington, N. J., until October 1. After that date at the school.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.



In the heart of Boston, accessible to musical events of every nature, with comprehensive courses in music, elocution and modern languages, under the best masters that money can bring together, with a large, commodious and suitable building—is it any wonder that the

New England Conservatory OF MUSIC

has become the most famous of its kind in America? Send for prospectus to Frank W. Hale, General Manager, Boston, Mass.

Educational.

MASSACHUSETTS.

MASSACHUSETTS, NORTON.

WHEATON SEMINARY
For Young Ladies. Regular and elective courses, literary, scientific, classical. Pupils also fitted for advanced courses in leading colleges. Excellent advantages in art and music. Fine library, laboratory, observatory, gymnasium, bowling alley; outdoor sports, careful physical training. Perfect sanitary arrangements. Best home influences. Beautifully situated, 28 miles from Boston.
62d year. Fall term, Sept. 10, 1896. For illustrated prospectus, address Miss A. E. STANTON, Principal, Norton, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, CAMBRIDGE.

Parents who seek

the cultivation as well as the education of their daughters, will do well to write for the Manual of

The Cambridge School

of which Mr. Arthur Gilman is the Director. The address is simply Cambridge, Mass. The "atmosphere" of the place counts for more even, than the curriculum of the school. The school is "founded upon experience and suited to the capacities of the great variety of pupils." No "fads" are indulged in. The training is intended to "raise the ideal of life."

THE

BOSTON.

RE-OPENS SEPT. 1st, 1896.

THE COURSE OF STUDY
is thorough, complete and practical. Pupils are fitted for the duties and work of every-day life.

THE FACULTY
embraces a list of more than twenty teachers and assistants, elected with special reference to proficiency in each department.

THE STUDENTS
are young people of both sexes, full of diligence and zeal.

THE DISCIPLINE
is of the highest order and includes valuable business lessons.

THE PATRONAGE
is the LARGEST of any similar institution in the world.

THE REPUTATION
of this school for originality and leadership and as being the Standard Institution of its kind is generally acknowledged.

SPECIAL COURSE.
Shorthand, Type Writing, Composition and Correspondence may be taken as a special course.

SITUATIONS
in business houses furnished pupils among the varied inducements to attend this school.

THE SCHOOL BUILDING,
608 Washington Street, Boston, is centrally located and purposely constructed. Office open daily, from 9 till 2 o'clock. Prospectus Post Free.

H. E. HIBBARD, Principal.

Educational.

MASSACHUSETTS.

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.

Worcester Academy

Fits boys for College and Scientific Schools. Equipment in grounds, buildings and Faculty of twelve men unexcelled. Send for new, finely illustrated catalogue. Principal, D. W. ABERCROMBIE, A. M., Worcester, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.

Chauncy-Hall and Berkeley SCHOOLS

Boylston, cor. Berkeley Sts., Boston.

The consolidation of Chauncy-Hall, the oldest Boston Private School, with the Berkeley School is the union of two strong forces, forming an institution of the highest order, to be known hereafter by the older name.

Thorough preparation for Colleges and Professional Schools. Full Grammar and High School courses. In all classes Special Students are received.

Opens Sept. 21. Send for '96 Catalogues.

TAYLOR, DeMERITTE & HAGAR.

RHODE ISLAND.

RHODE ISLAND, EAST GREENWICH.

EAST GREENWICH ACADEMY.

Founded 1802. Both sexes. On Narragansett Bay. Steam heat and electric light. Endowed. Twelve courses. $200 a year. September 8. Write for illustrated catalogue.

F. D. BLAKESLEE, D. D., Principal.

CONNECTICUT.

CONNECTICUT, NORWALK.

MISS BAIRD'S INSTITUTE FOR GIRLS,

Norwalk, Conn. 25th year. Primary, Academic, and College Preparatory courses. Music, Art, and the Languages. Careful attention to morals and manners. New buildings, steam heat, gymnasium.

CONNECTICUT, LAKEVILLE.

THE HOTCHKISS SCHOOL,

Lakeville, Conn. Prepares for the best Colleges and Scientific Schools. The next year will begin September 16, 1896.

EDWARD G. COY, Head Master.

CONNECTICUT, STAMFORD.

"What we do, we do well."

Betts Academy,

Stamford, Conn.

On September 21st the old bell will ring in our 55th year.

Home life and the individual are the keynotes at this school. Each boy is taught how to study—how to think and reason for himself, and is trained in observation and research.

Preparation for any Technical School or University, and a liberal, practical training to those not intending to enter college.

New building, modern conveniences. Large, beautiful grounds adapted for athletics and out-door sports of all seasons. Illustrated catalogue on application. Personal inspection preferred. (One hour from New York.) WM. J. BETTS, M.A. (Yale), Principal.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, PEEKSKILL.

THE PEEKSKILL MILITARY ACADEMY

Peekskill, N. Y. 63d year. Send for illustrated catalogue. COL. LOUIS H. ORLEMAN, Prin.

NEW YORK, POUGHKEEPSIE.

LYNDON HALL SCHOOL.

For Young Ladies. 48th year. College preparation. SAMUEL WELLS BUCK, A.M., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.

Miss S. D. Doremus

BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
RE-OPENS OCTOBER 1ST.
735 Madison Avenue, New York.

NEW YORK, CORNWALL-ON-HUDSON.

NEW YORK MILITARY ACADEMY,

Cornwall-on-Hudson, N. Y. For boarding cadets only. Completely equipped and beautifully located on Hudson River, near West Point. For catalogue, address S. C. JONES, C. E., Supt.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.

MRS. LESLIE MORGAN'S

Boarding and Day School for Girls, 15 West 86th Street, New York City. Thorough English from Kindergarten through College Preparatory. Miss Catherine Aiken's Method of Concentrated Attention in Mind Training a special feature; also conversational French and German. Home and Chaperonage for special students.

PENNSYLVANIA.

PENNSYLVANIA, PHILADELPHIA.

THE WALTON-WELLESLEY SCHOOL,

2101 and 2103 Spruce St., Philadelphia. For Girls Possesses finest private property in city. Boarding and day. 15th year. Academic, College Preparatory and Musical Depts. For illus. cat. and refs., address Dr. and Mrs. JAMES R. DANFORTH.

NOW READY

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

FOR SEPTEMBER

CONTAINS THE SECOND PART OF

Mark Twain's New Story

TOM SAWYER, DETECTIVE

The most vigorous delineation of American life in the last generation since the appearance of "Huckleberry Finn." Illustrations by A. B. FROST.

FIRST IN PEACE

BY PROFESSOR WOODROW WILSON

portraying the character of Washington during the "critical period" between the close of the Revolution and his election as first President of the United States. Illustrations by HOWARD PYLE.

AMONG THE TREES

By ANNA C. BRACKETT

THE ART OF DRIVING

By HENRY CHILDS MERWIN

A SUMMER AMONG CLIFF DWELLINGS

By DR. T. MICHELL PRUDDEN with characteristic pictorial illustrations.

MUSICAL CELEBRITIES OF VIENNA

By WILLIAM VON SACHS with 12 portraits of eminent living composers.

THE DEATH OF ESPARTERO

A vivid sketch of a Spanish bull-fight, by ROYAL CORTISSOZ.

FOUR GOOD SHORT STORIES

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers, New York

The HOME Department.

A History of the Movement.

By M. C. HAZARD, Ph. D. Price, 50 cts.

Its history, purpose and plan, organization, methods, requisites and difficulties. A full treatment of this most important agency of the Sunday School.

A Story.

THE BOYNTON NEIGHBORHOOD.

By FAY HUNTINGTON. Price, $1 00.

A charming book, describing in a most interesting manner the good work accomplished in a difficult locality through the instrumentality of this agency. The story will create enthusiasm and give information of a very practical kind.

Requisites.

A COMPLETE OUTFIT is published by us. Blanks, letters, records. Full list on application.

FREE We send three months' outfit free to any Congregational Sunday School which has no Home Department but which will agree to organize one at once.

Congregational S. S. & Publishing Society,

BOSTON AND CHICAGO.

Educational.

KANSAS.

KANSAS, WICHITA.

Fairmount College,

WICHITA, KANSAS.

The second year of this College will open in all departments, Music, Fine Arts, Academy, College proper, September 9, 1896.

Three parallel courses of study, Classical, Scientific and Literary. New England standards in requirements, and modern methods by New England instructors.

For information and catalogues, address

N. J. MORRISON, President.

Free Coinage and Prosperity.

The original champion of the Free and Unlimited Coinage of Silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation on earth.

The Rocky Mountain News,

T. M. PATTERSON, Editor, DENVER, COL.

Daily Circulation, 27,000.
Sunday Circulation, 35,000.
Weekly Circulation, 5,500.

The largest, handsomest and best edited daily paper in the West. Employs the best artists—its cartoons arouse the admiration of all its readers. Publishes all the important news from the gold and silver camps of the world.

IT'S AN EDUCATOR.

Clear and convincing on the silver question. By mail, 65 cents per month; three months, $1.90; one year, $7.50.

A Profitable Medium for Advertisers.

COSPEL HYMNS, 1 to 6.

Excl. Mus. Ed., $75 per 100; Words Ed., $10 upwards per 100. Christian Endeavor Hymns. $30 per 100.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.,
76 East 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Vacation Reading.

Any book, religious or secular, can be supplied by us at short notice and at a liberal discount.

Shopworn Books.

We have picked out from our shelves a number of standard books, more or less shopworn, and put them with a lot of new books recently injured in our store by water. These volumes we are marking down from one-third to two thirds, according to their condition. Give us an idea of the kind of books that interest you and we will let you know what we have; or call and examine the books for yourself.

Congregational S. S. & Publishing Society,
1 Somerset Street, Boston.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Volume LXXXI Boston Thursday 20 August 1896 Number 34

HANDBOOK NO. 10

CONTAINING

Prof. Walker's 80 Years of Congregationalism,
Bishop Hurst's 80 Years of Christian Progress,
Prof. Hart's 80 Years of Political Progress,

NOW READY.

Price 4 cents; 100 copies, $1.25.

✠ TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS. ✠

6 Months for $1.00
3 Months for 25 cts. 4 Weeks Free.

THE closing meetings of the Northfield Bible Conference on Sunday were marked by a deep enthusiasm and gave every evidence of the genuine success and lasting influence of the meetings. Among all the other attractions there is always a renewed call for Mr. Moody, and on Sunday he gave himself without stint, speaking five times, from seven in the morning until eight at night. The utilization of religious feeling in practical service was the burden of Dr. Meyer's address, and he pressed home the duty of consecrating money, time and talents with incisive power. The Bible School, under care of Mr. Schofield, and the camp continue, and the training school follows as usual in the Northfield Hotel in October. A great crowd came in from all around for these final gatherings, but the richest blessing was for those who had been able to follow the meetings from the beginning. Full reports of the conference are to be printed in the fourth number of the Northfield Echoes, which is published at Northfield four times a year under the editorial care of D. L. Pierson and W. R. Moody.

Two business results have already followed from the possibility of a change of our monetary standard, both of them quite independent of the stock market or the "money syndicates." One is the hoarding of American money in England. A Boston merchant to whom money was due in London went to an international banker to arrange to open an account at the London branch until the election was over, instead of having his money transmitted to him here, and learned that he was only one of a number who were doing the same thing. In other words, the mere dread of a change in the standard is making London more decisively than ever the financial center of the world, and the reality would only confirm its hold. The other effect is the demonetization of American silver in Canada, where it has been in free circulation for some years and where some millions of it have been in use. This means wide inconvenience and loss to American travelers and merchants across the border and the necessity of using international money—that is, gold—in the one country where convenience and our national credit had made our subsidiary currency good.

The raising of over one hundred thousand dollars for foreign missions during a single meeting at a seashore convention is not an event to be passed over without comment. It was mission day at the Christian Alliance Convention at Old Orchard, and the crowd which listened and gave consisted of 10,000 people, making an average of $10 apiece in gifts. Of the whole amount one quarter was given by a New York broker, and a large part is the estimated value of jewelry and other valuables given or dedicated to the cause. We do not wish to discourage gifts or missions, and we raise no question now as to the methods used in disposing of the money, but we wonder how many of the givers repented of the impulse of giving afterwards? That man who is reported to have said that he gave his last dollar and that his wife and children must depend upon the Lord until he earned more ought to have repented, and that woman who is said to have given the money which was to pay for the treatment of a sick sister. Nor do we think that this method of impulsive giving under strain of an eloquent appeal is the safest or most permanent method of raising money for the work. The apostle's plan for the churches [1 Cor. 16: 2] involved deliberation, system and forethought, and expressly excluded "gatherings when I come," and this seems to us the permanently trustworthy method. But of the need of more enthusiasm and liberality in the cause of evangelization we have no doubt.

The number and frequency of quotations from eminent statesmen and financiers, living and dead, is noticeable in the speeches and newspaper and magazine articles to which this campaign is giving rise. It is not pleasant, however, to see so many garbled quotations, the effect of which is both to misrepresent the persons quoted from and to mislead the hearers and readers. This method of adducing desirable support to one's cause is, we regret to admit, not infrequently employed in theological debate, though just now it is in the political arena chiefly that we are seeing so many lamentable instances of the practice. He who strives to be perfectly fair will, when he quotes, bear in mind the context, and will also—which is even more important—have regard to the fundamental position and the spirit of the person whose authority he is endeavoring to bring to his own support.

Ministerial indiscretions have already been far too common in this campaign. It ought to be understood that the pulpit is no place for personalities, and least of all for the picturesque and abusive talk which is so familiar on the stump. Nor should the preacher in discussing the ethical aspects of the questions involved go beyond his positive knowledge. Rash assertions are boomerangs. A more pitiable and laughable spectacle than that of a preacher entangled among the meshes of his own spinning, using terms without knowing how to define them and phrases in contrary meanings, it would be difficult to find. Of all men the preacher can least afford to be laughed at in his pulpit work—the solemnity of the associations makes the laughter so much more irresistible. It is only with caution, therefore, and with a firm tread on the solid ground of well-mastered information and sound logic and under the sense of a great responsibility, that even the ethical side of politics should be referred to in the house of God. And the preacher never should forget that he must speak with caution in a place where no one is allowed to challenge or to answer him.

"Sometime in the past he had a genuine religious experience, and he is trying to live upon it today." So said one man of another in our hearing the other day. Pathetic, indeed, is it to think of nourishing a soul on feelings and convictions that have not undergone a freshening for a score of years or more. The man thus characterized passes for a Christian man and there can be no doubt regarding the reality of his conversion. His title to heaven, too, may be sure, but meanwhile he gives the impression that he is holding on to his Christianity partly because it is a respectable thing to do and partly because it did mean something to him in the long ago. It is, we fear, of little practical value to him today, so far as influencing his daily conduct. It would be a blessed thing if something should happen to him to renew his former sense of sin and need and bring him once again into intimate and constant contact with his Saviour.

THE POWER OF THE DEEPENING LIFE.

It is a striking fact, too much neglected or overlooked, that the resemblances of the great and universally beloved teachers and pastors of the church exist upon the spiritual rather than the intellectual side. They were alike in humility and devotion, however unlike in mental gift, or point of intellectual view, or breadth of knowledge. The power of God manifest in Christlike character was evident in every one of them, although working in widely different circumstances and surroundings.

It is on this side also that we must hope for the uprising of men today who shall continue the apostolic succession of greatly useful and devoted souls. The interests of the church demand the highest culture for pastors and teachers, but it is an error to insist upon intellectual culture alone as if that were sufficient in itself for the true pastor's education. It is essential, but it is useless or mischievous if it stands alone. Pure intellect untouched by the divine fire of love to God and love for souls is, indeed, so much worse than useless that it creates a barrier between the teacher and the taught, and bears false witness to the essential nature of Christ's message to sinning men.

If we need breadth in the ministry we also need hight and depth, the deepening down of humility, the lifting up into the atmosphere of communion with God, and need them far more urgently. He who knows one thing well, and that one thing the gospel of good news, will be of far more use than he who knows a thousand and leaves this one indispensable thing in the background of his teaching. Character is the dominant note in the true preaching of the faith. It is the power behind the word, behind the life, bringing all knowledge into true relations and due subordination. It comes of God's training, it grows in God's presence, it is manifest after communion with God as Moses's experience on the mount was manifest in the shining of his face as he returned to the people. Nothing will hold a congregation permanently but this life of prayer and communion, evident in its fruits. This is the end of living for every man, and the man who preaches it must also lead his hearers in the way. In this particular Geoffrey Chaucer drew the good pastor's portrait half a millennium ago:

> But Christes lore, and his apostles twelve,
> He taught, but first he folwed it himselve.

The secret of permanent ministerial success, we believe, lies here, and only here. To this end all the studies and preparations of the student must be directed. Every effort must be inspired by this enthusiasm, or it will fail to carry conviction to the hearers. Our congregations do not care much for intellectual subtlety. They do not even care much for intellectual breadth. But the transparent simplicity of a holy life, joined with heartfelt earnestness in reaching out with help for others, commands support from the first and grows in the appreciation of the people as it grows in intellectual power. It is this element first, last and always which the people really value in their pastor, and he who has it never fails to win their confidence and love.

This Christlike character cannot grow in over hurried days, it is incompatible with merely selfish ambition. It only grows as the slow ripening fruit of an abiding trust in God. Prayer and meditation are essential to its very life. Whatever time our pastors take for retirement from the world with this in view is time well spent. If meetings for conference, like the Northfield meetings, help to nourish it, they are doing a great work. Learning we can spare if necessary, polish of manner or of style, however desirable in themselves, are not indispensable; but this quality of spirituality we must have in our pastors and teachers if they are to lead our hearts to God and feed our souls with his true bread of life.

REMEDIES AND NOSTRUMS.

In opposing the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the present ratio of value The Congregationalist does not mean to say that it approves of everything in our present commercial or social order. We believe in taking up one question at a time, and the most urgent first, and nothing can be more important to a commercial nation or to the individual who has his bread to win than the integrity of the standard of value.

We do not ignore the rightful complaint of the public against monopolies when we say that the wrong remedy is suggested by our free silver friends. We are not forgetful of unlawful combinations between middlemen and transportation companies when we oppose general robbery through a lowered measure of value even if some of our fellow-citizens have been cheated and spoiled. We are not out of sympathy with the poor and struggling workers of the East or West because we oppose a measure which would inevitably take bread out of the workman's mouth and the opportunity of labor from his hands.

When the time comes for social redress The Congregationalist will always seek to be upon the side of righteousness. Up to the limit of its power of understanding truth it will uphold the truth. But wrongs are not righted by further wrongs, and leisure to consider and reform comes of confidence in the stability of the measures of value. "Go to!" said the sick man, "I am ill; therefore let me take a dose of poison!" With such a treatment of the ills from which the body politic suffers we decline to have anything to do.

Let us be sensible, brethren, and in approaching our commercial troubles let us not mistake a nostrum for the remedy. "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength," is the text for the preachers of commercial honesty to preach from. Quiet is departed from us for a season and confidence is fled. Our very fundamental commercial definition is in peril of change. Ninety per cent. of our money circulation is credit, and the stream of credit is checked. The debasement of the dollar would immediately and immensely contract our money exchanges. What could hinder the collapse of business with credit withdrawn and currency dwindling? Let us make sure of our standard definition of value now, and afterward consider remedies for the other ills from which we suffer.

OUR LITERARY SENTINELS.

M. de Soissons, in his book of travels in America, tells us that he once said to a witty critic: "I am so ashamed that I have not read the last new novel," naming it. "Well," said he, "you will be much more ashamed of yourself when you have read it."

The story is timely in this day of doubtful novels and contains a principle of criticism which may be applied to stories, plays and poems. There is a kind of literature which no healthy man or woman can read without losing self respect, just as there is a kind of talk to which no one can listen without degradation of character. There is no sanctifying quality whatever in the printer's font. Type makes manifest, it does not change the moral quality of thought. Any work of literature or art which leaves us with diminished self-respect is, for us at least, immoral.

As there is no manifest moral quality in the printed page, so there is no assurance of warning against corruption. No one who values his self respect reads a novel nowadays without some inkling of its moral quality—much less puts it into the hands of his sons and daughters to be read. Even parents who admit the crime-saturated and sensation loving newspapers of our cities to their homes would be shocked at the thought of admitting all modern novels indiscriminately. We ought to have—and we thought we did have—sentinels upon the authors' road whose vigilance no book could come by without the passwords of honor, decency and literary power.

It used to be the publisher who held the sentry's post. There are firms in America whose imprint was considered a guarantee, if not always of the highest literary power yet invariably of respectable moral quality. It needed no more than their name upon the title-page to make any book sure of a welcome to the public library and the home. Neither impiety nor looseness of speech and life could pass their guard. It used to be so, but we regret to find that it is so no longer. Books which have passed their scrutiny need to be challenged anew, and are too often condemned in the court of decent public opinion. The profit of indecency, the pruriency of the public and the clamor of second and third class story tellers for the enlargement of their field of work at any cost have proved too much for the scruples of the publishers.

What they have failed to do it now falls to the critics to attempt, and many of them have done their duty nobly. One difficulty with this line of defense for the public, however, is that men read books who never read reviews. Let a book get a certain start through preliminary puffing or skillful advertising and thousands will read it whatever the critics say. Indeed, the publishers discovered long ago that, like water on burning oil, adverse criticism only intensifies the flame of public curiosity to read a questionable book, and many of them welcome condemnatory criticism as a good advertisement accordingly. Again, the critics themselves are subsidized, sometimes by the appeal to their pocket through positions held at the will of the publishers, sometimes by the appeal to busy reviewers of the flattering and often utterly unscrupulous "publisher's notice" which accompanies every book sent out to be reviewed. Such criticisms are mere echoes, utterly valueless, and too often wholly misleading.

It remains, then, to discriminate among the critical authorities and to listen to the independent critics, the men and papers whose opinions are never in the market and never given without deliberate and conscientious thought, and to accept their warning before reading in order to close our homes and, so far as possible, our public libraries against demoralizing books. Contemporaneous writing has a claim upon us, but surely not an exclusive claim! If necessary we can find material enough among the proved books of the past, following the issues of the press at an interval of a year or two, by which time most of the third and fourth-class books and practically all of the priapean sort are already gone to their own place. Lubricity, in England and America, at least, it may be noted gratefully, is seldom the literary co laborer of enduring power.

CHRISTIAN GIVING.

This is the age of noble giving. Probably during the last ten years more very large and conspicuous gifts have been made to colleges, missions or for philanthropic objects than in any previous half-century of the world's history. Indeed, it is quite possible that so many such gifts never have been made before in all time. This will be regarded hereafter as one of the most noteworthy facts in the later history of the nineteenth century. Moreover, general benevolence is on the increase. More people give for good purposes and they give more on the average than ever before. The amount of money thus bestowed year by year is enormous.

Nevertheless, when the average is calculated as closely as may be, the conclusion is less cheering. What is given, large as the absolute sum is, is found to be surprisingly less than it ought to be. In proportion to the wealth in Christian ownership, the average gift is much too small. Is it too severe to call it disgracefully small? Thousands, literally, give to God a hundred, fifty or even ten dollars a year, who could multiply their contributions tenfold and not suffer.

Loyalty to Christ means giving "until it hurts," as one has expressed it, that is, giving until some real, even if not severe, self-sacrifice is caused. The true view is not to see how little can be given in order to fulfill duty but how much can be given and still have enough left for reasonable personal and family needs.

The great benevolent societies which the different branches of the Christian Church maintain should be helped of course. That they are allowed to run in debt is a shame. But among the scores of minor appeals which come to each of us, discrimination is necessary. Reckless giving is often as evil as penuriousness. We thoroughly believe in the frequent duty of relieving cases of distress which become known to us personally but it must be done with the utmost caution and not without careful study. We believe with equal heartiness that giving to house-to-house beggars, no matter how piteous their tales, is almost invariably mischievous and that such benevolence is bestowed far more wisely through organizations.

One word more. With the rarest exceptions, our duty is to give to our own. There are dozens of Baptist, Methodist or other worthy institutions in this country which have been largely built up by the gifts of Congregationalists who have not heeded the greater obligation to support our own similar and equally worthy institutions. This is all wrong. If our own were fully provided for and our pockets were overflowing with money for which no call existed from Congregational schools, colleges and societies, no proper objection could be made to such promiscuous benevolence. As the case stands it is mistaken and evil.

CURRENT HISTORY.

Ashfield's Annual Literary Feast.

The Ashfield dinner is one of the social and literary events of the New England year. Personalities change, and most of all the central figure—that of George William Curtis—is missed and remembered, but the intellectual level is maintained at the old high point. Professor Norton spoke of the purpose of the gathering and the needs of the hour: "The motive, the only motive, for this dinner is the education of the town which lies wrapped up in the prosperity of the academy. . . . We do not feel the responsibility enough that rests upon us. . . . We are in danger, in America, of degenerating into a trivial sense of duty." Other speakers were United States Civil Service Commissioner Rice, Professor Thomas of Lake Forest University, Miss Elizabeth B. Curtis and others. Miss Curtis's characterization of her father was strong and fine: "He was a man who preserved his ideals to the last, untarnished and undimmed. Though he never underrated the evils with which he had to cope, he never dreamed that evil could conquer right. Beyond Ashfield he saw the ideal New England and beyond New England he saw America, the America which was founded on an idea, whose bloodiest war was fought for another idea, the right of man to be free. And he went from here refreshed to do his part toward making the future of his country a reality and not a dream."

Mr. Bryan's New York Speech.

Fairness to Mr. Bryan compels the recognition of the fact that his much-heralded Madison Garden speech was delivered under the most adverse weather conditions. Moreover, in a critical city like New York, facing an audience made up of very heterogeneous elements, he could hardly be expected to equal the success he attained in Chicago. As a demonstration the gathering failed to prove as impressive as the party managers desired and the audience, instead of being held spellbound, kept constantly dwindling during the delivery of the speech, which was two hours long. Any mortification consequent upon such unappreciativeness may, perhaps, in Mr. Bryan's opinion be neutralized by the thought that the speech was delivered to the country quite as much as to those who heard it fall from his lips. Indeed, perhaps the army of newspaper readers who perused it quietly the next morning were in a position to enjoy it quite as much as the sweltering multitude that flocked to the garden.

At any rate, the speech in type can be judged more candidly and it already has been pronounced, even by those disposed to be fair toward Mr. Bryan, as falling considerably short of what the occasion demanded. The Nebraska orator altered his style considerably from that of the speech which thrilled the Chicago convention. He employed a manuscript and the address bore evidence of having been carefully pruned and weighed. In this respect Mr. Bryan acted wisely. Even his opponents ought to credit him with exhibiting a conciliatory spirit and avoiding exaggerations. At the same time the address cannot be called a weighty contribution to the literature of the campaign or a forceful and convincing setting forth of the Democratic position. Much of the speech was devoted to the contention that agriculture and labor since 1873 have suffered because of the prevalence of the gold standard, and he endeavored to show that the scheme for free coinage at 16 to 1 is virtually bimetallism and a return to the financial policy that prevailed before 1873. Here his argument was labored and weak, and, as respects the future and the benefits that would result from a Democratic triumph, the orator indulged in assertions and prophecies that at best can be considered only guesswork.

Various Political Matters.

Hon. Hoke Smith's definite declaration for the Chicago ticket puts him, at last, in a consistent attitude with his Georgia paper, but in the President's Cabinet he stands in a conspicuous minority, though intimations are almost every day thrown out that Postmaster-General Wilson or some other secretary will follow Smith's example. Senator Gorman is apparently disposed to put his shrewd sense and his knowledge of past campaigns at the service of the Democratic committee, but Chairman Jones has to listen, on the other hand, to remonstrances from the South and West where any cooperative effort on the part of the old line Democrats of the East is held in suspicion. Senator Sherman has opened the Ohio campaign with a speech characterized by the sound sense and ample learning which have made the Ohio senator an authority for many years when he opens his mouth on financial questions. We quote two pregnant paragraphs from the address:

It is sometimes said of creditors that they are bloodthirsty Shylocks, aristocrats, bloodsuckers, extortioners. It may be that there are among money-lenders some men who merit these epithets, but the great body of the creditors of our country are among the thrifty, industrious and intelligent men and women of every community. One great body of creditors here is the 970,000 Union soldiers, their widows and orphans, who are creditors of the United States to the amount of over $140,000,000 a year for services and sacrifices in the Union Army. It would be an act of perfidy and meanness beyond expression for this great country to pay them with money of less purchasing power than gold coin, merely because the overproduction of silver in the United States has reduced the market value of silver bullion contained in a silver dollar. To take advantage of this decline in order to reduce the value of the pittance to these pensioners is worse than to rob the graves of the dead.

There is another class of creditors that the free coinage of silver will greatly injure. It is the depositors in savings institutions and kindred organizations, who, according to official statistics, number nearly five million people, and whose deposits amount to more than $1,800,000,000. Will you cheat them by reducing the value and purchasing power of the dollars they have deposited? Free coinage will also wipe out nearly one-half the value of life insurance which provident people of the United States have paid to secure, in case of their death, some support and protection to wife and children. It will affect injuriously the multitude of clerks and employés who depend upon monthly pay, and will reduce the purchasing power of all salaries of officers and employés in the public service of the United States and of every State, county, city or township in this broad land.

It is becoming more and more apparent that the middle West is to be the fighting ground, and here the managers of both parties are concentrating their forces. Naturally the claims and predictions that emanate from official headquarters have to be subjected to some discount, but there is ground, we believe, for the confident feeling cherished by the Republicans that most of these doubtful States will be found in the McKinley column. At the same time the strength of the free silver sentiment among the farmers makes it difficult to speak with great assurance, and renders necessary an earnest, persevering and aggressive campaign in the interest of the sound money position.

A Distinguished English Jurist.

England's Lord Chief Justices do not visit America often enough to make the arrival in New York last Saturday of Lord Charles Russell an event of little consequence. He comes for a six weeks' stay which will be devoted principally to sightseeing and recreation, his chief public service being the address that he is to deliver before the American Bar Association at its annual meeting at Saratoga. Historically, it may be noted, Lord Russell's appointment marks the end of a period, as he is the first Roman Catholic appointed Lord Chief Justice since the Reformation. He has taken a forceful part in such famous cases as the Bering Sea arbitration, the Parnell suit against the London Times, the Maybrick case, and quite recently he presided with marked vigor and impartiality during the trial of Jameson, the South African raider. He is considered one of the best cross-examiners in the world, while his genial bearing makes him widely popular. He owes his present position to Gladstone, in whose 1886 cabinet he served as attorney general. Lord Russell was warmly welcomed in New York by the leaders of the bar and will be the recipient of many courtesies while he remains on this side the water.

A Step Nearer the North Pole.

Dr. Nansen's three years of Arctic travel repeat the story so often told of real advance toward the pole, of great additions to scientific knowledge, of failure in reaching the end desired and hardship in fierce winter cold and difficult travel and insufficient food supplies. Dr. Nansen left Jugor Strait, at the northwest of Siberia, Aug. 4, 1893, in his ship the Fram, which had been specially constructed to resist ice pressure. For a month and a half he made his way along the coast eastward, choosing a place to be frozen in the ice and drifting north and northwest all winter across the frozen ocean. In the summer of 1894 they drifted, still fast in the ice, southward again; but with autumn the northward drift began again and by Jan. 1, 1895 they had reached the highest latitude attained by man. Toward the end of the winter Dr. Nansen, in company with Lieutenant Johansen, left the ship with dogs and Eskimo skin boats and struck northward, only to be baffled on the frozen sea by increasing difficulties of travel, and after reaching latitude eighty-six degrees, fourteen minutes, or nearly three degrees beyond the ship, the struggle against the cold, the southward drift of the ice, and the roughness of the surface became too severe and they turned southward, reaching a wintering place at the end of August a year ago, and making their way again southward in May and June, and returning from Franz Joseph's Land in an English relief ship which had been sent thither with provisions for another party of Arctic explorers. The Fram is still in the ice under command of Captain Sverdrup, and Dr. Nansen believes will drift across the Pole. The scientific preparations for the voyage seem to have been highly successful. Electric light supplied by a wind mill made the ship cheerful. Enormous pressure of ice only lifted the hull of the Fram without crushing it, and neither on the ship nor in the ice travel and wintering was there any scurvy. The discovery of most general interest was of unlooked for depths in the polar sea, the surface water underlaid by warmer and more saline waters of the Gulf Stream. We may hope that the Fram is drifting in the right direction and that there may yet be news in store for us from the pole.

Venezuela Again.

The close of the British Parliament was marked by one of Mr. Balfour's jaunty speeches, ending with the declaration that "a great peace had descended upon the land," which sounds like a sigh of relief from a defeated champion who dreaded further contests. The most important and serious declaration of the speech was the confident tone in which he predicted the final settlement of the Venezuela question during the parliamentary recess. No particulars were given, but the negotiations have evidently reached such a stage that the English leader does not anticipate any further difficulty. It is known, of course, that the trouble in reaching an agreement concerned British settlements which might be found on the Venezuelan side of the line as allotted, and this point has probably been specially considered and provided for in the treaty as drafted.

The Eastern Questions.

In the queen's speech proroguing Parliament, distinct warning was given the sultan that he could no longer depend upon British sympathy or support—previous knowledge of which fact may have made it easier for him to send a commissioner to Crete with power to settle the matters in dispute between the Christians and Mohammedans. Indications seem to point to a scheme of home rule under the suzerainty of the sultan, similar to that which has worked well in other Christian provinces of Turkey. It is pleasant to record, for once, that the reports of massacres seem to have been exaggerated and all is quiet again in the chief city of the island. Rumors of trouble in Macedonia and rumors of steps toward agreement between England and Russia are current, but of the one we have no trustworthy details and the other is largely newspaper conjecture or marks a step in the formation or testing of English popular opinion. The resignation of the Bulgarian cabinet seems to have no direct connection with foreign questions.

The Death of Millais.

The presidency of the Royal Academy, London, again becomes vacant by the death of Sir John Everett Millais, who succeeded the late Lord Leighton in that office only last February. In May the operation of tracheotomy was performed for the relief of cancer in the throat and while unsuccessful his life was prolonged, the pain being greatly mitigated, as the attendants affirm, by the use, for the first time, of ozone as an antiseptic. He was born in Southampton in 1829, became a student in the Royal Academy at the early age of eleven, and with William Holman Hunt and Dante Gabriel Rossetti formed what they termed, half in jest, the "pre-Raphaelite" school of painting, to which Ruskin, later on, gave his cordial support. Among the honors bestowed in recognition of his genius was the ribbon of the Legion of Honor in 1878 and a baronetcy in 1885. The latter was granted upon the recommendation of Gladstone, the portrait of whom is considered one of Millais's finest efforts. Cardinal Newman, the Marquis of Salisbury, Lord Rosebery and Dr. Fraser, Bishop of Manchester, are some of the other eminent persons whose portraits he painted.

NOTES.

Four Irishmen convicted of conspiring against the Government of Great Britain in the attempts at explosion in government buildings by the use of dynamite some years ago are to be released from prison.

Olin Levi Warner, the sculptor, was a Connecticut boy. After study in Paris he returned to America and made many statues, including that of Governor Buckingham in Hartford and William Lloyd Garrison in Boston. He died at the Presbyterian Hospital in New York from the effects of a fall from his bicycle.

The committee drafting the charter for greater New York is making considerable headway and several chapters are now before the public. It is good news that the departments are all to have single heads, while Colonel Waring's excellent system of street cleaning is to be extended over the entire greater municipality.

The relations of England with the Transvaal seem to be always at the danger point of late, it having been reported in the London papers that the Transvaal Government had concluded a treaty with a foreign power in contravention of the convention of 1884, which gave control of foreign relations to Great Britain, and that the British Foreign Office demanded an explanation, to which a satisfactory reply denying the rumor was at once given by the Transvaal Government.

The tale of woe concerning last week's torrid wave is doubtless not quite as shocking as it might have been had not New York city authorities acted promptly in offering such temporary relief as the free distribution of $5,000 worth of ice, the flushing of streets and the provision of other comforts. Nevertheless, the 1,545 fatal prostrations in six days caused every sort of a conveyance to be pressed into service for the removal of the dead. Moreover, the death of 1,000 horses occasioned extreme inconvenience.

Hard upon the recently established claim of the American liner St. Louis to the swiftest passage ever made from Southampton to Sandy Hook comes a record of six days and thirty-one minutes—nearly two hours quicker—made by the St. Paul, the sister boat of the St. Louis, of the same line. The contest for time was a fair trial in both cases, since each steamer had been carefully prepared for the test. A comparison between these American liners and the English Cunarders, Campania and Lucania, which average less than a knot faster than the former, show the pleasing fact that the American boats have 10,000 horse power less than the English and burn little more than half as much coal.

Hon. Samuel Shellabarger, who died in Washington, Aug. 6, in his eightieth year, was one of the ablest of our public men. He was in Congress during the war period and was one of President Lincoln's strongest and most intimate coworkers. In the reconstruction period, through his arguments and personal work, he accomplished quite as much as any one of America's able statesmen. In the contest involving Mr. Hayes's right to his seat, Mr. Shellabarger was the attorney of the president-elect, and made a superb presentation of the case. After retiring from Congress Mr. Shellabarger resumed the practice of his original profession, the law, and was for many years a prominent figure in the Supreme Court room. He was majestic and commanding in appearance, yet as simple as a child in his manners. He was a devout Christian from his early years, and was an intelligent, fervent and effective Bible class teacher.

IN BRIEF.

Read Dr. van Dyke's article, and realize how rich you are!

Why not write your pastor a friendly letter while he is apart a little from his parochial world endeavoring to gird himself anew for his work? It would be all the more acceptable if you couched it in words that will free him from the obligation to reply.

The nemesis that follows crime seems to have overtaken the sultan's government. From the ruined cities and devastated fields of Armenia no taxes can be gathered, while military expenses steadily increase, so that the Turkish Government is in sore financial straits.

"Clever wire puller" and "perpetual wind storm" are the epithets which the Catholic Review bestows upon a Methodist bishop and a Baptist pastor. Perhaps it is some time since the editor read the epistle of Jude, the 9th verse of which we respectfully commend to his consideration.

At least one Boston pastor seems to have been considering the lilies—of the pond if not of the field. Dr. Barton gathered a thousand water lilies from the Foxboro ponds on Saturday, sent 650 of them to the City Hospital and the rest for the decoration of Shawmut Church at the Sunday morning service and for distribution to the congregation afterward.

Either the pope loves to tantalize the public by the air of mystery with which he surrounds himself or he does not know his own mind. It is said that he has appointed one man to succeed Satolli in America, and then that he has appointed another. There is summoning and running to and fro and rumors ad nauseam fill the corners of the newspapers, and in the meantime America looks on in amused surprise.

A New York doctor, Stephen H. Emmonds by name, is said to have said that he has discovered that silver and gold are different forms of the same substance and that he can by a chemical process transform one into the other. Instead of spending their money on Bryan's campaign, why do not the silver men of the West subsidize Dr. Emmonds? And with what satisfaction would the alchemists say, "I told you so!" if their spirits could get a chance to speak.

The Watchman wisely says that there are three classes of political leaders in this campaign who are unsafe guides—those "who have been denouncing a certain policy as radically dishonest, but are now supporting that policy and the candidates pledged to it," those "who for political purposes are misstating facts," and those "who in pursuit of their ends seek to set one class in society, or one section of the country, against another." Against all these it would be well for us to be on our guard.

As an instance of how men should not argue we quote from a bit of special pleading from a Methodist pulpit:

> Silver has always been a treacherous metal, it has no staying qualities. About thirty pieces of it was the price of a slave. It was the price of Christ's blood. It was paid by the Jews to Judas for his betrayal. It was the price of the field of blood. It never can become of itself a national standard for convenient international commercial relations.

This is the worst sort of irreverent folly.

The Canadian Congregationalist announces its change of editorship from Rev. Charles Duff, whose service lasted a year and a half, to Rev. J. P. Gerrie of Toronto, who is now serving as our Canadian correspondent. The former editor finds his time too much occupied with other duties to continue this work. Mr. Gerrie has proved his abilities to cultivate successfully this field of journalism, and his former and present close connections with Congregational bodies have given him a wide acquaintance in the Provinces.

Now is the time, in the absence of a large proportion of the officers and congregation, when each member of the rank and file counts for at least ten, and his presence and co-operation are of far more value than in midwinter. Will not this thought nerve us to throw off our natural disinclination to exert ourselves in hot weather sufficiently to attend at least a reasonable number of meetings? And if a brother be asked to render some unusual service, let him welcome the opportunity. It is sure to be worth more to him in the way of development than to the church even.

The death at Hamilton, Mass., of Mary Abigail Dodge, better known to the world as "Gail Hamilton," removes one of the most original thinkers and unique personalities among the prominent women of the country. She was stricken with paralysis while sitting at the breakfast table last Sunday morning and died the following evening. Ever since her serious illness in Washington last year her health has been precarious, and she was fully aware that her tenure upon life was uncertain. We defer until next week a full sketch of her life and character.

When we think of the thousands of sick rooms whose inmates have felt so keenly the fierce heat of the recent days, or of the hundreds of thousands of men, women and little children herded together in tenement districts, those of us who have reasonably good health and comfortable quarters must feel rebuked for our complaints concerning even this unprecedentedly warm summer. We have Scriptural authority for it that God made the summer as well as the winter. While few of us possess the temperament to exult in torrid heat, we all can find it more bearable and can make our presence more tolerable to our fellow-creatures if we spare our epithets and invectives and think compassionately of the great army of sufferers whose discomfort far exceeds ours.

The Roman Catholic summer school at Madison, Wis., has just closed a three weeks' session. There were forty-seven lectures on various subjects. As the income from all sources was not less than $4,000, and the expenses under $3,200, the financial condition of the school is certainly prosperous. The ability and attractiveness of the lectures have received much praise. The fact that Catholics have thought it wise to establish such schools as that at Madison, and another for Easteners at Plattsburg, N. Y., shows that they are not insensible to the spirit of the age or unaware of the fact that if they would continue to have followers they must make the people acquainted with the results of scientific and Biblical investigation, as well as with principles of any other kind of learning.

It would be interesting to find out the exact position in this campaign of pronounced social reformers, the men and women who work in college settlements and that increasing class of educated persons who in recent years have exhibited in various ways marked sympathy with manual toilers. We noticed the other day among the names of a free silver campaign committee in New York city that of a pioneer in social settlement enterprises, but he is probably an exception to the ruling feeling among his fellow-workers, even though some of them are far from being wholly committed to the Republican platform. Professor Herron's absence abroad renders it unnecessary for him to declare himself as he might feel called upon to do were he in America. He is at present in the Hartz Mountains and contemplates staying in Europe for a year or more, his health being still not firmly re-established.

Here's a bit of vacation experience from a member of our staff who is roaming on a wheel through the highways and byways of our own New England country. It shows what unadulterated pleasure is to be had by almost anybody at a very little expenditure of energy and money:

> I have not thought much about free silver or Crete, but I have chased rabbits and chipmunks along roadsides, surprised pheasants and had them nearly scare me off my perch with their sudden "whirr," picked most luscious blackberries, drunk from crystal springs, lounged on mossy banks of cool lakes, filled my lungs to nether depths with pine-scented ozone, gazed with awe on castles in Spain resting on altitudinous slopes, plunged madly down sandy and pebbly hillsides, pedaled for miles along level stretches where the only hard roadbed was a strip of packed sand, at best not more than a foot wide, where a swerve of an inch to right or left meant a spill in the sandy rut or a dive into the bushes and stone walls.

It is not so long since Dr. Griffis separated himself from the circle of Boston pastors that his erect figure and scholarly face have become a memory only, but his many friends hereabouts are glad of the opportunity to renew the associations of other days furnished by his stay in the city for a week or ten days. He comes chiefly now to deliver a lecture in the Old South course and to secure material for the memoir of Charles Carleton Coffin which he is preparing. He preached last Sunday at Harvard Church, Brookline. Since he went to Ithaca, where large numbers of Cornell students are among his auditors, he has discarded altogether the use of the manuscript. Dr Griffis does not wander outside of Biblical limits in order to secure impressive themes. His two discourses last Sunday bore upon the supreme value and the practical uses of the Scriptures. Dr. Griffis is remarkably successful in unveiling to others the treasures of the word which his own delving has revealed. Incidentally in his evening discourse he expressed his total lack of sympathy with present day efforts to regenerate men in the mass. He considers it a great mistake to fail to discriminate between different types of working men—the temperate and the drunken, the saving and the spending, the upright and the ne'er-do-wells.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE

FROM NEW YORK.

The Big Fiasco.

The two chief and well-nigh exclusive topics here of late have been the weather and the long heralded coming of the great Western orator who was to lift the roof from Madison Squa e Garden by his silvern eloquence. Our people of all intellectual grades and political preferences had really been wrought up into expecting something far beyond all former experience. His forerunner, the notorious Mrs. Lease of Kansas, on Monday night at the Cooper Union had given a truly realistic, hair-lifting showing of what Western brass and lungs and bravado can do with free silver and practical populism before an audience of Socialists and "gold-bug" haters, but was supposed to be not within sight of the boy orator. He came. Through nearly two mortal hours in the suffocating heat he tamely read the same old free silver talk, rethreshed the beaten straw of the last twenty years—but the great speech is now before all the world for judgment, and it only need be said that nothing was added to its power by the delivery. In the language of the Yale boys of the olden time the affair is pronounced a decided "flunk." The ultimate issue remains to be seen. The immediate effect was a rapid cooling of the political atmosphere and a melancholy lengthening of the countenances of Tammany expectants of four coming years of spoils, for which the few dollars gained by selling their share of tickets to the show are a sorry substitute.

The Heated Term.

And now people are wondering where some as effective method may be found for reducing also the atmospheric temperature under which, in common with most of the country, New York has been for a dreadful fortnight perspiring. Oldest inhabitants say there was as hot a time and as long continued back somewhere in "the fifties," but nothing like it since. It certainly has not been easy to work, or even to move about the city, but why should a living man complain so long as his name is not enrolled upon the daily list of hundreds of poor workers prostrated by heat, or that sadder list of the dead, the latter numbering in the metropolitan district some days nearly 200, and the former 500, victims. Yet aside from the effects of the terrific heat the health of the city, including that of infants, has been better than usual—thanks, under Providence, to good Colonel Waring and his street-cleaning corps; thanks, too, to the mayor and his helpers for new measures to benefit the poor and sick. East Side streets are flushed daily from the hydrants, the free baths are made accessible at all hours of the night, and $5,000 are voted from the city treasury for ice to be given to the poor and sick. And those bands of summer doctors and of volunteer Christian workers are busier than ever. Friday's thunder, lightning and rain promise at least partial relief from the long sweltering.

The Newest Attractions.

Parties looking for new-fangled, irresistible attractions to Sunday services may take a hint from one of the caterers for Sunday guests at a German beach "concert hall,' down on Staten Island. Hans, the proprietor, has long depended on "sacred" concerts to draw big crowds to his saloon for their Sunday guzzle. What "sacred" concerts are in such suburban resorts hereabouts is fairly well known. They are just about as sacred as the beer. Somebody found fault with them, and Hans, bound to be up to date as to sacredness, hired a local corps of the (real or imitation) "Salvation Army" with a rousing brass band from the city, and his Sunday patrons found the stage occupied, in lieu of the funny man, the comic singer and the skirt dancer, with a band of singers, pray-ers and exhorters who kept up the services with brass band accompaniment, while the guests throughout the saloon were shouting their orders and the prespiring waiters were running from able to table with the lager. Hans says it is the best paying scheme he has ever tried.

Another experiment in the way of modern attraction is to be tried early this fall by one of our city's reputable Methodist churches—not of the "institutional" sort. The trustees have contracted for "a first-class bowling alley," wherewith to draw to its services the young men in its neighborhood. Instead, however, of placing the alley in the basement of the church, it is to be under the parsonage, adjoining the sanctuary, and is to have an entrance from each. In mercy to the parson and his household it is to be hoped that the balls will not be allowed, particularly on Saturday nights, to roll into "the wee sma' hours ayont the twal."

Booth's Volunteers.

The Volunteers packed the Thalia Theater in the Bowery on Tuesday night to hear Commander and Mrs. Booth, Major Watkins and others of the new army. The commander reported the new body as now having 100 organized posts, three regiments, nine battalions and about 300 commanding officers.

Mrs. Booth made a partial statement of her new plans for the salvation of prisoners. Well aware of the common lack of faith, even among earnest Christians, in this class of work, she is going into it with the greatest caution and the help of wise advisers. She has already made a most promising beginning at Sing Sing, and the work there and elsewhere will be widely heard from in due time. The prisoners, while in confinement and specially on their release, are to be the object of her most careful Christian and helpful watch, and she is not alone in expecting results heretofore unheard of.

Personal and Other Items.

The Easthampton (L. I.) people are hearing Dr. T. B. McLeod, his brother James, Drs. H. A. Stimson and Talmage this summer. In Flushing the Congregational and Reformed churches unite in services through August. Drs. E. W. Gilman, K. Twining, J. W. Chickering and W. A. Rice supply the Congregational church in September. Dr. Gunsaulus gave his closing sermon in Clinton Avenue last Sunday. He has given hard blows to the free silver heresy. On this topic, however, Dr. MacArthur of the Baptist church seems to be the leader, considering the craze as fatal to the country's welfare, yet a matter on which the pulpit is criminally silent, while "the newspaper statements on the subject are made up," he says, "of lungs, lunacy and larceny." The wife of Rev. W. T. Pannell, pastor of the Congregational church of Morristown, N. J., was very seriously injured, lately, by being thrown from her bicycle while she and her husband were riding to visit friends in a neighboring village. Rev. Horace Porter preaches every Sunday morning in Plymouth pulpit during Dr. Abbott's sojourn in England. After being open every Sabbath for twenty years, Pilgrim Chapel, under care of Rev. E. H. Byington, Dr. Storrs's assistant, is now closed three weeks for repairs. Good news is reported from Rev. John Brittan Clark of the Lee Avenue Church, who is gradually recovering at his home in Nantucket from his injury by a bicycle accident some weeks ago.

HUNTINGTON.

FROM THE INTERIOR.

The Churches.

Of religious news in Chicago and the Northwest there is, just at present, a dearth. Pastors are absent on their vacation, or are doing as little as may be during this month. Sunday, Aug. 9, Dr. C. O. Brown of San Francisco preached at the Covenant Church in the absence of its pastor, his cousin, Rev. Allan A. Tanner was at the First Church, Dr. Frank Crane of the Trinity Methodist Church preached to his congregation and that of Plymouth Church in the house of the latter, Rev. Mr. Brodie of Wisconsin was at the South Church, while its pastor, Dr. Scott, supplied the Elgin Church. Everywhere the intense heat thinned the congregations and greatly diminished attendance at Sunday schools. Within ten days Plymouth Church has been greatly afflicted in the loss, by death, of two important members, Mr. C. M. Hotchkin and Mr. S. K. Martin. Both were under sixty years of age and active business men. The former has long been superintendent of the Plymouth Sunday school, and interested in every branch of the work of the young people, while the latter, a millionaire lumber merchant, contributed generously to the support of the church. The question is often heard, Who will take the places which these men, so suddenly summoned hence, are leaving vacant?

The Heat.

Since her history began Chicago has not had such a season of oppressive and destructive eight days' heat as came to an end Wednesday. Although the thermometer had fallen twenty degrees, several deaths were reported on that day and several prostrations. Business has been almost at a standstill. Mail carriers have, in some cases, been unable to make their customary rounds. Even the mail itself has been unusually light. Horses have suffered terribly, and dogs also. For the first time within the writer's knowledge people have been allowed to pass the night in the parks, and thus escape the oppressiveness of the tenement districts. Elderly people and babes have been the chief sufferers, although no age has been exempt. For a long time we shall feel the effect of a visitation which, in its fatalities, has been hardly less serious than an epidemic of disease.

The Silver Debate.

While the principals in this great debate are getting their ammunition ready for use the people seem to have begun the battle. At almost all the street corners one sees groups of men intensely in earnest, discussing the issues involved in free silver. The police find it difficult to prevent these crowds from gathering, or from so arranging themselves as to interfere with the necessary use of the streets. These discussions exhibit curious phases of humanity. Arguments are nearly always assertions, no matter on which side the speaker may chance to be, and they are nearly always the arguments found in Harvey's books or in the columns of the newspapers. On the whole, the tendency is towards a belief that to change our present standards would be unwise, although a great deal is made of "the crime of 1873," when "silver was demonetized."

These knots of men, earnest, well behaved, not altogether unintelligent, are only an indication of the seriousness of the present campaign, and the necessity party leaders are under to make it a campaign of instruction. It is for this reason that some of our best known citizens, the managers of some of our largest manufacturing and business concerns, have taken measures to furnish their workmen the data on which to make up their minds in reference to present issues. It is not felt here that assertion is argument, or that anything is gained by applying unseemly epithets to those who belong to opposite parties, but that, with such clean and personally unobjectionable candidates as Democrats and Republicans have nominated, attention may be given entirely to a consideration of the merits of the questions which are this year to be answered at the polls. The fusion of Populists and silver Democrats in this State, with Altgeld at the head of the ticket and a certain number of Populist presidential electors associated with him, furnishes at least a hope of success. Republicans, however, are sure that the State will go against Altgeld, who ran behind his party thousands of votes in '92, and became governor on account of the popularity of Cleveland, and that working men, in general, will see that it is for their interest to allow no substitution of a silver for a gold standard in our currency. Probably the most significant event of the week—for Mr. Bryan's address Saturday night, Aug. 8, seems to have had little influence, or his conference with the leaders of his party—is the issue by the sound money Democrats of a call for a State convention to meet in Chicago, Aug. 25, to nominate presidential electors, delegates and alternates for the National Democratic Convention to be held early in September. The appeal to the party formulates severe charges against the proceedings and platform of the convention of July 7, and is signed by the best known Democratic leaders of the State. It is thought that the nomination of a third ticket will help to render Mr. McKinley's election more certain.

While business men do not accuse those who disagree with them of dishonesty, it cannot be denied that most business men here feel that the platform of July 7 proposes repudiation, and that success under it would bring a discredit to our Government, to say nothing of the losses it would cause to thousands of small investors, from which we could not recover in a century. Divisions along Republican and Democratic lines are not so apparent as formerly. Emphasis is put on patriotism and honesty. Measures will be taken to overcome the mischief wrought by such books as Harvey's Financial School, and to show working men that their real friends are those who will give them work and pay them for it in money which is good the world over and which no financial schemes can depreciate.

Chicago, Aug. 15. FRANKLIN.

Charity Chance.*

A Serial Story by Walter Raymond.

Summary of the Previous Four Chapters.—The scene of this story is Somerset, in the west of England. Miss Graham, a maiden lady of means and a cripple, has adopted Charity Chance, who calls her aunt. Miss Graham's nephew, Graham Poltimore, the son of her dead sister, seeks the hand of Charity Chance in marriage and makes a declaration at the close of a garden party attended by representatives of the wealth and aristocracy of Babblecombe. He is accepted, though the girl has some misgivings in relation to the depth of her affection for him. Miss Graham is delighted to have her heart's desire thus gratified, and Charity, who cherishes her fondly, finds a satisfaction in having acceded to her patron's wishes for her.

V. MERE MONEY MATTERS.

STRANGE mixture of fine feeling and fastidious sensibility was this little lady of Babblecombe House. She dwelt in a garden of poetry—a sort of fairy island of her own—where, alas! at times she suffered rude shocks from the tempests that sweep across the sea of life. Then she cowered in a corner until her sorrow was forgotten in sunshine and flowers, as the garden bloomed afresh.

It was a heavy blow when her father died unreconciled to Irene. Good repute and the respectful admiration of Bath constituted the breath of that great physician's professional nostrils, and the scandal of his girl's elopement went near to break his heart. He scented the pump-room gossip. He detected the covert smiles of rival medical practitioners, and they made him mad. In reality he felt these more deeply than the loss of his daughter, although Irene had been a belle in Bath, as the good bishop remembered. In his wrath he swore that that rascal Poltimore should never touch a penny of his money.

But in little more than a year, stepping from his brougham to pay a visit, he dropped suddenly upon the wide pavement in Milson Street, and neither spoke nor opened his eyes upon the world again.

In her loneliness Helen Graham sent post-haste for her sister, who hurried home to the great shuttered house, bringing Graham, a baby in arms. How good to be restored to each other! They wept together—in sorrow for the dead, in joy of the new born.

But Dr. Graham had kept his word. After the funeral it was found that every farthing was left in trust for "my daughter Helen," with power of appointment to her by will. She could not part with the money during life, although she could leave it as she would. Between baser spirits this must have opened an impassable gulf, but it seemed only to knit the sisters in closer affection. They spoke of it with bated breath, scarcely daring to call in question the justice of the dead or defeat his intention. After all, the money might have been lost, which now must be secured to little Graham. Bless him! And meanwhile Helen could pay Irene's bills. Then, to be near her sister, the little cripple bought the mansion at Babblecombe, with the cottages, the wood and the small farm let with the mill. Scarcely had she come there to live when Irene died.

For a while sorrow brought closer intimacy between the bereaved neighbors. Helen Graham was constantly driving into the town to the little motherless boy. And Henry Poltimore, then agent to Lord Babblemouth and steward to his lordship's vast estates, was no less frequently at Coombe. She could not do without him. He advised her concerning the mill, the cottage and the farm. She esteemed him highly. She pitied him with all her heart. And if at times a manner somewhat too large jarred upon her nerves—as when he boasted of his own gentility, or talked of his lordship at unnecessary length—such little matters must be forgiven to a man of business. She had always understood discreet reserve and perfect self-restraint to be the exclusive possessions of upper professional circles and the pick of the aristocracy. As a man of affairs, as a man of heart, Henry Poltimore was perfect; and he also had loved and lost Irene.

About this time one of the trustees under her father's will was called to his last account. She gladly appointed Henry Poltimore. Who so fit to accept this trust as the father of the child to whom the property should some day fall? This was reasonable and readily agreed to by the remaining trustee.

Then suddenly came a blow which shook her soul's belief in human nature to its profoundest depths. It was delivered by Mrs. Mortimer, then the rector's young bride, who one morning hurried panting from Babblemouth and entered the French window as pale as Hamlet's ghost. Not that she was affected by the news she bore, but, driven by excitement and a laudable desire to be friendly and tell Miss Graham first, she had traveled with inexpedient speed.

"Mr. Henry Poltimore has married again!" she gasped.

"Married again! When? Where? To whom?"

"To a governess—in Wiltshire—they say she is the daughter of a farmer"—

"The daughter of a farmer," interrupted Miss Graham, indignantly; "I do not believe it! He is broken-hearted! He is inconsolable.

"But he has written to the rector. He could not bear the solitude, he said. They married quietly—nine in the morning—none present, because Mr. Poltimore is still in mourning. The rector thinks it positively indecent. So very soon, you know. You will certainly get a letter when the post comes. But I thought you would like to know at once."

It was too true. The prediction was little sooner uttered than confirmed, for the postman was already upon the gravel path.

"He might at least have married a lady," said Miss Graham, with bitter self-control. But her hand shook, and the letter dropped upon the floor.

That was all she said. It was reported in Babblemouth and afterwards repeated to the second Mrs. Poltimore, on the authority of the rector's wife. But although she sat in her chair, stiff with dignity, tears rushed into her eyes at the thought of Irene, sweet and beautiful as an angel, and only a few months in heaven.

She was too proud to give expression to her pain. When Mr. Poltimore brought home his bride she called. But her constant visits were discontinued. They must send over the little boy on every fine, warm day, she told them. She should be pleased to welcome them at Babblecombe at any time, of course, but she had given up going out. Thus they sank into comparative insignificance as "the Babblemouth people." A little later, in spite of their remonstrance, she adopted Charity Chance—an act of benevolence which so far had brought her nothing but happiness and love.

Then Mr. Henry Poltimore suddenly became rich, retired from his stewardship, and blossomed into Briggs. He bought a small estate close to Babblemouth, and farmed it to the admiration of surrounding agriculturists. It was like a garden. "But la! it never couldn't pay," they said. He bred prize cattle of marvelous length of pedigree and price, and rented the shooting of Babblemouth Park when his lordship went abroad, and added a wing to his house, and built new stables, which everybody said were better than most people's cottages. The hillside above the town glistened with his conservatories, and his grapes, exhibited at all the flower shows, became the despair of every gardener in the west.

Thus he grew and grew, and many people thought he ought to be made a magistrate for the county. He thought so himself. His devotion to public business deserved no less. For he sat on every board and council in the district, and spoke, too, at considerable length. Thus his name was in every mouth. As elections were frequent it brightened every hoarding, and enlivened every blank wall in the neighborhood. Gate posts bloomed perennially with invitations to "Vote for Poltimore-Briggs." And what a friend he was—a friend to the farmer—a friend to the landed interest—a friend to the poor man. Nothing was too high or too low to be included in the friendship of Poltimore-Briggs. And at last this broad humanity, assisted by persistent pushing of himself, was to reap its reward. The Agricultural Association had determined to run a candidate for Parliament, and upon whom should its maiden fancy light, but Mr. Poltimore-Briggs!

No wonder, when at last he was left sole surviving trustee, Miss Graham did not appoint another. Such a thought could not enter her head, for everything was managed to perfection. Her dividends were never a day late, not even the rent of a cottage went into arrears.

Some days had elapsed, and the buzz of excitement following Charity's engagement had settled down. It was a lovely summer morning, and John Sprake had already toiled half-way up the hill, when Miss Graham suddenly leaned forward in her chair.

*Copyrighted, 1896, by Walter Raymond.

"Have the horses been exercised, John?"

John Sprake, who, although a very steady man, was no fool, hearing himself thus addressed, speedily turned around the little wheel and respectfully rested.

In Miss Graham's opinion nobody in this world was so good as John Sprake—in his own station in life, of course. Nobody could pull the chair like John Sprake. She could trust no other in the same way, for several excellent reasons. He was a coachman, and understood driving, and had never been known to go fast or have an accident in his life. He was clean shaved, with white, wavy hair, which reminded her of the late dean of Bath. He had buried two wives, poor man, and married a third; and brought up fourteen children and lost four; and looked very respectable in church in top boots and a blue livery; and during his whole twenty years of service had never done anything giddy or lost his head. Therefore she placed implicit confidence in John Sprake.

"Regularly?" She looked him keenly in the face. Something evidently weighed upon her mind.

Ever so small a spot upon John's conscience made him unduly to protest.

"Iss mum. Every day so sure as the sun—zo to speak—unless 'tis vor some good reason."

"And are they in good order?"

"Zo vat's butter."

"Yes, but I mean quite quiet?"

"Zo quiet's mice."

"Then bring round the carriage this afternoon at three. Miss Chance is going for a sail, and I shall drive into town with her."

This unexpected termination to a cross-examination, pressing perilously close upon detection, took John Sprake's breath away. As he explained at leisure, when subsequent proceedings attracted attention in the village: "I wur that tookt aback, that wh'er or no I wur 'pon my head or my heels I couldn' ha' told. There! If you'd 'a' stuck Jan Sprake wi' a knife thik minute he wouldn' never ha' blood."

However, he managed to murmur, "Iss mum," and turned and plodded wisely on his way.

No wonder the man was startled. Jan Sprake bestriding one fat carriage horse and leading another was the most familiar object in the Babblecombe landscape. He did very little else, and many a distasteful duty did John avoid by urging the immediate necessity to exercise his horses. He had been known to refuse to haul the chair because he must take out his horses. And this with such a serious shake of his hoary old head that the poor little woman was nearly moved to tears by the contemplation of such devotion to dumb animals. She had not set foot in a carriage for years. The splendid chariot, its wheels picked out with yellow, and the brougham in which her distinguished father formerly paid his visits stood in the coach-house side by side in solemn state. She would not have parted with them for the world. Sometimes a visitor must be fetched from the station, five miles over the hill, and the mere thought of a hired fly made her shudder. But ten years ago, when alighting, she had stumbled and fallen in Babblemouth Street; and since then, except upon those rare occasions, the carriages had remained at rest.

But with Charity's engagement over everything had come a change. The little lady started life anew. Her tenderest hope, hitherto liable to be cut off by any frost, was at last hardened into a set purpose. She could look forward to flowers and fruit.

Of late a doubt had often troubled her mind. If Charity did not marry Graham, she must be provided for in some manner consistent with the luxury in which she had been brought up. To educate and then to leave her poor would be cruelty indeed—for education, in the opinion of this little lady, added a grace only. It was not meant for the work-a-day world. Common people were better without it, with its restless, upsetting influences, leading only to discontent. And the pay which an accomplished lady could command was a mere pittance. Yet to leave money away from her own kin seemed to savor of robbery, and was scarcely a righteous act. She almost fancied it might follow her beyond the grave, and meet with disapproval both in this world and the next. For in this woman's heart was a fair mixture of fine old family pride.

But now that Charity was to be her niece indeed, all doubts were blown to the winds. People called, letters came by every post, and the very air became quite bracing with congratulation. In her joy, with every hour Miss Graham evolved a new and loftier idea. Graham should add the name of Graham, as his father had taken Briggs, and Charity become the mother of a fresh line of Grahams. It was a noble mission. Only to think of it brought the color to the little cripple's cheek. The girl whom she had always loved so well was now worshiped, and this order for the carriage was an act of sacrifice and devotion.

To the intensity of this new found fervor witnessed every word and look. The reality of it unconsciously impressed John Sprake so that he hauled and wheeled in silence, without stopping for argument or rest.

Nor did his wisdom afterward invent any specious obstacle, and the carriage was brought round upon the stroke of three.

"Put the footstool closer, Charity dear, and draw the shawl over my shoulder! To Mr. Poltimore Briggs's, Sprake."

Thus she courageously started, but all along the Babblemouth road and down the one street which forms the town she nervously clutched the girl's hand. Tradesmen, scarcely able to believe their eyes, popped to their shop doors to be sure it was Miss Graham who passed. Two of the rector's daughters upon the causeway turned back at once to carry home the news. Quite a little crowd of children gathered round as the carriage drew up before the house of Poltimore-Briggs.

A large house of red brick, three stories high, with a paved court in front, inclosed with tall iron railings against the raised causeway. An old fashioned, ornamental arch of wrought iron, bearing an heraldic shield and a square frame to hold a lamp, bent over the gates. The windows were long and narrow, with thick sashbars, and above the brass knocker on the front door, in places of panels, were panes of glass to light the hall. It was a fine old place, this ancient house of some forgotten merchant, and above the brass knocker it frowned down upon street and harbor with the solemn dignity of a bygone age.

MISS GRAHAM SUDDENLY LEANED FORWARD.

Scarcely had the carriage stopped when the door quickly opened and Poltimore Briggs himself came hurrying hatless down the steps and across the paved court. He was carefully attired, as at the garden party; his face shone with pleasure and his bald head glistened in the sun.

"Now this is kind; Helen, this is delightful. Let me help you. Take care of the step"— Suddenly remembering Charity he gave her his hand without looking at her, still talking all the while. "I saw you from the window and could hardly believe my eyes. But you are in no hurry. You will stay. Sprake must put up the horses. Yes. Put up the horses, Sprake. Really not? Then wait, Sprake. Take care, Helen, take care. The polished floor is slippery"—

And so, with blusterous zeal, he led her across the hall, bending down that she might take his arm.

"You have come at a fortunate moment," he cried, unable to conceal his pride. "I have been invited to stand for Parliament. A deputation—a most influential deputation, from one of the most powerful organizations in the division—has just left me. You must have passed them in the street. I admit I was gratified—deeply gratified. But I have not yet given a reply. We shall find the others in the new room"—

"I wanted to talk to you," she whispered, in that sudden way of hers which sounded so abrupt.

"To be sure. To be sure. Let us go in here. We shall be alone. You'll find the others, Charity, somewhere or other. They are waiting for you, and the boat is ready. Graham has an old school friend with him. A poet, or something of the sort, so they say. Alfred—Alfred Prentice."

As a man of affairs, he laughed at the bare idea of poetry. Then, as he opened the door, he added with respect: "But I've seen his name in the papers."

They went into a large dining-room with three tall windows looking out upon the street. It was paneled half way up the walls, and furnished with pieces of old oak, picked up during many years at sales in the neighborhood. It had an odd look, as if it belonged not to the place—this flotsam from the seas of bankruptcy and death. Many of the chairs were out of place, and on the long oak table stood empty decanters and glasses, to prove how well the thirsty deputation had refreshed itself. Over the mantelpiece hung a life sized portrait of Poltimore-Briggs himself, smiling round at a visitor, pen in hand, and upon his face a light of intelligence such as, without the advantage of baldness, human forehead dare not hope to sustain. The attitude was justified, the quill no mere poetic flight. In the local newspaper he had once waged bitter war, the Incidence of Local Taxation being the theme.

The paint upon the picture was scarcely dry, but a host of old familiar objects recalled the past. A bookcase from the old house in Bath, a pencil drawing, by an artist of that city, of Irene, a schoolgirl, with hair half way down her back—these moved the little woman deeply, and for a while after she was seated she did not speak.

But Poltimore Briggs blustered heedlessly on.

"Why, it must be twenty years, Helen, since you were last here. Did you notice we've thrown the little room into the hall. A wonderful improvement, I flatter myself. Some of the deputation said frankly they had never seen anything carried out so thoroughly and well. You must look when you go out. And you wouldn't know the gardens now. I don't know what I've spent upon them, I'm sure. Thousands! More than I was justified. More than I shall ever see again. Lord Babblemouth came in only the other day—when he was down about the new quay. He wanted my advice—he thinks a deal of my opinion—and he was astonished. He said: 'Poltimore'—he said—he always forgets and calls me Poltimore still—'Poltimore, you have the prettiest place in the west of England—for the size, of course.' I said, 'I am gratified to find you like it, my lord.' And so I was, I confess. And so it ought to be, for it costs a pretty penny to keep it up. Four men summer and winter, and sometimes five in the spring."

He paused for some note of admiration, some expression of surprise, and looked larger than ever, with his hands thrust in the pockets of his white waistcoat. But little Miss Graham had scarcely heard his words. Only when he ceased she became conscious of what he had been saying.

"I have something to tell you, Henry," she began, and her voice was tremulous and very low, "a secret that you must not repeat. I only tell you now because I want something done. I should have sent for you to come over if I had not seen you today. I have been thinking over it for some time, and I want your help and advice."

Her earnestness arrested his attention; she was shaking from an agitation she tried in vain to repress.

"You know, Helen," he replied, in his large way, with a wave of the hand, "that I am always at your service. I"—

"Yes, yes. You have been very kind. You have been most good; but—but"—She paused, in doubt how to begin, and then, summoning all her courage, continued: "Do you remember the story of the Spartan boy who concealed a fox in his bosom?"

He nodded assent. She has found out that rascal Sprake, he said to himself. For in his mind was the fable of the man who cherished a snake, and he thought it meant ingratitude.

"And then it gnawed into his heart, and he died."

"What do you mean, Helen? What do you mean?"

"I want to arrange and settle everything without delay. I have known it for some time. But I could not speak of it. And I do not want any one to know. Henry, I have only a little while to live. Perhaps two years at most. Only two years to live."

Her voice sank into a wail. But now that her sorrow had found utterance she at once regained composure, and she looked up with her keen gray eyes, as if eager to observe the effect upon him of her words.

He was standing upon the hearth rug, and the light from one of the windows fell full upon his face. His brows were knit in perplexity, as if he did not quite catch her meaning, but the color left his cheek. He became pale with alarm. He could not have appeared more startled had he just heard his own doom.

"Do you mean you are ill, Helen?" he asked, eagerly, in a hoarse whisper.

"Beyond hope. There is no chance of recovery," she moaned. Then she burst into passionate lament. "And I do not want to die. I want to live. I want to live for years and years."

"But what are you doing? Why don't you take advice? Call in Bibberly. He's a good man, Bibberly. I should have every confidence, and"—

"Do you think I would have such as he prying at my poor body?" she cried, with sudden nervous irritability. "No. I wrote to a physician at Bath. I sent Charity out for the day, and John Sprake fetched and drove him back, and nobody knew. Besides, I have read about it in one of my father's books. Nothing can be done. He did not propose anything. It must just grow and grow. I can see it grow."

"But—eh, surely"— he hesitated, groping in his brain for the thing to say. "Surely, Helen, you will take a second opinion?"

"It is no good. Besides, they might want to do something."

She shuddered at the thought, and then again came upon her this great longing for life.

"And yet I do not want to go. I could not lose it for the world, little as it is. To be wheeled out into the sun. To watch in winter for the Christmas roses in the corner. And the daffodils in spring, so bright in the meadow along the brook. And the bluebells in the wood, quite thick, as if the sky had fallen between the trees. And I want to see Charity married—and to sit like a grandmother, with children running around my chair. There are people who say they are tired of life—people who have it all. But I was never tired. I could never do enough to get tired."

She stopped in her sudden way, and asked, quickly: "You were not averse to Graham's engagement?"

The look of fear vanished from his countenance. The question implied a doubt, and again he was important and self satisfied as ever.

"I will not seek to hide from you, Helen," he began, slowly, and in his most sententious manner, as if he were addressing a board of guardians, "that I had cherished other hopes for Graham. My position and his—his expectations, I think I may say—justified me in hoping that he would make a suitable match. I was ambitious for him, I confess to you. It was only natural. Personally, I say nothing against Miss Chance. Thanks to your bounty, she is well brought up, intelligent, accomplished—but"—

"You would be too generous to speak of that," she broke in with warmth.

He graciously accepted the attribute: "Well, well! Graham has chosen, and we need say no more."

With his patronizing wave of the hand he would have dismissed the matter, but she had still her errand to fulfill.

"But I want to see everything clear. I love her as if she were my own, and I want to know that, whatever happens, she will be provided for," she cried, with glowing enthusiasm. "Of course, I have left all to Graham, and that is only just. But there is the money that has been saved. That seems to me quite different. I want to give her that at once. To settle, or secure, or whatever you call it. So that it can never be lost or taken away, you know. Now, in my lifetime, I want to do it. So that if anything comes between them she will have it just the same. And when they marry it can make no difference."

He turned to the window, and stood with his back toward her, looking out into the street. She felt that he disapproved of her intention. The old opposition, she thought, offered to poor Charity from the very first. This made her more determined.

"You see," she urged, "I do not want to have to think of these things again. Soon I may have to tell Charity, and I want all this settled first. As if it were for the marriage, and as much for his sake as hers."

He walked slowly back, and leaned with his elbow upon the mantelpiece. He looked ten years older than the portrait now, and the lines upon his forehead were very deep.

"I have been taken by surprise, and what you tell me of yourself pains me very deeply, Helen," he faltered. "Let the matter rest. I will think how your wishes can be best carried out. Leave it for the present. Leave it; I will not forget nor delay. But such things want looking at—careful looking at"—

There came a step across the hall, the door was thrown open, and Mrs. Poltimore-Briggs, like a little whirlwind out of breath, broke in upon their conference. She was full of regrets, and overflowing with apologies. Her rapid trivialities, pitched in the highest key of exaggeration, were in strange contrast to the deep sorrow hidden in Miss Graham's heart.

"My dear Miss Graham! How could he bring you into this disreputable room? I was beside myself when Charity mentioned it. I rushed away at once in the most frantic haste. Why, you must be quite worn out and exhausted. Now do let me take you into the other room to have some tea! Let me take your arm. I won't trust you to him any longer. Open the other window, Henry, do. It is as close as an oven."

So the interview came abruptly to a close, and he was left alone.

The cool air blowing in from the sea was grateful to him, and he stood looking down upon the harbor mouth. It was high tide, but below the clear, deep water he could distinguish lighter streaks of sand between masses of weed covered rocks. There came a moment of insight. Between the whirling eddies of his vanity, and the varying agitations of his social ambition, he caught glimpses of the unchanging realities of life.

In his perplexity he passed his hand across his forehead. It was wet with beads of perspiration.

"Two years! Two years," he muttered. "He must marry her at once."

Between the cliffs lay a cutter in readiness to go out. He could hear the creaking of her gaff and the hoops of her mainsail against the mast, as it flapped idly when she rolled upon the swell of the tide.

Two members of the deputation strolled down and stood upon the quay. One of them, in gaiters and with a back of the broadest acreage, raised his stick and pointed at her.

He knew they were talking of him—saying, perhaps with envy, that she was his. An hour before he would have been gratified—very gratified; but now the thought was bitter to him.

"I wish to God I was dead and in my grave!" he hissed between his teeth. And at that moment he meant it, too.

(To be continued.)

TWO KINDS OF OWNERSHIP.

BY REV. HENRY VAN DYKE, D. D.

We were keeping Sunday afternoon together on the edge of a green hill, surveying the gentle valley of the Gale River and uplooking to the Franconia Mountains. The placid air of the day seemed to shed a new tranquillity over the ever restful scene. The lilies that never toil nor spin, the birds that sow not neither gather into barns, appeared to be enjoying a repose deeper and more serene than that of common days. Slight and indefinable touches in the landscape, perhaps the mere absence of the tiny human figures laboring in the distant fields, or the light curl of smoke rising lazily from the farmhouse chimney, or the family group sitting under the maple trees before the door, gave a look of quietness to all things, and diffused a Sabbath through the world.

"Father," said the little boy lying on the grass beside me, "who owns the mountains?" I happened to know the names of two or three of the lumber companies that had lately bought some of the woodland slopes, and told him who they were, adding that there was probably quite a large number of different owners, perhaps two or three hundred, whose claims taken altogether would cover the whole range of hills.

"Well," said the boy, after a moment of thought, "I don't see what is the good of owning them. Everybody can look at them."

There they lay, stretched out before us in the sloping sunlight, the sharp peaks outlined against the tender sky, the vast ridges of forests sinking smoothly towards the valleys, the deep hollows gathering purple shadows in their bosoms, and the little foothills standing out in rounded promontories of darker green from the mountain mass behind them. Far to the east the long comb of Twin Mountain extended itself back into the untrodden wilderness. Mt. Garfield lifted a clear-cut pyramid through the translucent air. The huge bulk of Lafayette ascended majestically in front of us, crowned with a rosy diadem of rocks. Eagle Cliff and Bald Mountain stretched their line of scalloped peaks across the entrance to the Notch. Beyond that shadowy vale the swelling summits of Cannon Mountain rolled away to meet the tumbling waves of Kinsman, dominated by one loftier crested billow that seemed almost ready to curl and break in snowy foam. Far down the sleeping Landaff Valley the undulating dome of Moosilauke trembled in distant blue.

They were all ours, from crested cliff to wooded base. The solemn groves of firs and spruces, the plumed sierras of lofty pines, the stately pillared forests of birch and beech, the wild ravines, the tremulous thickets of silvery poplar, the bare peaks with their wide outlooks, and the cool vales resounding with the ceaseless song of little rivers—we knew and loved them all; they ministered peace and joy to us; they were all ours, though we held no title-deeds and our ownership had never been recorded.

What is property, after all? The law says there are two kinds, real and personal But it seems to me that the only real property is that which is truly personal, that which we take into our inner life and make our own forever by understanding and admiration and sympathy and love. This is the only kind of possession that is worth anything.

A gallery of great paintings adorns the house of Midas, and every year adds a new treasure to his collection. He knows how much they cost him and he keeps the run of the quotations at the auction sales, congratulating himself as the price of the work of his well-chosen artists rises in the scale and the value of his art treasures is enhanced. But why should he call them his? He is only their custodian. He keeps them well varnished and framed in gold. But he never passes through those gilded frames into the world of beauty that lies behind the painted canvas. He knows nothing of those lovely places from which the artist's soul and hand have drawn their inspiration. They are closed and barred to him. He has bought the pictures, but he cannot buy the key. The poor art student who wanders through his gallery, lingering with awe and love before the masterpieces, owns them far more truly than Midas does.

Pomposus purchased a rich library a few years ago. The books were rare and costly. That was the reason why Pomposus bought them. He was proud to feel that he was the possessor of literary treasures which were not to be found in the houses of his wealthiest friends. But the threadbare Bücherfreund, who was engaged at a slender salary to catalogue the library and take care of it, became the real proprietor. Pomposus paid for the books, but Bücherfreund enjoyed them.

What does it profit a man to be the landed proprietor of countless acres unless he can reap the harvest of delight that blooms from every rood of God's earth for the seeing eye and the loving heart? And who can reap that harvest so closely that there shall not be abundant gleaning left for all mankind? The most that a wide principality can yield to its legal owner is a living. But the real owner can gather from a field of golden-rod, shining in the August sunlight, an unearned increment of life.

We measure success by accumulation. The measure is false. The true measure is appreciation. He who loves most has most.

How foolishly we train ourselves for the work of life! We give our most arduous and eager efforts to the cultivation of those faculties which will serve us in the competitions of the forum and the market place. But if we were wise, we should care infinitely more for the unfolding of those inward, secret, spiritual powers by which alone we can become the owners of anything that is worth having. Surely God is the great proprietor. Yet all his works he has given away. He holds no title deeds. The one thing that is his is the perfect understanding, the perfect joy, the perfect love of all the things that he has made. To a share in this high ownership he welcomes all who are poor in spirit. This is the earth which the meek inherit. This is the heritage of the saints in light.

"Come, my boy," I said to the little lad, "let us go home. You and I are very rich. We own the mountains. But we can never sell them, and we don't want to."

THEY WENT TO CHURCH AFTER ALL.

It was a sultry Sunday morning at a summer resort. On the hotel piazza the guests gathered after breakfast, the women with their novels, the men with their Sunday newspapers. Most of those who even considered the subject of church attendance had announced at table that "it was too hot to go to church." Conversation drifted into politics, fashions, the theater. One gentleman said nothing, but sat a little apart quietly reading. "What can so absorb the lively Mr. S.?" asked a lady in a rallying tone. "I was just reading a little story in The Congregationalist," he returned. "Would you like to hear it?" "Certainly," was the polite reply. The hum of conversation ceased as the reader began; faces grew interested, then earnest. As he closed several voices broke out in eager discussion. The tide was turned; all thoughts were diverted into a new channel and the tone of conversation was raised for the whole day.

Two or three people fidgeted about. One looked at his watch. "Guess I'll go to church," he said; "there's time enough if we don't fix up too much." "Who wants to fix up such a day as this?" asked a lady. "Let's go in our shirt waists, just as we are." In a pleasant flutter of excitement the party was organized.

Great was the amazement of pastor and people as a dozen or more strangers, in unconventional costumes, it must be confessed, but fresh and summery, filed up the aisle that hot Sunday morning. But their earnestness and reverence were not to be mistaken; and after the unusually heavy contribution plate was received at the altar there was a thrill of gratitude in the preacher's voice as he prayed for a blessing on "the strangers within our gates," and the hearty grip with which he greeted them after service spoke volumes of the courage he had received from this unexpected evidence of appreciation.

Was it worth while—this loyal effort of a disciple to win reverence for the day hallowed by the rising of his Lord? I. E. K.

Pilgrimage Letters. IX.

Guests of the Dean of Ely.

The little town of Ely in the fen lands of East Anglia, the scene of Kingsley's Hereward, where, for a single night, the pilgrims laid aside their "staff and sandal shoon," will ever abide in their memories as a veritable Chamber of Peace. Whether or not our gracious host, Dean Stubbs, surmised that we had reached that point in our journeyings where we needed "time to repair our nature with comforting repose," his plans for our entertainment conduced wonderfully to that end. The very invitation to a "tea in the cloister garth" had a soothing sound and refreshed our jaded spirits like a rest in music.

We arrived late in the afternoon, and lowering skies and a chilly atmosphere soon drove us from the garth into the deanery drawing-room. What a lovely, reposeful, homelike interior it was, with its recessed windows, its wealth of choice pictures, its atmosphere of antiquity and, above all, the cordial hospitality of members of the household. And what converse we had in the low-ceiled, wainscoted rooms as we lingered "over the tea cups," listening chiefly to the dean as he told us a little of his theories of life, especially as related to the working classes, for whom he manifests a deep and practical interest. We had read something of the way in which, when vicar at Granborough, he divided his glebe into acre lots for the benefit of the villagers, and of the night school in his laundry for two winters in another parish, but this personal interview gave us a new conception of his work. Over his study fireplace is carved in oak these words from Goethe: Gedenke zu leben (Think of living). This sentence and another from the same book, "Earnestness alone makes life eternity," have served as his watchwords for many a year. In his forthcoming book, A Creed for Christian Socialists, may be found the essence of the dean's ideas on socialism, which is that Christ should be dominant in all realms of living, in politics and industry no less than in theology and ethics. He believes in a spiritual unity but not outward conformity between different branches of the Christian church, and rejoices in the opening of English universities to Nonconformists, because this common educational bond must ultimately prove a strong unifying influence. It was a rare privilege to hear themes of such import discussed by one who has been styled "the broad-minded, scholarly, terribly earnest, yet blithe and happy, dean of Ely."

DEAN STUBBS.

At length, as sunset shadows appeared on the wide-spreading close, we followed him into the noble minster, through the splendid Galilee porch, down the long Norman nave, pausing beneath the great octagonal lantern, through whose traceried windows prismatic colors were now shimmering, and came finally into that wonderful chapter house with its inconceivably delicate carvings of fruit and flowers. This was one of the places, however, where we had no disposition to boast of our Puritan ancestry as we saw how their ruthless hands had shattered peerless statues and made havoc of unparalleled specimens of mediæval and classic art. All these points of architectural and historic interest were explained by the dean in his own inimitable fashion, but he had reserved for the evening the most unique feature of our entertainment in the shape of a "moonlight" organ recital in the cathedral.

At nine o'clock we grouped our way to seats in the western end of the nave, the huge pillars looming up like giants on either side and the only light coming from the distant south transept. This dim illumination was ingeniously arranged to have the effect of moonbeams, softly stealing in at the clearstory windows, touching here and there with a mystical light the pillars and arches of the beautiful octagon, making of this incomparable architectural feature, which is the glory of Ely, a vision out of the darkness—a dream, beautiful enough to be dissipated by the first awakening to everyday realities, yet indeed a dream in stone, and its impression upon the entranced beholders as enduring as the stone itself. A fugitive beam of light caught now and then the hand or the violin bow of the player as he stood upon the choir steps, and we could well imagine one of Fra Angelico's playing angels with his golden nimbus just behind the screen of darkness.

Presently from out of the stillness came a message from the old master, Bach, first in soft, mellow waves of sound, creeping along the groined arches, and ending in a thunderous fugue with all the organ's power. The lofty strains died away, to be succeeded by one of Schumann's melodies on the violin, played with a power and pathos that no words can describe. O, the haunting sweetness of that music as it swept along the vaulted roof till it seemed as if it were caught up and echoed back by a choir of angels! One selection followed another till an hour had passed away. Then, in exalted mood, with hushed hearts and moistened eyes, we retraced our steps, past the door where the dean stood in the shadows to receive our subdued but grateful farewells, out through the deanery gate, back to the quiet, well-kept Lamb Hotel, to lie down and dream of celestial harmonies in the temple not made with hands. Ah, who of the pilgrims will ever forget that evening? F. J. D.

Our Baptist friends will hardly be pleased with the conclusion which Bishop Hugh Miller Thompson, in an article on the Sunday school in the Church Standard, draws from their objection to infant baptism:

> The Baptist alone accepts this principle in its full logical results, and, in consequence, refuses to baptize children. He rightly, therefore, instructs a child on the distinct understanding that he is not and cannot be a Christian as yet. But his humanity gets the better of his divinity, and instead of holding, as he is logically bound to do, that since the child cannot be a Christian, therefore he cannot be saved, he makes an exception in his case and generally concedes that while a man cannot be saved without being a Christian, a child may be. To be sure, it seems very queer that a soul good enough to go to heaven is not also good enough to be a member of the Baptist Church. At all events the result is the very remarkable one that, on their own principles, there are but two places in the universe whence children, because they are children, are hopelessly excluded—hell and the Baptist Church.

This is witty but neither fair nor true. For our part, though we disagree with the principle, we think that, granting his premises, the Baptist's position does credit to his logic and his humanity. But in all fairness the bishop should have said infants—not children. All good Baptists teach a child that it may become a Christian at once, so soon as it is teachable at all, and a good proportion of the membership of most Baptist churches consists of children.

We must lie fallow before we can produce greatly, and we must enrich ourselves inwardly before we can spend generously in creative work.—H. W. Mabie.

GEORGE ADAM SMITH AT CHAUTAUQUA.

A PEN PICTURE OF THE MAN AND HIS WORK.

BY MARY B. FULLER.

Henry Drummond, Principal Fairbairn, Prof. A. B. Bruce, George Adam Smith are the Scotch leaders and inspirers in religious thought who have come to Chautauqua. Each man has met here with the appreciation of scholars, with the admiration of lovers of literary style and with warm personal interest. Dr. Smith has just left us. No review of his seven lectures or rereading of his sermon is necessary to make sure the fact that Chautauqua will remember him. The echoes hanging around the pillars of the Hall of Philosophy, the bits of stray comment on the walks and the new pronunciation of the word "Israel" linger behind him. Yet to try to find out how many deep brain and heart furrows his words and personality have made would be like trying to trace the seeds of his own Scotch thistles. Laying hands, however, on the most evident reasons for his influence, we take hold at once of his confidence-inspiring personality. This was the background which set forth all that he said. Earnestness, reverence and an entire lack of self-consciousness were the elements of his strength. A close meeting with the searching truth of his eyes was a humbling experience; and no one would have told him society lies before, any more than after, hearing his sermon. Dr. Smith carried with him also the sense of reserve power and of variety of ability. His humor, for instance, was hidden until the last lecture on Proverbs, when it flashed out delightfully.

The sermon on the character of Esau said some plain things in strong Saxon words. The people who think it vulgar to do any particularizing about the "miserable sinner" phrase of the confession were shocked. I doubt, however, if any young man left that service without a new kind of determination to be straight and manly. A shock rightly given and taken is the only genuine inspiration.

In the lecture on Proverbs the difference was pointed out between the wise man and the prophet, the difference between a certain shrewdness and inspiration. The maxims of the Hebrew wise man, their literary and practical value, were illustrated by selections from the book of Proverbs. Dr. Smith advised the student to sift out these admonitions and to group them by subjects—the family, friendship, truth, wisdom, etc. Perhaps the best words in this, the most miscellaneous of his lectures, were those of his own on the character and mission of true friendship.

Everything that the Scotch critic said was interesting, but the greater part of his originality came in the lectures on Hebrew poetry. The audience was not of the straggling variety which goes to sample. Natural selection drew those fitted to understand and to sympathize with Dr. Smith's point of view. The look of absorbed interest on all faces was genuine. It came from an appreciation of the fact that to hear such profound knowledge, expressed in such a clear and delightful style, was a rare privilege. They saw too the man's fine sense of proportion and his unusual power to understand how his hearer's mind met his own. The fascination of the Scotch accent, and a voice full of cadence and melody, gave pleasure which few popular orators can give.

The subject matter was developed in a logical and well-ordered fashion. The most stupid listener must have had a tolerably clear analysis of each lecture in his mind, and an understanding of its connection with the lecture before and after it. First, he outlined the characteristics of the Semitic race, tracing their development from the situation of the people and their habits of life. He followed this with the general qualities of the Hebrew poetic genius springing from their racial character. Then came the story of local peculiarities in this genius, and from the general the qualities of the particular poets. On this outline Dr. Smith drew a vivid picture of the Hebrew people. He has the veritable power of a Monet in creating an atmosphere. That is, all his figures and picturesque phrases kept his hearers in the Semitic land because every expression came from the vocabulary of Israel. The listener was set at once in the Arabian desert. He saw the loneliness, moved with those people on their long journeyings, shared in their starved patience and fierce outbreaks of hungry cursing. He watched with them under the stars. Then the change from the nomadic life to the home in Palestine assumed a place of new meaning in historical events, because he knew what came before it. Constant illustration from familiar passages of the Bible linked the historical movement of Israel with its emotional expression.

Once in Palestine the lecture on Hebrew poetry of nature made one see the connection of geographical situation with human feeling. This lecture was richest of all in beauty and force of words, while it opened up the reasons why Hebrew poetry is a universal poetry, whether expressing nature or human experience. Some listeners had never realized before that the Hebrews wrote about the same world we live in. Their mountains have the same kind of formation, the sky was just as blue and the flowers were just the same as in many of our own States. The lecture on Miriam's Song, on Deborah's Song, and on the Song of the Well brought the hearer from the poetry of nature to that of human life. The poetry of everyday labor is illustrated in these songs, and here Dr. Smith took the evident text and preached. Perhaps the moral help gained was worth the artistic sacrifice.

The last lectures were on the Psalter, the Songs of David, and David himself. Here was a searching into the breadth and depth of this poetry which expresses every longing of the heart 2,000 years ago, as well as every yearning of the heart today. We all use David's words to voice our penitence for sin, though our sin may not be of the same degree as his. We use his expressions of loyalty and devotion, though we may not even approach them in sincerity. His poetry and that of the other grandest Hebrews is summed up in Dr. Smith's own word, "whole-hearted." It is full of paradoxes—picturesque and unpolished, passionate to frenzy and grandly calm, broken and musical. For this it is all the more human: it shows the difference between God and man while it expresses the faith of man in God.

We shall have to pass over Dr. Smith's careful discussion of Hebrew verse form, the musical quotations from the original, and the fresh interpretative reading of the English version. The Song to Saul and Jonathan and the Nineteenth Psalm never will have the same meaning as before to those who heard them read by this Scotchman.

The whole effect of these lectures was to bring a vivid breath of real life into the old writings. Many word and sentence surfaces, worn smooth and impenetrable, were broken up. The treasures of meaning beneath were heaved out into sight and touch. Yet this wider intelligence brought with it no loss of faith. The Bethel of Jacob is just as full of spiritual suggestion when we know that, asleep at the foot of the mountain, he saw the angels on the ladder of its rocky side. Is the naturalism of misty wooden rungs any more helpful to faith? While Dr. Smith thus gave us a truer historical knowledge of the incidents and motions of Hebrew literature, he deeply impressed us with his humble spirit and a reverence beyond our own. The familiar words of our English poet,

> Let knowledge grow from more to more
> But more of reverence in us dwell, are the best expression of the appreciation which Dr. Smith found, and of his influence which remains at Chautauqua.

CURRENT THOUGHT.

AT HOME.

The Morning Star notes some differences between the American Volunteers and the Salvation Army: "The new movement is in close sympathy with the churches. Many in the Salvation Army had endeavored to work, as far as possible, with the churches, but objection was made at headquarters. The Volunteers will put no hindrance in the way of their converts joining the different churches. They will observe the sacraments, though there is as yet no decision as to the form and method of baptism. More effort will be made in instructing their workers than the Salvationists make. Property will be held by trustees chosen for the purpose, instead of being deeded over to one man. So far as they can, without neglecting slum work, they will strive to reach a middle class of working men for whom no Christian body is specially working."

The Knapsack gives this account of the Boys' Brigade, of which it is the official organ: "The U. B. B. of A. has doubled in point of numbers. And yet we have not started as yet. This time next year should and will witness, we feel confident, a much greater and quicker growth than the one just past, and no far distant date see a regiment of a thousand boys in every large town throughout our land. What an army that will be in the years to come, when they have reached manhood and are prepared to battle for their country's good under the banner of the cross!"

The Christian Leader draws a distinction between reading the Bible and reading about the Bible, and adds: "We do not desire in this age to re-establish 'Bibliolatry,' but if in the light of all that is known about the Bible there could be instituted a more general reading of the Book itself, the work of the church and the minister would be greatly simplified and aided. If parents were so familiar with its contents that their incidental mention of it would lead their children to want to read it instead of being driven or bribed to the reading, or if it were so read in pulpit and Sunday school that the hearers would hear it not simply as a part of the service, but as a taste of a feast they can hardly wait to begin for themselves, perhaps the Bible would be a more familiar feature of the next generation. . . . The most interesting book in the world is the Bible, and now that the mask of superstition has been removed from it put it in the hands of the people and let them find the good things for themselves, and the good things will do them more good and be of more value to them, and they will enjoy the good, just as the manly man enjoys most the fruits of his own earning rather than those bestowed in charity."

I am sure that there is no difference of feeling in this country, and that the predominant sentiment in America now is a desire that there should be a decision and an early settlement of the dispute that has arisen. And I confess I am getting a little impatient that that settlement should be so long delayed. It is to settle a question of that kind that diplomacy exists, and I think I am speaking the sentiment of the majority of the people of this country when I say that what we desire to see is a settlement by peaceful arbitration of the differences between Great Britain and the United States of America, and that no personal pride, no diplomatic obstinacy, should be allowed to interpose to prevent a settlement to that end.—Sir Vernon Harcourt.

The proportion between the values of gold and silver is a mercantile problem altogether. . . . Just principles will lead us to disregard legal proportions altogether, to inquire into the market price [ratio] of gold in the several countries with which we shall be principally connected in commerce.—Thomas Jefferson.

The Home

DIRGE FOR A SAILOR.

BY CLINTON SCOLLARD.

Beyond the bourns of time and sleep,
Beyond the sway of tides,
A voyager o'er death's darksome deep,
His ship at anchor rides.

He who from boyhood never knew
A garden save the foam,
Whose only rooftree was the blue,
At last has found a home.

And what more fit than that the wave
He loved through life to stem
Should sing above his green sea grave
This sailor's requiem!

In many quarters there exists an unreasonable prejudice against the use of postal cards, yet one of England's greatest men, Gladstone, does not hesitate to avail himself freely of this convenient form of correspondence. Would that his example might influence a certain class of Americans who resent having their friends send them any missives by mail which are not screened by envelopes. Strict adherence to this arbitrary rule often occasions real inconvenience, especially when traveling, and Mr. Gladstone's plan of carrying postal cards, pen and ink with him wherever he goes is far more sensible. There are obvious limitations to the use of these cards which all well-bred persons would naturally respect, but let us not erect false and artificial standards against an article that is a positive blessing to all who carry on a large correspondence.

Public sentiment in regard to what constitutes the ideal home is being reflected in the Boston Journal, which offers a prize for the best description of such a home and daily prints some of the communications received. Naturally these differ, according to the character of the writer, yet we are impressed by the fact that the consensus of opinion favors Christianity as the foundation of the ideal home. All agree that neither money nor style, nor house nor furnishing is as essential as love and confidence, and that "the art of being kind is more than the art that adorns the walls." One sketch strikes a high note when it pictures a home "where love governs the household guided by the highest wisdom of intellect." Mother stands for the ideal home in the minds of many, and nearly every person assumes that there can be no perfect home without well-bred children. Though the spiritual ideal is made prominent, practical details are not ignored. It is generally thought that the housekeeping must be neat and systematic, the surroundings cheerful, furnishings not necessarily expensive, but dainty, healthful and comfortable. And we note that flowers, music, good books and pictures are as a rule considered necessary, and hospitality is often emphasized. We think too little about our ideals in this busy age, and the Journal is doing a real service in calling attention to such a subject.

There is nothing so luxurious as a constant congeniality of companionship. What is an armchair, or a cosy fireside or a well-spread table compared with souls that scintillate and respond at your touch, the quick comprehension, the never-varying harmony of spiritual kinship.—R. F. Horton.

SNAP-SHOTS AT MY FELLOW-TRAVELERS.

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

I.

They were a most unromantic looking old couple, Judge B. and his wife, who occupied the section next mine all the way from the Pacific coast to St. Paul. He was not unlike a monster olive in figure, with a big head, on which the hair was thinning, and spindle legs. She was lean and tall and smoky of complexion, and it was difficult to imagine that either of them had ever been young. They were apparently about sixty. The Judge called his wife "Mother," and she called him "Father." They had with them photographs of their children and grandchildren, and it was a regular part of each day's program for those pictures to be taken out and looked at. They were excellent travelers, considerate of each other and every one else, but the Judge was a bit nervous as they drew near to St. Paul, where they were to change cars. Being one of those fidgety beings who prefer to wait long rather than to hurry one minute, he rose early, taking great pains, however, not to wake his wife. He was quite dressed, and had gathered up all their belongings, and at last must rouse her. A sudden swaying of the curtain disclosed him bending over her and kissing her. She was quite deaf, and it was impossible for me not to hear his words. "Wake up, sweetheart!" he cried, with the tenderness of a young lover and stroking her faded hair.

II.

It was snowing fast, and melting as it fell. A score of smells, each one worse than the other, beset your nose. The lights in the great station twinkled smokily, and as I climbed into the train, stumbling in the dark, and saw that the car contained only men, my heart went down with a queer, cold dread. Many of the men looked rough and several were chewing tobacco, and spat every now and then audibly. There was no parlor car, and it was pressingly expedient that I take this train into southern Indiana. I had been warned that the journey would not be pleasant and I tried to fortify my courage by thinking of my forefathers who served at Valley Forge. But my spectacles steamed over, and as I groped my way to a seat I secretly felt as lost and forlorn as if I were in Kamchatka. I discovered a moment later that a woman had come in directly after me. She was just a fat, common looking, elderly person with a basket. As she took a seat across the aisle she threw back her blanket shawl. On her breast was a knot of white ribbon. My spirits rose. I was no more afraid of those men I had heard cursing than if a United States soldier were beside me armed with a gun. Perhaps the cursers also saw the white ribbon. I heard no more oaths all the two hundred miles of my journey.

III.

It was at Falls View and the express had stopped for the passengers to have a five minutes' glimpse of the matchless beauty and terror of Niagara. A party of young Germans stood looking down at the wonder with bared heads, and whispered their appreciation in jerky gutterals. Two Arabs in blue night-gowns, their belongings in what looked like potato sacks, were just beyond, their dark faces glowing, their long fingers pointing. All sorts of travelers jostled each other, for the train was long and crowded. The sun low down the west filled the American falls with wonderful combinations of lilac, pale rose and green tints sifting in with its diamond white. The great leap of the Horse-shoe was emerald. A deep organ-like chord came up out of the gulf. Nowhere else is the spectacle quite so exquisite. Returning I saw a young woman crocheting at a window. She was also chewing wax. "I've seen it twice," she was assuring some one incisively. "What do I want to see it again for?"

IV.

It was in my own New York. The folk were well dressed, and evidently prosperous. There was a baby of two years with them, not the only child of the family for there were two others, a boy and a girl. The baby was an adorable creature, and while it was awake they kept it making faces. It was the mother who had discovered the infant's talent in this direction, and when it did not of its own will draw its cherub mouth and cheeks into some strange contortion, she incited it to new effort by crying, "Make a face for mamma now!" "Make a face at papa, and Auntie Nell." Just what the older children had been stirred up to do in infancy I cannot imagine, but they were loudly and intensely disagreeable, and would not be put down by such admonitions as, "For mercy sake keep still! I never saw such young ones in all the born days of my life," etc., for two hot hours, while the helpless on-lookers reflected upon the sayings of Solomon and the training of twigs in the way they should grow.

V.

It was a shabby station in central Iowa. It was a junction, and many people from many points of the compass were waiting. It was midsummer, and it seemed that the folk living in the little towns of Nowhere round about were going for brief outings to other Nowheres. A pretty, apple-blossom-faced woman attracted me so that I drifted over and sat down beside her. A freckled-nosed boy sat on the other side of her. It was plain that the two were mother and son, and great cronies. It was plain, too, they were very poor, for the woman's costume suggested much making over, with the help of unsatisfactory paper patterns. After a time a mouse crept out of a hole under the bench on which we sat, and I drew the boy's attention to the creature. He dropped some bits of cake down to it, but it fled, scared. It soon returned, and then, perhaps, to make a sensation, ran into the middle of the room. Then went up an absurd series of shrieks and shouts, the boy, meanwhile, sitting beside his mother, perfectly quiet, and smilingly patting her hand.

"Are the women really afraid that they scream?" he asked, when the mouse had disappeared, and quite as if his mother were another boy, "or is it because they're not ladies?"

A candy peddler came in and the mother bought five cents worth of taffy and laid it in her son's hand.

"But your new bonnet," he expostulated, putting his head close to hers. "I don't want you buying me treats till you have that bonnet."

"You must eat, Davy dear," she replied; "I can spare the five cents."

"I hope you can," he said, evidently doubtful. "I do so want you to have a bran-span new bonnet, mumsie dear."

VI.

"Your train's late, miss," said the station master when I asked why I must wait at Richland, instead of going on as I had expected. "It'll be along in about an hour."

I found an old lady in the dim, barn like station. She at once informed me she was "dreadfully worked up" not to go at once to "Utiky," as she had expected. "I live at Utiky," she volunteered, "and I'm going back home prob'ly to wait on one of his everlasting nieces." Then with a sudden change in tone, say a drop of 100 degrees, she inquired if I was going on a visit. When I replied that I was not she again became friendly. "July an' August are terrible tryin' with no help when you've only your own family to do for," she resumed, "but some folks think it's just the time to saddle themselves on somebody. I'm married to my second, and he has consid'able means, an' we might take comfort. We do, some. My first had lung complaint and I had five children. I know what it is to work. But a body gits tired in thirty years. My children are all gone, an' my second he never had but one, a daughter, and she is gone. As I've said, we might take comfort, but I've got nine nieces an' he's got seven. There ain't any of 'em that write me unless they want something. Then I git a letter beginning, 'Dear auntie'— Humph! I know I'm elected when I see one of their envelopes. Sometimes they bring fancy work. But generally, they don't bring anything but story books. They all sit around so." She folded her hands in a droll rabbit fashion across her ample breast. "I do my own work. I can't git used to havin' a girl 'round plaguing. Of course when I git breakfast I want it eat when it's hot. But my nieces and his'n—they're women grown—won't git up to seven o'clock breakfast. They say they come to my house to rest. Now there ain't much rest in that for me, for I have nettle rash in summer, an' I have asthma, too. I'm willin' to be accommodatin', the dear knows, but I don't like being made a convenience of, an' I don't like to have grown up women as ought to have some sense callin' me 'Dear auntie,' an' then comin' an' makin' me git two breakfasts. An' I don't like bein' called from the islands when I was takin' my comfort either."

"It is too bad," I sympathized, "to have your outing broken in upon by an undesired visit."

"You may well say it!" The old lady's mouth went together with a snap. Then a sudden gleam shot over her face, and she bent forward and spoke low, as if to prevent any possible listener from hearing: "I believe I'll tell you just what I'm aimin' to do. I'm aimin' to git to Utiky for the south-bound train and to go down Sherburn way to make some visits. My husband, Mr. Fitch, he don't know about Almiry's letter. She isn't on his side, any way, and she's the most aggravatin' of the whole lot. It'll look as if I missed gittin' it. Almiry dreadfully needs a dose o' jus' such medicine."

A far-away whistle tooted. I was soon on my way to Syracuse. How very much I would like to know if Mrs. Fitch was able to carry out her scheme for the suppression of an inconsiderate visitor!

No work begun shall ever pause for death.—Browning.

HOW ESTHER SEES STARS.

BY LUCY NOBLE MORRIS.

Somewhere in his writings Thomas Carlyle laments the fact that in his younger years those who had charge of his education made no attempt to familiarize his mind with the names of such common objects as the wild flowers and constellations. Esther, a young girl living in a quiet country parsonage, can make no such complaint, for she is fortunate in having guardians who have taken pains to instruct her in nature's ways, and is favored in the acquaintance of a man much older than herself and of like tastes, who has made "friendship with the stars." He began his astronomical studies with an opera glass, and has recently indulged in a 2 1-4 inch telescope that he would not exchange for a Yerkes or Lick. One day when he presented Esther with a field glass her enthusiasm knew no bounds. That and her planisphere are numbered now among her dearest treasures.

She is an ordinary girl with an ordinary education, and never expects to discover a comet or double star. We cannot all be positive scientists, and heaven help the world if we could be, but what is to hinder our becoming enthusiastic star students like Esther and her old friend? We would get ten fold as much enjoyment out of life if we were familiar not only with the "faces" of the stars, but with their names, histories and formations. Star names are a study in themselves, and the countless allusions to the stars in the literature of our own as well as other lands are well worthy the attention of young people as they read Tennyson, Browning, Lowell and others.

Let us imagine ourselves attendant satellites on Esther as she goes out star gazing one of these calm August nights. Near the zenith Boötes leads his hounds, Asterion and Chara, as he drives the great star herds, almost touching with his spear Corona Borealis, the crown that Bacchus gave to Ariadne and so sometimes called Ariadne's Crown—a constellation famous from classic times and very like the object for which it is named, certainly more so than is usually the case with our sky figures.

From this point Esther turns to look at the "vast convolutions" of Draco, who with "immense meanders parts the Bears." Job's allusion to the "crooked serpent" is recalled and dim recollections of the Custos Hesperidum, the watcher over the golden fruit, come floating along with memories of the old serpent that tempted Eve. Standing on Draco is Hercules, while on the Scorpion's back are Ophiuchus, the serpent bearer, and Serpens, the serpent. Of the royal family only Cepheus and Cassiepeia are noticeable, for Andromeda, their daughter, and Perseus, their son in-law, are better studied among the autumn constellations. The queen is the most interesting by far, for her old husband is very dim and inconspicuous.

Leaving Cassiepeia Esther's attention is next attracted by "the streaming tresses of the Egyptian queen," for Berenice's hair (or, as Hudibras wrote, "Berenice's periwig") is a favorite constellation with young students. As Garrett P. Serviss writes in his charming book, Astronomy with an Opera Glass, "one might think the old woman of the nursery rhyme who went to sweep the cobwebs out of the sky had skipped this corner, or else that its delicate beauty had preserved it even from her housewifely instincts."

Toward the east is Pegasus, a winged steed, or rather half a one, for so the old astronomers pictured some others of their constellations—Taurus, Argo and Equuleus. Lowell's beautiful poem, Pegasus in Pound, is in Esther's mind as she gazes on the familiar square. The Eagle, the Dolphin, Taurus Poniatowski and Lyra, with the azure colored Wega and epsilon, the double-double, are all near the zenith; the Scales, Libra, where Saturn is now shining, Scorpio with the fiery Antares, and Sagittarius, the zodiacal Centaur, with his crown, are all in the south.

In full flight down the Milky Way is Cygnus, the Swan, with Albireo, the loveliest colored double star in the heavens, at the beak of the bird. This constellation is interesting as containing the nearest star of the northern heavens—61 Cygni, 43,500,000,000 miles away—and also a region about 5° in breadth made up of 331,000 stars. Indeed, just here is one of the richest parts of the Milky Way, that "mosaic of stars," the diameter of which is not traversed by light in less than 13,000 years. Who does not love that

> Broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
> And pavement stars,

the pathway of the gods!

When we think that each one of the 20,000,000 stars that comprise this luminous zone are suns, and not only suns but centers of planetary systems greater than our own, are we not impressed with the comparatively small part planet earth plays in the drama of God's spheres?

Our nearest neighbor is 4 3 "light years" away from us, to speak in the astronomer's language. Light travels 186,327 miles a second. Alpha Centauri then being 4.3 light years away, you have only to multiply 186,327 by the number of seconds in 4.3 light years to get the miles of distance. Figure it for yourselves and note your sensations as you realize you are ciphering about a sphere that for all you know may be extinct ere this. When you look at Sirius you see it as it was eight or nine years ago. There are stars visible in our great telescopes probably many thousand times further off from us whose light must have occupied a period of not less than a thousand years in its journey to the earth.

Remembering these facts, exalted and enlarged to all the limit of her vision on this summer night, is it any wonder that to Esther the "sky is full of God?" The impression created on her mind as she gazes up into the heavens in the still hours when the turmoil of the day is hushed, when even the flower world is asleep, is one of humility, "What is man that Thou art mindful of him?" of reverence, "How wonderful are Thy works!" and of aspiration, "That which I see not teach Thou me."

WITHIN.

To fail in finding gifts, and still to give,
To count all trouble ease, all loss as gain,
To learn in dying as a self to live—
This dost thou do, and seek thy joy in pain?
Rejoice that not unworthy thou art found
For love to touch thee with his hand divine;
Put off thy shoes, thou art on holy ground;
Thou standest on the threshold of his shrine.
But canst thou wait in patience, make no sign,
And where in power thou fail'st—O, not in will—
See sore need served by other hands than thine,
And other hands the dear desires fulfill,
Hear others gain the thanks that thou wouldst win,
Yet be all joy? Then hast thou entered in.

—Anna C. Brackett.

HURRAH FOR OLD NEW ENGLAND.

[See Conversation Corner.]

This is our own, our native home,
Though poor and rough she be,
The home of many a noble soul,
The birthplace of the free.
We'll love her rocks and rivers
Till death our quick blood chills,
Hurrah for old New England,
And her cloud-capp'd granite hills.

CHORUS.

Hurrah for old New England,
And her cloud-capp'd granite hills.

Shall not the land, though poor she be,
That gave a Webster birth,
With pride step forth to take her place
With the mightiest of the earth?
Then for his sake whose lofty fame
Our farthest bound'ries fills,
We'll shout for old New England,
And her cloud-capp'd granite hills.

They tell us of our freezing clime,
Our hard and rugged soil,
Which hardly half repays us for
Our springtime care and toil;
Yet gayly sings the merry boy,
As his homestead farm he tills,
Hurrah for old New England,
And her cloud-capp'd granite hills.

Others may seek the western clime,
They say 'tis passing fair,
That sunny are its laughing skies
And soft its balmy air;
We'll linger round our childhood's home
Till age our warm blood chills,
Till we die in old New England,
And sleep beneath her hills.

AN AMERICAN QUEEN AND AN ENGLISH PRINCESS.

BY F. J. D.

A little incident occurred in Holland on the Fourth of July which I am sure will interest all the young readers of the Congregationalist. I might hesitate about making the affair public were it not for the impression which it made upon some English people who were with the "Pilgrimage Party." It is well sometimes "to see ourselves as others see us," and here is the exact reply of a charming English young lady when I asked her what features of the trip had particularly impressed her. She said:

"I do not think I shall ever forget one simple scene which took place in the Parliament House at The Hague. The party was assembled in the large hall looking at the seats of the councilors, the president and the young queen, Wilhelmina. It struck one of the gentlemen that we had among us a girl just about the queen's age, so he came up to her, offered her his arm and said with a profound bow, 'May I conduct your Majesty to the throne?'

"The girl got up, allowed him to lead her up the steps, and took her seat on the throne with a charming modesty and a wonderful absence of self-consciousness. After the ubiquitous kodak had done its work another gentleman put the finishing touch to the scene by coming up to the girl, putting his hand on her shoulder and saying: 'I arrest you as a usurper. Come with me to the dungeons,' and we all followed the queen and her jailer."

It was a trifling episode in a day's travel, yet it demonstrated that refined and gentle manners, true modesty and a sweet forgetfulness of self are queenly qualities as engaging in a simple American girl as in one of royal blood. It was gratifying, too, that a cultured Englishwoman should observe these traits in our little American queen, because, alas! young ladies from "the States" have too frequently the reputation abroad of being bold and ill-bred, so we are always glad when we can refute this charge by living illustrations to the contrary.

Somehow this thought that in the kingdom of girlhood all may attain the crowning grace of a lovely character, whether she be peasant or princess, came forcibly home to me shortly afterwards when I saw a real princess royal receiving the homage of a nation on the occasion of her wedding. The bride was Princess Maud, the youngest of the three daughters of the Prince of Wales, and the groom was Prince Charles of Denmark, who, by the way, is about three years younger than his wife, who was born Nov. 26, 1869. The ceremony was performed in Buckingham Palace and of course all London was astir with excitement. Streets and buildings were profusely decorated, the Danish colors of red and white appearing in all sorts of floral and other designs. The procession was more picturesque than anything we have in America, because there were so many soldiers, also companies of policemen adorned with Jubilee medals, military men on horses clothed with red and gold cloth rugs, the band of the Life Guards, each man wearing his long, gold-faced coat, jack boots and velvet hat, the famous Beefeaters in their quaint costumes and gorgeously gilded state carriages.

But none of these novel features interested me half so much as hearing what the people said about the bride, and seeing their genuine love for her. It was evident that she is one of the most popular of all the English princesses, and when I asked the reason for this the reply invariably was, "O, because she's so good and kind, just like her mother." So here was another girl who had won the hearts of people, not on account of royal birth or the possession of priceless jewels, but by her qualities of character. The bride's mother, it will be remembered, was a daughter of the King of Denmark, so the two nations will be bound together more closely than ever by this marriage of young people belonging to the second generation. Princess Maud has been carefully trained and her mother has been exceedingly strict in regard to her reading, no novels at all being allowed in the school-room, and even now the daughters are not permitted to read any book which has not been previously scanned by their mother or a lady-in-waiting. Prince Charles is a sailor and last year made an expedition to Iceland, where he was very popular on account of his modest and manly bearing. He is credited with being the first to introduce the bicycle into the Danish royal household.

We Americans are interested in this marriage of Victoria's grandchild because, as one of the English papers said, "There is one keynote which, during her reign, has guided her own family life and that of all the royal circle, and that may be expressed in the sweetest word in our language—home."

I define a fanatic as the first man who sees a question. When more see it he is called an enthusiast, and when everybody sees it he is a hero.—Lady Henry Somerset.

Progress, man's distinctive mark alone,
Not God's and not the beasts'; God is, they are,
Man partly is, and wholly hopes to be.
—R. Browning.

Closet and Altar

Let prayer be the key of the morning and the bolt of the evening.

Be sure of this, that the one longing which will never be disappointed, nor when answered will prove to have given us but ashes instead of bread, is the longing to be like God and like Christ.—Alexander Maclaren.

Art tired?
There is rest remaining. Hast thou sinned?
There is a sacrifice. Lift up thy head;
The lovely world and the over-world alike
Ring with a song, a happy rede,
"Thy Father loves thee."
—Jean Ingelow.

When Christ becomes so close a friend that we are ready, even in our times of discouragement, to act upon his bare word, as Peter did when he had toiled all night and taken nothing and yet could say, "Nevertheless at thy word I will let down the net," our prayers are not likely to return to us without sufficient answer. Acquaintance with God is the true preliminary of successful prayer. It comes from living with God rather than from study, however deep or long. Those who live with him become partakers of his purpose and learn to ask according to his will. This power in prayer is the possession of the friends of God like Abraham and Elijah, neither of whom seem to have been users of books. Of all prayers, therefore, the safest and most fruitful for a beginner must ever be the prayer that God would reveal himself to us through Christ.

An easy thing, O Power divine,
To thank thee for these gifts of thine—
For summer's sunshine, winter's snow,
For hearts that kindle, thoughts that glow;
But when shall I attain to this—
To thank thee for the things I miss?
—T. W. Higginson.

If we would ask anything in the name of Jesus, we must be sure that we are ourselves in that name, our life being hid in his life, our name in his name. Then let us be sure that what we ask we want for his sake, and that it is something he would ask for us if he were actually standing in our stead and putting up our petitions for us. Coming thus to the Father we come in the name, in the spirit and in the likeness of his Son; and the Father will hear us and answer us because we are representatives of his Son, enwrapped by and dwelling within his very self as the supreme representative of the Father.—H. Clay Trumbull.

Grant, Almighty God, that our meditation of thee this day may be sweet; that pondering upon thine unchangingness we may the better bear the changefulness of our lives; thinking of thy constancy we may better bear the fickleness of our feeling; meditating upon the largeness of thy love we may the better bear our own coldness. Whatsoever there is evil in us forgive. Whatsoever there is in us that is good, may the circumstances of our life, the friends of our soul, the meditations of our heart, foster and enlarge; so that knowing that which is good in time, we may better hope for that which is good in eternity, and rise through the poor goodness of mortal man to the understanding of the infinite goodness of the Lord our God. Amen.

Mothers in Council.

EXIGENCIES OF CHILDHOOD.

As childhood is a season of emergencies the wise mother will prepare to meet and combat them. Some of them are trivial, but many of them are of grave importance. A physician is not always at hand when the numerous accidents which befall a child occur, so it is well for the mother to be informed of preventives and cures in cases of most common occurrence.

Convulsions. To an inexperienced person no moment is more terrifying than one in which a child suddenly goes into convulsions, although they are of quite common occurrence. They may be produced by many different causes, but are generally the result of indigestion, teething or worms in the intestines. Sometimes they are the first symptoms of diseases of the spine or brain. Usually they occur in children from five to twelve months of age, and seldom after the eighteenth month. No particular alarm need be felt when a healthy child has a convulsion, for it will pass away as soon as the cause is removed and leave no bad effect. Convulsions begin with a twitching of the face and limbs, rolling of the eyes, stiffening of the body and unconsciousness. When such symptoms are observed the child should be immediately undressed and placed in a bath as hot as the water can be borne, into which has been stirred a handful of mustard, and cloths wrung out of cold water should be placed on the head. After the muscles have become relaxed the child may be dried, wrapped in warm covers and put to bed. If the attack has been caused by undigested food the administration of an emetic will give the quickest relief. If the bowels are constipated an enema may be given, followed by a gentle cathartic.

Bruises. A restless, active child falls so often that some part of its body is usually marked by black and blue spots, caused by the blood pouring into the tissues from the rupture of the small blood vessels. Any further flow of blood into the bruised surface may be prevented by either a very hot or very cold application. An excellent remedy is the application of cloths wrung out of hot oil, and removed as fast as they cool. A good and less troublesome treatment consists in binding a cloth wet with witch-hazel about the bruise. If a child falls on its head it may be stunned for a short time, perhaps will vomit and then go to sleep. These symptoms need not alarm the mother, as they are very favorable to its recovery.

Cuts and wounds. Second in frequency to bruises are cuts, and if mothers understood dressing such injuries many bad scars could easily be prevented. Cleanliness is the first and greatest factor in successfully dressing a wound. If the mother is to undertake the operation she should first wash her hands in hot water and see that her nails are perfectly clean. Boiled water should then be poured into a clean vessel, and a soft cloth, which has been previously washed in hot water, be used to remove from the wound any blood, dirt and other foreign substances. If these precautions are observed they reduce to a minimum any danger from blood poisoning. Then cut adhesive plaster into strips about a quarter of an inch wide and as long again as the wound. Some one should then hold the two edges of the wound so they will come together closely and accurately while the mother warms a piece of the plaster and places it diagonally across the wound, fastening it firmly to the skin at each side. Other strips may be placed in the same way, leaving a small space between each one. Only in case of a tiny cut is one justified in covering the entire wound. If matter of any kind is discharged it should be carefully wiped away without removing the dressing.

Nose bleed. The nasal cavity is lined with small blood vessels and they may be made to bleed by too sudden and rapid beating of the heart, mental emotion, over-exertion, or picking the nose. The bleeding may be stopped by pressing the fingers firmly against the side of the nose near the upper lip, if the bleeding is from the arteries which cross the face. Occasionally it is necessary to apply ice cold cloths to the forehead or to the back of the neck, and it is a good plan to have the child lie down. Bleeding of the nose is frequently seen in typhoid fever, some diseases of the heart and liver and yellow fever.

Burns. The quickest method of relieving the sufferer is to cover the burn with common baking soda. Then mix equal parts of linseed oil and lime water, apply to the parts and cover with cloths.

Insect bites. When a child has been stung by a spider, bee, or any other insect, look for the sting, which is often left in the wound, and remove it. Then apply a paste made of baking soda and water; if this does not speedily give relief touch the spot with ammonia or witch-hazel.

Accidents to the eyes, ears, nose and throat. A child not infrequently gets cinders, dust and other foreign substances into the eye, and unless the mother knows how to remove the cause it may suffer very much, and perhaps permanently injure the eye before a physician can be reached. The child must not be permitted to rub the eye, as it will only add to the irritation. The mother may place a lead pencil over the upper lid and gently turn the lid back over the pencil, exposing the eyeball to view. The cinder or other substance may then be seen, and removed with a soft cloth. If it is found impossible to hold the child quiet enough for this treatment, place a flaxseed in the eye, and after a few minutes the offending matter may be removed with the tears and the mucous from the seed.

A child may sometimes put a bean or button into its ear, or some foreign body may enter it by accident, or an insect may fly into it. In case of the latter accident throw a little warm water into the ear with a small syringe made for the purpose, and hold the ear downward; the insect will float out in the water. If the foreign substance is a bean it is advisable to have it removed as soon as possible, as it will swell when moistened and produce much pain. If the mother attempts to remove it she must be very careful, as it is dangerous for an inexperienced person to tamper with the ear if she is using a hard instrument. If a foreign substance gets into the nose press firmly upon the opposite side and have the child blow its nose violently. If this does not remove it, it must be pulled out with a curved instrument.

Sometimes to a mother's great horror she will see a pin, button, tack, or other small article passed into the child's mouth. If she can quickly turn it head downwards and strike it rather sharply between the shoulders, she may prevent its swallowing the object. If she fails the child should be fed for several days upon oatmeal, rice, graham bread and other coarse foods, which will carry off the object without harm. Accidents will happen in the best regulated families, but if the mother is prepared to meet them with practical knowledge she has nothing to fear.

MAUD C. MURRAY.

THE MOTHER'S LIBRARY.

We always welcome any fresh suggestions in regard to books, and therefore make room for this communication from a mother in Illinois:

"The Mother's Reading Club should have Bushnell's Christian Nurture. Possibly the first part may be passed over, as it is of a doctrinal nature, but the last and more practical portion of the book is a wonderful help to those who are training children.

"It gives me pleasure to recommend another book which I have found a most valuable aid in the study of nature with my children. The Reading Club might not find it desirable, possibly, but the mothers individually will appreciate it as a treasure. This book is Systematic Science Teaching, by Edward Gardiner Howe. It is No. 27 in The International Education Series, edited by Hon. W. T Harris, our Commissioner of Education at Washington. We do not know everything if we are 'grown up,' and it is refreshing to find a book which talks to the mothers as if they were children. It answers for us just the questions our children are constantly asking, and plans out just the simple lessons we would so gladly teach them." M. H. R.

A pure cream of tartar powder.

CLEVELAND'S

No Ammonia. No Alum.

BAKING POWDER

"Pure" and "Sure."

It is pure and wholesome.

It is always sure. No spoiled dough to be thrown away.

It is not a secret nostrum. Its composition is stated on every tin.

Only a rounded spoonful is required, not a heaping spoonful.

Cleveland Baking Powder Co., New York, Successor to Cleveland Brothers.

·Absolutely Pure-Delicious-Nutritious·

The Breakfast Cocoa
MADE BY
WALTER BAKER & Co. LIMITED
DORCHESTER, MASS.

COSTS LESS THAN ONE CENT A CUP.
NO CHEMICALS.

ALWAYS ASK YOUR GROCER FOR WALTER BAKER & CO'S. BREAKFAST COCOA MADE AT DORCHESTER, MASS. IT BEARS THEIR TRADE MARK LA BELLE CHOCOLATIÈRE ON EVERY CAN.

·AVOID IMITATIONS·

The Conversation Corner.

IN line with the Mexican transportation pictures shown you a few weeks ago is the cut below of the famous Japanese carriage. As I never rode in one nor saw one, I asked a Corner member, at whose home I happened to call, to tell us about it, because her father had been for many years a medical missionary in Japan.

WORCESTER, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: This picture is a carriage that the Japanese ride in. It is called a jinrikisha, which means man-power-carriage. It is drawn by one man, and when there is a steep hill there are two, one in the shafts and the other pulling on a rope which is fastened to them. The jinrikishas are generally single, seating one person, but they also have double ones, seating two. The fare is three sen a mile, and a man runs five miles an hour, but when hilly about three miles. A man can easily run forty miles in a day, with one or two stoppings for water or for a lunch. They are taught to run when they are boys, and that makes them very strong.

The jinrikisha was not invented by the Japanese, as many people think, but by an American Baptist missionary in Japan, who was one of the first to go to Yokohama. His wife was lame, so he made a large baby carriage with two wheels It was but a very rough looking one at first, but has since been improved. A Japanese saw it and liked it, and after a while one was made at Tokyo and now there are a great many.

Sometimes accidents happen to jinrikishas. One time we had a dog whose name was Benkei. When he would go too far from home and want to get back he would jump in a jinrikisha, and when the man would tell him to get out he would not stir. Then they would read his name and address on his collar and pull him home, and of course ask for money for bringing him back. One day papa was going to ride and Benkei was behind. After a while he became tired and jumped into the jinrikisha when it stopped. After the man started, the dog thought he would get up on the seat beside papa. This made the backward weight so heavy the man suddenly lost his balance and back went the jinrikisha, upsetting both my father and Benkei.

Before the jinrikisha was invented the Japanese used a kind of a basket chair which was carried by two men, suspended between their shoulders, and called a kâ-go. It is still used to go up mountains, and also by the richer class of people and those who like to keep up the old custom. The kâ go of the rich people is made of wood, lacquered and closed in on both sides. They have little doors and windows made of bamboo, so that the inmates may look out, and yet not be seen. The size of the pole on which the kâ-go hangs depends on the caste of the owner. The thicker and larger the pole, the higher the class of the person. The heavy ones require three or four men to carry them. The kâ-go men must keep very good step so as to make it comfortable for the rider. HELEN B.

It is rather singular that this old Japanese conveyance was called in their own language car-go, and that the new carriage, with an American inventor, should have such an expressive name as jin, man; riki, power; shâ, wheeled vehicle; that is, a Pull man car! I wish that Helen, or some other American girl in Japan, could have got a snap-shot of that jinrikisha with Dr. B., the missionary, B., the dog, and the unknown jinrikishaman upsetting together —it would have been equal to the grotesque scene when the bicyclist finds himself and his wheel suddenly tumbling over each other in the ditch! Two missionary girls from China told me a day or two ago of riding on the jinrikisha in China, and Mr. Gulick, the missionary, informed me that this conveyance is now used in all the great coast cities of China and Siam and to some extent in Ceylon.

The mention of Siam introduces a ? about that country:

Dear Mr. Martin: I am a little girl sixty years old (quite small of my age), and I read the Corner. I have just read An English Governess at the Siamese Court, by Mrs. Leonowens, written in 1870, and I wish to know more of Siam as it is now. Can you tell me of any recent book upon that country? I often wish some one would publish a book, perhaps in almanac form, at the beginning of each year, giving a brief summary of the rulers of the principal countries of the world, with their names, ages, etc. Do you know of any such book? MISS G.

Yes, exactly such a book has been published for many years in London (Macmillan), called the Statesman's Year Book, a Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the world. The issue for 1896 has six pages on Siam, including a bibliography, from which I quote two recent books: Vincent's Land of the White Elephant; Younghusband's 1800 Miles in a Burmese Tat, through Burmah, Siam, etc. [That must be the narrative of a bridal tour!—D. F.] Knox has Boy Travellers in the Far East, and Butterworth, Zigzag Journeys in the Antipodes.

And now I must answer two other literary questions, asked July 16, if for nothing else than to stop the flow of letters about them. "The little Schoolma'am's" wish for the poem, "Hurrah for old New England," is abundantly gratified by several copies from various members: E. S. and E. F. R., Newton Center, Mass.; E. B. R., Taunton; Mrs. S., Brighton; C. M., Holliston; Mrs. F., Marlboro, N. H., who says the words and music may be found in the "Trumpet of Freedom"; E. M. L., Norwich, Ct.; Miss P., Windsor, Ct., who says that "the Daughters of the American Revolution sing it"; Mrs. D., West Suffield, Ct., who copies them from an old singing book, The Nightingale; J. C. A., Chicago, who says it was "sung in the West by the Baker Family"; and others. Dr. G. writes about it from Andover; he says that at Savannah, in the winter of 1865, a quartette of the 14th N. H. V. band wished to use it in serenading General Sherman, and he remembered the air, having heard it once in Walpole, N. H., and it sounded sweet in the Southern night. A lady in Keene, N. H., writes:

The song was originally written "New Hampshire," afterwards changed to "New England." Its author, Mr. W. P. Chamberlain, is a prominent merchant here, but in his youth was at the head of a company who often sang this song.

The "Little Maine Schoolma'am," and all other New Englanders who wish to join in this patriotic and poetical Hurrah, will find the poem in full in the Home Department of this week. The other ? is—[is postponed to next week—for I wish to use this space to tell you, Cornerers, that I will "go you one better" than Mr. Martin on a prize. I am anxious to see something that goes faster than a Mexican ox-team or Japanese go cart, and will offer for the best "transportation picture"—land vehicle or water craft, yacht, catboat, dory, canoe, carriage, wagon, dogcart, saddle horse, bicycle, or anything else that has some "go" to it—one of Mr. Martin's Corner Scrap books (I know where he keeps them) and one dollar besides. I will give you till Sept. 16 (one day longer than Mr. Martin's offer), and any under nineteen can compete. Send to me, Care The Congregationalist.—D. F.]

Mr. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

Why Don't You Chew? Somewhere during my vacation trip I saw that question in great letters. On the next line, in smaller type, was the name—I have forgotten what it was—of a particular kind of "plug tobacco" which the placard was intended to recommend. I thought, as I walked along, that that ? was easily answered. It is a filthy habit. It is an unhealthy habit. It is an expensive habit. If it had been an intelligent boy instead of a cheap sign that asked the question I should have asked him another—Why do you chew? What possible reason—good reason, I mean—have you for filling your mouth and wearing out your jaws with that dirty stuff? I have queried in a similar way when I have seen signs and placards urging passers-by to smoke this or that cigar, as though it were a particularly beautiful and beneficial thing to do.

"Smoke Yum-Yum." I saw this sign frequently in one city. What is "yum-yum?" Why smoke anything? I suppose it is called a little more respectable than chewing a "plug"; it is certainly more fashionable. But of what good is it to you? It picks away your money, a good deal of it—enough in a week to buy a book, in a year or two to buy a bicycle. What do you get in return? "Yum-yum" —nothing. It is not food. It does not make bone nor brawn, blood nor brain. It does not add strength to your body nor clearness to your mind. When you come to think of it, does it not seem ridiculous for intelligent, refined men to go about the streets burning a poisonous weed in front of their faces, so as to suck in and puff out its sickening smoke? To me it looks frivolous and foolish—"yum-yum!" Boys who have begun to smoke ought to read a Chicago teacher's report in the Youth's Companion—I copy a part of it.

About Cigarettes. The teacher (in a public school) found that eighty of her scholars smoked, using from two to twenty cigarettes a day. Only six of the eighty did good work in their classes. The others suffered constantly from headache, drowsiness and dizziness. Many could not write well because their hands trembled. Some were "shaky" when they walked. They were sure to fail if asked to memorize anything. Several were five years too old for their grade, their progress ceasing after they began to smoke. But those boys who stopped the habit and joined the Anti-Cigarette Society said they "felt like different boys."

L. H. M.

The Sunday School

LESSON FOR AUG. 30. 2 Sam. 18: 9-17, 32, 33.

ABSALOM'S DEFEAT AND DEATH.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

Absalom's abilities and opportunities to do good deeds were great. He was a king's son, his father's favorite, had rare personal gifts, command of great wealth, many devoted friends, and was popular with the entire nation. But not one good deed is recorded of him. He prostituted his abilities to selfish indulgence, threw away all his opportunities and, just when he was making his supreme effort to gain the throne, he died helpless, like a fool, executed by the just act of one who had served and loved him. The record of the end of this evil life directs attention to these facts:

1. His death welcomed. The battle in the forest of Ephraim was one of the most important in the history of the world. If Absalom had won, the building of the temple would have been postponed, the character of the people would have been degraded, and probably the kingdom of David would have been destroyed. And all these perils were centered in the life of one bad man. With Absalom dead, his followers would no longer have any motive to fight. His death was good news to good men. Joab, Ahimaaz and the Cushite slave would all have run after Absalom so long as they had faith in him. But now they represented the various classes in the nation who rejoiced that his influence was ended. So weak and blind were many that that influence could have been ended only by his overthrow and death. Joab was ambitious, sometimes unjust and cruel. But he did a merciful thing when he thrust his darts through the heart of the pretender.

One man may become the evil inspiration to thousands. With pretended love to them he may live in their thoughts, kindling hopes as false as his own. Every selfish life absorbs into itself something in others that might have been sweet and helpful. Who has not known conspicuous cases which illustrate the far larger numbers in private life? It may be a political leader like Absalom, who professes to be a defender of the poor and oppressed, open-handed with his wealth and lavish with his praises of his followers. It may be a minister of the gospel, with unusual gifts, fine appearance and generous with money borrowed from his admirers. When at last he appears as a moral wreck all good people who knew his real character rejoice that it has been discovered. They are sorry that he was Absalom, but glad that men have ceased to follow him.

2. His death mourned. Could there be any one solicitous for the life of such a scoundrel? There was one man who mourned for him, the man who had most at stake in that battle. David sat in agonizing suspense waiting for news, first of Absalom, then of the battle. The contrast between the father's love and the heartlessness of the ingrate son is sharply drawn. David charged all his generals before the battle, "Beware that none touch the young man Absalom." On the other hand, "Ahithophel said unto Absalom, Let me now choose out 12,000 men, and I will arise and pursue after David . . . and I will smite the king only. . . . And the saying pleased Absalom well."

David's fear for the tidings that he felt were coming was sharpened by his sense of his own responsibility for Absalom's evil character. Many a son of saintly parents, like Aaron Burr, has become conspicuous in wickedness. But Absalom had shown evil tendencies which an upright father might have checked. Yet David's example had hindered him from governing his son wisely. His weakness had made his love a curse. He had tried to win Absalom by mistaken favors rather than by firm and just guidance. He had lavished money and honors on his splendid, reckless boy. He had condoned his crime and restored him, unrepentant, to favor—and Absalom despised him for his weakness and hated him for favors withheld which he had yet power to give. Where in the Bible is there a more miserable figure than that of the old king sitting between the gates of Mahanaim, with his kingdom trembling in the balance, almost certain to be lost if the idol of his heart should be saved? What more wretched picture can be conceived than that of a man who had gone on shirking his responsibilities as a father till his only hope of further prosperity lies in the sacrifice he most dreads, the death of his own child.

3. His false hopes. Absalom expected to make for himself a great name. He planned to be king of Israel. But while he was plotting to gain the throne he did not forget that he was to die. He could look calmly at death and yet be stirred by no good motive to use his life. He built his own monument and it stood long after, but only to keep in the minds of men his misuse of life and his disgraceful end.

We can be remembered only for what we are and have been. Any one who has opportunity and ambition is in danger of the temptation to live like Absalom and of desiring a monument like his, which will commemorate, not character, but gifts misused. Without unselfish aims at the outset of life there is no safeguard against false hopes concerning its monument.

4. His utter and final failure. There was nothing in the life of Absalom which men would wish to remember. There was much that would cause his memory to be detested. The only thing he bequeathed to his family was misery to the father whose love he had spurned. That was so keen that the barred doors of the chamber over the gate could not shut in the most pathetic moan in all history: "O, my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalom! Would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!" The people came together joyful with victory, but the wail of their bereaved king in that upper chamber so awed them that they stole away silently as in mourning. The heartless son had, in his death, broken his father's heart.

We close this study with two impressive lessons. The first springs from this revelation of a father's love. It has its parallel in the sobs of Jesus as he looked on Jerusalem from the Mount of Olives: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killeth the prophets and stoneth them that are sent unto her! how often would I have gathered thy children together even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." So God feels toward the sinner who has thrown himself away. What will not God do to save his lost children!

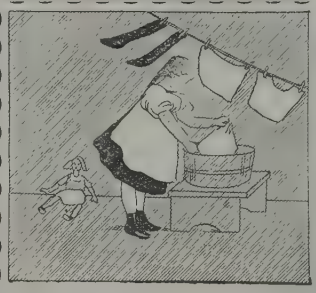
The second lesson springs from the unanimous verdict on Absalom of every generation from his death till now. There is, in the valley of Jehoshaphat, a monument, which is called the Tomb of Absalom. Every Jew who passes it throws a stone against it, saying, "Cursed be the memory of Absalom! and cursed be every child who rises up in rebellion against his parents." Everywhere it is the verdict of mankind that indifference to parents is a crime, and that the enmity of sons against loving fathers deserves only universal execration. But every one owes to God all that a child ever owed to a loving father. Is it not written in the very constitution of man that he who hates his Father in heaven and persists in rebellion against him shall be punished with everlasting destruction from his presence?

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING.

Topic, Aug. 23-29. Christian Giving. Luke 14: 12-14; 2 Cor. 9: 6-15.

How affected by loyalty to Christ? How by the objects to which we give? What is the true principle of giving? How should we distribute our gifts?

(See prayer meeting editorial.)



Strong Arms

are not necessary to do the washing when

Sunlight Soap

is used; it does most all the work itself. Just rub a little on the clothes, roll them up and put them back in the water. Then when you take them out you will see that

Sunlight Soap Does the work

Lever Bros., Ltd., Hudson & Harrison Sts., New York.

Pure and Wholesome

describes the new article of food just being introduced and for your health's sake you should investigate our

Cocoanut Butter

It is a superior article of guaranteed purity to be used in place of butter, lard or compounds in cooking. Requires only one-half to two-thirds the quantity used of other shortening. Endorsed by physicians for purity and by bakers and chefs for its economic value. Sold by all grocers. Write for free book about it.

THE PURE FOOD PRODUCT CO.,
544-554 N. Water St. CHICAGO.
McLellan, Brigham Co., 51 Cha'ham St. Boston.

Food for the Baby

If mother can't nourish it; if it is pale and thin, try

Somatose

Mother's Milk.

Somatose is a powder made from the most nourishing elements of meat, and used in proper proportion with sterilized milk forms the best substitute known for mother's milk. Send for formula, mailed free.

At druggists, in 2-oz., ¼, ½ and 1 lb. tins.

Also the following combinations, Somatose-Biscuit, Somatose-Cocoa, Somatose-Chocolate — each containing 10 per cent. Somatose. Very convenient and palatable preparations.

Pamphlets mailed by Schieffelin & Co., New York, agents for Farbenfabriken vorm. Friedr. Bayer & Co., Elberfeld.

WHITMAN'S INSTANTANEOUS CHOCOLATE.

Pure, Delicious Flavor. Mix with boiling milk or water, and it's made.

Stephen F. Whitman & Son, Philadelphia.

Literature

BOOK REVIEWS.

The Spirit in Literature and Life, the E. D. Rand Lectures in Iowa College for the year 1894, by John Patterson Coyle, D. D. Dr. Coyle's early and, from our earthly point of view, untimely death makes the task of the reviewer at once more difficult and more delicate. The opportunity of the E. D. Rand lectureship brought out in order thoughts over which the author had long been brooding, but had he lived he might have both amplified and corrected his teaching.

The spirit of the book is delightful; its breadth of thought and sense of the intimate relations of all knowledge, and its feeling of the onmoving world purpose of which Christianity is the most perfect and most powerful expression fill us with enthusiasm as we read.

Dr. Coyle begins by an attempt to show that there is a domain of study which science has left on one side in its search for the facts of the world—the domain of spirit. He defines what he means by this term, showing that it bears the test of objectivity, and that, while the spirit of a man, a cause, a nation is derived, it is nevertheless real and must be reckoned with. It is phenomenal and must be studied as a phenomenon. This he proceeds to do with reference to the spirit of the Old and the New Testament peoples and the inworking Spirit of God. The book is rich in suggestive material, often exceedingly fresh in thought and fully alive to the social aspects of modern life. "In short," says the author, in his summary, > we discovered a spiritual force operating from the first in Hebrew history and strangely differentiating and integrating it, maintaining in it a marked individuality and exclusiveness, while at the same time it kept it in organic relationships with world history. . . . a man was produced, evidently through the quickening of that spirit, fitted to stand at the center and summit of the world's development, and able to take and hold his place there and to compel history henceforth to revolve around him. This spirit became his spirit and has been his chief agent in mastering men. . . . So far has this imperial movement now gone that its destiny is within reach of scientific prediction, and it is manifest that it will re-create humanity. . . . Whether or not this faith is or ever will be scientifically verified or verifiable is not here said. What is affirmed is that it is scientifically certain that such faith will prevail.

This unifying and vivifying thought makes the substance of the book and it gains power from the self-restraint with which the author thinks and speaks. It is a noble monument of thought which the author has left to us. Some lesser hand must in a new edition add the topical index for lack of which the present edition suffers. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.]

HISTORY.

Volume IV. of Theodore Roosevelt's The Winning of the West covers the history of Louisiana and the Northwest from 1791–1807. It contains the story, vigorously grasped and narrated, of the great movement which changed the seaboard republic of the war for independence to the continental republic of today. The defeat of St. Clair and the victory of Wayne, the intrigues of the British on the North and the Spaniards at the South, the lingering Indian wars, and the effects of the land hunger and land speculation of the settlers, the conspiracies against the Government which have made the names of Wilkinson and Burr infamous, and the purchase of Louisiana are scenes in the drama enacted on the broad theater which Mr. Roosevelt has chosen for his narrative.

It is a pity that Americans are not more interested in the stages of national progress, and better acquainted with the elements from which our people's life has grown. It would help us to understand much of our nation's past, as well as to obliterate much sectional prejudice and passion, nor would it be wholly without fruit in enabling us to grasp the meaning of popular movements still existent among us and full of significance for our political life.

Mr. Roosevelt pays a well merited tribute of honor to the home missionaries who had so large a share in molding the opinion and leavening the social life of the new States and Territories. He is frank and outspoken in his opinion that it is a national duty to be strong and aggressive in maintaining our rights, in dealing with internal disturbers and with foreign nations, for which opinion the timidity and blunders of Washington's Secretary of War afford him a convenient text.

The proof-reading of the book is careless at times, and the style not free from roughnesses and defects, but the scene is so fresh and the author's enthusiasm so delightful that we are not disposed to be captious. There is a full index and an admirable map. For patriotic information and inspiration we wish that all Americans might read this book. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50.]

RELIGIOUS.

New Testament Conversions, Their Manifoldness, by Rev. William Charles Roberts, D. D, LL. D. Dr. Roberts came to the secretaryship of the Presbyterian Home Mission Board after successful pastoral experience East and West. He has taken a fruitful theme and done a useful work in showing that there are manifold experiences outwardly through which the Spirit works the miracle of the new birth. For instruction and for comfort to those who feel that because their conversion experience has not been the same as that of other men it may not be genuine, the book will be of the highest worth. [Presbyterian Board of Publication. 75 cents.]

Light on Life's Duties, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, M. A. Mr. Meyer is the successor of Newman Hall in his London pastorate, and is now in this country for the purpose of taking part in the Northfield Bible Conference. This book, made up of discourses and occasional papers, is intensely practical and will be of service on the lines which are most characteristic of the public ministry of its author—those of deepening and clarifying the faith and practice of the life with God. [Fleming H. Revell Co. 50 cents.]

Rev. A. W. Pitzer, D. D, of Washington has embodied in his book, The Manifold Ministry of the Holy Spirit, a condensed sketch of Christian belief in regard to the doctrine of the Spirit of God. The book has both the faults and virtues of an epitome. Its vigor and compactness, however, make it readable and valuable. [Presbyterian Board of Publication. 25 cents.]

Among writers of books of religious meditations John Gerhard holds an honored place. Published in Latin in 1606, his Sacred Meditations has been frequently translated and now comes to us in an agreeable English version by Rev. C. W. Heisler. It is a very practical book, not hesitating to deal with the duties of the common life as well as the aspirations of the spirit, and will be wholesome reading for Christians who are ambitious of a larger and deeper piety than they have attained. Like all the writings of its age, it attempts to make the thought of hell an impulse to repentance by heaping up imaginative pictures of the tortures of the lost and the duration of eternity, a process which is in unpleasant contrast with the reticence of Scripture, and which has produced, perhaps, too great a reaction, but there is a spirit of love and devotion in the rest of the book which makes it highly enjoyable. [Lutheran Publishing Society. $1.00.]

TRAVEL.

A beautifully illustrated account of a voyage along the coast of Norway, by Thomas Sedgwick Steele, bears the title A Voyage to Viking-Land. The pictures are so pretty and so well chosen that one is fain to keep his eyes on them rather than on the text, which is mainly an enthusiastic narration of what this particular party did on what is getting to be a popular and common summer trip. The frontispiece is a fascinating portrait of a girl in the becoming "Hardanger costume," while the views of characteristic Norwegian scenery give an excellent idea of the region to the unfortunate stay at homes. Altogether the book is attractive, including a good map of Norway, and would be valuable to tourists going over the same route. [Estes & Lauriat. $2 00.]

William Root Bliss is already well known for his studies of colonial times, and in his new volume, Quaint Nantucket, there is evidence of the same careful and thorough research noticeable in his earlier work. In it he gives an interesting picture of the island as it was 200 years before "the summer boarder" began to modernize it. Naturally the Quaker element is prominent, and there are many amusing and some pathetic evidences of the bare and monotonous life that Nantucket young people had to endure on account of the strict watchfulness of their narrow-minded elders. Old sea journals, town, court and Quaker records, as well as various public and private manuscripts, have served to make the volume valuable. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.]

Mr. Marion Crawford's bright and chatty description of Bar Harbor comes to us in a charming book beautifully printed and fully illustrated. Those who know Bar Harbor will enjoy reading and owning it, and those who hope to know it may have some of the pleasures of anticipation from its pages. [Charles Scribner's Sons. 75 cents.]

STORIES.

The Seats of the Mighty is a strong historical novel by Gilbert Parker, who has an established reputation in this kind of writing. The scene is laid in Quebec, just after the death of Braddock, and there are vivid pictures of the condition of the fated city and the causes which led to its fall, as well as of the final decisive battle on the Heights of Abraham where Wolfe laid down his life. But, accurate and valuable as is the historical setting, the love story dominates the book and is a thrilling tale of constancy and devotion. The plot is bold in conception and powerful in development; the characters are strong and fascinating. The hero is a young Virginian who is unjustly held in Quebec as prisoner, is finally accused of being a spy and is condemned to death. During the early months of imprisonment he was allowed the freedom of the city, and won the love of a noble girl whose skillful maneuvering several times delayed his execution. After long and cruel confinement, much of the time in a dungeon, he finally succeeds in escaping, and discloses to General Wolfe the plan of attack which results so successfully. The hero's enemy, Doltaire, half peasant, half king, fascinating yet evil, is wonderfully portrayed. Alixe, though the character seems a trifle overdrawn, is a noble tribute to the author's faith in the power of woman's love. [D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.]

Camilla, a novel translated from the Swedish and Danish of Richert von Koch, with illustrations by Edward H. Garrett. This is a bright and breezy book whose wayward heroine fascinates the reader as she did the other characters of the story, including both her lovers. How she went to the verge of reckless thought and speech, and was cured by a woman's challenge and her own awakened love for a noble man, is charmingly told; and there are lifelike glimpses of Swedish life and the ferment of modern Scandinavian thought. [Thomas Y. Crowell & Co. $1 25]

The Finding of Lot's Wife, by Alfred Clark, is a clever bit of Rider-Haggardish work, dealing with uncanny adventures and mysteries of the Palestinian desert. The statue of Lot's wife, gazing upon which made men (but not women) mad, is effectively used and the monastery on the top of the rock capitally described. Indeed, we find the stage machinery of the book rather more interesting than the actors. [Frederick A Stokes Co. $1.00]

Venus and Cupid, or a trip from Mount Olympus to London, by the author of The Fight at Dame Europa's School. The writer of this book describes it as "a new fantastic romance." A broad burlesque would be a more exact description. We fear that the humor will not always appeal successfully to our readers. It is quite too much to make respectable divinities so utterly childish and silly, and the human characters are not sharply enough drawn to be really interesting. After Lucian, who brought these same gods and goddesses to earth to satirize their claims to worship, a repetition of the device without a touch of serious purpose is like offering us bread without salt. But there are many humorous situations in the book for those who are easily amused. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.]

A King and a Few Dukes, by Robert W. Chambers, is an amusingly improbable romance so well told that few readers will quarrel with its absurdities. It represents an American cynic as having rented a valley of the Caspian Mountains with the understanding that he shall entertain all travelers. The king of Bosnovia and two dukes come upon him unexpectedly, making themselves very much at home, and later the royal aunt appears with her cortége. The novelty of the situation and its complications make entertaining summer reading. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25.]

STORIES FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Ruth Endicott's Way, by Lucy C. Lillie. The heroine of this book is the pet of the school and the model of all perfection. Her story of disappointment, poverty, self-reliance and recovered prosperity is pleasantly told with abundant good lessons upon morals and manners. It is a mistake, we think, to have made the heroine so faultless, but the book is of the class that girls love and pore over and Ruth will quite satisfy their ideal, no doubt. We suppose the confusion of "will" and "shall" is put into the mouth of one of the characters as a lifelike touch. [Henry T. Coates & Co. $1 25]

A Child of Nature, by Abner Thorp, M. D., which appeared first as a serial in the Western Christian Advocate, is undoubtedly written with a high moral purpose, but is precisely the sort of story which we wish might be kept away from young people. The "child of nature," Janie, is a sentimental young lady who converses in the most stilted, unnatural fashion and bursts into tears as readily as the heroine of any eighteenth century novel. One longs to set her spinning on a bicycle or rowing a boat, or to put her to some other physical exercise in order to infuse healthy blood into her body and sensible ideas into her mind. The other characters are overdrawn, and even the sound, ethical lessons which underlie the story cannot atone for its unwholesome sensationalism. [Curtis & Jennings. 75 cents.]

The Earl's Granddaughter, by Brenda, is a wholesome story of the life of a large family of rollicking boys and girls who loved outdoor sports and scorned conventionalities. Although poor, they sighed neither for money nor fine clothes, their chief delight being in helping those poorer than themselves. Their intimacy with an earl's granddaughter, and the contrast between her character and theirs, occupies a large part of the tale, which is much too long. [A. J. Bradley & Co. $1 50].

MISCELLANEOUS.

Primer of Philosophy, by Dr. Paul Carus. This is a revised edition of a book which has for some time been before the public. We recognize the essential reverence of its spirit while disagreeing with its postulate that nature and experience are the sole grounds of knowledge. Those who are thoroughly familiar with its topic will find it suggestive of the aims of men who are attempting to reconstruct "natural religion" on the basis furnished by evolutionary science, but it will only confuse the reader, we fear, who accepts the personality of God and his self-revelation to men. [Open Court Publishing Company. $1 00.]

A tasteful little book, which will be appreciated by lovers of Christina Rossetti, is The Rossetti Birthday Book. It is in the familiar form of brief quotations for every day in the year and corresponding blank spaces for the names or autographs of friends. The selections were made and the book is edited by Olivia Rossetti. [Macmillan & Co. 75 cents.]

In the series Practical Lessons in Nursing we have How to Feed Children, by Louise E. Hogan. The author quotes from the noted English physician that more mischief results from erroneous habits of eating than from the habitual use of alcoholic drink. She then gives clear and concise directions in regard to the proper food for children of all ages, with numerous well-tested recipes. She emphasizes the need of giving children—even babies—plenty of fresh water, having found mothers ignorant of the fact that the washing out of the digestive apparatus is quite as important as external bathing. She notes the fact that perfectly ripe bananas are easily digested, while before reaching that stage, and as commonly eaten, they are extremely indigestible. Mothers are told what food to give their children in winter, summer, when traveling and during illness; and the book, being thoroughly indexed, will prove a convenient and valuable aid. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.]

Volume X. of the sixth series of Littell's Living Age makes a handsome book and garners much of interest and permanent value from the English reviews and magazines.

NOTES.

—— The three autumn numbers of Scribner's will reproduce in colored frontispieces designs made by E H. Blashfield for a piano.

—— A third volume of selections from the unpublished poems of Emily Dickinson, edited by her friend, Mabel Loomis Todd, will appear in the autumn.

—— Ex-Secretary John W. Foster, who will entertain Li Hung Chang on his visit in September, has written an interesting sketch of his life and character for the August Century.

—— Nearly completed is the War Correspondents' Memorial Arch at South Mountain. It will be dedicated in the autumn, and bears the names of the newspaper men who accompanied the armies.

—— The New England Magazine for August contains an interesting article by George Willis Cooke upon the Institutional Church. The majority of the churches described and illustrated in the article are Congregational.

—— In answer to the Youth's Companion's offer of eight cash prizes for amateur photographs over 6,000 pictures were sent in. A free public exhibition of them in the Youth's Companion building in Boston shows how much the standard of amateur photography has advanced of late.

—— The Eugene Field monument committee have printed an illustrated book called Field Flowers, made up of the poems of the lamented Chicagoan, which they offer for sale at $1.10, for the purpose of raising a fund for a monument and for the comfort of the poet's family. The work of the thirty-five contributing artists is a gift to the fund.

—— An English author, in an article entitled Books for the Holidays, evidently written before Mrs. Stowe's death, says of her Old Town Folks:

Here is a book as simple as Cranford, as human as the Window in Thrums, more delightfully humorous than the first and not less full of human feeling than the second. In fact, all the beginnings of the modern idyl are here, and the whole picture of New England life is masterly in the highest degree. For a holiday no book could be better; it breathes the very air of the countryside and is a delight alike to mind and heart.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

H. L. Hastings. Boston.

A SQUARE TALK TO YOUNG MEN. By H. L. Hastings. pp. 95. 75 cents.

Harper & Bros. New York.

BLACK DIAMONDS By Maurus Jokai. Translated by Frances A. Gerard. pp. 459. $1 50.

A STORY OF THE HEAVENLY CAMPFIRES. By One with a New Name. pp. 219. $1 25.

THE PITH OF ASTRONOMY. By Samuel G. Bayne. pp. 122. $1.00.

American Baptist Pub. Society. Philadelphia.

SHADOW AND SUBSTANCE. By George C. Needham. pp. 199. 75 cents.

CONFLICT AND CONQUEST. By George C. Needham. pp. 123. 50 cents.

H. S. Stone & Co. Chicago.

EPISCOPO & CO. By Gabriele D'Annunzio. Translated by Myrta L. Jones. pp. 122. $1.25.

WITHOUT SIN. By Martin J. Pritchard. pp. 298. $1.25.

PAPER COVERS.

Lovell Bros. & Co. New York.

HEAVEN ON EARTH. By Gerald Thorne. pp. 243. 50 cents.

Conroy & Co. Chicago.

THE FAMILY RECORD. Cloth 50 cents. Leather $1.00.

T. J. Carey & Co. New York.

THE GOLD AND SILVER QUESTION AT A GLANCE. 10 cents.

MAGAZINES.

July. CRITICAL REVIEW.

August. CHRISTIAN LITERATURE.—OUR ANIMAL FRIENDS.—COSMOPOLITAN.—CATHOLIC WORLD.—MUSIC.—WINDSOR.—PANSY.—LEND A-HAND.

News from the Churches

Benevolent Societies.

THE CONGREGATIONAL HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY is represented in Massachusetts by the MASSACHUSETTS HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY, No. 9 Congregational House, Rev. Joshua Coit, Secretary; Rev. Edwin B. Palmer, Treasurer.

WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Room No. 32, Congregational House. Office hours, 9 to 5. Annual membership, $1.00; life membership, $20.00 Contributions solicited. Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Treasurer.

AMERICAN BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS, Congregational House, No 1 Somerset Street, Boston. Frank H. Wiggin, Assistant Treasurer; Charles E. Swett, Publishing and Purchasing Agent. Office in New York, 121 Bible House; in Chicago, 153 La Salle St.

WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS, Rooms 1 and 2 Congregational House. Miss Ellen Carruth, Treasurer; Miss Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Bible House, New York. Missions in the United States, evangelistic and educational, at the South and in the West among the Indians and Chinese. Boston office, 21 Congregational House; Chicago office, 153 La Salle Street.; Cleveland office, Y. M. C. A. Building. Donations may be sent to either of the above offices, or to H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer, 108 Bible House, New York City.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH BUILDING SOCIETY —Church and Parsonage Building. Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., Secretary; H. O. Pinneo, Treasurer, 59 Bible House, New York; Rev. George A. Hood, Congregational House, Boston, Field Secretary.

CONGREGATIONAL EDUCATION SOCIETY.—(Including work of former New West Commission.) Aids four hundred students for the ministry, eight home missionary colleges, twenty academies in the West and South, ten free Christian schools in Utah and New Mexico. S. F. Wilkins, Treasurer. Offices, 10 Congregational House, Boston, 151 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. Address, 10 Congregational House, Boston.

CONG. SUNDAY SCHOOL & PUBLISHING SOCIETY.—Contributions used only for missionary work. Rev. George M. Boynton, D. D., Secretary; W. A. Duncan, Ph. D., Field Secretary; E. Lawrence Barnard, Treasurer, Congregational House, Boston.

MASSACHUSETTS BOARD OF MINISTERIAL AID.—Treasurer, Mr. Arthur G. Stanwood, 701 Sears Building, Boston Address applications to Rev A. H. Quint, D. D., Congregational Library, 1 Somerset Street, Boston.

MINISTERIAL RELIEF.—In order to afford a little timely aid to aged and disabled home and foreign missionaries and ministers and their families, the committee of the National Council asks from each church one splendid offering for its permanent invested fund. It also invites generous individual gifts. For fuller information see Minutes of National Council, 1892. and Year-Book, 1893, page 62. Secretary, Rev. N. H. Whittlesey, New Haven, Ct.; Treasurer, Rev. S. B Forbes, Hartford, Ct. Form of a bequest: I bequeath to the "Trustees of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States" (a body corporate chartered under the laws of the State of Connecticut) [here insert the bequest], to be used for the purpose of Ministerial Relief, as provided in the resolution of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States at its session held in Chicago in October, 1886.

THE CONGREGATIONAL BOARD OF PASTORAL SUPPLY, established by the Massachusetts General Association, offers its services to churches desiring pastors or pulpit supplies. Careful attention is given to applications from without the State. Room 22A, Congregational House, Boston. Rev. Charles B. Rice, Sec.

THE BOSTON SEAMAN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, organized 1827. Chapel and reading-room, 287 Hanover St., Boston. Open day and evening. Sailors and landsmen welcome. Daily prayer meeting, 11 A. M., Bible study, 3 P. M. Sunday services, usual hours. Meetings every evening except Saturday. Branch mission, Vineyard Haven. Is a Congregational society and appeals to all Congregational churches for support. Send donations of money to B. S. Snow, Corresponding Secretary, Room 22, Congregational House, Boston. Send clothing, comfort bags, reading, etc., to Capt. S. S. Nickerson, chaplain, 287 Hanover St. Bequests should read: "I give and bequeath to the Boston Seaman's Friend Society the sum of $——, to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said society." Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS.

There will be little excuse now for not having the needed new building in a Vermont town.

The summer visitors at that California resort made a fine record in church attendance. May their tribe increase!

The consecration of such a house in a Wisconsin town is a suggestion of a decided change of taste such as will benefit every phase of life in the community.

A New England church which had the courage to solicit pledges under the disheartening conditions of extreme heat and a small congregation did not find itself regretful at the close of the attempt.

That Nebraska pastor who discovered and put out a fire in the meeting house before any damage was done is indeed a true shepherd, far removed from the hireling who, in time of danger, fleeth because he careth not for the sheep.

Hot weather in Connecticut resulted in the substitution of open air services for those held regularly indoors. In another place of that State an opposition is started to suppress a disturbance which is of common occurrence in many localities. Success in the attempt may encourage such efforts elsewhere.

It would seem to be a work of mercy which, if long delayed, may become one of necessity, to excuse that Iowa pastor from some one of his five Sunday services. The same treatment would doubtless work equally well in the case of that other minister in the Hawkeye State whose regular program for the blessed day of rest includes the preaching of four sermons.

As long as such glowing reports of progress come from that New Hampshire church on the hill we can hardly refrain from repeating the insertion of its name. The enthusiasm which it has lately shown over its new equipment is not allowed to die out, but, with the hope which the church expressed at its dedication, its spiritual activity is strongly reenforced. Without question other churches, having outgrown their present quarters, need only the invigoration which comes with the effort to provide larger opportunities to broaden their inner, as well as their outward, life.

HOW ONE CHURCH REACHES YOUNG MEN.

That young men cannot be drawn into the active work of the church by the older, conventional methods is generally admitted. As to how far the church would better depart from its time-honored routine is not so unanimously agreed upon.

The tendency of the times in the attempt to reach all classes is toward the institutional church. In general churches are taking on that form in a greater or lesser degree. As a rule, however, the popular idea has been that such methods are in the main adapted only to specific fields in the large cities. And yet we find the new idea taking root in suburban towns also, where the so-called "masses" do not live. Such a transformation has been gradually taking place in the church at Melrose Highlands, Mass.

A GROUP OF LEAGUE MEMBERS.

A community could hardly be found which would seem less adapted to the institutional idea. Situated in the midst of a population almost universally provided with beautiful homes, with no constituency of what would be called poor people, this church might seem to have little need or opportunity for the application of the new idea But since the coming of the present pastor, Rev. B. F. Leavitt, about three years ago, the church has been continually widening its activities according to modern methods. And this, too, under the leadership of a pastor who is in his theology a conservative of the conservatives. On his arrival in this field Mr. Leavitt was told the old, old story that greets so many a new pastor's ears—that there were "no young men" in the church or congregation. Soon after his settlement the new leader gave his attention especially to the question of organized work for young men.

While the town of Melrose has one of the finest equipped Young Men's Christian Associations in the country, the Highlands community is so situated that there is little opportunity for that organization to reach this section of the town.

Mr. Leavitt invited any young men that there were in the church and congregation to meet him one Sunday morning. Those who came consisted mainly of one Sunday school class of young men about sixteen years of age which had been held together for several years, but for which, several years before, the superintendent had been unable to secure teachers because the boys were not by nature pious and failed to be impressed by solemn warnings.

With this class, now composed of young men most of whom were not nominally Christians, a few older members being leaders, the Young Men's Christian League was formed. The compact which was signed read:

We, in love and loyalty to our Saviour and Master, hereby enter into compact that we will seek by mutual and personal prayer and effort to stimulate ourselves and other young men to the perfect manhood to be attained only through personal faith in Jesus Christ.

The newly organized league then tendered a supper to the young men of the congregation, which was attended by about forty-five. Of these thirty-five signed the compact. Many of the latter were not church members nor professedly Christians, but after the organization of the league they came along one by one and joined the church. In one instance nine joined together.

The league now has an associate membership, for which a modified compact is presented for those who are in sympathy with the organization but are not church members. At first the only work was the holding of a Sunday morning meeting. Occasional socials followed. For the first year the work of the young men was confined almost entirely to their own class in the church and congregation, but later a reading-room project widened the influence of the society towards the young men of the community in general. A room in the old church was provided with papers, magazines, games, etc., and was open evenings.

When the new edifice was built provision was made for a reading-room and a gymnasium at the request of the young men themselves. The gymnasium is a modest affair, provided with dumb-bells, Indian clubs, chest weights and a striking bag. A running track was also arranged. During the last winter a regular athletic class was conducted by a member of the league. A junior class of boys has also been conducted on Saturday afternoons. By the latter means the younger boys have been drawn into the Sunday morning meetings. Races were held and the records of the men in these, with other athletic events, were kept. With this athletic departure the influence of the league on the outside young men began to assert itself. One incident illustrative of this is worthy of notice. A young fellow who had not been identified in any way with the organization became a constant visitor to the gymnasium, where he spent his time diligently in ferocious assaults upon the striking bag. On inquiry it was learned that just before this an altercation had arisen between himself and another fellow which had led to blows. The contestants had been separated, but had made a mutual arrangement to meet several days later in a more secluded place. Suffice it to say that the fight never came off and that one of the principals is just now a regular prayer meeting attendant.

On Memorial Day a public outdoor athletic meet was held at which some good records were made. A number of outside youths entered the lists and attended the banquet which followed and at which the prizes were awarded. The organization has won the highest respect of the young men of the community. In all matters which are of general public interest its members are the leading spirits. The diversity in its make-up is marked. In its membership there are Harvard and Technology students, grocers, High School boys, painters, clerks and carpenters.

While we have given emphasis to this athletic side of its work, the league is not an athletic club. This is only an incidental of its work. Frequent socials for young men only are given. A debating society is one of its intellectual features. Occasionally the Sunday evening service is in its charge.

A memorial service was held under its auspices in connection with Memorial Day. On another Sunday evening its members presented the work of the league under these subjects: Christian Manhood, The Christian Man at School, The Christian Man in Business and The Christian Man in Athletics. At the close of this meeting the young men in the audience were invited to remain and learn more about the league.

The main center of the life of the organization has remained in its Sunday morning meeting. Here the young men meet, and in a frank, open, informal, manly way speak words of mutual encouragement and help.

It was at first thought that this organization, with the Young Women's League and the Women's League side by side with it, might diminish interest in the work of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. But, on the other hand, its members are also the life of the Endeavor work, and that society has been stimulated by the new organizations.

This is only one of the means which Mr. Leavitt is using to reach the community at large. The work of the church, moreover, is not laid aside during the summer. Indeed the "neighborhood work" is increased during the summer months and is carried on by a special committee. The athletic feature gives opportunity for the continuance of the work of the Young Men's League during the vacation period.

The success of this organization demonstrates that young men can be reached best by young men, and that they can best be reached by young men's means. Young men as a class are open and susceptible to the influence of a virile Christianity. An appeal such as this organization makes on behalf of a Christianity which includes the cultivation of physical, mental and spiritual manhood will not fail of a response when it is presented in an open, manly way by open, manly men.

C. S. M.

NEW ENGLAND.

Boston.

Park Street. At a meeting of the society, which is made up of pew owners, held on the 13th inst., action was taken, with apparent unanimity, which seems to tend in the direction of an amicable removal of difficulties in due time. The votes requiring the pastor to join in calling an ecclesiastical council, which indeed were defective in point of legality, were rescinded, and a committee appointed to ascertain the exact pecuniary relations of the pastor and the society by friendly conference with him as well as by obtaining judicious legal opinion. This removal of what has caused great friction is certainly honorable to the society, and, if followed by similar action on the part of the church, will afford opportunity for a peaceful solution of any existing difficulties.

The pulpits of the city churches were filled last Sunday by visiting and home preachers as follows: Old South, Dr. G. A. Gordon; Park Street, Dr. F. E. Hopkins of Dubuque and Dr. David Gregg of Brooklyn; Second, Dorchester, Dr. E. N. Packard of Syracuse; Brighton, Dr. A. A. Berle; Harvard, Brookline, Dr. W. E. Griffis of Ithaca; Shawmut, Rev. I. O. Rankin of Boston; Walnut Avenue, Dr. G. L. Robinson of the Roxbury Presbyterian Church, in exchange with Dr. A. H. Plumb; Seamen's, Dr. W. S. Alexander; Pilgrim, Dorchester, Rev. F. W. Palmer of Auburn, N. Y.; Berkeley Temple, Rev. H. H. Kelsey of Hartford.

Massachusetts.

ROSLINDALE.—Work is progressing so satisfactorily on the new edifice that it will probably be ready for occupancy in the autumn. The auditorium is so connected with the chapel where worship is now held that accommodations will easily be provided for 700 persons. The pastor, Rev. R. B. Grover, is recreating in the White Mountains.

HAVERHILL.—North. Rev. G. H. Reed is at Chocorua, N. H.——Center. Rev. C. M. Clark is at Conway touring the mountains by bicycle with Rev. L. F. Berry of Groveland.——Riverside. Rev. G. L. Gleason is at his farm in Topsfield.——West. Rev. J. N. Lowell is visiting his former home in Maine.——Union. Rev. George Benedict is camping on the banks of the Merrimac, continuing his pulpit and pastoral work, and anticipating a vacation later on.——French. Rev. S. P. Rondeau will visit friends in Canada.

FOXBORO.—The church edifice is in process of great improvement in the way of elegant frescoing, new carpets and pew upholstery, a change in the form of the long side galleries to the octagon outline, a remodeling of the pulpit and its platforms, and more especially in an extensive addition to the pulpit end for the accommodation of the organ and choir. Rooms are beneath this for pastor and choir, and under all, level with the vestry floor, is a fine large kitchen with all its conveniences, also a Sunday school library room.

LANCASTER.—Improvements are being made on the meeting house, consisting mainly of a new choir gallery at the left of the speaker and a removal of the fine organ to a recess prepared for it.

SPRINGFIELD.—Park. Rev. W. H. Ashley of Shelburne Falls preached last Sunday.——At North Dr. J. L. Scudder of Jersey City filled the pulpit, and at Hope Rev. G. C. Needham of Northfield.

STOCKBRIDGE.—In honor of Rev. Mr. Rich and his bride a pleasant reception was held in the parlors last week. Many parishioners attended and several wedding presents were the tokens of esteem which the pastor and his wife were presented.

Maine.

SQUIRREL ISLAND.—The 25th anniversary was observed pleasantly Aug. 8-10. Hon. Nelson Dingley gave a historical sketch of the island, Rev. S. P. Merrill of Rochester, N. Y., read an original poem, and there were games, music and festivities. On Sunday there was a large audience to listen to Rev. Cortland Meyers of Brooklyn. There was also fine music for the occasion. A praise service was held Sunday evening, conducted by Rev. Mr. Hiscox of Malden, Mass. On Monday Hon. W. P. Frye addressed the people on the financial question.

DUNHAM.—An afternoon service is held, supplied by the ministers of North Cumberland Conference. At Raymond Hill and Raymond Village Rev. E. M. Cousins of Gray preaches on alternate Sunday afternoons.

New Hampshire.

MOUNT VERNON.—The completed external equipments of the church have given a new impulse in other directions. At a late meeting a motion was made to adopt the free pew system, and temporarily laid on the table to give time for proper consideration, with a strong probability when a final vote is taken of its adoption. Also the music committee has been given authority to raise money to supply the pews with a new hymn-book placing on each the society's label of ownership. And finally a special committee has been appointed to determine its present membership and to endeavor greatly to enlarge the list if possible. It is hoped a satisfactory increase of membership will follow the effort.

JAFFREY.—Services were resumed in the newly-repaired, seated and carpeted meeting house, Aug. 2, the pastor, Rev. W. W. Livingston, improving the occasion by a historical discourse covering the 116 years of its organized existence. On July 31 23 little ones, with ages ranging between three months and seven years, belonging to the "cradle roll," were gathered at the parsonage, as is their annual custom, with their mite-boxes of pennies, to enjoy a pleasant time together.

NORTHWOOD CENTER.—The unusual heated term has not led to the closing of the church during the vacation season. The influence of an eight months' pastorless condition, as was to be expected, made itself felt in the Sunday school, but with the advent of the new pastor the tide of withdrawal has begun to turn and new interest is being awakened, especially in the primary department under the zealous enthusiasm of the teacher.

HANOVER CENTER.—Rev. C. A. Downs of Lebanon, who is stated supply of the church, on a late Sunday made the sacredness of our burial places the subject of his discourse which speedily bore fruit, many volunteering the next day to make improvements in the appearance of the local cemetery. A meeting was also appointed for an early day to take into consideration the propriety of forming an association for the regular continuance of such care.

PIERMONT.—Arrangements have been made to procure new singing-books for the Sunday school. At the close of the session a blackboard exercise is sometimes given by the pastor illustrative of the lesson, and with the design to make a deeper impression. A teachers' meeting has been started, meeting at the parsonage every Friday evening. The C. E. Society connected with the church is steadily gaining in numbers and interest.

HAMPSTEAD.—Mrs. R. P. Gardner, wife of the pastor, who has been severely ill almost to the despairing of life for several weeks, is now by skillful medical attendance and careful nursing slowly convalescing, to the great joy of her family and a host of friends.

LITTLETON.—The church sustains two prosperous Sunday schools in the outskirts of the town, and is thereby doing a good work. Much religious interest is being developed, and already several persons have professed to begin a Christian life.

ATKINSON.—The pastor, Rev. G. H. Scott, has begun a series of sermons on the Lord's Prayer, one for each petition, reading in place of one of the morning lessons Matthew Henry's paraphrase of the text for the day.

Vermont.

MCINDOE FALLS.—Mr. W. H. Gilchrist has made a liberal offer to provide for one-half the expense of building a new chapel, which has been needed for a long time.

Connecticut.

BRIDGEPORT.—Olivet. Rev. E. K. Holden has returned from his trip abroad. A reception had been planned to welcome him home, but on account of his coming sooner than was expected it was decided to postpone it until the extreme hot weather had passed.——North was closed the first two Sundays of this month, and South will now unite with it during the remaining three. The corner stone of Bethany Mission chapel between this city and Trumbull was laid with impressive ceremonies on the 9th inst.

NEW BRITAIN.—Five of the leading churches are located near Central Park where the street car company transfers its passengers. The incessant ringing of the car bells during church services is a great nuisance, particularly in summer when the windows are open, as it interferes with the worship to an appreciable extent. A movement has been successfully inaugurated to prevent the ringing of these bells during the hours when meetings are being held.

NEW HAVEN.—The gospel tent meetings, which have been held the last two weeks on Howard Avenue, have been successful. There have been good speakers each night, and many have attended who would hardly endure the heat inside a house.——Center. The services a week ago Sunday evening were held on the green. The temperature in the church was unbearable and required a retreat into the outer air for worship.

GLASTONBURY.—Three thousand dollars will be expended this fall in putting in a new heater, painting and repairing the edifice and paying off the church debt. A week ago Sunday there was a small congregation present on account of the excessive heat, but, notwithstanding the small number, over $1,600 were pledged. There is little doubt but that the remainder will be subscribed shortly.

HARWINTON.—C. P. Huntington has been here looking over the old stone chapel, which he attended when living here 40 years ago, and has made arrangements to have it thoroughly repaired. The little house of worship will be considerably embellished, but its ancient appearance will not be altered.

REDDING.—Mr. Jedediah Hawley, for nearly 75 years an active and prominent member of the church here, and for a long time one of its deacons, died recently at the advanced age of 92 years. Rev. C. F. Luther is away on his vacation, and the meeting house will be closed during his absence.

WOLCOTT.—Rev. Mr. Kellogg, father of the pastor who has been quite severely ill ever since last spring, is now much improved in health and was able to be at church a week ago Sunday for the first time since his illness.

IVORYTON.—Rev. L. S. Griggs occupied his pulpit a week ago Sunday much improved in health. The communion service was held in the evening, and one person was received to membership.

PLYMOUTH.—Owing to the extreme heat a week ago Sunday evening services were held in the open air, with the result of a large attendance and an interesting hour.

POQUONOCK.—The church edifice will be closed until the first Sunday in September, the pastor, Rev. N. T. Merwin, and his family, being absent on their vacation.

CANTON VILLAGE.—Regular religious services will be held here, beginning in a few weeks. They will be in charge of a student from Hartford Seminary.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

MIDDLETOWN.—First. Dr. W. A. Robinson returned from his vacation abroad Aug. 1. His people gave him and his wife a pleasant welcome at a reception Aug. 4. The pulpit of his church has been acceptably filled in his absence by Mr. C. P. Pierce of Yale Divinity School.——North Street. Rev. J. W. Norris is now in Connecticut enjoying a well-earned respite from his work. The past few months have brought upon him repeated and sore bereavements. He has since December buried his wife, his father and his mother. But the past year has been one of progress on the part of his church under his efficient ministry, and his influence has been increasingly felt in the city as a power for good.

ITHACA.—First has, except on two Sundays in July, been open all summer, and the midweek prayer service and Sunday school continued in operation. The audiences have been good, a large contingent of the worshipers coming from the two summer schools for teachers and others which have been held in the high school and in the university. On Aug. 16 Dr. Griffis preached in the Harvard Church, Brookline, Mass., and Prof. George B. Stephens of Yale Divinity School supplied the Ithaca pulpit. Among recent visitors was Rev. W. F. Blackman, former pastor and now professor of Christian sociology at New Haven.

A new church building has just been completed in Corning at a cost of $15,000.

THE INTERIOR.

Ohio.

DOVER.—Pres. W. G. Frost of Berea College, the brother of the pastor here, has aroused not a little interest among the congregation of late in the institution which he represents. About $100 were subscribed for the college. A men's Sunday evening club has been organized recently.

Illinois.

CHICAGO.—Lake View. Dr. Philip Krohn recently gave his lecture on General Grant at Macatawa Park Assembly.——Rev. J. M. Campbell has also lectured on The Doctrine of the Holy Spirit in Relation to Modern Christological Thought. The course was fully up to the expectations of the hearers and aroused much interest.——Rev. N. A. Millard is giving a popular lecture on The New Polities which is creating thought and good among his audiences.——The appointment of Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner to assist Sec. W. F. McMillen as missionary and primary instructor in Illinois, Ohio and Indiana is hailed with enthusiasm wherever she is known. This is the first appointment by this society of a woman to such a position. Mrs. Bryner during the past seven years has taught the primary department of Union Park Sunday school and is an active leader in the Primary Teachers' Union. Besides being a popular instructor and skillful organizer, she is specially gifted in interesting and stimulating others in the work. It is hoped that she will be heartily welcomed by the women's missionary societies as well as by the churches and Sunday schools in these States.

HENNEPIN.—First. On the departure of the pastor, Rev. William Excell, and his wife, who have made themselves much beloved and of great usefulness among this people, resolutions of appreciation of their efforts were passed, recognizing their abilities as spiritual leaders.

GARDEN PRAIRIE.—The loss of the meeting house of late has brought a kind invitation from the Methodists to worship with them. The church has suffered from removals to quite an extent.

Michigan.

LANSING.—Plymouth unites with the First Presbyterian for a month. Between these churches and parishes there is good fellowship and mutual effort for the right——Pilgrim. Rev. E. B. Allen has been North in the interests of Olivet College. He was welcomed gladly everywhere.

BRIMLEY.—Mr. Martin, the general missionary, held a grove meeting in the Robinson neighborhood the first of this month and did much good. A Sunday school is already organized, and the people are holding services in a private house for want of a meeting house.

STANTON.—A house to house visitation was recently carried out in the city according to districts. Each family was recorded by name, number and church connection or preference.

Wisconsin.

CABLE.—Though lacking a preaching service Sunday school work is continued. Two prayer meetings each week are held. There is only a pioneer Sunday school organization at Cable.

SUN PRAIRIE.—The coming 50th anniversary of the church is absorbing much interest just now and preparations are being pushed for the celebration.

PRENTICE.—This church, Rev. Alexander Chambers, pastor, is feeling the existing financial straits, but continues good work in every way.

HUNTING.—The Sunday school has turned a forsaken saloon into a neat chapel. Two weekly prayer meetings are well sustained.

THE WEST.

Iowa.

BURDETTE AND POPEJOY.—Rev. Charles Wyatt, pastor here and at Grape Schoolhouse, is among the hard-working home missionaries. He preaches four times a Sunday—once in the morning, twice in the afternoon and again in the evening. In reaching his appointments he is obliged to ride 19 miles.

CORNING.—For two weeks, from July 14–26, the churches united with the Y. M. C. A. in a series of tent meetings, attended by considerable interest and good results. During the month of August union services in the open air are held Sunday evenings.

DICKENS AND HARMONY.—The work on these fields is reported to be in better condition than ever before A series of Demorest contests, held among the young people, has aroused much interest and has also aided financially. Rev. J. C. George is pastor.

AVOCA.—German. Rev. John Single is now in the fifth year of his pastorate. Since his coming the church has been organized, and a house of worship and parsonage have been built. Self-support in the near future is practically assured.

DAVENPORT.—German. Repairs have been made on the building amounting to about $1,033. Of this amount all but $300 have been paid. A number of accessions are expected at the next communion. Rev. C. F. Finger is pastor.

GARDEN PRAIRIE AND KELLEY.—The pastor at these points and at Slater, Rev. B. C. Tillett, preaches three times on Sunday—once at each field—teaches a Sunday school class at 10 A. M., and attends a C. E. meeting at 7 P. M.

AGENCY.—Rev. Allen Clark tendered his resignation July 30. The church will be closed for a few Sundays during the hot season, but it is expected to resume services in the fall.

MUSCATINE.—Pilgrim. The church has voted not to accept the resignation of its pastor, Rev. G. M. D. Slocum, and he has decided to remain.

Minnesota.

RANDALL.—A new building, costing about $900, was dedicated Aug. 9, Rev. R. P. Herrick preaching the sermon. Much of the credit belongs to Mr. W. R. McClane, who has labored unweariedly at small pay. This is the only church in the community. Mr. McClane returns to college and efforts are making to secure a pastor who will work here and in the surrounding region.

CLARISSA.—This new church has decided to build at once and has begun work upon the foundation. Efforts are making to secure more pastoral service. A large work could be done in the surrounding towns if a resident pastor could be secured, but home missionary funds will not allow of this at present.

LITTLE FALLS.—Since the coming of Mr. Malcolm Dana, who supplies during the summer, money has been raised to pay a part of the debt on the church. An application will be made to the Congregational Church Building Society to assist in adjusting the finances.

MINNEAPOLIS.—Oak Park. To the great regret of the church Rev. C. M. G. Harwood, who has labored with good spiritual results, closes work Sept. 1. Though the church has suffered from removals it has paid a part of its debt and is hopeful for the future.

PRINCETON.—Missionary interest is developing in this church, long the child of the H. M. S. Contributions for all the societies are made. The pastor's salary has been raised and he has been requested to remain indefinitely.

SPRINGFIELD.—Since the departure of the last pastor the church has been closed and the people are discouraged by removals. Efforts will be made to secure a minister this fall who will also preach at neighboring points.

DULUTH.—Mayflower. Since the coming of Evangelist J. J. Sandford much interest has developed in Bible study, and congregations have increased. Hard times retard the growth of the community.

Nebraska.

BRUNSWICK.—Lightning struck the meeting house Aug. 2. The chimney was demolished, the end of the building torn out and other damage done. The loss will probably be about $100. The building had a narrow escape from burning, as the bolt passed through the floor and set fire to some grass underneath. Fortunately the pastor, Rev. G. T. Noyce, saw the flames, crawled under the building with a pail of water and put out the fire before the woodwork caught.

CARROLL.—This Welsh church, Rev. Samuel Jones, pastor, has lately purchased an excellent organ, which is a great help in the service and proves a strong attraction to the young people.

South Dakota.

HOWARD.—Rev. J. M. A. Spence has been supplying the Congregational and Methodist Episcopal churches, which worship together during the summer. They have expressed a desire to call him to their united service, but the consummation of the plan waits the approval of the Methodist Episcopal presiding elder.

TYNDALL.—Rev. A. H. Mulnix leaves this field Sept. 1, when Rev. J. P. King, a recent Andover graduate, will immediately take charge. Nineteen members were received at a recent communion.

CARTHAGE.—The Esmond meeting house has been successfully moved to this place, a distance of seven miles. The first service after removal was held in it Aug. 2.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

OAKLAND.—Pilgrim. Dr. Mahlon Willett has resigned to accept a call to Decorah, Io., where he is already at work. For nearly 20 years a pastor on the Pacific coast, more than half of this time at Santa Cruz, Dr. Willett has a warm place in the hearts of Congregationalists in this region and it will be difficult to supply his place.

BAKERSFIELD.—The indefatigable pastor, Rev. J. W. Phillips, was overcome by the heat July 14. The San Joaquin Valley is noted for its hot summers, but such experiences as his are unusual. Though convalescent he goes to the mountains for much needed rest. The morning service will be omitted until September.

FRESNO.—Rev. H. E. Banham has spent his vacation at his old parish in Sierra County, among other things lecturing on Congregational History and Church Polity. Both at Beckwith and Sierraville former parishioners gave him a cordial welcome.

AVALON.—On a recent Sunday the house of worship, which seats nearly 300 persons, was so crowded that a considerable number were turned away. At the following midweek meeting about 70 were present, most of them summer visiters.

AUBURN.—The church sustains a great loss in the death of the wife of Rev. Charles Van Norden. At her request no eulogistic remarks were made at the funeral, the service consisting of music, Scripture reading and prayer.

ALAMEDA.—Rev. W. W. Scudder has begun his 12th year of service here. Coming direct from Hartford Seminary he has shared in building up one of the strongest and most efficient churches in the State.

Three or four conversions each Sunday for the last month or more are reported from the State prison at San Quentin.

Washington.

At an institute recently held at Medical Lake, Mr. George Brinkerhoff was approbated to preach. He is to enter Pacific Seminary this fall.

Rev. Mr Newman, a Baptist clergyman of Colfax, has withdrawn from his own denomination and become a Congregationalist.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES.

After successful efforts in developing religious interest at a number of the leading educational institutions around Boston, Mr. R. E. Lewis has resigned his office of college secretary of the Boston Y. M. C. A., to enter the student volunteer movement as traveling secretary for the United States and Canada. The headquarters of the organization are in Chicago, from which place as a center Mr. Lewis will travel to colleges in these countries to arouse interest in foreign missions.

The sessions of the central international committee of the Y. M. C. A.'s of the world were held last week in Geneva. The committee represents 5,700 associations with a membership of 500,000—1,400 of the associations and 265,000 members being in America. The secretarial force was somewhat increased and a subdivision of the work provided or. The next world's conference was appointed for August, 1898, in Basle, Switzerland.

f

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

The Endeavorers working in a summer hotel at Portsmouth, N. H., have formed a society of 20 members, with a committee to care for the sick.

A Junior society in Texas voted down their superintendent's suggestion that they take a summer vacation, and set to work to organize an orchestra to add to the interest.

The New England Society of Aurora, Ill., had a stirring missionary meeting on Armenia, at which they decided to give, through the American Board, not less than 10 cents a member toward relieving the sufferers.

Weekly meetings for policemen at one of the station houses have been maintained for several months by a few Philadelphia Endeavorers, and the meetings have been marked by increasing attendance and interest.

At the time of the year when most families are canning fruit a missionary committee in Australia supplies to all that will take them two or three cans to be filled and afterwards forwarded to missionaries by the committee.

A bicycle club of 20 has been formed by the local union of Traverse City, Mich., for the purpose of visiting neighboring societies and organizing new ones. They have already had six invitations to help in starting new societies.

A large number of the members of an Illinois society each wrote a letter to some missionary of his denomination who was at the time in this country. The missionaries were asked to tell what influences led them to the work and what advice they would give young people about entering the foreign field. The reading of the answers formed a part of the exercises at a later meeting.

The missionary committee of the New York local union has sent out a circular to the Endeavorers of the city, asking all that practice giving a tithe to have their names enrolled, as a means of influencing others to take the same step. The names are not to be made public, but an account is kept of the number, and each one enrolled receives a certificate of membership in the Tenth Legion of the New York City Endeavor Union, the title being a reference to Cæsar's famous tenth legion and to the need of like faithful consecration on the part of Christ's soldiers in the present missionary crisis.

WEEKLY REGISTER.

Calls.

BAKER, Wm. H., Lodi, O., to new church at Portsmouth. Accepts.
BRYNER, Mary F., Chicago, Ill., to be missionary and primary instructor in Ill., O. and Ind., under the C. S. S. and P. S. Accepts, to begin Oct. 1.
BURR, Wm. N., Perris, Cal., has not accepted call to W. Ferndale, Wn.
BUSHNELL, Campbell W., accepts call to be acting pastor at Rosalia and Oakesdale, Wn.
CHANDLER, Fred. D., Charlestown, N. H., to Chichester. Accepts.
COMIN, Jno., Andover Sem., to Chamberlain, S. D. Accepts.
DICK, Sam'l M., Chicago, Ill., to First Ch., Lowell, Mass., as acting pastor for one year. Accepts.
DONOVAN, David, New Paynesville, Minn., recalled to Madison.
HOUSE, Alfred V., New Salem, Mass., to Enfield.
JENNEY, E. Winthrop, Chamberlain, S. D., to be general missionary of the C. H. M. S. Accepts, to begin Sept. 15.
LESLIE, Wm. W., W. Williamsfield, O., to Richfield. Accepts, and has begun work.
MOORE, Chas. D., to Princeton, Minn., where he has been acting pastor.
RIGBY, Wm. E., Chicago Sem., to Kewanee, Wis. Accepts.
TILTON, Geo. H., Lancaster, N. H., to Woburn, Mass. Accepts.
WILLETT, Mahlon, Pilgrim Ch., Oakland, Cal., accepts call to Decorah, Io.

Ordinations and Installations.

BUTLER, Frank C., o. Edmonds, Wn., Aug. 5. Sermon, Rev. W. C. Merritt; other parts, Rev. Messrs. Sam'l Greene, A. J. Bailey, T. W. Butler, Ph. D., brother of the candidate.
TICHNOR, Owen E., o. p. Reno, Neb., Aug. 6. Sermon, Rev. A. E. Ricker; other parts, Rev. Messrs. J. B. Brown, L. Coolidge, W. P. Pease, Harmon Bross, D. D.

Resignations.

BRUCE, Chas. R., Plankinton, S. D.
CLARK, Allen, Agency, Io.
FIELD, Fred A., Redondo, Cal.
HARWOOD, Clement M. G., Oak Park Ch., Minneapolis, Minn.
LAWRENCE, Harry A., Clarence Eastman Memorial Ch., Clay Center, Kan.
SLOCUM, Geo. M. D., Pilgrim Ch., Muscatine, Io., withdraws resignation.
TANGEMANN, Gottlob D., De Witt, Neb.

Churches Organized.

OTTAWA, Can., Second Ch. Rev. H. J. Horsey is pastor.

Miscellaneous.

LEONARD, Delavan L., Oberlin, O., has supplied his former pulpit at Northfield, Minn., during the pastor's vacation.
McCLANE, Wm. R., closes his pastorate of eight months at Randall, Minn., and returns to Carleton College.
MILLIGAN, Jno., since closing his pastorate at Nordhoff, Cal., has been resting at Ventura, but is now ready for new work.
NEWELL, Arthur F., pastor of Vine St. Ch., Lincoln, Neb., who is spending his vacation abroad, just after leaving the steamer at a French seaport, was struck by a swinging crane. His leg was broken in two places and he was otherwise so seriously injured that he will be obliged to remain in a hospital for several weeks.
SIMS, Josiah, Nevada City, Cal., whose pastoral service has been one of the longest on the Pacific coast, has just been elected great sachem of the Improved Order of Red Men.
ST. JOHN, Benj., of Des Moines, Io., is in S. E. Iowa, in the territory occupied by Father Turner and other of the Iowa patriarchs, collecting material for an illustrated home missionary lecture.
WALTERS, Wm., of Wyoming, Ill., spent Sunday, Aug. 2, with his former church at Hastings, Neb. An informal reception on Monday evening was largely attended and gave him an opportunity to meet his many friends.

ACCESSIONS TO THE CHURCHES.

	Conf.	Tot.		Conf.	Tot.
CALIFORNIA.			NEBRASKA.
Compton,	—	3	Arborville,	3	5
Los Angeles, First,	—	7	Ashland,	7	7
Redondo Beach,	1	7	Aurora,	2	3
San Francisco, Bethany,	3	6	Cambridge	3	3
Park,	4	4	Camp Creek,	—	4
Third,	1	4	Lincoln, First,	—	3
MASSACHUSETTS.			Omaha, Saratoga,	—	4
Malden, First,	4	8	OREGON.
Paxton,	7	7	Astoria,	2	3
MICHIGAN.			Portland, Hassalo St.,	2	3
Central Lake,	6	6	Sylvan,	4	7
Ellsworth,	—	10	OTHER CHURCHES.
MINNESOTA.			Clarion, Io.,	5	5
Barnesville,	5	5	E. Alstead, N. H.,	—	3
St. Charles,	—	10	Rumford Point, Me.,	—	6
St. Paul, Hazel Park,	—	4	Churches with less than three,	8	13
Walker,	—	5

Conf., 67; Tot., 155.
Total since Jan. 1. Conf., 11,912; Tot., 20,480

NOTEWORTHY FORTHCOMING MEETINGS.

Chautauqua Assembly, Chautauqua, N. Y., June 27–Aug. 24.
Northfield Y. M. C. A. Camp, Northfield, Mass., July 1–Sept. 1.
School for Systematic Bible Study, Northfield, Mass., July 6–Aug. 24.
Association for the Advancement of Science, Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 24–29.
American Social Science Association, Saratoga, N. Y., Sept. —.
Annual Congress of the National Prison Association, Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 26–30.
American Board, Toledo, O., Oct. 6–9
American Missionary Association, Boston, Mass., Oct. 20–22.
Convention of the Open and Institutional Church League, Hartford, Ct., Oct. 20, 21.
National W. C. T. U. Convention, St. Louis, Mo., Nov 13–18.

AN OPEN LETTER.

To those planning to enter Amherst College in the fall, or having friends who are to enter:

The Young Men's Christian Association of the college wishes to be of the greatest possible service during the next year to the new men. To this end it sends out this letter, hoping thereby to gain some information which shall fit it for more intelligent work. We can, perhaps, be of service to some who may desire help in becoming acquainted quickly with the college and town. To all who wish to make inquiries before the term opens we will give any assistance in our power. We will be very glad to receive from parents or friends any suggestions that will enable us to be of special service.

All incoming men are cordially invited to make the Y. M. C. A. room, in Williston Hall, their resort. An information bureau will be open there at the beginning of the term, and men acquainted with the college will be present to give any needed help.

CARL M. GATES, Pres. of the Asso.
JOHN E. TUTTLE, College Pastor.

RECALLED STORMY TIMES.—"Well that looks natural," said the old soldier, looking at a can of condensed milk on the breakfast table in place of ordinary milk that failed on account of the storm. "It's the Gail Borden Eagle Brand we used during the war."

POND'S EXTRACT destroys pains, aches, soreness. Insist on the genuine; take no counterfeit if offered.

HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA purifies the blood, overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, and gives refreshing sleep.

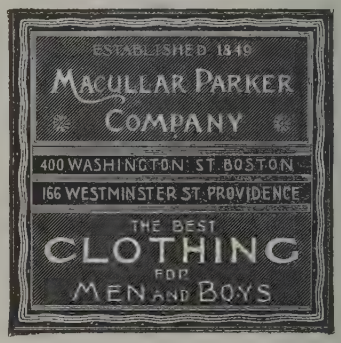
Letters

Of praise, telling of great benefit from Hood's Sarsaparilla, come in every mail car arriving in Lowell. The keen discrimination of the people long ago settled the question of the comparative merits of blood purifiers, and the millions take Hood's Sarsaparilla and only Hood's. The abiding confidence of the people in Hood's Sarsaparilla could only have been secured by its great intrinsic merit.

HOOD'S
Sarsaparilla

Is the One True Blood Purifier. All druggists. $1.

Hood's Pills are the best after-dinner pills, aid digestion. 25c.



FURNITURE BY MAIL.

This city and suburbs contain only a part of our customers. The great trade which comes to us from all over New England, New York State and Canada is supplied from our Catalogues.

These Catalogues are constantly revised to keep pace with the changes in designs. Following the rule which we established in the very beginning, they are supplied free on application at our store or sent to any address on receipt of postage. The complete list and the postage on each volume is as below.

	Pages.	Stamps.		Pages.	Stamps.
General Catalogue	256	Five 2c.	Invalid Furniture	48	Two 2c.
Wood Mantels	80	Two 2c.	Revolving Bookcases	24	One 2c.
Refrigerators	36	Two 2c.	"Suggestions to Those About to Furnish," containing many large plates and much valuable suggestion, price		$1.00
Piazza and Lawn Furniture	45	Two 2c.
Office Furniture	64	Two 2c.

When sending postage state which catalogue is desired.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,
48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Aug. 30–Sept. 5. The Happiness of Heaven. Rev. 21: 1–7, 22–27.

The thought of the holiness of heaven has often clouded the thought of its happiness. Children have been led to picture it as a place where prolonged Sunday services are held with the accompaniment of harps and with everybody on his good behavior. Such a representation of the future life does not always appeal to children's ideas of happiness, and Dr. Parkhurst is right when he says that it is far better to let the child imagine heaven as a place where there is an abundance of dolls and drums and all things that appeal to the childish heart provided that he or she gets the idea that heaven belongs only to right-minded persons. We want, above all things, to think of heaven in a way that will make us cherish eager anticipation of it and thus gain another set of impressions for our daily way. Call to mind the happiest moment of your life, the richest experience through which you ever passed, and then be sure that the bliss of heaven as far exceeds that earthly joy as St. John's glowing description surpasses ordinary writing on the subject.

The joy of heaven consists, first of all, in the absence of that which blights and mars our earthly life. Existence here, under the most favorable circumstances, means the mingling of the sweet and bitter. The happiest life has its undertone of sadness. Pain, sickness, sorrow, doubt and fear are close at hand, even if for a time they do not cross our own threshold. But they are utterly absent from the heavenly life, while it furnishes experiences and satisfactions about which we can only vaguely guess—association with a society each member of which is doing the perfect will of God and the sense of his immediate presence among his redeemed ones.

We may find it difficult to translate into common language the apostle's glowing imagery, but while we are sure that the happiness of heaven is different from that of earth we may be equally sure that it possesses elements of likeness to it, otherwise the transition would be too abrupt. In proportion as we have grasped on earth the sources of the highest happiness shall we enter easily into the joys of heaven, for the life there must be continuous with the life here, though on a totally different scale. To be really happy there we must have learned here on earth to appreciate the beauty of holiness, the rewards of moral and spiritual struggle, the joy of self-sacrifice, the glory of Jesus Christ. Heaven's highest happiness has its roots in that which is purest and loftiest in our earthly existence.

Parallel verses: Ps. 73: 25; Acts 7: 55; 13: 52; Luke 15: 7; Eph. 3: 15; Col. 1: 5; John 14: 1–3; 16: 22; Rev. 22: 4.

A politician . . . may be very ill-informed respecting a question, all his notions about it may be vague and inaccurate, but speak he must, and, if he is a man of talents, of tact and of intrepidity, he soon finds that, even under such circumstances, it is possible to speak successfully. He finds that there is a great difference between the effect of written words, which are perused and reperused in the stillness of the closet, and the effect of spoken words, which, set off by the graces of utterance and gesture, vibrate for a single moment on the ear. He finds that he may reason sophistically and escape unrefuted. He finds that even on knotty questions of trade and legislation he can, without reading ten pages or thinking ten minutes, draw forth loud plaudits and sit down with the credit of having made an excellent speech.—Macaulay.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR, ECKSTEIN } Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, BRADLEY, BROOKLYN, JEWETT, ULSTER, UNION } New York.
SOUTHERN, SHIPMAN } Chicago.
COLLIER, MISSOURI, RED SEAL, SOUTHERN } St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS. CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

THE MISTRESS OF THE HOUSE is always interested in having painting done, and the great variety of shades or combinations which can be produced by the use of

Pure White Lead

and the Tinting Colors will afford her an opportunity to exercise her judgment and taste and secure the best and most durable paint. The brands shown in list are genuine. For colors use the NATIONAL LEAD Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors. No trouble to make or match a shade.

Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New York.

Could every housewife know how much time, trouble and labor is saved and how easy cooking is made with a

GLENWOOD RANGE she would USE NO OTHER.

For sale in all prominent cities and towns throughout New England. | Made by THE WEIR STOVE CO., Taunton, Mass.

"THERE'S A BEST IN EVERYTHING"
HAVE YOU SEEN THE NEW STEARNS BICYCLE
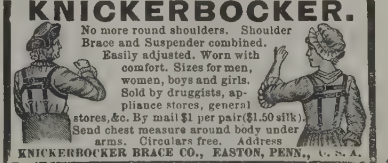
THE YELLOW FELLOW
CATALOGUE FREE
F. C. STEARNS & CO. MAKERS SYRACUSE, N.Y.
TORONTO, ONT. BUFFALO, N.Y. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

EAT BREAD MADE OF . .
The Franklin Mills Fine Flour of Entire Wheat.
Always ask for "Franklin Mills." All leading Grocers sell it.

KNICKERBOCKER.



No more round shoulders. Shoulder Brace and Suspender combined. Easily adjusted. Worn with comfort. Sizes for men, women, boys and girls. Sold by druggists, appliance stores, general stores, &c. By mail $1 per pair ($1.50 silk). Send chest measure around body under arms. Circulars free. Address KNICKERBOCKER BRACE CO., EASTON, PENN., U. S. A.

ESTABLISHED 1836.
ISAAC RILEY,
Successor to Baird & Riley,
PLUMBER AND SANITARY ENGINEER,
85 Joy St., Near Cambridge St., Boston.
Telephone, Haymarket 294.

The Congregationalist
. . SERVICES . .
THIRTY-THREE SERVICES READY.
100 Copies, 60 Cents, postpaid.
THE CONGREGATIONALIST,
1 Somerset Street, Boston.

THE GREAT CHURCH LIGHT

FRINK'S PATENT REFLECTORS for electric, gas or oil, give the most powerful, the softest, cheapest and best light known for Churches, Halls and Public Buildings. Send size of room. Book of light and estimate free. I. P. FRINK, 551 Pearl St., New York.

CHURCH CARPETS AT MANUFACTURERS' PRICES. JOHN H. PRAY, SONS & Co., CARPETS AND UPHOLSTERY, 658 WASHINGTON ST., OPP. BOYLSTON ST. BOSTON.

Financial.

Guaranty Trust Co.
of New York.

Formerly New York Guaranty and Indemnity Co.
Mutual Life Building,
65 CEDAR STREET, N. Y.

CAPITAL, - - - - - $2,000,000
SURPLUS, - - - - - - $2,000,000

ACTS AS TRUSTEE FOR CORPORATIONS, FIRMS AND INDIVIDUALS, AS GUARDIAN, EXECUTOR AND ADMINISTRATOR. TAKES ENTIRE CHARGE OF REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATES.

INTEREST ALLOWED ON DEPOSITS
subject to check or on certificate.

WALTER G. OAKMAN, President.
ADRIAN ISELIN, JR., Vice-President.
GEORGE R. TURNBULL, 2d Vice-President.
HENRY A. MURRAY, Treas. and Sec.
J. NELSON BORLAND, Assist. Treas. and Sec.

DIRECTORS.

Samuel D. Babcock,	Adrian Iselin, Jr.,
George F. Baker,	Augustus D. Juilliard,
George S. Bowdoin,	James N. Jarvie,
Frederic Cromwell,	Richard A. McCurdy,
Walter R. Gillette,	Walter G. Oakman,
Robert Goelet,	Alexander E. Orr,
C. G. Haven,	Henry H. Rogers,
Oliver Harriman,	Henry W. Smith,
R. Somers Hayes,	H. McK. Twombly,
Charles R. Henderson,	Frederick W. Vanderbilt,
William C. Whitney.

HOME INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK,
OFFICE, NO. 119 BROADWAY.

Eighty-Fifth Semi-Annual Statement, January, 1896.

SUMMARY OF ASSETS.

Cash in Banks	$469,914 59
Real Estate	1,705,895.91
United States Stocks (market value)	1,418,425.00
Bank, Trust Co., and Railroad Stocks and Bonds (market value)	3,946,493.00
State and City Bonds (market value)	855,927.93
Bonds and Mortgages, being first lien on Real Estate	463,009.13
Loans on Stocks, payable on demand	426,550.00
Premiums uncollected and in hands of Agents	515,227.06
Interest due and accrued on 1st January, 1896	52,185.92
	$9,853,628.54

LIABILITIES.

Cash Capital	$3,000,000.00
Reserve Premium Fund	4,395,659.00
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Claims	752,514.13
Net Surplus	1,705,455.41
	$9,853,628.54

D. A. HEALD, President.
J. H. WASHBURN, E. G. SNOW, Vice-Presidents.
W. L. BIGELOW, T. B GREENE, Secretaries.
H. J. FERRIS, A. M. BURTIS, Ass't Secretaries.

NEW YORK, January 7, 1896.

7 PER CENT. NET.

First Mortgage Loans on Improved Farms in the Wonderfully Fertile Red River Valley

and in North Dakota and Minnesota. 20 years of experience in the business, and an actual residence of over 8 years in the Red River Valley and of over 22 in Minnesota and North Dakota. A personal knowledge of lands and values. Loans only made to industrious, thrifty farmers, on well improved farms. I give my personal supervision to the business. Loans made in your name and interest coupon-notes and mortgages and applications sent to you and held by you. Interest collected by me and forwarded to you by New York Check. Funds now earning you only 2, 3, or 4 per cent. in Savings Banks will here earn you 7 per cent.—about doubling your income. Remit funds for investment by New York or Boston Draft, or by personal check payable to my order. Address

E. P. CATES,
2628 Portland Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

Travelers and Remitters
USE
Cheque Bank Cheques
because they are the best. £1 up. Payable everywhere. See circular.
Agency of the U. S. Cheque Bank, L'd.
FRED'K. W. PERRY, Manager
40 and 42 Wall St., N. Y.

YOU SELL | WE BUY

DO YOU WANT TO SELL A Western Mortgage
or Western Land—avoid foreclosure costs—stop sending good money after bad—get a good 5% investment instead. State exact location, condition of title, and your low price. Over $2,000,000 in Western securities successfully handled by the present management of this corporation.
THE BOSTON REALTY, INDEMNITY AND TRUST CO.,
Send for our Bond List. 33 Equitable Building, Boston.

INVESTORS' ATTENTION.

A live young church wishes a loan of $2,500 for 10 years at 4 per cent. Security first-class. For particulars address L. F. M., care of The Congregationalist.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

It cannot be said that there is much improvement in the prospects for fall trade. The movement of merchandise continues on a limited scale, with many different industries running on short time. The number of unemployed is large, and indications do not point to any early reduction of this number. Although there has been some reaction against free silver, the political outlook continues sufficiently doubtful to cause the utmost conservatism in operations of all kinds.

Crop prospects are favorable, but large crop this season may not prove an unmixed blessing, because of the low prices prevailing for farm products. Take corn for example. Last year's crop was a large one and the price so low that a great deal of it has remained cribbed on the farms; now comes another large crop, which will prevent any important advance in the value and probably cause more cribbing.

The wool market is dull and receipts of new wool exceed the demand. Manufacturers are small buyers, the mills working only on orders as they are received. Dry goods are quiet, and not much snap is expected until after the political situation has become clearer. Iron and steel show absolutely no improvement, and prices are unsatisfactory in spite of the heavy curtailment of production.

Money rates are stiff and funds are difficult to borrow. Business paper is not sought and the banks are merely looking out for their own customers. Collateral is scrutinized very closely, and securities, which are not listed on the Stock Exchange, are not wanted. Even bonds are not wanted and stocks of the rattle-trap order are preferred, because they are more quickly sold at current quotations than bonds.

The stock market has ruled stronger of late, reflecting the more hopeful sentiment which developed after the fizzle of the Bryan notification meeting in New York, a week ago, became duly appreciated. Investment buying of securities is still conspicuously absent, however, the major part of last week's advance in the stock market being due to the buying by the bear operators to cover their "short" contracts. Bank clearings last week were seven per cent. less than the preceding week.

A BIG BILL.

The Fourth Estate gives an interesting estimate of the cost of one item—telegraphing—of our late political conventions:

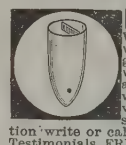
Probably very few people . . . have even the most inadequate notion of the money, brains, labor and thought which have gone into the columns of type which have given them entertainment, information and various emotions. . . . There is no unusual profit to the newspapers in these conventions, although their publishers are put to an abnormal expense. . . . The press bureau of the Western Union gives the following estimate of the total number of words from special correspondents alone telegraphed by that company to all parts of the United States to daily newspapers: From the Republican convention 3,000,000, from Chicago 4,000,000, from the Populist-silver conventions 1,000,000. Now, the average price per word received from newspapers for press matter is about six mills and a fraction. . . . At this average charge of one half cent a word (under the real mark) the total charge . . . would be for 8,000,000 words $40,000. . . . The superintendent of the Postal Telegraph gave this estimate of the number of words . . . sent over the wires by his company: total, 5,250,000.

At the same average rate of one-half a cent a word this would amount to a bill of $26,250, which, added to the Western Union bill, would make a grand total of $66,250 which the newspapers of the country paid wholly on account of the conventions.

Atheism is rather in the life than in the heart of man.—Francis Bacon.

Right in the face of old prejudices and false ideas in favor of soap, see what Pearline has done. Hundreds of millions of packages have been used! There never was a household article that came into general use so rapidly. Women were ready for it. Most of them were tired to death of wasting their time and strength and money with needless and ruinous rubbing. It hasn't taken them long to prove to themselves that Pearline is easiest, quickest, safest, most economical. Every woman can prove it. 490

Millions NOW USE Pearline

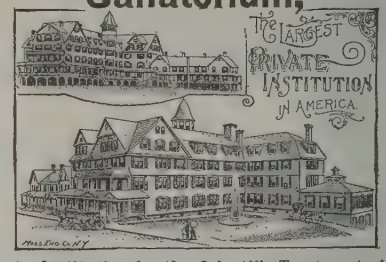


DEAF-NESS & head noises relieved by Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums—helps where medicine fails; stops the progress of deafness; concentrates sound waves to one pointupon Natural Drum; also takes the place of Natural Drums when wholly or partially destroyed; invisible, comfortable, safe—no wire or strings to irritate. For full information write or call for 144-page book on Deafness and Testimonials, FREE. WILSON EAR DRUM CO.,
Offices { 885 Trust Bldg., Louisville, Ky.
R. 851, 1122 Broadway, New York.

Does Your Hair Fall Out?

Is it getting thin—lessening in volume? If so, I can help you. If totally bald do not write. Select family patronage for ten years. Send self-addressed stamped envelope to Miss RACHEL T. WYATT, Centerville, Mass.

The Berkshire Hills Sanatorium,



An Institution for the Scientific Treatment of

CANCER

Tumors, and all forms of Malignant Growths,
WITHOUT THE USE OF THE KNIFE.

We have never failed to effect a permanent cure where we have had a reasonable opportunity.

Book and circulars giving description of Sanatorium, Treatment, Terms, and References, free.

DRS. W. E. BROWN & SON, NORTH ADAMS, MASS.

HAY FEVER AND COLDS IN THE HEAD

Quickly RELIEVED and CURED.

To any person sending me $1.00 by registered letter or P. O. money order I will send the recipe of a remedy that has given me a complete relief from the distress of Hay Fever it will also cure colds in the head. It is safe and sure to effect speedy relief. Address, W. Rand, Pastor First Cong. Church, Huntington, Mass.

IT WILL SERVE THE INTERESTS OF ALL CONCERNED IF, IN CORRESPONDENCE SUGGESTED BY ANNOUNCEMENTS IN OUR ADVERTISING COLUMNS MENTION IS MADE OF THE FACT THAT THE ADVERTISEMENT WAS SEEN IN THE CONGREGATIONALIST.

EDUCATION.

—— Radcliffe College has acquired over 20,000 feet of additional land near its present property in Cambridge.

—— Prof. Jesse Macy of Iowa College, who was obliged by a physical breakdown to take a year's rest abroad, is again in Grinnell and ready to resume his work in the chair of political science.

—— Lasell Seminary, Auburndale, Mass., has just received a medal and a certificate of award from the World's Columbian Exposition for excellence of equipment and work in all departments, including manual training. The medal is of bronze.

—— Prof. O. C. Palmer has been elected principal of Ahtanum Academy, Washington, and accepts. He has as his associates Mrs. Palmer, Ernest Woodcock, a graduate of Whitman College with a year of post-graduate work in Columbia College, and Miss Grace Cobleigh who takes the music department. ——A project for an academy in Colville, Wn., which for a time seemed likely to be a failure, has been revived.

—— On Wednesday last the trustees of Williston Seminary unanimously elected Prof. Joseph H. Sawyer principal, to fill the vacancy made by the resignation of Dr. Gallagher, who goes to Thayer Academy. Professor Sawyer graduated from Amherst College in 1865 with high honors. In 1866 he became a member of the faculty of Williston Seminary, and has remained in that position ever since. On three different occasions Mr. Sawyer has been acting principal of the seminary and is thus familiar with the administrative duties of the position. He enjoys a high reputation as teacher and scholar and will come to his position with the hearty support not only of the trustees and the faculty of the seminary, but also of the citizens in Easthampton and the alumni of the seminary in all parts of the land.

AUSTRALIAN CHRISTIANS BELIEVE IN BROTHERHOOD.

At its last meeting this representative body made the following gratifying utterance:

The Congregational Union and Mission of Victoria desires hereby to place on record its deep thankfulness that the danger of war between the British nation and the United States has passed away, and that in view of the terrible results which would accrue from hostilities between these nations who ought to be ever united in all forms of human activity, and especially in the spread of civilization and Christianity throughout the world, it is of opinion that an international tribunal of a permanent character should at once be created, to which all questions wherein the interests of these nations may seem to be opposed to one another may be immediately referred, and by the decisions of which authority duly constituted and recognized by both nations the conditions of peace and war would be entirely removed, both from the possibility of the sudden and unintelligent passions of the people and from the peril of the individual or party designs of politicians.

The council would further express its satisfaction at the endeavors which are being made, both in the British Islands and in America, for the furtherance of such international tribunal, and trusts that the public opinion of Australasia may be led to express itself in sympathy with this endeavor to promote the peace and brotherhood of the nations of the world.

Marriages.

The charge for marriage notices is twenty-five cents.

THACHER—JEWETT—In Grafton, Aug. 12, by Rev. B. A. Roble, at the residence of Dr. F. A. Jewett, father of the bride, John Thacher of Attleboro and Harriet R. Jewett of Grafton.

Deaths.

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

CHAFFEE—In Springfield, Aug. 8., Dr. Calvin C. Chaffee, aged nearly 85 yrs He was one of the original founders of the North Church, represented the State for two terms in Congress, and was active in several charitable organizations.

DOUGLASS—In Minneapolis, Minn., Aug. 4, Rev. Ebenezer Douglass, aged 70 yrs.

KNIGHT—In West Hartford, Aug. 10, Rev. Merrick Knight, aged 79 yrs. He served a long and useful life in the ministry and often supplied pulpits until within a few years. One of his three sons is Rev. E. H. Knight of Springfield.

NEWTON—In New Haven, Ct., Aug. 12, Prof. Hubert A. Newton, aged 66 yrs. He was head of the mathematical department of Yale University and the oldest professor in active service. He was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Great Britain.

SMITH—At Auburndale, Aug. 16, Elinor M., wife of Rev. William S. Smith.

DEACON WILLIAM BATES LOVEJOY.

The subject of this brief sketch was widely known a generation ago in the business circles of his native city of Boston, and until his death by the Congregationalists of eastern Massachusetts, among whom he had been for many years somewhat prominent in the work of the denomination.

His early religious associations were with the Salem Street Church, which he joined when only sixteen years of age. In this church he was for many years a deacon, as was his father before him. He was also a deacon for the past twelve years of the Maverick Church, East Boston, and was greatly instrumental in the maintenance of the Maverick Chapel, of which he might well be considered the father.

The Lovejoy family came from Holland in 1638. Through all the generations the family seems to have represented worthily the best traditions of New England manhood. Few men have in this age better embodied and illustrated the Pilgrim spirit. He was a man of strong and even intense convictions; for these he would have made any sacrifice, even to blood. They were a part of him and entered into the very blood and fiber of his character. He was, however, tolerant of opinions, making the distinction, not always recognized, between opinions and convictions

In his religious life he was devout, earnest and consistent. Religion was with him the chief business of life. He sought the kingdom of God first and subordinated all other interests to it. In social life he was "a gentleman of the old school." Dignified, courteous and urbane, he seemed never to forget what belonged to the Christian gentleman. He will be greatly missed in the church of which he was so conspicuous an ornament, but he has left to it and his family a legacy of character more precious than gold.

He died July 31, aged seventy-two years, and was buried at Forest Hills.

DARIUS BETTES

Was born of Methodist parents in Brighton, Can., May 12, 1818. He was carefully trained in the religious life and early showed an interest and desire to preach the gospel. This was especially marked after a startling personal religious experience which occurred when he was about seventeen years of age, which filled his heart with joy and a desire for service. He entered at once into preparation for the ministry at Coburn College, completing it at Madison University, New York. He was then ordained as a Methodist preacher in Canada, and in 1845 married Miss Mary White, who after fifty years in this happy union survives him. Two sons and four daughters, all living, serve the community usefully. In 1875 Mr. Bettes removed from Canada to Michigan, and, not finding the Methodist connection congenial, came into the Congregational fellowship, serving the churches at Ada, organizing Ada Second Church, and at Croton, White Cloud, Eastmanville and Ionia. Failing health caused him to remove to Grand Rapids in 1884, where he became a member of the Second Church and later on of the First Church. In the providence of God, in the later years of his life, the outer man was afflicted with diseases which destroyed his strength, and in the last few months a cancer upon his face brought him untold suffering. But these last days of trial were a benediction to his family and his friends. The qualities of patience and faith that characterized his whole life never showed to better advantage, and the Master whom he had served so lovingly and enthusiastically did not leave him desolate at the end, but cheered and strengthened him by the divine presence so that his welcome as the guest of God was foreshadowed in the closing days. His children were with him to see him pass over the river, and at the funeral services beloved friends in the ministry spoke tender words, and six ministerial members of Grand Rapids Association bore his body to the grave.

GEORGIA L. KENT.

Miss Georgia L. Kent, oldest child of Deacon Hervey and Eliza J. (Hanson) Kent, died Sunday of nervous exhaustion, aged 51 yrs., 25 dys. Always of delicate health, she has been steadily sinking for the past year, and for the greater part of that period had been confined to her home.

Born in Newton, Mass., Exeter had been her home since the autumn of 1862, and here she had won the love of all brought into intimacy with her. Marked characteristics were the strength and beauty of her spiritual life and the zeal and energy she had manifested in religious work along many lines. The Second Church has had few more worthy and devoted members. Of sunny, sweet and affectionate disposition, in the home she loved she was the ideal daughter and sister.

Besides the parents she leaves a sister, Mrs. John J. Bell, and in Pittsfield a brother, Mr. George E. Kent.

The funeral, conducted by Rev. A. P. Bourne, was held on Tuesday afternoon, with burial Wednesday morning.

Do you feel Depressed?
Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.
It invigorates the nerves, stimulates digestion and relieves mental depression. Especially valuable to tired brain-workers.

Have You Tried TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT. TRADE MARK REGISTERED.
It cures Constipation, Sick Headache and Biliousness in such a gentle, coaxing way that the unpleasant results of more active remedies are avoided. Sold by Druggists for 50 years.
"IT TASTES GOOD, TOO."

Wonderful Cures of Coughs, Colds and all kinds of Sore Throats and Lung Troubles are made every day
- BY -
Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam
It gives instant relief, and cures, permanently, the worst cases. Time-tried and thirty years tested.
BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.
SOLD BY THE BEST DRUGGISTS.
Prices 35 cts. and 75 cts. a Bottle.
Trial size 10c.

Grand National Prize of 16,600 FRANCS at Paris
QUINA-LAROCHE

Possesses in the highest degree the entire active properties of Peruvian Bark. Endorsed by the medical faculty as the best remedy for Fever and Ague, Malaria, Poorness of the Blood, General Debility and Wasting Diseases; Increases the Appetite, Strengthens the Nerves and builds up the entire system.
Paris: 22 Rue Drouot
New York:
E. FOUGERA & CO.,
26-30 N. William St.

PRICE REDUCED FROM $25.00 to $10.00.
The Electropoise
CURE WITHOUT MEDICINE.
THIS MOST WONDERFUL TREATMENT now within the reach of all.
The above price is ordered from July 1 to Oct. 1, 1896. $10.00 by Express, $10.25 by Registered Mail, with Book of Directions complete Do not miss this opportunity.
L. A. BOSWORTH, 36 Bromfield St., Room 18, Boston, Mass., General Agent for New England States.

"FORBID A FOOL A THING AND THAT HE WILL DO." DON'T USE SAPOLIO

ROYAL Baking Powder is reported by the United States Government, after official tests, highest of all in leavening power. It is the best and most economical; a pure cream of tartar Baking Powder.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

The Cyclist's Necessity.

POND'S

WILL CURE CUTS, BURNS, BRUISES, WOUNDS, SPRAINS, SUNBURN, CHAFINGS, INSECT BITES, ALL PAIN, AND INFLAMMATIONS. . . . . .

USED INTERNALLY AND EXTERNALLY.

GENUINE IN OUR BOTTLES ONLY, BUFF WRAPPERS, SEE OUR NAME, POND'S EXTRACT CO., NEW YORK, 76 FIFTH AVENUE.

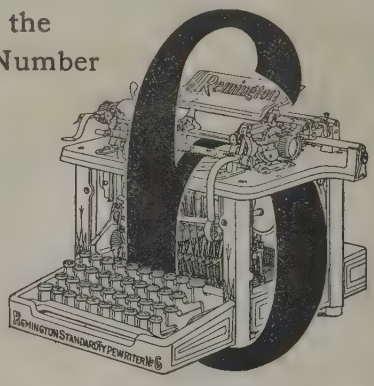
EXTRACT

USE POND'S EXTRACT OINTMENT FOR PILES.

Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cents.

Inwrought

into the Number



REMINGTON

Standard Typewriter

are certain sterling qualities of excellent construction and reliable service for which all Remington models have always been famous.

. . . LIKEWISE . . .

scientific improvements, notably increasing its usefulness and durability.

WYCKOFF, SEAMANS & BENEDICT,
327 Broadway, New York.

Ian Maclaren on The Veiling of the Soul Character Sketch of Li Hung Chang

Volume LXXXI Number 35

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Boston Thursday 27 August 1896

In August-Tide.

O YOU who yearn, while August suns are wheeling,
For care-surcease, and for some cooling calm,
Know you the gracious power for spirit-healing
In tufts of red bee-balm?

In green fern-fastnesses where pungent savors
Breathe from the bruised bark of the sassafras?
In meadow hollows where the sweet-flag wavers,
And the blue-flowered marsh grass?

Come, I will lead you to these pleasant places
By paths made sweet by mellow under-song,
Where bough with bough and leaf with leaf enlaces,
And twilight lingers long.

There, from the cruel gyves that chafed and bound you,
You, like a prisoner freed, shall know release;
And with the healing quiet wrapt around you,
You shall be one with peace.

Written for The Congregationalist, by CLINTON SCOLLARD.

UNION PACIFIC

The Overland Route—World's Pictorial Line.

THE ONLY LINE WEST OF MISSOURI RIVER RUNNING BUFFET SMOKING AND LIBRARY CARS.

THE ORIGINAL OVERLAND ROUTE.

It was the Route in '49!
It is the Route Today, and
Will be for All Time to Come!

'49 '96

Fastest Train to the West,

"THE OVERLAND LIMITED,"

CHICAGO to SAN FRANCISCO daily in { 3 Days from Chicago. / 2 1-2 Days from Missouri River.

Pullman Palace Sleepers; Dining Cars; Free Reclining Chair Cars; Buffet Smoking and Library Cars.

For tickets and full information call or address any Union Pacific agent, or E. L. LOMAX, Gen. Pass. and Tkt. Agt., Omaha, Neb.

ST. DENIS HOTEL

Broadway and Eleventh St.

Opposite Grace Church, NEW YORK.

The most centrally located hotel in the city, conducted on the European plan, at moderate prices. Recently enlarged by a new and handsome addition that doubles its former capacity. The new DINING ROOM is one of the finest specimens of Colonial Decoration in this country.

WILLIAM TAYLOR.

Marriages.

The charge for marriage notices is twenty-five cents.

ALLEN—TRIPP—Aug. 19, by Rev. S. L. B. Speare, Harry Dexter Allen of Newton and Marion Beatrice Tripp of Watertown.

Deaths.

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

BULLARD—In Hartford, Ct., Aug. 7, Augusta Spencer, wife of Rev. C. H. Bullard and daughter of Deacon George Spencer, formerly of Deep River, Ct.

HOLMES—In Kingston, July 25, Abby Inglee, widow of the late Edward Holmes, aged 79 yrs.

YOUNG—In Colorado Springs, Col., Aug. 10, Rev. Charles S. Young, pastor of the Congregational church of Little River, Kan.

LEES—In Lowell, Mass., Aug. 15, Columbia Willis, wife of the late Samuel Lees, aged 82 yrs., 5 mos.

WELL TAKEN.—The point is well taken that it is the last few dollars upon any purchase which so often makes or mars it. A very good illustration of this is given by the Paine Furniture Co. in their announcement in another column. The advantages of a hall stand at $18 over a pattern at $15 is out of all proportion to the slightly increased expense. Yet how few persons have the good sense to withstand the temptation to economy at such times.

WITHOUT parallel for pains, Pond's Extract. Avoid druggists' old song "Just as good," for imitations.

Subscribers' Wants.

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

Rooms and Board. Near to Boston, in a clergyman's family, two rooms and board may be secured by addressing N. A. S., Congregationalist Office, Congregational House, Boston, Mass.

Teacher. Wanted, by a high school graduate, a position to teach Algebra, Geometry, or Pianoforte, with the opportunity of study in higher Mathematics. Correspondence solicited. Miss A. S. KEZER, Kittery Point, Me. Gerrish Estate.

Religious Notices.

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, etc., published under this heading at ten cents a line.

LAY COLLEGE FOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS, Station R, Boston, fits for all kinds of Christian work.

THE REV. DR. FRANCIS E. MARSTEN, of Columbus, O., may be addressed by correspondents until Oct. 1 at Attleboro Falls, Mass.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the Society at New York.

JAMES W. ELWELL, President.
REV. W. C. STITT Secretary.
W. C. STURGES, Treasurer.

OLD BOOKS BOUGHT.
LIBRARIES AND SMALL PARCELS OF BOOKS PURCHASED.
Save the expense and delay of Auction Sales.
W. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston

GOSPEL HYMNS, 1 to 6.
Excel. Mus. Ed., $75 per 100; Words Ed., $10 upwards per 100. Christian Endeavor Hymns. $30 per 100.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.,
76 East 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

CHURCH ORGAN FOR SALE.
Our Make. Cost $2,400. Price $1,200.
HOOK & HASTINGS CO., Boston.

Egypt and Palestine.

H. GAZE & SONS, Ltd.,

In whose hands were intrusted The Congregationalist's Oriental Tour of 1895 and the Pilgrimage to England and Holland of this year, ANNOUNCE a delightful and comprehensive tour under personal escort, sailing from New York Oct. 3d, per North German L. S. S. Ems, visiting Gibraltar, Algiers, Italy, Egypt, Palestine, Constantinople and Greece.

STRICTLY FIRST CLASS.

113 DAYS. ALL EXPENSES, $860.

Annual 'Round the World Party leaves in September, via San Francisco.

For program and particulars apply to 113 Broadway, New York. H. Gaze & Sons, Ltd., 201 Washington St., Boston.

Photography Simplified.

Picture taking with the Improved Bullet camera is the refinement of photographic luxury. It makes photography easy for the novice—delightful for everybody.

LOADS IN DAYLIGHT with our light-proof film cartridges, or can be used with glass plates. Splendid achromatic lens, improved rotary shutter, set of three stops. Handsome finish.

Price, Improved No. 2 Bullet, for pictures 3½ x 3½ inches, - - - - - $10.00
Light-proof Film Cartridge, 12 exposures, 3½ x 3½ - - .60

EASTMAN KODAK CO.

Booklet Free. Rochester, N. Y.

HERVE D. WILKINS,

the celebrated organist, says:

"I regard your organs as an illustration of the best ideas extant in regard to organ building."

Church, Chamber and Aeolian Pipe Organs.

Catalogue and specifications cheerfully furnished.

Farrand & Votey Organ Co.,
Detroit, Mich.

A. B. & E. L. SHAW
Established 1780.
Largest Manufacturers of PULPIT SUITS,
27 SUDBURY ST.
Boston, Mass.
Send 5c. stamp for new 100-page catalogue.

Blake Bell Foundry
Established in 1820.
Successors to WM. BLAKE & CO.
Manufacture bells of every description, single or chimes, of Copper and Tin. Address
BLAKE BELL CO., Boston, Mass.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS In the World.
PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).
Send for Price and Catalogue.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

BELLS
Steel Alloy Church & School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O

IMPROVED
Cathedral Tubular Bells,
CHIMES AND PEALS (Harrington and other patents.)
U. S. Tubular Bell Co. Sole Mfrs., Methuen, Mass.

CHURCH CARPETS AT MANUFACTURERS' PRICES. JOHN H. PRAY, SONS & CO., CARPETS AND UPHOLSTERY, 658 WASHINGTON ST., OPP. BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON.

The HOME Department.

A History of the Movement.

By M. C. HAZARD, Ph. D. Price, 50 cts.

Its history, purpose and plan, organization, methods, requisites and difficulties. A full treatment of this most important agency of the Sunday School.

A Story.

THE BOYNTON NEIGHBORHOOD.

By FAY HUNTINGTON. Price, $1.00.

A charming book, describing in a most interesting manner the good work accomplished in a difficult locality through the instrumentality of this agency. The story will create enthusiasm and give information of a very practical kind.

Requisites.

A COMPLETE OUTFIT is published by us. Blanks, letters, records. Full list on application.

FREE We send three months' outfit free to any Congregational Sunday School which has no Home Department but which will agree to organize one at once.

Congregational S. S. & Publishing Society,

BOSTON AND CHICAGO.

(Study this Out and Try It.)

$50.00 IN GOLD | GIVEN AWAY

Who can form the greatest number of words from the letters in TOILERS? You are smart enough to make fifteen or more words, we feel sure, and if you do you will receive a good reward. Do not use any letter more times than it appears in the word. No proper nouns. No foreign words. Use any dictionary that is standard. Use plurals. Here is an example of the way to work it out: To, toil, toils, set, sot, sit, oil, oils, let, etc. These words count. The publisher of WOMAN'S WORLD AND JENNESS MILLER MONTHLY will pay $20 00 in gold to the person able to make the largest list of words from the letters in the word TOILERS; $10 00 for the second largest; $5 00 for the third; $5.00 for the fourth and $2.00 each for the five next largest lists. The above rewards are given free and without consideration for the purpose of attracting attention to our handsome ladies' magazine, twenty-four pages, ninety-six long columns, finely illustrated, and all original matter, long and short stories by the best authors; price $1 per year. It is necessary for you, to enter the contest, to send 12 two-cent stamps for a three-months' trial subscription with your list of words, and every person sending the 24 cents and a list of fifteen words or more is guaranteed an extra present by return mail (in addition to the magazine), of a large 256-page book, "The Story of an African Farm," by Ralph Iron, one of the most remarkable books of the age. Satisfaction guaranteed in every case or your money refunded. Lists should be sent at once, and not later than September 20, so that the names of successful contestants may be published in the October issue. Our publication has been established nine years. We refer you to any mercantile agency for our standing. Write now. Address J. H. PLUMMER, Publisher, 905 Temple Court Building, 86, New York City.

Free Coinage and Prosperity.

The original champion of the Free and Unlimited Coinage of Silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation on earth.

The Rocky Mountain News,

T. M. PATTERSON, Editor, DENVER, COL.

Daily Circulation, 27,000.
Sunday Circulation, 35,000.
Weekly Circulation, 5,500.

The largest, handsomest and best edited daily paper in the West. Employs the best artists—its cartoons arouse the admiration of all its readers. Publishes all the important news from the gold and silver camps of the world.

IT'S AN EDUCATOR.

Clear and convincing on the silver question. By mail, 65 cents per month; three months, $1.90; one year, $7.50.

A Profitable Medium for Advertisers.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER.

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
- Paragraphs 289
- From a New England Hillside 290
- The Church of His Boyhood 290
- Still Needed in Japan 290
- Jesus, the Carpenter 291
- Current History 291
- Current History Notes 301
- In Brief 292

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE:
- The Interior 293
- The Northwest 294
- Canada 294
- Japan 295

CONTRIBUTIONS:
- In August-tide- cover poem. Clinton Scollard 285
- The Veiling of the Soul. Ian Maclaren 296
- Charity Chance. Chap. VI. Walter Raymond 297
- Pilgrimage Letter. No. X. The Magnificent Cathedral at Norwich. F. J. D. 299
- Li Hung Chang. R. Van Bergen 300

THE HOME:
- Laborare Est Orare—a selected poem 302
- Home Money Matters. Kate Upson Clark 302
- Afield with Young Naturalists. Wayside Weeds. Mrs. S. J. Bucklin 302
- How Ranger Made Amends. Ann Dudley 303
- The Home Should Help—a selection 303
- Closet and Altar 304
- Tangles 304
- Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 305
- Corner Scrap-Book 305

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for Sept. 6 306

Y. P. S. C. E.—Topic for Sept. 6-12 307

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM 307

LITERATURE 308

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 310
- Weekly Register 314

MISCELLANEOUS:
- Marriages and Deaths 286
- Notices 310
- Business Outlook 312
- Biographical 314

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER.

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849.

Published every Thursday,
At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.

PER COPY, 6 CENTS. PER YEAR IN ADVANCE, $3.00.
TWO YEARS IN ADVANCE, $5.00; FIVE YEARS, $10.00.
IF PAYMENT IS DELAYED, $3.50 PER YEAR.
ONE OLD AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION, $5.00.
CLUB OF FIVE, ONE AT LEAST BEING NEW, $10.00

On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 cents.

RECEIPTS for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.

DISCONTINUANCES.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

ADVERTISING RATES.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 11½ inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.
READING NOTICES, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston.

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd.

Educational.

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY. Oldest and best known in U. S. Established, 1855. 3 EAST 14TH STREET, N. Y.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES. 4 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; and Los Angeles, Cal. 100-page Agency Manual free. EVERETT O. FISK & CO.

THEOLOGICAL.

MASSACHUSETTS, ANDOVER.
ANDOVER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
Term begins Sept. 16. Opening lectures at 4 P. M. For catalogue or further information apply to GEORGE HARRIS, Pres. of the Faculty.

MAINE, BANGOR.
BANGOR THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
Choice between two courses of study, Classical and English Biblical, in Junior year; one course in Middle and Senior years. Optionals in Hebrew and Cognates, and in Greek. Entrance examination on Wednesday, Sept. 2, 9 A. M. Apply to Prof. C. A. Beckwith, or Prof. G. W. Gilmore, Bangor, Me.

CONNECTICUT, NEW HAVEN.
YALE DIVINITY SCHOOL.
Term opens Sept. 24. The School offers many University advantages. For catalogues or information, address Prof. GEO. B. STEVENS, New Haven, Ct.

OHIO, OBERLIN.
OBERLIN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
62d year opens Sept. 23d. With special advantages in the College and the Conservatory of Music.
E. I. BOSWORTH, Sec.

CONNECTICUT, HARTFORD
HARTFORD THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, 63d Year Opens Oct. 7, 1896.
Unexcelled Advantages or College Graduates. HARTFORD, CT.

CONNECTICUT, NEW HAVEN.
YALE DIVINITY SCHOOL.
The next term will begin on Thursday, September 24. Rooms will be drawn on the day previous. Applications to be made to Prof. GEORGE B. STEVENS, Secretary, New Haven, Ct.

NEW YORK, AUBURN.
Auburn Theological Seminary.
Established 1820.
Next term begins Wednesday, Sept. 16, 1896. Opening address by PROFESSOR WILLIS J. BEECHER, D D
For information, write to
HENRY M. BOOTH, President, Auburn, N. Y.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.
Union Theological Seminary
700 Park Avenue, New York.
The next Term will begin Wednesday, Sept. 23, 1896. Students entering will meet the Faculty in the President's room, at 9.30 A. M.
Rooms will be drawn at 2 P. M.
The opening address, by PRESIDENT HASTINGS, will be delivered in the Adams Chapel, Thursday, Sept. 24, at 4 P. M. E. M. KINGSLEY, Sec'y.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

NEW LONDON, N. H.
COLBY ACADEMY.
$200 to $250 a Year. Coeducational. 44th Year. Send for Catalogue. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, President.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, EXETER.
THE PHILLIPS EXETER ACADEMY.
The 114th year begins September 16, 1896. Eighty Scholarships awarded to students of high standing. For catalogue and illustrated supplement, address
HARLAN P. AMEN, Principal, Exeter, N. H.

VERMONT.

VERMONT, ST. JOHNSBURY.
ST. JOHNSBURY ACADEMY.
The 53d year begins Sept. 1.
DAVID Y. COMSTOCK, A. M., Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS.

MASSACHUSETTS, DUXBURY.
POWDER POINT SCHOOL (FOR BOYS).
F. B. KNAPP, S.B., Duxbury, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, SOUTH BYFIELD.
DUMMER ACADEMY (Home School).
Founded 1763. Thorough training for College and Technical Schools. PERLEY L. HORNE, A. M.

MASSACHUSETTS, AMHERST.
OAK GROVE HOME SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
Amherst. Reopens September 23d, 1896. Certificate admits to Smith and Wellesley.
Miss VRYLING WILDER BUFFUM, A. B., Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.
Boston Normal School of Gymnastics.
Established in 1889, by the late Mrs. Mary Hemenway. Eighth year will begin September 29th. Address
AMY MORRIS HOMANS, Director, 9 Appleton St., Boston.

Educational.

MASSACHUSETTS.

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.

MISS KIMBALL'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
Worcester, Mass. Thorough preparation for College. Intermediate, Academic and Special Courses. Send for Illustrated Circular.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL,
New Hall, Ashburton Place,
Opens Oct. 7. Boston, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, ANDOVER.

ABBOT ACADEMY
For Young Ladies. Begins its 68th year September 17th, offering enlarged opportunities. Three Seminary courses of studies and a College-fitting Course. Address Miss LAURA S. WATSON, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, BRADFORD.

CARLETON SCHOOL for Young Men and Boys. College preparatory and general course of study. Individual teaching. Gymnasium bowling alley, etc. Circulars.
I. N. CARLETON, Ph. D.

MASSACHUSETTS, ASHBURNHAM.

CUSHING ACADEMY,
Ashburnham, Mass. Co-educational. Six courses of study. New buildings. Large Gymnasium. Fine Laboratories. $200 a year. Send for catalogue to
H. S. COWELL, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, DANVERS.

MAPLEBANK HOME SCHOOL
For Boys. Best of care and instruction guaranteed. Small boys a specialty. Send for catalogue containing full information. Address
HENRY N. DE NORMANDIE, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, SOUTH HADLEY.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE
Offers three Collegiate courses. Music and Art. Library, Laboratories, Cabinets and Observatory. The sixtieth year opens Sept. 17, 1896. Board and tuition $256. Mrs. E. S. MEAD, President.

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.

HIGHLAND MILITARY ACADEMY,
Worcester ("The Academic City"), Mass. 41st year. Best preparation for College, Professional or Business life. Healthful location. Careful selection and supervision of students. Small Classes.
JOSEPH ALDEN SHAW, A. M., Head Master.

MASSACHUSETTS, DANVERS.

WILLARD HALL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
Tenth Year begins Sept. 22.
College Preparatory and Elective Courses.
Principal, SARAH M. MERRILL.

MASSACHUSETTS, FRAMINGHAM.

STATE NORMAL SCHOOL,
Framingham, Mass. Entrance Examination TUESDAY, September 8, 1896. For Circulars address
Miss ELLEN HYDE, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, BRADFORD.

BRADFORD ACADEMY.
Founded 1803. For the higher education of young women. Classical and scientific course of study, also Preparatory and optional. Year begins Sept. 16, 1896. Apply to IDA C. ALLEN, Principal, Bradford, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, NORTON.

WHEATON SEMINARY
For Young Ladies. Regular and elective courses, literary, scientific, classical. Pupils also fitted for advanced courses in leading colleges. Excellent advantages in art and music. Fine library, laboratory, observatory, gymnasium, bowling alley; outdoor sports, careful physical training. Perfect sanitary arrangements. Best home influences. Beautifully situated, 28 miles from Boston.
62d year. Fall term, Sept. 10, 1896. For illustrated prospectus, address
Miss A. E. STANTON, Principal, Norton, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, SPRINGFIELD.

Attractive Life Calling.
An unequaled opportunity for some of our best men and women in the "new profession"—lay, Sunday school and missionary work. The School for Christian Workers, Springfield, Mass., should enter 100 leaders Sept. 2d in order to begin to fill the demand. New: Ladies' Home, recognized practical missionary instructor, decision by trustees to place institution on highest educational basis and secure as president a leader among college and seminary presidents. Arouse your friends and send for catalogue.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.

Chauncy-Hall and Berkeley
SCHOOLS
Boylston, cor. Berkeley Sts., Boston.

The consolidation of Chauncy-Hall, the oldest Boston Private School, with the Berkeley School is the union of two strong forces, forming an institution of the highest order, to be known hereafter by the older name.
Thorough preparation for Colleges and Professional Schools. Full Grammar and High School courses. In all classes Special Students are received.
Opens Sept. 21. Send for '96 Catalogues.
TAYLOR, DEMERITTE & HAGAR.

Educational.

MASSACHUSETTS.

MASSACHUSETTS, CAMBRIDGE.

Parents who seek

the cultivation as well as the education of their daughters, will do well to write for the Manual of

The Cambridge School

of which Mr. Arthur Gilman is the Director. The address is simply Cambridge, Mass. The "atmosphere" of the place counts for more even, than the curriculum of the school. The school is "founded upon experience and suited to the capacities of the great variety of pupils." No "fads" are indulged in. The training is intended to "raise the ideal of life."

THE BRYANT & STRATTON COMMERCIAL SCHOOL BOSTON.

RE-OPENS SEPT. 1st, 1896.

THE COURSE OF STUDY
is thorough, complete and practical. Pupils are fitted for the duties and work of every-day life.

THE FACULTY
embraces a list of more than twenty teachers and assistants, elected with special reference to proficiency in each department.

THE STUDENTS
are young people of both sexes, full of diligence and zeal.

THE DISCIPLINE
is of the highest order and includes valuable business lessons.

THE PATRONAGE
is the LARGEST of any similar institution in the world.

THE REPUTATION
of this school for originality and leadership and as being the Standard Institution of its kind is generally acknowledged.

SPECIAL COURSE.
Shorthand, Type Writing, Composition and Correspondence may be taken as a special course.

SITUATIONS
in business houses furnished pupils among the varied inducements to attend this school.

THE SCHOOL BUILDING,
608 Washington Street, Boston, is centrally located and purposely constructed. Office open daily, from 9 till 2 o'clock. Prospectus Post Free.
H. E. HIBBARD, Principal.

PENNSYLVANIA.

PENNSYLVANIA, PHILADELPHIA.

THE WALTON-WELLESLEY SCHOOL,
2101 and 2103 Spruce St., Philadelphia. For Girls. Possesses finest private property in city. Boarding and day. 15th year. Academic, College Preparatory and Musical Depts. For illus. cat. and refs., address Dr. and Mrs. JAMES R. DANFORTH.

Educational.

CONNECTICUT.

CONNECTICUT, NORWALK.

MISS BAIRD'S INSTITUTE FOR GIRLS,
Norwalk, Conn. 25th year. Primary, Academic, and College Preparatory courses. Music, Art, and the Languages. Careful attention to morals and manners. New buildings, steam heat, gymnasium.

CONNECTICUT, LAKEVILLE.

THE HOTCHKISS SCHOOL,
Lakeville, Conn. Prepares for the best Colleges and Scientific Schools. The next year will begin September 16, 1896.
EDWARD G. COY, Head Master.

CONNECTICUT, STAMFORD.

"What we do, we do well."

Betts Academy,
Stamford, Conn.

On September 21st the old bell will ring in our 88th year.

Home life and the individual are the keynotes at this school. Each boy is taught how to study—how to think and reason for himself, and is trained in observation and research.
Preparation for any Technical School or University, and a liberal, practical training to those not intending to enter college.
New building, modern conveniences. Large, beautiful grounds adapted for athletics and out-door sports of all seasons. Illustrated catalogue on application. Personal inspection preferred. (One hour from New York.) WM. J. BETTS, M.A. (Yale), Principal.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, PEEKSKILL.

THE PEEKSKILL MILITARY ACADEMY
Peekskill, N. Y. 63d year. Send for illustrated catalogue. COL. LOUIS H. ORLEMAN, Prin.

NEW YORK, POUGHKEEPSIE.

LYNDON HALL SCHOOL.
For Young Ladies. 48th year. College preparation.
SAMUEL WELLS BUCK, A.M., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.

Miss S. D. Doremus
BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
RE-OPENS OCTOBER 1ST.
735 Madison Avenue, New York.

NEW YORK, CORNWALL-ON-HUDSON.

NEW YORK MILITARY ACADEMY,
Cornwall-on-Hudson, N. Y. For boarding cadets only. Completely equipped and beautifully located on Hudson River, near West Point. For catalogue, address S. C. JONES, C. E., Supt.

NEW JERSEY.

NEW JERSEY, MONTCLAIR.

Montclair Military Academy,
Montclair, N. J.

Under a tutor a boy receives careful instruction, but lacks the stimulus of rivalry. In a large class he has the rivalry, but cannot have particular attention. We combine the merits and avoid the defects of both systems by having small classes. Failure to properly prepare lessons is always revealed in our recitations.

J. G. MACVICAR,
Head Master.

ILLINOIS.

ILLINOIS, CHICAGO, 151 Throop Street.

THE NATIONAL UNIVERSITY.
University Extension and Non-Resident Courses lead to the usual College degrees, including all post-graduate. Instruction by mail in any desired subject. Address F. W. HARKINS, Ph. D., Chancellor.

KANSAS.

KANSAS, WICHITA.

Fairmount College,
WICHITA, KANSAS.

The second year of this College will open in all departments, Music, Fine Arts, Academy, College proper, September 9, 1896.
Three parallel courses of study, Classical, Scientific and Literary. New England standards in requirements, and modern methods by New England instructors.
For information and catalogues, address
N. J. MORRISON, President.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Volume LXXXI Boston Thursday 27 August 1896 Number 35

HANDBOOK No. 11 (July, 1896).

Anglo-American Comity. By Rev. WASHINGTON GLADDEN, D D

HANDBOOK No. 10 (April, 1896).

Eighty Years of Congregationalism. WALKER.
Eighty Years of Christian History. HURST.
Eighty Years of Political History. HART.

✠ TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS. ✠

6 Months for $1.00
3 Months for 25 cts. 4 Weeks Free.

THE finance committee of the Congregational Sunday School & Publishing Society has taken action looking to the transfer of Mr. J. H. Tewksbury, its Chicago agent, to Boston. Mr. Tewksbury has managed the Western business very successfully for the past nine years, and he is admirably qualified to take the position at headquarters recently made vacant by the death of Mr. George P. Smith. A formal appointment as agent cannot be made until the October meeting of the board of directors, but Mr. Tewksbury comes to Boston in September at the request of the officers of the society to organize the fall work. Mr. Edward Herrick Brown, for several years in the employ of the society in Boston, goes to Chicago and will be in charge of the business there for the rest of the society's fiscal year, during which time Mr. Tewksbury retains nominally his position as Chicago agent. Mr. Tewksbury will have a general oversight of the business in both Boston and Chicago and eventually relieve Mr. Whittemore, in part or wholly, of his duties as business manager, from which position the latter has desired to retire for some time past.

It will be something gained if this campaign clears the public mind in one particular, namely, the definition of the words debtor and creditor in ordinary business life. Every business man, as a rule which has very few exceptions, is a debtor and has an interest in making it easy and cheap to borrow. Every prudent man who saves something from his earnings is a creditor. He lends to the savings bank, which lends to business men. He takes out a life insurance policy in a company which lends to business men. He holds shares in a loan association which lends, or he invests directly in other men's business. Only the man whose savings go into an old stocking fails to become a creditor, and the creditor's interest is to have lending safe. Above all every man who works for wages is a creditor for wages due and has a direct interest in his employer's credit which makes work possible and wages secure. The interest of borrowers and lenders is therefore identical—what hurts one injures the other. Here is the West with its thousand opportunities of development needing capital. Here is the East with its piled up millions wanting opportunities of investment. Let them agree upon a fixed definition of the money standard and they will trust and serve each other. In the prevailing uncertainty the West gets no loans and the East no returns of profit. Men are begging for money in one quarter, while money goes begging for trustworthy users in another.

A phase of the hard times which is specially trying for some of the weak churches and for our own church building societies is illustrated by the experience of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, whose lending fund for church building is all out. It is the rule of the society to call for payment of mortgages after they have run five years, save in exceptional conditions. But the whole fund being lent out the society finds that all conditions are exceptional this year. It is obliged to carry the churches which it has already aided to build until better times, and to refuse new opportunities of aid, because its working capital is all locked up in loans which cannot be called in. And this is only a single foretaste of the trouble which the degradation of the unit of value would make for all our missionary and benevolent societies.

The Bay Conference of California has very naturally replied to the vote of the Dubuque (Io.) Association, which had censured it sharply for its course in suspending from fellowship Rev. C. O. Brown, D. D., recently pastor of the First Church, San Francisco. The conference, which met Aug. 11, sustained its former action by a vote of fifty-five to ten and criticised the Dubuque action with great frankness, but, as it seems to us, with simple justice. It requested the Dubuque body to rescind its votes and reminded it, as was explained in our own editorial, that the proper remedy for any alleged injustice was a mutual ecclesiastical council. We cannot but hope that the Iowa body will see the unjust and un-Congregational character of its former course and repeal its votes. Since the action of the Bay Conference, however, it is stated in the public prints that Miss Overman, who had charged Dr. Brown with misconduct and then before the council declared that she had been guilty of falsehood and forgery and testified in his favor, has made another confession which on Tuesday, the 18th inst., was read before the ministers at Oakland, in which she declared that her testimony before the council was false and that her original charge of misconduct was correct. The effect of this statement is yet to be seen, but we cannot place much reliance at present upon the testimony of a witness who has been guilty, according to her own statement, of such contradictory lying. Dr. Brown continues in the most positive manner to affirm his innocence, notwithstanding the repetition of the charges.

The Philadelphia Church Standard shows an ignorance of the churches which it condemns as "sects" which is amusing. "The only body in the land," it says, "which demands only Christianity as a test of membership, which does not supplement Christianity with some ism as an essential to fellowship, is the Protestant Episcopal Church." This is the exact contrary of the truth. Take, for a single example, the Presbyterian Church, which is strong in the Standard's own neighborhood. There is a creed for the ruling and teaching presbyters, but none for the members. One does not have to be even a Calvinist to become a Presbyterian. He will be received into the catholic church by its ministers upon simple confession of his faith in Christ. And is there no test for deacons and presbyters in the Protestant Episcopal Church?

Sermons are not considered the most promising of literary speculations, nor is their publication a probable short cut to fame. A notable exception, however, must be made in the case of Spurgeon's sermons, which continue to be published week by week in the English newspapers and have been circulated in book form among hundreds of thousands of readers in England and America. To him belongs, also, what is probably the "record" book order of all time—the recent order in England for a million copies of sermons for distribution through an enrolled band of 3,140 distributors, the expense to be borne by an unnamed contributor. Except the Sermon on the Mount, no sermons have ever had so wide a circulation nor, indeed, can any work of secular literature compare with them in the number of probable readers in a single generation. And the power is not in style, which is of the simplest, or thought, which is neither deep nor subtle, but in adaptation of evangelical truth to the heart and conscience of the plain people.

The comparative summary just published by the Presbyterian Church shows some encouraging features. The number of Sunday school members for the first time passes the million mark, exceeding the number of communicants by about 60,000. Expenses for the support of the home churches have risen to ten and a half millions, nearly the high-water mark in this respect of 1893. The whole amount raised for all purposes for the year is $14,150,497, an average of nearly $15 per communicant. Of this, however, over $300,000 belongs to the special "million dollar" fund, leaving the whole amount of regular contributions half a million less than last year. The deficit, unfortunately, falls upon the benevolent work of the church, some of whose mission agencies are in real distress. The Board of Education announces that it must cut its aid to $60 per student, and the home mission board has made a horizontal reduction of ten per cent., which will be distributed by the presbyteries in refusing new work or curtailing aid to old work, as they elect. Altogether, it is a time of shrinkage and of trial of faith for the Presbyterian Church, though not without encouragements as well.

FROM A NEW ENGLAND HILLSIDE.

The long hill slopes down from meadow to bushy pasture, and from pasture to wood, beyond whose irregular and varied green stretch the glistening levels of the lake. From the opposite shores, broken by quiet coves and rocky wood-crowned capes, the land rises again to a panorama and sky line as varied and suggestive as any that even New England can show. To the left are the houses of the distant village against the green slope of a hill, and in their midst the white spire of the century-old church. Farm clearing and pine wood, crag and hollow, fill the middle distance, and behind all are the crests of the White Hills, from Ossipee upon the left, past central Chocorua, with its gray peak glistening in the sun, to the huge mass of the Presidential Range, against which Kearsarge seems but a hill, while still beyond is the sharp gap of the Carter Notch.

To one who has watched these peaks and valleys from different points of view, and looked from the summits of many of them to see what new aspect the world had to offer, it is no mere catalogue of names which the mind runs over. Each peak has its own individuality of form and station, and the thought of each brings back its surroundings of shaggy wilderness or wild river valleys. But nearest and best beloved of the mountain brotherhood is Chocorua, landmark and goal of the advancing settlers in the days when the whole western world was new, and landmark still for the traveler who sees its scarred peak through the long vista of the Notch, or from the top of Washington, or from the lakes and hills of the wide south. Now the sunlight falls upon it and its white granite ledges lie glimmering in silver light. Now a cloud shadow falls and it becomes as black as the spruce clad walls of the Carter Notch far to the north.

Thus the mountains are companionable from afar as well as to the few who linger in their valleys, or thread the mazes of their forest paths, or stand upon their summits. Even the sailor knows them like a cloud against the sunset in clear summer days. From this distant Maine hillside the eye delights in them and the free imagination goes among them with far less toil and strain, indeed, than the climber feels on their steep crags and ledges. They have one beauty for the eye and the imagination of him who never walked among them, a beauty vague and misty and unreal; but to him whose memory comes to the aid of his imagination what real yet glorified visions arise. We forget the crisp gray moss and checkerberry, the hawkweed and golden-rod under and about our feet on the stony hill pasture. Again we lie on the top of yonder peak, watching the serried clouds that march in stately ranks and companies from north to south, and throw their moving shadows over lake and hill and wood. We are climbing over the steep and slippery crags in well-loved company, and the pauses for rest are full of sweet converse and genial fun. We explore the great ravine by a rough track that winds among the fallen rocks and look up to the ridge that shuts us in. We climb and climb, over the edge and up, by grassy hollow, over rough bowlders shattered by the frosts of innumerable winters, and from the very topmost peak the world of New England is beneath our feet.

Blessed is imagination which can take such lofty flights, but happiest when memory has pleasant places for her visiting, where evil comes no more and all the good remains. To lay up such good memories in store, to find the best and love the loveliest of all surroundings, to hold true and sweet relations with our mother nature and our brother man—surely this is no small part of our joy and privilege on earth. To have been among the hills and not to love them, to have passed a thousand beauties day by day without notice and without thought—surely this is to leave the imagination poor for all the life to come. This hillside were enough without the mountains, the poorest square yard of moss and lichen and tufted grass under the shadow of the fern, without the hill; but all the beauty of the world is useless wealth to him who has not learned to see.

The wind pipes louder in the trees, the armies of the clouds are mustering for battle, and one afar has settled down upon the peak of Washington. Long is the road before us, and it leads through valley lands with little hope of outlook over lake and hill. Let us gather a handful of sweet fern, whose odor brings so many fragrant memories, and turn away, for the vision is at an end.

THE CHURCH OF HIS BOYHOOD.

As a Christian revisits his birthplace in these vacation days, among the tenderest memories that throng upon him, second only to those connected with the homestead itself, are those centering in the village meeting house, his earliest church home. It looks smaller to him now than it used, less lofty and spacious, perhaps, and surely rather rusty as to paint; but its spire still points heavenward as faithfully as the teachings he was wont to hear within its walls. In the bright-faced urchin approaching, one hand tightly clasped by his father, the other clutching his Testament and quarterly, he sees his former self—the boy of long ago. Entering and walking up the familiar aisle, he remembers where everybody used to sit, and as he takes his place in the old pew all his boyhood's associations with the place return. How long the service sometimes seemed! How hard it was to refrain from sticking a pin into his revered parent when he "lost himself" during the long prayer! How his hand just ached to skim that fly off the bald head of Deacon Brown, sitting in the pew in front! He recalls some parts of the sermons, too. How they made his boyish heart swell with the longing to be good and great, to do something to uplift the world—be a missionary, perhaps. He had always favored that phase of religious work because it involved visiting foreign countries and seeing no end of lions and tigers and all the rest of the menagerie.

But that was long ago. Today, instead of being in the jungles of India, he is a prosperous city merchant. As he goes into Sunday school, the children of his old playmates look at him and wonder if they will ever attain such eminence, while he sees in the different classes a reproduction of his own youth at various stages. When a little girl stands up and repeats a Psalm he remembers how sweet Mary Ellen looked the day she recited a part of the thirty first chapter of Proverbs, and wonders if that picture of the ideal woman had anything to do with making her the efficient helpmeet she has proved to him in all these years. As he sits there, being a practical business man, his thoughts move forward as well as back. Suppose that little girl who said the verses, or one like her, should marry his Dick when she grows up? In these days, when country girls go to college, one never knows what may happen. Suppose this bright boy in the Bible class, who has asked for a place in his store, were to become the foreman of his business? Suppose the minister's son, who has taken honors at college and is just entering the theological seminary, were to care for the souls of his children or grandchildren in time to come? "Bless me!" he says to himself, "it's a long time since I have thought of this little church; but it had a deal to do with the making of me, and I'm not sure but it's going to be mixed up with my whole life."

Times are hard and few can give as liberally as in past years or as they hope to do in years to come, but before our friend leaves town he puts a substantial sum in the hands of the church treasurer, "just to help them keep out of debt," he says. How could he better serve city, state or nation than by aiding this struggling country church in its work of purifying the spring at the fountain head?

STILL NEEDED IN JAPAN.

In the opinion of the American mission in Japan, the time has not yet come for the policy of abandonment. The exceptionally interesting staff letter which we print this week tells the story of the recent annual meeting, at which this important subject was thoroughly discussed by wise and far-seeing men. In our opinion, also, there is still room in Japan for American men and women. Their peculiar work is not yet ended because the position of the essential truths of Christianity in all the churches is not yet perfectly secure. It is true that it is Japanese and not American churches which the American Board has planted and helped to sustain, but the Board and the mission, while having every confidence in the Japanese Christians and pastors, feel that their own witness for the essential things is not yet finished. Until the testimony of the Doshisha is once more beyond doubt or cavil evangelical, or is replaced by that of another training school, and until the public opinion of the Japanese churches is thoroughly established in the simplicity of the faith, there is room for an American witness of co-operation and fellowship.

We hope the re enforcements asked for can be sent. They ought to be picked men and women, fit coadjutors of the missionaries already on the field, broad-minded, sympathetic, not bound to American fashions or Occidental modes of thought, but ready to give way in all but the essential things in order that they may hold these all the faster. If the needs of Japan at the moment are peculiar, they are not so peculiar but that they may be met from the material which the Board has at hand, tested as it tests its missionary candidates for every field. There is neither room for nor purpose of dictation, but surely there is still room for co-operation. It is not the Americanization but the Christianization of Japan which we seek, and while differences of administration and opinion are inevitable there need not and ought not to be real differences of aim or spirit between the churches of the empire and their American helpers.

JESUS, THE CARPENTER.

We know little about Jesus as a laboring man, in the common acceptance of that term, but that little brings him very close to us. We have reason to believe that he learned the carpenter's trade with Joseph and worked at it, like other men, during his early manhood.

This fact illustrates his sense of the dignity and value of labor, labor of the mind in planning and calculating and labor of the hands in executing. Why he chose to be a carpenter rather than a farmer, a shepherd or a stone-mason, we are not informed. Probably he merely followed the custom which led most sons to adopt the employment of their father if it offered opportunity of service. At any rate, he allowed no restless ambition to tempt him away from the humble but honorable craft of the family into which he was born. Honest, faithful work at the bench was good enough for him.

His experience at his trade qualified him also to understand working men and their modes of thought. He knew their points of view, their methods of argument, the objections to the claims of the religious leaders of their time, their opinions about politics, etc., and he knew them from the inside. Through his connection with his own trade and his acquaintance with men of other occupations he learned to know all working men, not merely by his divine superiority of wisdom but by actual human intercourse and experience. He was a true man among his fellowmen, an actual working man among others.

He has left little recorded about such questions as those which now are rife concerning the relations of employers and employed. But what he did say covers all cases in principle. Were he to come among us again in the flesh he would counsel mutual confidence and good will, fair dealing, a large measure of self-sacrifice for the sake of avoiding possible offense. He would hardly approve of strikes or lockouts, but would favor conciliation and arbitration of differences. He would condemn overreaching, cheating, misrepresentation and violence sternly and no matter by whom exhibited. He would bid employers treat their operatives as they themselves would wish to be treated if they were operatives, and would bid the employed to banish prejudice, avoid bitterness and seek to understand the inevitable perils and natural fears of the capitalist.

Is this only saying that he would merely remind us all of the Golden Rule? Well, if it be so, would he need to do much else or more in order to sum up his whole teaching. If all of us, employers and employed alike, were to begin at once to practice the Golden Rule faithfully, would there not be an immediate and final end of what we call labor troubles?

The arrangements for the reception of Li Hung Chang include the unusual honor of a journey by the President to meet him in New York. He is to be the guest of the nation there and on his journeys to West Point, Washington and Niagara Falls, at which latter place the Canadian authorities will arrange for his journey westward by the Canadian Pacific. It is rather a pity that he is to see the west of Canada rather than "the States," but he is evidently in a hurry to get back to Peking.

CURRENT HISTORY.

Lord Russell at Saratoga.

The Chief-Justice of England has surpassed even the highest expectations cherished with regard to him in his address last Thursday before the American Bar Association, in convention at Saratoga. It will go on record as one of the greatest and weightiest of speeches of recent years. Its literary quality was noticeable, its logic strong and its spirit broad and beautiful, the moral gravity of the address being its most impressive characteristic. His theme was International Law, which he defined to be the "sum of the rules or usages which civilized States have agreed shall be binding upon them in their dealings with one another." He went on to show the part which American and European jurists have had in efforts to clarify and codify the rules and usages that have come to be binding. When he reached the topic of International Arbitration his utterances were listened to with the intensest interest. His was a well-balanced treatment of the important theme, frankly recognizing the inherent difficulties and admitting the necessary limitations, but giving unmistakable evidence of his own sympathy with every reasonable endeavor that has in view the substitution of mediation for warfare. It is true that Lord Russell appears to be less strongly convinced of the wisdom and usefulness of a permanent tribunal of arbitration than many advocates of such a court could wish. At the same time he makes it clear that he is in hearty sympathy with the sentiment prevailing among the Christians of both countries, which is now so pronounced and influential as to make the thought of war almost inconceivable. Lord Russell's definition of civilization is one of the finest ever framed, and we quote it herewith:

> It is not dominion, wealth, material luxury; nay, not even a great literature and education widespread—good though those things be. Its true signs are thought for the poor and suffering, chivalrous regard and respect for woman, the frank recognition of human brotherhood, irrespective of race or color or nation or religion, the narrowing of the domain of mere force as a governing factor in the world, the love of ordered freedom, the abhorrence of what is mean and cruel and vile, ceaseless devotion to the claims of justice.

And his words about the incalculable influence which England and America leagued together can exert are also worth remembering: "No cause they espouse can fail; no cause they oppose can triumph. The future is, in large part, theirs. They have the making of history in the times that are to come."

A Grist of Speeches.

Bourke Cockran's speech to a great audience in Madison Square Garden Tuesday of last week was a brilliant and vigorous rejoinder to Candidate Bryan's address in the same place on the previous week, and far more successful as an oratorical effort. He confined himself chiefly to a discussion of the bearing of the free silver coinage at a ratio of 16 to 1 upon wages, and he made it clear that the chief sufferers by such legislation would be the great army of working men dependent upon employers for their day's wages. Designed to voice the dissatisfaction of the old line democracy with the Chicago platform and ticket, Mr. Cockran's speech did just that and doubtless confirmed, as well, the faith of the great bulk of his auditors who were in sympathy with him and, perhaps, converted some who had been wavering in their sympathies.

That this is a campaign of speechmaking finds further illustration in the practice of the two candidates, who continue to speak frequently and whose words are telegraphed all over the country. Major McKinley, it is true, is not, technically speaking, on the stump, but since his nomination has made more than fifty speeches to delegations that have visited him at his home in Canton, O., and he is likely, during the next two months, to accord his visitors the privilege of hearing him discuss the issues of the campaign in this somewhat informal manner, though it is not expected that he will, to any extent, address audiences at a distance from his home. Mr. Bryan, on the other hand, after being the guest of John Brisbane Walker, the publisher of the Cosmopolitan, at his summer home on the Hudson, has been going into the campaign in earnest, addressing audiences almost daily. Last week he was in the rural counties of New York and plied the farmers with free silver arguments.

In Democratic Circles.

The guardians of the movement which is probably to crystallize at Indianapolis Sept. 2, in the nomination of a third ticket acceptable to the sound money Democrats, have received much encouragement during the week. A relatively small, but compact and enthusiastic, representative assembly of Maine Democrats has expressed its hearty sympathy with this independent movement, while Kentucky Democrats have also put themselves in line with it. The drift seems to be toward Henry Watterson of that State as leader, though greatly against his own desires. Here in Massachusetts both wings of the Democracy are putting forth strenuous efforts, and the State convention is sure to be an animated gathering. George Fred Williams, who leads the adherents of the Chicago platform, has burned all his bridges and is attacking bitterly the State committee and the Boston city committee in so far as they harbor in their membership men who have not followed him, and who have shown no disposition to indorse Mr. Bryan.

Managing, a Fine Art.

The position of campaign manager on either side cannot be considered a sinecure. Mr. Hanna has to vibrate between Cleveland and New York, apply the oil of conciliation to opposing factions, raise and disburse the funds required in conducting a thorough and aggressive campaign and oversee its ongoing in every direction and in every section of the country. He spent last Sunday in Beverly Farms in this State. His visit to New England was largely for recreation and consultation. This section is counted on as in the Republican column without any such strenuous campaigning as must be put forth in the middle tier of States. On the other hand, New York State presents a far greater problem, in view of the hostilities between the Warner Miller and the Platt factions, and the possible emergence of Mr. Platt himself as a candidate for governor.

The task of Chairman Jones, however, is far more arduous. He has much less money at his disposal, which, to be sure, may have its compensating advantage, but his chief difficulty will be to keep in line the heterogeneous elements which are nominally united in the support of Mr. Bryan. The fact that he has not formally accepted the nomination of the St. Louis Convention of Populists has caused a disposition in some quarters to repudiate him and nominate another man. It is probable, however, that he will command the support at the polls of most Populists, though Mr. Watson and not Mr. Sewall will be their choice for vice-president in many cases. The fusion of Democrats and Populists in the Southern and Western States is not yet in every case a harmonious one, for it is not always easy to reconcile elements that have been so radically opposed in past campaigns, even though common devotion to free silver has a powerful effect in softening ancient animosities. This is, indeed, a campaign when individual action is the order of the day to a gratifying degree. The finger of scorn is no longer pointed at the bolter and the Mugwump. This, in the long run, will be a gain to the cause of honest politics and good government.

Prof. Josiah Dwight Whitney.

By the death in Lake Sunapee, N. H., Aug. 19, of Professor Whitney of Harvard College the country loses an eminent geologist who in practical field work occupied an unrivaled position among scholars of this science. He was born in Northampton in 1819, graduated from Yale College in 1839. He studied in Europe under well-known scientists and traveled widely, returning to be employed by the United States Government in the survey of the Lake Superior region and of Iowa. But Professor Whitney's most important work was his conduct of the elaborate topographical, geological and natural history survey of California as State geologist, which position he held from 1860 to 1874. In 1865 he was appointed professor of geology at Harvard, having in charge the school of mining and practical geology. Dr. Whitney was an author as well as a scholar and a practical scientist, having published several valuable scientific works.

Meeting of the Canadian Parliament.

The eighth Parliament of the Dominion of Canada was called to order at Ottawa on the 20th. The most significant allusion in the governor general's speech was to the question of the Manitoba schools, expressing "every confidence that when Parliament again assembles this important controversy will have been adjusted satisfactorily." This is taken to mean that the new premier has already arranged a satisfactory compromise with the provincial authorities. The question of the tariff, the ministry promises, is also to be investigated during the recess, with a view to relieving the burdens of the people. After voting supplies the Parliament will be adjourned until the time of its regular meeting early next year.

The Journey of the Czar.

Official Europe is in a state of perturbation over the arrangements for the journey of the czar. The French are preparing to give him a welcome to Paris, which shall be a full expression of the value they put upon the Russian alliance. In Germany Berlin is disturbed because his meeting with Emperor William is not to be at the capitol. His visit to England is to be a strictly private one, made to the queen at her residence in the Highlands, though The Speaker announces that he will give an audience to Lord Salisbury which may be fruitful of great political consequences. The visit means much more to Paris, which has not welcomed a reigning monarch since the shah of Persia was there in 1873, than to any other city, but the czar seems to be everywhere in the greatest social demand.

The Advance on the Nile.

The evidences of premeditation and far-seeing purpose which marked the sudden direction of the English forces against the Mahdi last March continue. A new advance, which has evidently been waiting only for water high enough to float the steamers past the obstructions on the Nile, has been ordered, and newspaper correspondents have been forbidden to send news from the front without official examination and approval. With the steamers in the clear channel above the Semnah Gate, a long and rapid advance is probable. At the same time comes the news of the appearance of a Belgian force under Baron Dhanis, in which are many British volunteers, on the Upper Nile, at Lado, in the extreme northeast corner of the Congo Free State. If this force advances down the Nile as the British and Egyptian force ascends, the Mahdi's people will be caught between two fires. The strengthening of the British hold on Egypt, involved in the reconquest and occupation of the Soudan, will be sure to rewaken French hostility to England and make the path of Sir Edmund Monson, who has just been appointed to succeed Lord Dufferin as British ambassador in Paris, a difficult one.

IN BRIEF.

So widely and deeply is Dr. George Leon Walker of Hartford loved that the news of his serious illness will bring sorrow to a multitude of hearts. He suffered last Saturday a severe paralytic shock at his summer home in Brattleboro, Vt. A letter just at hand from his son, Prof. Williston Walker, states that his father's condition is a very dangerous and disabled one, though no immediate fatal result is anticipated. He is conscious, but the physicians are not yet willing to encourage a positive hope that he will be better. We shall all pray that this strong and trusted leader may yet be spared to his friends and the world.

Why not call the united city into which New York, Brooklyn and other towns are soon to be merged by a characteristic and euphonious name like Manhattan. Then the present names will survive as names of localities with advantage and without confusion.

Mr. Bryan's own explanation of the fact that he read his New York speech is that "it would be better to disappoint those who listened than to risk an unfair or partial report by the opposition press." This bit of pessimistic distrust proved an exceedingly bad venture—but then, perhaps the managers of the campaign had something to say about it.

President Cleveland's silence in the midst of the temptations and excitements of the campaign will have the approval of every sober-minded and self-respecting American. The President of the United States holds too high an office to be in the thick of the political skirmish line. That he will declare his opinion at the right time we all expect, but it will be done with the dignity becoming in the Chief Magistrate of a great nation.

The movement to make Rev. S. J. Barrows, editor of the Christian Register of this city, the Republican nominee for Congress from the tenth district has our hearty sympathy. Editors of religious newspapers, so far as our experience and observation go, are not often sought for in this connection, but we know of no one in our circle of journalistic confrères who is better qualified than Mr. Barrows for honorable and capable public service.

General Booth's great Salvation Army show in London the other day must have been worth seeing. There are advantages in autocracy, and the general was able to bring together exhibits, human and otherwise, from the ends of the earth, as well as to show some of the results of his social experiments. Whether it is profitable for the recruits to be made a show of is another question.

It is refreshing to learn of a vocation in which there is an excess of opportunities for labor. Police Commissioner Roosevelt advertises for 800 new policemen in New York city and says the supply is not yet adequate to the demand. The calling, to be sure, may not be quite as remunerative as it was before the Parkhurst crusade, but its legitimate pay is sure and it must still possess many attractions for the unemployed.

Prince Bismarck is now, we see it stated, a doctor of medicine, having received the honorary degree of M. D. from the University of Jena. We suppose it is as the man who treated the bodies corporate of Europe with his celebrated course of "blood and iron" that he was thought deserving of this title. Or, perhaps, since he holds all the other doctorates, they reserved this one for his old age lest he should take a fancy to engage in actual practice.

Ian Maclaren's American trip has been now somewhat definitely marked out. He sails from Liverpool on the Germanic, Sept. 16, and the first of his Lyman Beecher lectures at Yale will be delivered Sept. 28. He expects to return home before Christmas, having in the meantime visited different sections of the country. It is not too early to say: Welcome, Ian Maclaren, prince of story tellers! Welcome, Dr. Watson, gifted preacher of Christ's gospel!

The Chicago judge who recently allowed alimony to a husband in a suit for divorce brought by his wealthy wife upon the principle that women now stand upon an absolute equality with men, and that "every reason of right, justice and morals is in favor of the proposition that the duties which the husband and wife owe each other are reciprocal," may have earned the gratitude and affection of the "emancipators" of the downtrodden sex. But we have our doubts about it.

In connection with the awful tidal wave which our Japanese correspondent describes this week, there were several extraordinary occurrences. One foreigner, a French Catholic priest, lost his life, owing, it is stated, to his having delayed a moment to tie up his shoes. His Japanese associate, who was not thus hampered, escaped unharmed. One hundred and fifty-five convicts were set free from one of the prisons when the death-dealing wave broke over the town. Four days later they all voluntarily returned to jail. Let America match that if she can.

Dr. Gunsaulus's oratorical gifts are put to good use when, as at Plymouth last week, he sets forth the issues of this campaign looked at from the point of view of honesty and the welfare of all the people. His words will be of great service to the Republican ticket wherever he can be persuaded to take the platform, for he speaks not as a partisan but as one who is convinced that widespread disaster would be liable to follow a Democratic victory. Dr. Gunsaulus's words are all the more weighty because of his identification with Armour Institute in Chicago, and because he dares to speak out against the oppression and greed of unscrupulous capitalists and is in thorough sympathy with all movements that make for the real upbuilding and betterment of the common people.

In reply to the call sent out last May, by a committee consisting of Rev. Lyman Bartlett, Miss Carrie Borden and Mrs. M. W. Wiggin, for clothing for destitute Armenians in Turkey, casks, barrels, boxes, packages about a hundred in number, have found their way to the Congregational House. In the neighborhood of 7,000 articles, valued at $9,000, have been received and, through the courtesy of the American Board, carefully repacked in its packing rooms. By the cordial co-operation of the Cunard Steamship Company all this clothing, about twelve tons in weight, is being conveyed to Constantinople and Smyrna free of cost. In order to transport boxes from Constantinople to the interior, however, where is the greatest destitution, $150 is imperatively needed at once. Contributions, in the form of money orders or checks, may be sent to Rev. Lyman Bartlett, 7 Congregational House, Boston.

Family reunions usually abound at this season of the year, and we have heard of more than one interesting gathering of members of clans that have a common ancestry. One of the largest in New England this summer was the reunion of members of the Lee family at Farmington, Ct., Aug. 13. A hundred or more of those who are proud to bear that name came together to participate in exercises suitable to the occasion. The main address was by Rev. F. T. Lee of Chicago, once a member of The Congregationalist's staff, who has been spending several weeks in this vicinity. His brother, Rev. L. O. Lee, is one of the missionaries of the American Board in Turkey. Any family owes a debt of gratitude to the man who is willing to expend the time and labor necessary to epitomize properly its history. Not every family would discover through such researches, as did Mr. Lee, that doctors have predominated among the masculine descendants of the original American ancestor, while lawyers have been remarkably scarce.

No one looking into Park Street Church last Sunday would have guessed from the size of the congregations, morning and evening, that it was a hot August Sunday. Dr. Gregg was in his old pulpit and many who once heard him regularly there were present to greet him. One young man, a college student, was heard to remark after the morning service that he considered it the best sermon he ever heard in his life. Its theme was The Indifference of Men to the Church and Religion, and the discourse was a noble plea for larger masculine interest in, and allegiance to, the church of Christ. Dr. Gregg was frank enough to intimate that narrow-minded preachers, who frame elaborate theories and set forth complicated dogmas, may be one cause of the unfriendly disposition of some men toward organized Christianity. We used to think when Dr. Gregg was located in this city that he knew how to preach, but his three years in his Brooklyn pulpit have made him still more interesting and effective. When a man loves to preach he does not often lack an audience.

A current impression that Miss Clara Barton has closed her work for the suffering Armenians and is on her way back to the United States, due to the fact that she has left Constantinople for a rest with friends in Germany, is most unfortunate. She is in readiness to return to Constantinople in the fall and has left the relief work in competent hands. Instead of relaxing efforts to raise money and to keep up supplies the National Armenian Relief Committee reiterates its demands for help from the people of America in view of the horrible suffering from cold and hunger that is before the Armenians during the long winter months. It is expected that the relief work will become more truly international and official now that Europe is waking up to the situation. Germany is to open orphan asylums at Harpoot, Oorfa and Cæsarea, under the protection of the government and in the care of the Kaiserwerth Deaconesses; Switzerland has relief committees at Geneva, Zurich, Basle and Berne; and England is making strenuous efforts to keep up supplies for the winter.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM THE INTERIOR.

Macatawa Park Summer School.

Although this school is undenominational its management from the first has been almost entirely in Congregational hands. Situated on the east shore of Lake Michigan, a short ride from Chicago, its attractions as a summer resting place have drawn thither a good number of permanent summer residents, among them the families of some of our well-known ministers. Professor Taylor has a cottage here and Rev. Mr. Westervelt of Morgan Park, the founder of Macatawa, has a home here. So has Rev. J. H. Parr, the principal of a prosperous private school on the south side. Rev. G. H. Wilson of Paxton, formerly of Hinsdale, Ill., now the manager of the program for summer study and lectures, also finds here his summer rest. It is a favorite resort, too, for such men as Prof. S. I. Curtiss and Rev. Dr. E. A. Adams of the Bohemian Mission. The lecture course this year has been rich. Rev. J. M. Campbell of Lombard, Ill., has discussed in sixteen lectures the doctrine of the Holy Spirit in its relation to modern Christological thought. Those who are familiar with his writings will not need to be told how stimulating his lectures were. Professor Taylor and Z. S. Holbrook, Esq., of the Bibliotheca have also spoken on subjects pertaining to their departments of study. Dr. Philip Krohn of the Lake View Church has given a lecture growing out of his recollections of the war. Rev. Theodore Clifton of Trinity Church and Rev. E. T. Lee of the Douglass Park Church have been among the speakers. Macatawa is a beautiful spot, and is fast becoming a very popular resort. The brethren who have worked together in organizing and establishing the summer school there are deserving of a more generous assistance in the way of financial aid than they have yet received.

The Rockford Messiah.

The man Schweinfurth, claiming to be the Messiah and living on a farm of 400 acres a few miles from Rockford as the head of a company of devoted followers, numbering fifty or sixty, many of them women, has been exposed by a former believer as an impostor of the worst sort. To the relief of the good people of Rockford, he is now in Minneapolis, it is said on a visit. It is also reported that he intends to remove his "heaven," as he calls it, to California, although charges now pending against him in the courts may have first to be met. The farm, which is mortgaged, has been deeded back to its original owner, who is glad to get it even with the burden which rests upon it. Schweinfurth succeeded a Mrs. Beekman, who claimed to be the Messiah and gathered quite a large following, although his moral influence has never been as good as hers. Some of the original Beekmanites are among the more bitter of Schweinfurth's assailants.

Subject for a New Play.

Sunday, Aug. 16, more than a thousand people met at Starved Rock, on the Illinois River, one hundred miles from Chicago, to witness a play in which the dramatic incidents and material of more than two centuries ago were set forth by Herver Merker of the Staats Zeitung. The play is called Tonti, after the gallant Frenchman who accompanied La Salle on his explorations, and who, with the Illinois, passed a winter on the rock in a fort erected by himself and La Salle, with the approval of the Canadian authorities, as a means of defence against the Iroquois. The rock is in the town of Utica and furnishes a view from its summit of great beauty. Nature herself provided the scenery for the stage. The actors, who had been carefully selected, did well. The performance began at 3 P. M. and lasted two hours. The grand council between the Iroquois and the Illinois over the slaughter which had taken place in the village of the latter, which lay at the foot of the rock, Tonti, Barbe, the niece of La Salle, whom Tonti marries, the return of Tonti after his visit to Texas where La Salle was killed, are said to have been represented vividly and impressively. Mr. Merker has taken some liberties in dealing with historical facts. Mr. E. B. Mason, the best living authority on the early history of Illinois, says that the village which was destroyed was at the foot of Buffalo Rock, near Ottawa, on the north side of the river, and was removed to the plain at the foot of Starved Rock after the massacre. In this he disagrees with Parkman, but seems to have good grounds for his opinion in a letter by La Salle himself.

Massacre at Fort Dearborn.

This occurred eighty-four years ago, Aug. 15. Till quite recently it was believed that the only extant account of this cruel affair is contained in Waubun, a book written by Mrs. John H. Kinzie, in which the chief feature is the description of the old fort, of those who occupied it, and their terrible fate at the hands of infuriated Indians. Another book has now been discovered, antedating Mrs. Kinzie's by about four years, bearing the title Wau Nan Gee, or the Massacre at Chicago, a romance of the American Revolution, by Major Richardson. The preface is dated at New York, March 30, 1852. It is not yet known who Major Richardson was, though it is conjectured that he was in the British service. His story, of great interest to all who care for the early history of Chicago and for the fortunes of Mr. Kinzie, the famous Indian trader and for many years one of our most prominent citizens, is painful though instructive reading.

An Advance Step.

Every friend of the Sunday School and Publishing Society must rejoice at the decision to employ a lady missionary and primary school instructor. The society is to be congratulated on the choice of Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner as that missionary and teacher. She is a woman of rare gifts. She has been in charge of the primary department of the Union Park Sunday School for seven years, and has made it one of the best in the country. Her entrance upon this new work is a serious loss to Union Park, although she has trained others who will now take her place while she enters that wider field for which her endowments and her experience so richly fit her. It is confidently expected that the 750 Sunday schools in this district will provide for her support by extra offerings, and that more than enough will be given Rally Sunday, Sept. 27, to meet all the additional expense connected with her employment. Her presence in any school, even for a single hour, cannot fail to be an inspiration.

Mr. J. W. Tewksbury.

While Chicago is far from willing to give up Mr. Tewksbury, the Chicago agent of the Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society, and while his removal from Chicago takes a family of earnest Christian workers out of the Union Park church, one cannot help feeling that his experience and success in the management of the Chicago store have prepared him admirably for the position of agent at Boston, made vacant by the death of Mr. Smith. The store here has never been in a better condition than at present, and sales have steadily increased each year. Mr. Tewksbury will be greatly missed by hosts of friends, and by none more than by the Congregational ministers and churches of the Northwest whose interests he has so earnestly striven to further.

Municipal Economy.

Commissioner Downey, since his appointment about a month ago as chief of the department of public works, has been bringing consternation to the minds of his employés. Supernumeraries, men unable to do good work for fair wages, have been dismissed by the score. Recently twenty on a single day left the city's service for the city's advantage. Several inspectors, whose duties others can discharge without cost to the city, have also been permitted to retire from their lucrative posts. A number of contractors have been notified that their work is not according to contract, and that the city will neither accept it nor pay for it. In all this taxpayers rejoice, for they are convinced that, if the enormous sum of money employed in running the city were judiciously expended, our streets would be clean and every department of our public service have funds enough and to spare.

Chicago, Aug. 22. FRANKLIN.

FROM THE NORTHWEST.

The University Summer School.

Minnesota makes ample provision for summer schools, and a large number of teachers and students devote a part of their vacation to these sessions held in different parts of the State. The university has one of the largest, if not the largest, schools in the country, with nearly forty instructors and about 1,300 pupils enrolled. These four weeks are also used by many in doing post-graduate work. The curriculum includes not only the branches taught in our higher schools and universities, but physical culture and domestic economy also, as well as lecture courses by prominent educators. Methods acquired here are carried back to the home study and schoolhouse and an enthusiasm enkindled in the university atmosphere which is not elsewhere attainable.

Good Citizenship League.

This new society in Minneapolis is growing rapidly and branches are being organized in nearly all the wards. Already in some of the wards rousing mass meetings have been held and names proposed for aldermen, and the best people are determined to see to it that these men shall be supported at the primaries by selecting delegates favorable to them in the convention. The people are agreed for the present to do one thing, and that is to get such aldermen for the next two years as shall not be without occupation or visible means of support aside from the $500 aldermanic salary. It is not only true that we have been having too much national politics in our municipal affairs, but that it has also been of the wrong kind. Less national and more municipal politics is what is needed and the voters of the Flour City are out on this crusade to win, however long and severe the fight may prove to be.

Rev. William J. Gray.

The pastor of the Open Door Church, Minneapolis, has no option but to seek a milder climate in which to work. For over four years Mr. Gray has been doing a most successful work in a very difficult field, owing to the change of people in the community—Americans going out and foreigners coming in. Not a member of the church but that regrets the necessity for the resignation. Aside from this he has been actively identified in civic reform movements, and in all denominational work he has won a prominent place. We congratulate the church at Everett, Wn., on his acceptance of their call, and assure them that they have chosen well.

Our Dollar.

The political furnace, which is to test our gold and silver dollar, is growing hotter. Judging from the silver tongues heard on all the streets the white metallists are the only aggressive missionaries in the field. But indications within a few days are not wanting that an educational campaign for the best dollar in the world must begin at once, and the gravity of the problem cannot safely be intrusted to the enthusiasm of the days just before the election. If a gold standard alone makes our dollar the peer of the best in any of the greatest nations of the earth then let those who believe it say so and keep on saying so. J. A. S.

FROM CANADA.

Congregational Notes.

Two months have gone since the union at Montreal, and already the fruits of that gathering are apparent. The secretary is carrying out his instructions, and is forwarding to the vacant churches names of properly accredited candidates. In this way it is hoped to help in guarding them from unworthy men. The college board has appointed a committee to look for a successor to Principal Barbour, whose resignation takes effect next June. It is probable that the new principal will be found in either England or the United States. The secretary of certain allied labor organizations, which memorialized the recent denominational gatherings, has just made public the fact that the only churches which had the courtesy to take any notice of their address were those of the Congregational Union, and further adds: "They not only acknowledged its receipt, but expressed their sympathy with the objects of the address." Though few in number the Congregational churches of Canada have always stood in the front of the great movements of the day. Among the individual churches the laying of the corner stone of the Southern Church, London, on Aug. 10, by Mayor Spencer of that city, is announced. Mr. Matthew Kelley was ordained at Listowel a few days earlier, while Rev. C. E. Bolton of Kincardine has just been called to Garafroxa and Belwood.

Sunday Street Cars.

The question of Sunday street cars is up again in Toronto. The citizens have twice declared against their running, and now a third vote is proposed. To secure this a deputation waited on Mayor Fleming a few days ago, and asked that a vote be taken in September or October. A counter deputation followed soon after and urged that if a vote be taken at all it be deferred until January, when the municipal elections will be held. The difference of a few months may seem of little moment, but it is just here that the verdict may turn. In January the attractions of the parks and outside resorts are mostly gone, while at the municipal elections the polls are well guarded against personation and fraud. The former voting may throw some light on the matter of time. In January, 1892, Sunday cars were voted down by 14,287 against 10,351, and in August, 1893, by 14,157 against 13,154. Mayor Fleming favored January, when it is likely the vote will be held. It may be added that the question is one of more than local interest, since decision in the courts has been pending for some time in the case of the Hamilton Street Car Company for violation of the Lord's Day Act.

Temperance Legislation.

The suppression of the liquor traffic in the Dominion is also the subject of general attention. Different reasons may be given for this. At the recent elections some fifty members were returned who are friendly to the cause of prohibition. Added to this is the pledge of Hon. Wilfred Laurier that if called to power a plebiscite will be given, and if the people pronounce in favor of a prohibitory measure it will be enacted. At a recent convention in Toronto, under the auspices of the Dominion Alliance, a committee was appointed to wait upon Mr. Laurier and urge an early vote, while arrangements were made for the organization, funds and literature of the campaign. A deputation from the convention also waited on Premier Hardy of Ontario and were assured that his government is a temperance one, and will promote the cause to the full extent of its constitutional power. The friends of prohibition are greatly elated, and believe that the prospects were never so bright for the triumph of their cause.

Canadian Politics.

The composition of Mr. Laurier's cabinet has given general satisfaction, and well it might, since to it have been called the ablest men of the Liberal party, among whom are five former Provincial premiers. The country is now turning its attention to the policy of the new government, and asking what changes will be made. The suspense has been in a measure relieved by the premier in a recent speech at St. John's, Quebec. Careful investigation will at once be made into the needs of manufactories, after which tariff reform will follow. Agriculture is promised help by the reduction of duties on articles purchased, and by an increase on prices of articles for sale through quicker communication with European markets. More friendly reciprocal relationship with the United States, it is thought, can be brought about with a view to the revival of the treaty of 1853-56, when prosperous times prevailed in Canada. Attention will be given to the development of the Northwest, while the vexing Manitoba school question, Mr. Laurier affirms, will be amicably settled within six months. Other ministers have made similar speeches at their nominations for re-election, so that the new government may be expected to carry out the policy enunciated.

The American Elections.

Though occupied with election matters at home the Canadian mind has not been indifferent to the political movements across the line. A great deal of interest centered on the conventions that were held for the selection of presidential candidates. The nomination of Major McKinley at St. Louis was expected, while the result of the Chicago convention was a surprise, inasmuch as the nominee was wholly unknown in Canada. In the earlier stages of the campaign it was the tariff question which was the supreme topic of interest, and it may be stated here that there is little sympathy with Mr. McKinley because of his high protective views. Within the past few weeks attention has been turned to the money question, and many pages of the Dominion press are now devoted to its discussion. If the Canadian mind is opposed to a high protective tariff across the line it more strongly disapproves of the adoption of a silver basis. In money matters there is much in common between the two lands, and as a result of the free silver agitation the Canadian banks are calling in their loans from the United States. The Bank of Toronto alone has within the past month brought over more than a half million of gold coin from the Republic.

British Columbia Gold.

Canada is interested in the gold question in another form at home. In British Columbia the mining fever seems to be at white heat. Rossland is the chief center of operations, and every day almost brings reports of rich gold strikes. The Slocan Star Mine alone promises a dividend of a million dollars within the next twelve months, and is pronounced on good authority to be the richest lead and silver mine on the American continent. As might be expected there has been a great rush for the west, and many have found to their sorrow that "it is not all gold that glitters." Living is expensive, wages are comparatively low, work for many is not obtainable and capital is needed before investments can be made. The gold fields are far from being the poor man's paradise.

J. P. G.

FROM JAPAN.

Tidal Wave.

Poor Japan! She seems to be ever fighting the elements. Earth, air and sea are her greatest foes. As the cable told you weeks ago, this time her enemy was the sea. About 8 P. M. June 15 something happened at the bottom of the ocean along the northeast coast of Japan's main island—whether an earthquake or an explosion the scholars are not agreed. But as the result an immense tidal wave, or rather several in succession, rolled in upon the land, killing 29,000 people, injuring 7,000 more, destroying 9,000 houses, and almost paralyzing the season's fishing along 100 miles of coast line. No such calamity has visited Japan since the great earthquake five years ago, and the loss of life by this one act of the sea is more than three times that caused by the earth's gyration in October, 1891.

Court and people, Japanese and foreigners, missionaries and merchants have vied with each other in furnishing relief funds—something like $130,000 having been contributed already, aside from grants out of the public coffers.

Mission Meeting.

The missionaries of the American Board in Japan have again met in annual session. For the sixth time in succession this yearly gathering was held on the grounds of Kobe College. Dr. Gordon of Kyoto presided, giving as the keynote of the occasion Col. 3: 17. Rev. H. Pedley of Niigata gave us a clear-cut message in the annual sermon, Mr. Allchin read a fine and timely paper on Mission Fellowship, Dr. J. H. DeForest enlightened us as to Present Day Theological Tendencies, and all the discussions were strong, serious and unusually helpful. Four of the mission children united with the church, three of them on confession; the C. E. Juniors held a delightful public meeting, Stanley Allchin, aged ten, taking the prize for the best set of answers to seven Biblical questions. All the meetings of the week were of a high spiritual order.

Interest and discussion centered chiefly around two topics. First, our relations to the Doshisha. As The Congregationalist readers are aware, the Japanese trustees of this well known Kyoto school recently voted to close relations with the mission and the Board at the end of the present year, though they apparently desired and expected that the missionaries would continue aiding the school as individuals. Since the break must come in December it was felt it would be fairer to the school to have it come at once, so that the trustees could plan intelligently for the new school year. Moreover, the trustees have so persistently disregarded the wishes and convictions of both the foreigners and a large section of the Christian Japanese constituency of the school, especially in the retaining of Professor Ukita as a teacher in the school and promoting him to be dean of the college department, that the missionaries residing in Kyoto were unwilling longer to remain upon the faculty.

After careful and prayerful deliberation the mission voted unanimously to instruct their members in Kyoto to resign at once from all the departments of the university. A carefully prepared letter sent with the resignations has been acknowledged by President Kozaki, in which he stated that the trustees would shortly take action on the matter. As yet no further word of any importance has come, and there are no marked indications of a speedy change for the better.

Furthermore, the mission committee met a strong committee of the alumni and friends of the school who are making a persistent effort to bring about a reconciliation between the Doshisha trustees and the mission. Our committee laid down three propositions as the probable basis on which the Board would consent to co-operate once more with the school of Neesima and his successors.

First, that the Board, through the mission, be officially represented in the management of the school. This is no more than has been granted heretofore and seems a reasonable provision if there is to be genuine co-operation.

Second, that no one be allowed a place on the board of trustees or faculty who is not in general sympathy with the work of the American Board and the Christian foundation of the school.

Third, that the board of trustees (Japanese) be so reorganized as to make it truly national. One criticism for years has been that too large a proportion of the managers of the school came from one section of the country and represented one set of ideas.

What the outcome will be it were idle to prophesy, but that eventually the right will prevail no one doubts. That a very large and influential body of Japanese friends of the school is thoroughly opposed to its present management is an open secret. Deep as is our love for the school and willing as we are to go to great lengths in the interest of liberty and progress, we missionaries felt to a man that in justice to our own consciences, to the cause of Christian missions in Japan, and to the American founders and friends of this historic institution, the time had come for a dignified but emphatic protest against the undue and divisive influence of two or three men who are almost monomaniacs in their antagonism of evangelical Christians and foreign missionary movements.

Those, and they are thousands, who love the Doshisha and revere the memory of its great and good founder may well pray earnestly that the leading of the "unseen hand" may be increasingly recognized at Kyoto, and this school, so honored in the past, rise into a newer, diviner life out of the present grave of doubt and dissension.

The second live question before us was the one of an increase of our working force. Twenty-two adult members of our mission returned to America last year, and several of these will not be seen again in Japan. Only three of our number came back to us across the Pacific during the same period. Our present force, forty six on the field and twenty two at home, is the lowest figure we have touched for ten years. At this rate of progress backward it is easy to foretell the end, and it is not surprising that the expression decadent mission was often used. Dr. Davis and Mr. Bartlett headed a strong move for large re enforcements, but the final decision was a unanimous vote in favor of urging all now absent on furlough to return as soon as health allowed, and a vote, thirty to five, asking for two new families and four single ladies to fill some of the vacancies caused by recent resignations. This means that the mission protests against dying at so rapid a rate as during the past three years, but is not yet prepared to plead for any real increase of its living force.

Worthy of Mention.

An editorial committee of the mission, headed by Dr. Greene of Tokyo, has begun to issue a Japanese monthly entitled The Fukuin Soshi (evangelical magazine). It devotes itself largely to translations of the best newspaper and magazine literature of the Christian world and will fill a long-felt want. Lafcadio Hearn, whose Japanese name is Y. Iwaizumi, and who is a writer of charming essays on Japanese life and character, always writing from the standpoint of ardent admiration of things Oriental, has been appointed professor of English literature in the Imperial University. Did he have sweetness and light enough to cease sneering at foreign missions, and true liberality sufficient to be just, not to say loyal, to the Christian religion, he might accomplish an immense work for his day and generation. He idealizes the Orient, which is excellent, but fails to realize the deeper, spiritual truth and life of the Occident. Competent critics affirm that the novelist of the day in Japan is a lady, Miss I. Higuchi. Not much above twenty, she is showing herself a gifted writer, especially of short stories, portraying the vices and miseries of society. Who says Japan is not abreast of the times?

Okayama, July 17. J. H. P.

The Veiling of the Soul.*

By Ian Maclaren.

In one of his Twice Told Tales Hawthorne describes how a much loved Puritan minister conceived the weird idea of concealing his face with a veil, and how his people were affected with a sense of painful mystery as he went in and out among them with covered countenance till the end of his days. His betrothed forsook him; the bride trembled before him at her marriage; children fled from him on the road; people whispered as he passed. One realizes in an instant, as he reconstructs the scene, how much of the confidence and joy of life depend on our beholding one another, literally, with open face. Imagine the change and horror if one morning each man's face were covered with black and impenetrable to his neighbor. Laughter would cease on earth; who then would have the heart for mirth under this cloud? None would be able to comfort his neighbor, for none could estimate his brother's sorrow. Speech would languish, for it would have no visible response. Love itself would die when every emotion was masked. The very power of association and the instinct of trust would be destroyed when every man had withdrawn into darkness. Were there no revelation of the face, then there would be neither faith nor fellowship possible on earth.

It is allowable to give the image a more spiritual direction and a more searching meaning. St. Paul in his great chapter on Charity imagines that the covering is really upon the soul, and he is much affected by the fact that we see nothing, neither truth nor people, clearly. We see not "face to face," but rather as those studying one another "through a glass darkly." We do not understand our neighbor, we speculate about him. He is to us an unknown quantity, and we deal with him as a chemist with a new material. There are about him certain properties—evidence he has flung out, as it were, for our guidance—his looks, his speech, his actions, his habits. These we collect and analyze; we form a list of components; we strike a balance; we conclude he is this or that. Very likely we assign him a label, and speak as if he were classified. Yet we are aware of our ignorance and helplessness; we are bitterly conscious that the very essence of the man has escaped and defied all our tests. Sometimes we remark of some one, "He is difficult to know"; perhaps it were nearer the truth to say that it is impossible to know any one.

Consider, for instance, how seldom six sensible and charitable people will agree as to the character of some mutual friend, so many considering that his strong point is sweet temper, while the others insist that it is self-restraint. Consider, also, what a power of surprise lies in even shallow natures, so that one whom we thought the weakest develops an immovable obstinacy, and one whom we considered unfeeling shows himself capable of immense unselfishness. What unexpected loyalties or treacheries; what deeds of heroism or meanness; what intellectual achievements or imbecilities emerge in lives we prided ourselves on having surveyed and sounded. Times there were when we seem to have mapped out every inch in a friend's life; times there are when it seems as if we had only sailed along the coast. We may ascend some open river for a distance, but the heart of this continent remains a mystery. Is it not the case that a man and a woman may live together in the sacred intimacy of wedlock, sharing, as it appears and as they imagine, every feeling, hope, belief, and yet discover with a shock of disappointment that each is completely fenced round and secluded from the other?

This veil is not to be thought of as an expedient of the individual to preserve his privacy, for he cannot remove it any more than his neighbor. For one thing it is physical, and must last while we are in this present environment. If the body be an instrument of revelation so that by our eyes and mouth and hands we declare ourselves, it is also a thick cloak of concealment, so that only as one pierces through the flesh can he reach the soul. No doubt the countenance, as the years pass, is dominated by the soul and grows into its likeness, so that the saint looks out on us through a clear window and the evil-liver has his character written on his face. One, however, knows how often in the beginning the shape of the body is a contradiction of the soul; for nothing is more common than a perfect face giving a deceptive certificate to hollowness and insincerity, or homely features discrediting honesty and affection. We are indeed so sensible of this anomaly that our minds are almost inclined to accept it as an axiom that where nature has given the form of Apollo it is safe to expect folly, but where she has condescended to the face of Socrates there one may be certain of wisdom.

And this veil is also another patent proof that the mercy of God is over all his works, for surely we ought to be thankful that in this present life our souls are screened from public view. As nature conducts her initial processes in secret—and it were cruel to lay them bare—so does the divine Spirit pursue his work upon the soul in darkness. If it were permitted to any human hand to expose a soul, then none in this life could stand the trial. What motives of self interest, movements of unholy passion, base feelings of envy, hot fits of anger disturb and defile the soul even of a saint. It is indeed through this very discipline of temptation and ceaseless conflict with evil that the soul is purified and strengthened and comes at last to perfection. While we are still struggling through our purgatorio no prying eye can criticise or condemn; in the paradiso the veil can be safely dropped from God's finished work.

If this veiling of the soul be inevitable in the present dispensation, it has serious dangers which we must remember and conquer. Every one of us is liable to be misunderstood and to suffer injustice. If we could explain ourselves and let everything be known, then they had not called us ungenerous, or proud, or bigoted, or heretical, or something else that may not be worse than what we are, but happens not to be true of us. It is quite fair we should be condemned for our faults; it is not fair we should be condemned for our no faults, and yet for the most part any protest is useless. Many a private person in a household, many a laborer in the public service, many a teacher in the church, has been misconstrued and misjudged all his days without relief. Do not complain overmuch. When one remembers how hard it is to understand himself, and how often he has erred both in self depreciation and self-approval, it is not wonderful that one should be misunderstood by other people. The situation is not without its consolations—through all his life, from Nazareth to Calvary, Jesus was never once understood.

Perhaps it were better for most of us to complain less of being misunderstood and to take more care that we do not misunderstand. It ought to give us pause at a time to remember that each one has a stock of cut and dry judgments on his neighbors, and that the chances are that most of them are quite erroneous. What our neighbor really is we may never know, but we may be pretty certain that he is not what we have imagined, and that many things we have thought of him are quite beside the mark. What he does we have seen, but we have no idea what may have been his thoughts and intentions. The mere surface of his character may be exposed, but of the complexity within we have not the faintest idea. People crammed with self-consciousness and self conceit are often praised as humble, while shy and reserved people are judged to be proud. Some whose whole life is one subtle, studied selfishness get the name of self sacrifice, and other silent, heroic souls are condemned for want of humanity.

Perhaps the saddest calamity of our veiled state is the misunderstanding that sometimes arises between people who are of the same family or are close friends. It is not easily removed or explained; it may rather deepen than lessen with the years; it may last for life. Nothing surely can be a sorer cross than the alienation of one whom we love, whom we trust, whom once we made our confidant. Whether the outside world appreciate one is of secondary importance; it takes the heart out of one to be daily misread by his own. How one longs for the shining of the sun and the dispersion of the cloud! That day may never come this side the grave; in such an event let it be our consolation that those who have been estranged shall at last know even as they are known. Like ships that start on the great voyage together, and lose sight of one another in the fog, what can friends do but feel their way with caution and patience, lest there be collision and disaster, till at the final sunrise they cast anchor side by side in the fair haven of peace, and see one another "face to face."

*Copyright, 1896, by John Watson.

East London has been suffering in the summer heat from a short supply of water. The London supply is in the hands of private companies and the unusual drought has curtailed the amount at the disposal of the East London Company so that its customers, who are, it must be remembered, the people of the poorest quarter of the city, complain that it only runs for two hours a day and is nearly undrinkable at that. Wherever the line of state socialism is drawn, the water supply of a great city ought never to be under control of a private monopoly.

Charity Chance.*

A Serial Story by Walter Raymond.

Summary of the Previous Five Chapters.—The scene of this story is Somerset, in the west of England. Miss Graham, a maiden lady of means and a cripple, has adopted Charity Chance, who calls her aunt. Miss Graham's nephew, Graham Poltimore, the son of her dead sister, seeks the hand of Charity Chance in marriage and is accepted, though the girl has some misgivings in relation to the depth of her affection for him. Miss Graham is delighted to have her heart's desire thus gratified, and Charity, who cherishes her fondly, finds a satisfaction in having acceded to her patron's wishes for her. Miss Graham visits her brother-in law, Mr. Poltimore-Briggs, the sole surviving trustee of her property, to inform him that she has but a brief time to live and to arrange to settle some money upon Charity, but he advises postponement, and the interview is interrupted, to his evident relief.

VI. Alfred Prentice.

POET? Alfred Prentice? Yes, there sometimes appeared verses in the magazines signed with that name. Charity had seen, but scarcely read them, or if so they left no deep impression on her mind. But the mere thought of a poet made her heart quicken with interest and enthusiasm. In her restless impatience with Babblemouth and its trivialities, one thing she longed for more than all—intercourse with people whose minds were lifted above littlenesses upon great ideas. No poet had ever been known in Babblemouth, except the little shoemaker on the quay, who recommended inelegant boots in limping verse, and drove a thriving trade in consequence.

Attracted by the sound of voices, she went quickly down a long passage to a door at the back of the house. It opened into a paved court at the foot of a terrace, beyond which a large walled garden ran up the hillside.

Here in the cool several people were seated. Theodosia Mortimer, with her mother and some of her sisters, Mrs. Poltimore-Briggs and Graham. They had gathered in a semi-circle around a stranger, who leaned back in his chair smoking a cigarette. Upon the ground close to his hand, which hung over the arm of the chair, lay a small red volume he had just put down.

As she came into the doorway Charity was greeted with a chorus of mingled welcome and regret.

"We are ready and waiting for you, Charity," said Mrs. Mortimer, with her never-ceasing smile.

"O, Charity! What a pity you were not here before. You have lost the most delightful treat," piped Mrs. Poltimore-Briggs. "Mr. Prentice has been good enough to read us one of his most beautiful poems."

"And you so fond of poetry, too," chimed in Theodosia.

The poet languidly rose from his seat and stood in an attitude combining ease with angularity. Less than the middle hight, and very slight, beside Graham Poltimore he looked quite small. His hair, of which there was a great deal, was black as jet; his shaven face thin and pale and his eyes large and bright. He wore a soft hat, a velvet jacket and a lace cravat.

At the first glance there came to Charity a strange feeling of mistrust—an intuition of something new and not yet understood, which brought the color to her cheek, and caused her to abruptly turn away. "How happy she looks, now she is engaged!" thought Theodosia Mortimer. "What luck the girl has had."

In the movement and flutter of excitement, for a moment the poet seemed likely to be overlooked.

"Present me, Poltimore."

The voice was deep and rich and almost tragic.

"I beg your pardon, old man. Mr. Alfred Prentice—Miss Chance."

Graham was in the best of spirits. With youth, expectations and the superabundant health which runs to irresponsibility, how could he be otherwise? "Come, let us go on at once," he shouted, in his light-hearted way.

As they walked down to the quay he looked gladly down at the girl he loved and at last had won, and burst out in rapid eulogy of his new-found friend.

"You will like Prentice, Charity," he cried, with enthusiasm. "He is not exactly a Hercules, but he's a very good fellow—and clever, very clever indeed. Just the sort of literary chap you will like to talk to. I fell across him this morning sitting upon the wall at the end of the jetty. I asked him what he was doing. He said he was busy. Incubating a poem, I told him. We were at school together, but he is older than I. O! he's a very good chap. He did my verses and Greek play for years. That's why he made such a reputation so young in life. He got the learning meant for me, in addition to his own. Those verses he read just now really belonged to me. He did them vicariously, you know."

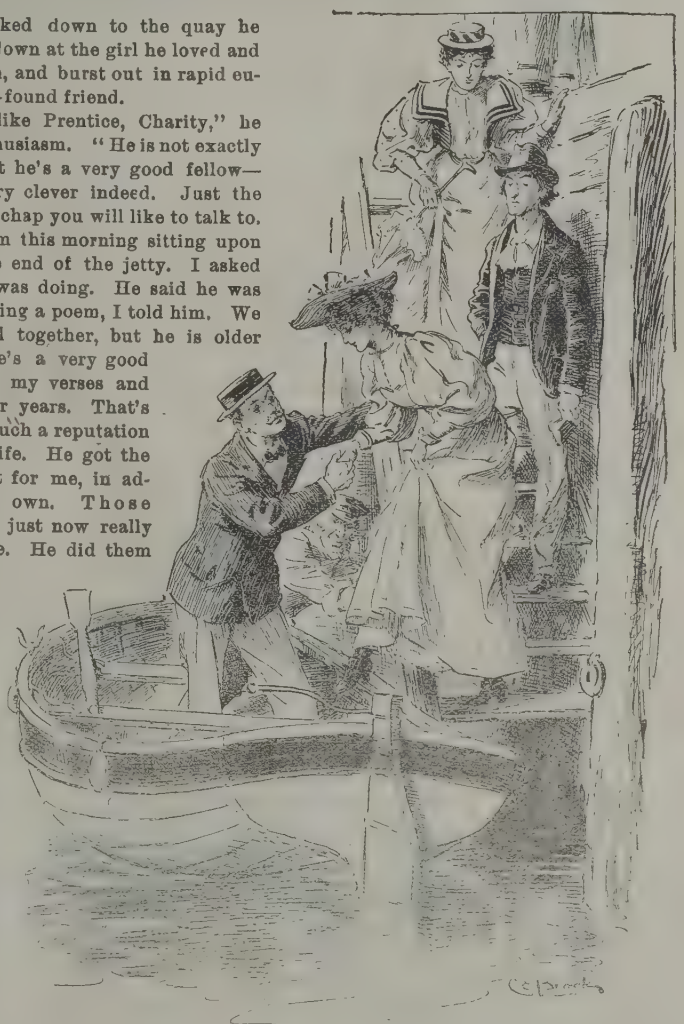
Then he laughed in his light-hearted way. Now that she had promised to marry him, he had not a care in the world.

With quickened curiosity the girl glanced again at the stranger. He was striding along by the side of Theodosia, apparently rapt in thought. But then, as Charity asked herself, how could a man of genius talk to Theodosia? Inadvertently, no doubt, he had brought away the little red volume and carried it, a finger between the leaves. Would it surprise him, she wondered, when he found this out? And would he read again? She hoped that he would read again.

"He seems so self conscious," she said, almost to herself.

"Don't be prejudiced against him, there's a dear," whispered Graham, in her ear, for they were now upon the steps in the quay side. It was easy to him to like people, and Charity was always so critical. "There is generally something odd about these poets. But they can't help it, you know. Prentice is a man of deep feeling—of really fine feeling. I want you to like him. I have asked him to stay with us. Let me help you. Step upon the seat."

A boat was already waiting for them. A flash of oars upon the silent harbor. Then the rattle of a block as the foresail was run up, and the Halcyon filled her white wings and stood up the channel, close under the cliffs.



"LET ME HELP YOU.' STEP UPON THE SEAT."

The wind was scarcely enough to make the ship heel, although at first she moved through the water briskly enough. The girl leaned back in her chair and looked up into the clear summer sky.

Graham was lying on the deck beside her.

*Copyrighted, 1896, by Walter Raymond.

The others, with the humorous consideration due to lovers newly betrothed, had left them to themselves, but for a long while they did not talk.

From a sharp rock, jutting out of the water, a seagull rose and slowly wheeled over the passing cutter. How beautiful it was. She could see each feather, as it hung for a moment just above the mast. Everything was sweet and calm, and lulled her soul into contentment. For the first time since her engagement she fully acquiesced in her own happiness. For Aunt Helen was so happy. Graham was so happy. And yes, she was happy, too.

He raised his finger and slowly followed the bird as it circled overhead, as if he had been pointing at it with a gun.

"I should hate you if you could kill it!" she cried, suddenly raising her head to look at him. "Could you kill it?"

"Not on those terms," he laughed.

The gull uttered its shrill note, dropped astern and settled again upon the rock. But all her restlessness had returned. There was never an escape from her own sensibility when a sight, a sound, or even the cadence of a word could awaken all the vague longings of her heart.

"They build upon the ledges of the cliff, and jackdaws in the crevices, too. I used to creep along at low tide and pick up the young birds. They get tired and drop when they first begin to fly. Once I stayed too long. You see the slope where it is not quite so steep? I had to climb up there. Half-way up I got stuck. But there was no going back. I had to go on, and I did."

The girl glanced at the dizzy hight with its meager foothold, and shuddered. For a moment she was silent; then she spoke with animation: "You had to go on, and you did. That expresses it exactly, Graham. If you had to go on you would."

"What a moralist you are, Charity," he told her, with half-amused indolence. "From reading so much poetry with Aunt Helen you expect every man to be a hero."

Her eyes sparkled and the color rose upon her cheek. "I could worship a man who did something!" she cried.

"What?"

"No matter what."

Startled at the feeling into which she had been betrayed, and for a moment disconcerted, she again leaned back and looked up at the cliffs. The tide was running faster now and made a gurgling sound against the cutter's side. Above it they could hear the distant voice of Mrs. Mortimer, in earnest discussion with Mrs. Poltimore-Briggs: "Yes, of the palest apricot, cut very full indeed, and interlined, of course, with crin"—

"Listen to the words of wisdom, Charity," he whispered, with his imperturbable good humor.

"O, I hate it!" and she clenched her hands and quivered with nervous excitement. "Always the same—the same—the same. Except when they talk of each other, and that's worse. One would suppose there was nothing to think about, and nothing to feel. And it is all so weak and insipid. It isn't living. There is no interest in it. It is like sailing when there is no wind. That always makes me long for a storm. I've been watching the rocks now, and we haven't gone five yards in five minutes. I wish it would blow a hurricane—and carry us over to Wales—so that we had to beat back in the dead of night—in the teeth of a driving rain—with all of them as wet as drowned rats, and afraid, too. That would be sailing."

"You would be just as wet as the rest."

"I shouldn't care. I can picture it. Hailstones have beaten down Mrs. Mortimer's back hair. She cannot turn her face to the gale, and one long, tapering lock clings round her neck like damp seaweed. The unsuspected frame is revealed to the eyes of man. And her artificial set shakes and chatters until the front teeth fall out. Then I hold on tight and am glad in my heart."

Their eyes met and they burst out laughing. Whatever its intensity her ill humor was short-lived and died in whimsicality. But it left her glowing with animation, and to Graham she had never looked more beautiful.

"What an emotional girl you are, Charity!"

"O! I don't know what I am," she said, quickly. "Aunt Helen would never tell me. When she took me I became hers, she said. Do you know, Graham?"

"No," he hesitated.

"But do you know?" she insisted, with increasing eagerness.

He paused. "Truly, I do not know, Charity," he told her.

"Sometimes I believe that I am a different animal to the rest of them, and that they resent it, too. That's common in the animal kingdom, you know. O, you haven't the least idea what you have undertaken to marry, Graham."

"We have known each other long enough."

"You don't know me a bit," she cried, with decision. "They all come and congratulate me now, of course—even Theodosia. But I know what they say to each other. They surmise what Aunt Helen has to leave you, and what you'll get from your father, and then they say, 'Charity Chance has done well for herself.' They hate me for that. I don't care, only it is all so mean; and it's not true. I could love you ten times as much if all of a sudden you hadn't a penny, and we had to begin in a house the size of a hutch—and struggle on—and fight it all out—and watch it all grow up. That would be living!"

With growing enthusiasm her voice had risen, and she stopped as if fearing to be overheard. But Mrs. Mortimer had been to a flower show the day before and her store of interesting information was inexhaustible.

"A blouse of a medium shade of green, accordion-kilted chiffon, with sleeves of cream and pink chiné silk, green satin ribbon at the waist, carried three parts of the way up the figure"—

Then the boom came home and this excellent woman ducked her head.

"You ought to go and talk to them!" urged Charity. "There is Mr. Prentice receiving none of the attention he deserves and longs for."

"He's all right," replied Graham, with a glance at the empty sail. "Besides, there's plenty of time. The wind has dropped and we sha'n't get home for hours unless it freshens. I'll break it to them and come back."

The wind did not freshen. The sun sank behind a sea as smooth as glass, and the gray night crept along the cliffs and wrapt the rocks in gloom. The Halcyon drifted slowly homewards on the tide. The girl stood with her hand upon the stay and watched the stars peer clearer and clearer through the darkening sky. It was all so unspeakably beautiful and deep with mystery that she could scarcely keep from tears. The women were cackling about being so late, but she did not hear them. Graham had spoken more than once, but she did not reply.

"We shall have to tow her in," he said. "I'll get in the boat and take an oar."

The boat was brought alongside. He stepped into her and Charity was left alone.

To the creaking of the oars against the rowlocks they slowly glided into the harbor mouth.

It was quite late. The lights of Babblemouth were mostly in the upper windows, and long reflections fell in shimmering lines across the black water below the quay. Charity sighed. The gloom of the harbor was so much sadder than the pale starlight of the open sea.

"Every candle there is the beacon of a tragedy."

She started. Unobserved, Alfred Prentice had stepped upon the deck, and was standing where Graham had just now stood.

"You quite frightened me," she gasped. "I did not know any one was near. But surely that is not so. It would be terrible to think that people are not happy."

"Only the unimportant is happy."

Certainly no gayety detracted from the importance of Mr. Alfred Prentice. He was oracular out of the profoundest depths of sad experience.

The words made a deep impression upon the girl's mind; but before she could firmly grasp them to reply, the moment had come to go ashore. Upon the quay the party quickly dispersed. It was too late to loiter and Graham walked home with her at once. But along the road she was silent. "Only the unimportant is happy." The phrase haunted her. Yet she could not get hold of it. It was shadowy and illusive—this ghost of a great truth. "Only the unimportant is happy." Of course! people who were satisfied with trivialities could get them—they were common as blackberries in all conscience. But "only the unimportant"—that was so sad.

A touch of sadness could always fire this girl's sympathy, which, once aglow, must needs shine on the nearest object.

"I have been quite horrid to you tonight, Graham. I know I have," she confessed, as they stepped under the porch.

Then she put her hands upon his shoulders and raised her face to his.

"Not at all, Charity. You have been delightful, as you always are," he cried, in rapture.

It was the first time she had kissed him of her own free will.

(To be continued.)

Li Hung Chang's visit in England has produced some amusing incidents and stories. He is said to have been very much taken with the English ladies, one of whom he allowed to paint his portrait, but asked them some embarrassing questions, demanding to know their age, and if they were married and, if not, why not. "He could not understand old maids," says a correspondent, which perhaps is not surprising. A laughable picture is that of his condoling with the colonial secretary, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, who habitually wears a single eyeglass, upon his loss of an eye. He is also said to have asked him if he had a surplus and what he did with it. Perhaps when he reaches New York we can get him to cross-examine Boss Platt or Boss Croker.

Pilgrimage Letters. X.

The Magnificent Celebration at Norwich. Farewell to Old England.

Rich as our experiences had been heretofore, the transcendent privilege of the trip was still awaiting us at Norwich, for here was focused in a single day several of those distinctive features which had characterized the preceding weeks. The greeting from our Nonconformist brethren, full of inspiration and touching our hearts with memories of the heroism of the past and the spiritual sympathies of the present, together with all that is impressive in the architecture and pageantry of the Established Church, its clergy acting as our hosts at a grand social function, and a delightful garden party conspired to make this occasion typical of the English pilgrimage. The ancient cathedral was celebrating its 800 h anniversary, and a more imposing ceremony probably none of our party will ever see again. We were overwhelmed to find that some of the choicest seats in the building, in the organ gallery and in the choir, had been reserved for us. We supposed that our good friend Dr. G. S. Barrett, who was indefatigable in his kind services, both before and during our stay, had secured for us this exceptional privilege, but he assured us that Dean Lefroy himself had extended the courtesy. This is the more remarkable when it is remembered that we as Nonconformists represented a faith which, to a certain extent, repudiates the forms venerated by the Church of England. We had scarcely taken our seats when from the far distance came the sound of male voices, accompanied by trumpet and cornet, singing the triumphant hymn:

Lift the strain of high thanksgiving!
Tread with songs the hallowed way!
Praise our fathers' God for mercies
New to us their sons today;
Here they built for him a dwelling,
Served him here in ages past,
Fixed in it their sure possession,
Holy ground, while time shall last.

This was a token that the procession had started from the cloisters, and as the stately body moved with slow and measured steps down the nave the congregation caught up the strain and the magnificent volume of praise did not cease till the last ecclesiastic, His Grace the Lord Archbishop of Armagh, Primate of all Ireland, who preached the sermon, was seated within the altar rails. A more dignified and impressive scene can hardly be imagined. First came the civic functionaries led by the Norwich Corporation in their splendid regalia, and preceded by an official bearing the mace, glittering with beautiful rock crystals, a gift from Queen Elizabeth. Next came other mayors in the diocese in official robes and chains, members of Parliament and of the grand lodge of masons, barristers in powdered wigs, officers of the Princess Royal's Dragoon Guards and, most imposing of all, the clergy and cathedral body, wearing cassock, surplice, stole, hood of their degree and college cap. The choir boys were in blue and white; the doctors of divinity were easily distinguished by their scarlet gowns and the bishops by their immense lawn sleeves.

Last of all came the Lord Bishop of Norwich, before whom was borne his silver crosier, escorting the Archbishop of Armagh, the entire procession numbering nearly 400. A deeply interesting thanksgiving service followed, in which it was noticeable that a prayer for the President of the United States was included in the general collect, then a sermon showing how cathedrals may truly minister to one's spiritual life, and at its close a marvelous rendering of Stainer's sevenfold Amen by the choir. As the waves of almost divine harmony swept over the bowed heads of the great congregation new depths of reverence were opened in our hearts and to worship before the Almighty seemed the very transport of human joy. During the recessional hymn the same body of ecclesiastics and other dignitaries slowly marched out of the cathedral, and the return, from our advantageous point of view, gave a fine opportunity to study their faces.

REV. G. S BARRETT, D. D

NORWICH CATHEDRAL.

About a hundred of the more eminent guests, including nine bishops and many of the nobility, had been invited by Dean Lefroy to luncheon in a spacious marquee on the deanery grounds, and to this number he added the entire American party. This distinguishing act of hospitality, on an occasion when he might have ignored our presence in the city without the least discourtesy, shows the catholic spirit of the man. Nor was our invitation an afterthought, for among the toasts on the daintily printed menu cards was one to "Our Kinsmen Beyond the Sea." This was proposed by the guest of honor, the Archbishop of Armagh, Dr. Alexander, whose wife wrote

There is a green hill far away, and other beautiful hymns, and Dr. Dunning responded in a manner that made us nowise ashamed of our leader. His Grace said he believed that the American visitors would carry back with them a message of honest, downright love from one people to another, so as to make the notion of a war between England and America utterly inconceivable. The sentiment evoked enthusiastic applause, nor was it the only expression of a similar kind during the feast. The Bishop of Norwich, speaking of the passion for freedom which had brought forth such glorious fruit in England, making it the happiest and freest country in the world, added, "Of course, I include our Anglo Saxon kinsmen across the Atlantic." Canon Jessopp, too, eminent as an antiquarian, who has written some fascinating stories of old abbeys and friars and is an authority on folklore, paid a fervent tribute to the founders of America, characterizing the Pilgrims as "apostles of freedom—men before their age." What a reversal of opinion since the day when some of them were "clapt up in prison and others had their houses beset and watched night and day" because they taught "strange and dangerous doctrine!"

Careless seems the great Avenger . . .
but behind the dim unknown
Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above his own.

The afternoon began to wane when we realized that we must surrender these social delights for a scene quite different in character but most elegant in all its appointments. Mr. J. J. Colman, the millionaire manufacturer, and the Misses Colman, had arranged for a garden party in our honor to which about five hundred guests were invited. After a cordial reception by our host and his charming daughters we strolled about the gardens, which cover over a dozen acres and occupy the site of an old Benedictine priory. Parts of the original edifice are still preserved and have been transformed into a unique sort of lodge, full of art treasures and objects of historic interest. The fireplace in the library bears the escutcheon of Isabel Wygan, who was prioress in 1514. A few years ago the shaft of a Norman column was accidentally discovered in the gardens and now, by the help of an expert antiquarian, the outline of the whole group of early buildings, including the church, is plainly defined. Greenhouses filled with rare exotics, a wealth of native flowers, shady groves, winding avenues of noble trees and velvety lawns lured us to prolong our rambles over this beautiful estate, which stands on a hight commanding a superb view of the surrounding country. An abundance of choicest fruits from the adjoining hothouses and cream from what is said to be the finest dairy farm in England were among the delicacies served from three large tents for our physical refreshment. Music was furnished by the band belonging to the Carrow Works, as the vast manufactories close by are called. From 1,200 to 2,000 persons are employed in them and the following day, when some of our party made a tour of the mammoth establishment with Mr. Colman, they were impressed by the cordial relations which evidently exist between this Christian employer and his employés. Schools and a hospital for their use are external signs of his devotion to their welfare and Dr. Barrett's church, where he worships, is another object of his generous beneficence.

Full as the day had been, it detracted nothing from our keen appreciation of the evening reception in the Old Meeting House, given by our own brethren in the faith, the mayor himself presiding. The plainness of both edifice and assembly offered a sharp contrast to the splendid spectacle in the cathedral a few hours before, and thereby accentuated to our thought the cost of our religious liberty. Here was a city in which the first Congregational church was founded by Robert Browne in 1580; here John Robinson spent the first years of his public ministry, and four of the early pastors of this very church suffered bitter persecution, having been ejected from the Establishment by the famous Act of Uniformity. These and other thrilling facts were eloquently presented by Rev. J. Lewis, the present pastor, in his address of welcome, which was beautifully engrossed on vellum. Several speeches, from both Englishmen and Americans, followed, and we heartily indorsed the words of Dr. Barrett when he said: "This little Pilgrim band will leave England with full hearts and tender memories. They will never forget the kindness and welcome extended to them on all hands, they will never forget English hearts and English homes." The next morning both he and the mayor devoted themselves to showing us points of interest about the city. We were glad to enter Dr. Barrett's own church, with its spacious Sunday school rooms, accommodating nearly a thousand pupils, and to examine at the Guildhall the rare old silver pieces used at the corporation banquets. There were massive tankards and sauce boats, salt cellars and loving cups of quaintest designs, a rose water bowl of delicate répoussé gold, all historically interesting as well as intrinsically beautiful. The Elizabethan mace already mentioned, and used only on state occasions, and the mayor's rich regalia were also seen.

Another element of pleasure during our stay in Norwich was to be entertained at the Maid's Head Hotel, which had an existence twenty years before the discovery of America by Columbus. While modern conveniences have been added, enough of antiquity remains in the shape of latticed windows, wide fireplaces and old carved furniture to fascinate the visitor for hours together. The writer was fortunate in being assigned to the identical apartment occupied by Elizabeth during her visit in 1578, and one could almost believe that the old-fashioned canopied bed and the queer little ewer and pitcher were a part of the furnishings then. In the assembly room, where famous men in wigs and ruffles and noted beauties in wondrous headdresses and costumes once made a brilliant show beneath the blaze of wax candles, the diminutive gallery for the fiddlers is still preserved.

INTERIOR NORWICH CATHEDRAL.

Something of the sadness—though for a far different reason—which filled the hearts of the early Pilgrims as they bade farewell to old England gave a tinge of melancholy to our departure that afternoon. The land that Shakspeare calls "this precious stone set in the silver sea" is endeared to us by a thousand new ties,

> For there runs
> The same blood in our veins as in your sons;
> The same deep-seated love of liberty
> Beats in our hearts. We speak the same good tongue,
> Familiar with all songs your bards have sung.

And sweeter and stronger than all other links in this chain of international fellowship is our common love and service for the same divine Master. F. J. D.

LI HUNG CHANG.

BY R. VAN BERGEN.

As this paper goes to press one of the most remarkable men of our times is approaching our shores, and before long the real ruler of autocratic China will make the acquaintance of the grand republic of the West. What impression will this statesman carry away with him to his home in the far Orient? May we hope that, seeing the evidences of our civilization, he will be induced to alter or moderate the views he holds about his country and people? Portentous questions these where the interest of 400,000,000 of our fellow beings are involved.

Li was born in 1825 in Anhui, in the central province of Hunan. His being able to graduate as Siutsai, or B. A., in 1847 proves that his family must have been influential. His ancestors probably were of the mandarin class, for it was soon after graduating that he was first brought into contact with those of our race in the capacity of financial commissioner at Soochow. He proved his ability and personal courage during the Taiping rebellion, when he took an active part in restoring order. In 1858 he was the principal leader of the government against the Wangs in the valley of the Yang tse. This led to his promotion, in 1859, to the governorship of Fuh Kien, and again in 1862 when he became Fu tai, or governor of the rich province of Kiang su.

It was at this time that Li was instrumental in securing the services of Capt. Charles Gordon, R. E., against the rebels, and a friendship began which lasted to the death of Chinese Gordon in Khartoum. There was, however, a serious interruption when Li, in violation of the promise made by Gordon, caused the leaders of the Taipings to be put to death. Li Hung Chang could not understand this keeping faith with an enemy, and considered it a mere Don Quixotism. But as Gordon had a sincere respect for Li as a statesman the chasm was bridged over, and the former pleasant relation was resumed. In 1867 Li, then viceroy of Hu-Kwang, was again in the field, this time against the Shan-tung rebels. His success led to his appointment of viceroy of the province of Chihli (of which Peking, the capital, is a part) and he removed in 1870 to Tientsin, where he has since resided.

Prince Kung, one of the ablest men of the empire, together with the late Empress Dowager, whose influence cannot be overestimated, have been Li Hung Chang's steadfast friends. As Senior Grand Secretary of State, the direction of foreign affairs has been almost entirely in Li's hands, although the jealousy of his rivals at court has handicapped him in influencing home affairs. To this must be ascribed the disastrous and humiliating ending of all the international negotiations in which Li has been an actor. In 1878 China was compelled to submit to the annexation of the Loo Choo Islands by Japan. In 1885 she lost considerable territory in the south of the empire by the Li-Fournier Convention. Again she has been repeatedly compelled to pay heavy indemnities for murder and destruction of missionary property. Only a little over a year ago Li was obliged to leave his beloved country to sue for peace from the despised Japanese, and, while he escaped death by the assassin's bullet, he was forced to deliver beautiful Formosa into the hands of the hated Japanese.

To the outsider, then, it looks as if Li's career as a statesman has been a series of blunders or failures, or at least as scarcely compatible with the reputation he enjoys. But it must be remembered that Li Hung Chang, although essentially a Chinaman by birth, education and sentiment, has saved his country from far greater disasters threatened by the insolence and ignorance of his colleagues in the government. Every Chinese mandarin, without exception, is conservative and opposed not only to foreigners but to any foreign innovation of whatever sort it may be. Poorly paid officially, the very existence of the magistrates of every rank is threatened by progress, and any proclivity toward that direction raises a storm of indignation and the cry of treason.

It is, then, very much in Li Hung Chang's favor, and proves the vast influence he possesses in his own immediate territory, that he was able to build and equip the railroad from Tientsin to the Taku Forts (at the mouth of the Peiho River), and to continue that line for a distance of sixty-seven miles to the rich Tungshan and Kaiping coal fields, which he owns. Chang Chih Tung, Li's great rival in influence and wealth, a man who hates foreigners with all the bigotry of which a Chinaman is capable, was sent to Nanking as viceroy of the two kiangs, and is now engaged in building the railroad from his provincial capital to the Imperial City. The rivalry and jealousy existing between these two statesmen has caused the violent death of more than one poor missionary who devoted his life to the lifting up of China's enslaved millions, for Chang Chih Tung would gladly embroil the grand secretary with foreign Powers, that he might discredit him with the imperial court at home.

Remembering Li Hung Chang's education and the tendencies engendered by it, he must indeed be classed as the foremost Chinaman and a statesman of no mean power. Laboring under the disadvantages of the semi-religious sentiment known as ancestral worship, Li has shown remarkable liberality. That he is patriotic and has laid ambition aside has been repeatedly shown by his refusal of offers from foreign Powers to place him on the throne of the Manchu. In how far his present experience will influence China's awakening to the march of progress will depend upon his vigor when reaching home. If his health allows, he will impress upon his imperial master a sense of the wealth and power of foreign nations and obtain the Dragon Seal upon edicts guaranteeing life and immunity to the foreign residents of the Middle Kingdom.

That Li Hung Chang's principal object in undertaking this journey in his old age was to provide for alliances in case further attacks upon China's integrity are made may be taken for granted, and it is not improbable that he has taken measures to frustrate Japan's hopes for future aggrandizement. At the same time Li will have observed and examined closely into whatever came within his sphere of contact, and will understand and appreciate occidental progress as compared with Chinese conservatism. He knows that reforms must be made to prevent China's dismemberment. Will he prevail upon his associates to embrace his views? That is the question, and it involves the welfare of the Middle Kingdom.

Li Hung Chang's yâmen is off the official quarter of Tientsin. Like all similar residences a wall seems to block the entrance—to ward off the evil spirit who, according to Chinese belief, can only enter in a straight line. The courtyard, badly paved and in a filthy condition, as well as the mean-looking buildings, scarcely do credit to the occupant, reputed to be worth 500,000,000 taels. (A tael is, at the present time, worth about seventy-three cents.) At the entrance of the hall is a hideous looking painting of an abnormally ugly idol representing the god of avarice—a hint to the mandarin not to squeeze too much. Upon being admitted to Li's presence, he is found in a dirty, whitewashed, bare apartment of the size of an ordinary parlor. The only furniture it boasts of is a common table with dirty tablecloth and some very ordinary chairs. It is of no use to interview Li unless you understand the mandarin dialect, and even then he persists in doing the questioning, which is frequently, if not altogether, of a personal nature. "Where is your family? How many children have you? Your wife living? What is your salary?" and such questions are unintermittingly hurled at the visitor, whose discomfiture is philosophically, but none the less thoroughly, enjoyed by his Excellency.

LI HUNG CHANG.

In person Li Hung Chang is about five feet, eleven inches tall, with a commanding presence. His usual dress is a gray silk robe and black silk cap, but on state occasions he wears the jacket of imperial yellow silk and the peacock feather. Li has three children, two sons and a daughter. One of his sons, Prince Li, a fair English scholar, being educated by a former United States consul at Tientsin, accompanies his father as interpreter on his present trip. He is likely to succeed to his father's ability as well as to his estates. Li's daughter was married to Chang Pei Lun, who, in 1889, was banished to the Russian frontier on account of excessive peculation. All Li's influence, powerful as it is in foreign affairs, has not been able to obtain a commutation or pardon.

Li Hung Chang owns several large cotton mills and silk filatures, as well as the rich coal fields in Manchuria. He has a bodyguard of 35,000 fairly drilled troops, successors of the Black Flag army of 1860. Their loyalty, and they acknowledge no master except the viceroy, insures him against the intrigues of rivals at court. His full title now is, Viceroy of the Province of Chihli, Senior of the four Grand Secretaries of State, ex Grand Guardian of the Heir Apparent, President of the Board of War, Superintendent of the North Sea Trade, Count Shinu Ki of the First Rank.

CURRENT HISTORY NOTES.

A plot to dethrone the sultan of Morocco has been discovered and suppressed. It is sad to think that the peace of the world is perhaps dependent upon the ups and downs of these penny-ha-penny Oriental despots.

The shipment of several millions in gold from the other side is a refreshing novelty which has a practical as well as sentimental value—or rather value in its effect upon public sentiment—which is quite another thing.

The sultan has yielded and agreed to the plan of autonomy for Crete, to which we referred last week. This means self-government under a chief appointed from Constantinople and a payment of tribute to the Turkish Government, and is one step more toward the settlement of the Eastern question.

Close upon Dr. Nansen's return from his perilous Arctic experiences comes news of the arrival of the Fram, which he left adrift in the ice, in the neighborhood of the North Cape. All on board are well, and apparently have little to add to Dr. Nansen's own report. Andree, the explorer, who expected to sail across the pole in a balloon, to be launched from Spitzbergen with a favorable wind, has abandoned the attempt for the season.

A fatal accident marked the yacht racing in the English Channel, in which the small, American-built yacht Isolde, belonging to Baron von Ledwitz, was run down by the Emperor William's Meteor. Baron von Ledwitz was rescued, but had been so badly injured that he died before reaching the shore. On account of this tragedy, the Prince of Wales and the German Emperor have put their yachts out of commission, and the racing season is at an end.

Sir John Millais, president of the London Royal Academy, whose death we reported last week, had a notable funeral. Lord Rosebery, the Earl of Carlisle, Gen. Lord Wolseley, the Marquis of Granby, Sir Henry Irving, Holman Hunt, R. A., and Philip Calderon R. A., were the pall bearers. Most of the shops were closed along the route of the procession, and the crowds in the streets and the cathedral bore witness to the hold which the dead artist's pictures have upon the popular imagination.

The retirement from the Secretaryship of the Interior of Hon. Hoke Smith had been long expected, owing to his espousal of the Chicago platform and nominees. Mr. Smith's administration has been a creditable one, being devoid of such scandals as have smirched the Interior department in previous years. Mr. Smith's successor, David R. Francis of Missouri, has been popular in his own State as mayor of St. Louis and as governor, being elected to the latter office in 1888 by one of the heaviest majorities ever registered by the Democratic party in Missouri. He is considered a sound money man.

The Home

LABORARE EST ORARE.

"Although St. Francesca was unwearied in her devotions, yet if during her prayers she was called away by her husband or any domestic duty she would close the book cheerfully, saying that a wife and mother when called upon must quit her God at the altar to find him in her domestic affairs."—Legends of the Monastic Orders.

How infinite and sweet, thou everywhere
And all abounding Love, thy service is!
Thou liest an ocean round my world of care,
My petty every day; and fresh and fair
Pour thy strong tides through all my crevices
Until the silence ripples into prayer.

That thy full glory may abound, increase,
And so thy likeness shall be formed in me
I pray; the answer is not rest or peace,
But charges, duties, wants, anxieties,
Till there seems room for everything but thee,
And never time for anything but these.

And I should fear, but lo! amid the press,
The whirl and hum and pressure of my day,
I hear thy garment's sweep, thy seamless dress,
And close beside my work and weariness
Discern thy gracious form not far away,
But very near, O Lord, to help and b'ess.

The busy fingers fly, the eyes may see
Only the glancing needle which they hold,
But all my life is blossoming inwardly,
And every breath is like a litany,
While through each labor, like a thread of gold,
Is woven the sweet consciousness of thee.

—Susan Coolidge.

HOME MONEY MATTERS.

BY KATE UPSON CLARK.

Most men hate to talk over money matters with their wives. The general accusation against men has been, ever since we began to hear anything about the matter, that they did not let their "women folks" know anything about their financial affairs. Consequently, the sudden death of the head of the family usually plunged those dependent upon him into financial chaos, out of which dishonest executors and lawyers evolved such elements as they chose.

Probably in some cases this reticence on the part of men is wise. Some women cannot bear the strain of uncertainty and worry which business men often carry with, at least, outward calmness from one year's end to another. Women's nerves are tenderer, and they feel none of the excitement of competition which often supports men in their crises. The very magnitude of the interests involved almost paralyzes women sometimes, and it would generally be foolish for men conducting large mercantile concerns to attempt to acquaint any members of his family, not directly and actively at work with him, of the daily progress of his undertakings. But the smaller financial pros and cons of the domestic order, the final arrangement of the property in case of death, the amount of insurance, the proportion to be laid by in each year, these are affairs which should be thoroughly understood between husbands and wives.

Not long ago a rich man, who had insisted upon the making of a will by each of his younger relatives, died suddenly without himself having made any will whatsoever, thus throwing unexpectedly weighty cares upon his heirs. This is only one more illustration, added to dozens which everybody knows, of the way in which we all hold theories in regard to personal financial management, yet do not practically carry them out.

"But my husband simply won't talk about money," sighed one intelligent woman. "If I say after dinner in the evening, 'George, let's discuss the various bills which are due, and see about settling them,' he says: 'Why will you spoil my evening, Maria, when I am so tired? For pity's sake, give me a little peace! I have been worrying about money matters all day.' As he had had at least three months of evenings without them, I felt that he might give up this one to the detested work, but I obediently kept still. The next morning, perhaps, I ask him again. 'O, I mustn't go to my business all worked up about money,' he says, and so on. There is never a time that he likes."

This situation exists oftener than we think. The consequence is that possibly as many as half the whole number of well to-do wives hardly know whether or not their husband's lives are insured. Even if they know this much, they cannot tell for what sum nor in what companies, nor whether the insurance is for their own benefit entirely, or for that of others. Few women know how much money their husbands have in bank, or in stocks or bonds, or how it is distributed. It is safe to say that while many, perhaps most, women keep some sort of an account of their personal expenses and are called on frequently to tell their husbands how they have spent every ten dollars which has been handed to them, the husbands rarely render such accounts to the wives; though in order to reach the best results in the joint management of the family funds each should know how much the other requires per week for personal expenses. Many a man would be surprised to find what an able helper he would have in his wife, in the close financiering necessary in most homes, if he would only confide in her. It is in little ways that the income leaks away fastest. Woman, with her constant and necessary attention to minute details in the conduct of the home, is better fitted than most men to stop these little leaks.

As the happiness or misery of a family depends largely upon the wise management of the income, it follows that considerable thought and care should be expended upon it. In the ideal home the entire management is the result of joint debates between husband and wife. Neither one should be arbitrary or stubborn. Reason should rule, and each one should be able and willing to enforce his or her position by sound reason or else abandon it. The money branch of the family affairs should be included under this rule, along with the education and discipline of the children, attendance upon social functions, religious observances, dietary and all the other departments of family life. Is it because wives have so often proved unequal to the trust that husbands have come to shut them out of their confidence? Or is it because those who have the power use it arbitrarily and selfishly?

It is said—how truly, who shall decide?—that those families in which the mother has an independent fortune and in which the father is largely dependent upon her aid are the happiest. It would be interesting to study the statistics of such unions, but, alas! they are not to be found. Meantime, in view of the success of women in managing, as they almost invariably do, the small shops—and often the larger ones—of the old world, the sensible course would seem to be for fathers and mothers to summon courage enough frequently to discuss and arrange together the family expenses, even though it may be prosaic and disagreeable business. And is not the sensible course always the course most consistent with true religion?

AFIELD WITH YOUNG NATURALISTS.

WAYSIDE WEEDS.

BY MRS. S. J. BUCKLIN.

The noontide of the year is past,
Now wanes fair summer's afternoon,
When autumn shadows gather fast,
And flowers fade, alas, too soon.

My August walk took me along the shady side of a public highway on a hot afternoon when even a peep into the green depths of woodland seemed to bring cooling refreshment. Ferns and low shrubs formed a thick hedge on both sides of the road, enlivened by pink hardhack, white spirea, yellow wild indigo and white wild carrot. On a brake a snake was lying, his weight not even bending the slender support. At a safe distance I admired the distinct marking of his body in narrow black, white and yellow stripes, and an old springtime couplet came to mind.

Break your first brake and kill your first snake
And you'll surely go through with all you undertake.

Yellow predominates in the color of August flowers. Yellow suggests wealth, warmth, high noon. Golden is August sunshine—golden the hours that are fast leaving behind the noontide of the year. Among the yellow flowers of humble birth are St. John's-wort, buttercups, evening primrose, the flaunting sunflower, the ever-cheery golden-rod, graceful meadow lilies and

Like stars dropped down from summer skies
Besprinkling field and meadow gay,
The hawkbits ope their golden eyes
Along each sunlit, grassy way.

The hawkbit belongs to the Compositæ family. It blooms early in August and is common in eastern New England, springing up on lawns, in grassland and by roadsides, having a slender stem, branched at the top, bearing flowers like small dandelions. Another plant called hawkweed blooms about the same time, but is of coarser, weedy growth, bearing on its branched stalk forty or fifty flowers. The similarity of the flowers of these plants will be readily noticed by an observer. The hawkbit has been falsely called arnica. I find no authority for assuming that arnica grows in Massachusetts, as it is credited to the White Mountains of New Hampshire and the Essex Mountains of New York.

A species of St. John's-wort known as Hypericum perforatum is a hardy weed prevailing in dry pastures and growing along roadsides. A curious feature of this plant is its punctate leaves, in which tiny holes may be seen when the leaf is held between the eye and sunlight. The evening primrose is found in fields and waste places. Its large, numerous yellow flowers open at night and wither the next day. This gives it the language of inconstancy. The root is said to cause a thirst for wine. More than ten varieties are mentioned, blooming from May to October in all parts of the United States.

I picked my first spray of golden-rod this year early in July. This universal favorite seems to herald summer's close and the approach of autumn's cheer. It lingers till harvest is over, when asters, purple and white, illumine field and mead. More than fifty species are described, varying from the small, weedy denizen of dry, sterile pastures to the large, handsome variety growing luxuriantly by the seaside. The coast goldenrod is peculiarly beautiful. Its flowers are large, grouped in a dense terminal raceme. White golden-rod grows on the edge of woodland. The language of this flower is encouragement and suggests the thought of brave endurance and adaptation to its situation in life.

The most beautiful of August flowers are the graceful lilies, which dangle their golden bells where

> O'er meadow grasses dark and damp
> The firefly swings his tiny lamp,
> While in the copse on pine-clad hill,
> Complains the hoarse-toned whip-poor-will.
>
> The drowsy crickets in the grass
> Chirp a good night to summer cheer,
> And slowly lengthening shadows creep
> Along the dial of the year.

Two kinds of these lilies frequent our meadows in August. One has yellow drooping flowers clustering in groups of one to three and the other is like the cultivated tiger lily. A brilliant scarlet lily grows in the edge of woodland, and the fragrant water lily is still opening its lovely flowers on placid lake and stream.

Among wayside weeds we must notice plants distinguished for their milky juice. Most of these belong to the Asclepiads. The coarse stocky plants called milk or silk weed are Asclepias and have curious blossoms in closely packed heads. Each flower has a little horn in which the feet of bees become caught. Remember to look for this when you see a milkweed flower. The plant seems to possess a linen-like texture. The fiber of its stalk has been used in the manufacture of thread, cloth, nets, and for ropes or bands used in wells, as water does not rot them. The silky hairs around the seeds have been used in manufacturing textile fabrics alone and with wool and silk. I have the nest of a Baltimore oriole made almost wholly of strips of the inner bark torn from a dead stalk. It is very strong, gray in color and silky in appearance. Nearly 1,000 Asclepiads are known, including the fragrant Stephanotis, cultivated in hothouses, and the Hoya carnosa, or wax plant, of which it is said, "From every flower a drop of honey is always found hanging."

Another plant with numerous small, bell-shaped flowers is the dogbane, found along roadsides, stone walls and fences. The milky juice of this plant has poisonous principles. The common spurge is an old-fashioned plant sometimes seen in door-yards and burial places. It belongs to another race of plants with milky juice, the spurgeworts. While this whole order is more or less poisonous it furnishes tapioca from the roots of one species. When fresh this root is a violent poison, but loses this property by washing and exposure to heat. Castor oil is expressed from the seed of Ricinus, another member of this family. Common spurge has a short stem thickly covered with fine, narrow, straight leaves, terminating in a bunch of insignificant yellow flowers. An example of the poisonous character of some plants came into the experience of the writer when a teacher in a large school for boys. A number of the boys were leveling ditch banks and found some roots which were sweet like chestnuts. Some of the boys ate freely and were taken violently ill. The poison produced temporary insanity and only by the use of strong emetics were their lives saved.

Every young naturalist should know what plants may be used and which to avoid, and thus enjoy the abundant provision that the Creator has made for the benefit of man.

HOW RANGER MADE AMENDS.

BY ANN DUDLEY.

Such a bright, beautiful, birthday morning. Such a busy morning, too, for a famous dinner, with plum pudding for dessert, was to be prepared by the Widow Greenleaf. The four little Green*leaves* were in various states of agitation according to age. The mother, aided by the oldest boy, a lad of fifteen, had a hard time supplying the ordinary necessities, and unusual self-denial of the younger ones had made this birthday dinner possible, in honor of the delicate, lame sister, twelve-year-old Minnie, the favored member of the household.

A fairly large piece of corned beef was put on early to boil, and by ten o'clock was ready to cool that it might be sliced for the three o'clock dinner. Mrs. Greenleaf placed the beef in one pan, covered it with another and carried it to a bench outside, on which stood also a tin can holding a tall, slender branch of pine that the children had used for a plaything the day before. Ranger, a fine, large retriever, lay at a little distance in the yard sunning himself. Presently an unusually severe gust of wind toppled the can over, and the fall jarred the upper pan off the meat.

Ranger sprang up startled. A delicious fragrance greeted his nostrils and he proceeded to investigate. O, what a treat! A great bone with meat all around it! This, too, for a dog whose breakfast had been forgotten in the hurry of the morning work. Ranger knew perfectly well that it was not intended for him, but was ever a hungry dog so tempted? Steps were heard in the kitchen, the door opened and out came Mrs. Greenleaf. Ranger slunk back guiltily, fully conscious of the mischief he had contemplated doing.

"Ranger, Ranger, you miserable dog, eating our dinner like this," cried the little woman, for good, tender meat was not an everyday matter. "You never stole before and I'll teach you never to do it again." And seizing the pine branch she struck him two or three times quite smartly.

Such an experience was an unknown quantity in Ranger's life. Hitherto, a sharp word or reproachful look from his friends had been sufficient to make him wretched. Now his pride, sense of dignity and self-respect, so conspicuously exhibited in well-treated dogs, were wounded beyond description. He fled to a clump of currant bushes in a corner of the yard, and lay among them peering forth with great, gloomy eyes. At the end of an hour the sound of a gun was heard in the distance. The whole aspect of the dog changed, he listened intently, seemed to meditate for a moment, then rose and with a look at the kitchen window trotted forth in the direction of the sound. There was a river a short distance away, a favorite hunting ground where plenty of snipe were to be found. Ranger had been there frequently with both friends and strangers, for he would go with any one who carried a gun and a bag and return by himself when the sport was over.

Several sportsmen with a dog were slowly walking down the bank. A crackling in the bushes announced Ranger's approach. Panting and in a quiver of excitement he took his place by one of the men, a self-elected member of the party. Suddenly he flushed a widgeon which fell to the gun of one in the party and, of course, instantly dived. Ranger galloped down stream fifty or sixty yards, entered the water and began working up stream making a great commotion till he came where the hunter stood. There he landed and began to hunt the bank some distance down, crossed to the opposite side and diligently explored that bank. Several minutes elapsed and the party proposed to move on when their attention was called to a sudden change in the dog's demeanor. His "flag" was up and going from side to side in the energetic manner which every sportsman knows to betoken hot scent. Away went the waving tail until thirty or forty yards from the bank opposite to where the party stood there was a momentary scuffle. The bird rose from the ground, the dog sprang into the air, caught it, paused irresolutely eyeing the hunters, turned and disappeared at full gallop from the gaze of the astonished party.

Ranger never slackened speed until he reached his own door, which, hearing a little muffled whine, one of the children opened. The dog slipped past him and deposited the wounded bird in Mrs. Greenleaf's lap as she sat stoning raisins.

"Well, if this isn't a river duck!" cried the good woman. "How in the world did you get it, you blessed old dog; dear old fellow, he has tried to make amends for his mischief this morning and indeed he has."

Of course Ranger was petted and caressed to his heart's content. He had a ribbon tied in his collar and was rewarded with such a dinner as he never had before in his life.

THE HOME SHOULD HELP.

Discussing some defects in our present educational system, in an article in Good Housekeeping, Charles Dudley Warner speaks of the growing disuse of the Bible as a book generally read in the household, and says that this neglect brings about a distinct loss in vigor of mind, in historical breadth, in language and style, in literary taste and discrimination. He adds:

The schools, driven on by an unintelligent public sentiment, administered usually by men who have not the least conception of what education should be, are constantly overloaded with courses and studies beyond the capacity of the young mind to assimilate. The sole object set before them is the passing of an examination in order to get into the next grade or the higher school. In this crowding of studies and push for going higher, in this attempt to stuff the young minds with a mass of general text-book information, there is no time for reading, no time for acquiring a taste for literature, no wholesome broadening of the mind by real cultivation.

Now, what happens by wholly turning over education to the public schools, to the state, when there is no love of reading learned at home? Hosts of young men and young women come up for examination in colleges, and are admitted, who have never read any books except the text-books they are required by the examination to know. Of the whole world of history, biography, fiction, poetry, science, outside of these meager text-books, their minds are a blank, and thousands annually go through the district and high schools, following every turn in our mechanical scheme of education, without any habit of reading, any love of books, any conception of the world of thought, which is the important world.

This state of things will continue, and be intensified, unless the schools change. And even if they do change, if they simplify their courses, if they try to train the mind instead of trying to stuff it, if they attempt to teach literature, to instill a love for books and for reading, under the most competent teachers, they cannot supply the want of some intellectual atmosphere in the home.

Closet and Altar

Let prayer be the key of the morning and the bolt of the evening.

Has the water that Christ has given thee become, O Christian, a well in thee? Hast thou within thyself a well of perennial purity and bliss, of beautiful thoughts, delight in God, willingness to do his will, peace, strength to resist temptation, love to your fellowmen, anticipation of glory? If there be in thee this inexhaustible well of all that is desirable, then hast thou enough not only for thyself but for thy neighbors, for all mankind in fact. Yes, if thou alone of all the family of man were in possession of such a well, from thee there might go forth streams to make glad the entire face of the earth, to satisfy the entire wants of men. For this well in thee is Christ in thee.—George Bowen.

There may be many tongues and many languages of men, but the language of prayer is one by itself, in all and above all. It is the inspiration of that Spirit that is now working with our spirit, and constantly lifting us higher than we know; and by our wants, by our woes, by our tears, by our yearnings, by our poverty, urging us, with mightier and mightier force, against those chains of sin which keep us from our God. —H. B. Stowe.

To do more we must be more. To be more we must see more of God. It is the divine appearing that liberates and reveals the forces of the soul.—W. R. Nicoll.

Weary, Lord, of struggling here
With this constant doubt and fear,
Burdened by the pains I bear,
And the trials I must share—
Help me, Lord, again to flee
To the rest that's found in thee!
. . . . . .
Fettered by this earthly scope
In the reach and aim of hope,
Fixing thought in narrow bound
Where no living truth is found—
Help me, Lord, again to flee
To the hope that's fixed in thee!
—A. D. F. Randolph.

Forgive us, O Lord, if we have this day said or done anything to increase the pain of the world. Pardon the unkind word, the impatient gesture, the hard and selfish deed, the failure to show sympathy and kindly help where we had opportunity, but missed it; and enable us so to live that we may daily do something to lessen the tide of human sorrow and add to the sum of human happiness. We have our own sorrows, O Father. We wait for footsteps that do not come; we yearn for sympathy which is not given; we knock at doors that do not open; we think of graves that hide our dearest treasures. We fear the loneliness, the changes and chances of this mortal life and the mystery of that unknown future that stretches away in the dark like a moor beyond the light of home. But thou art ours and we are thine—nothing can ever separate us from thee. Do not leave us orphans, but come to us by thy Son and by thy Spirit. Only let us not miss the lesson of pain and sorrow and long waiting, but be made perfect through suffering, so that there need be no turned lessons in our life. Amen.

Tangles.

[For the leisure hour recreation of old and young. Any reader who can contribute odd and curious enigmas, etc., of a novel and interesting kind is invited to do so, addressing the Puzzle Editor of The Congregationalist.]

74. TRIPLE LETTER ENIGMA.

(The TOTAL has three parts, each of which is a word formed by taking a letter from each of the three quotations.)

In "truths" distorted much,
In "logic turned" aside,
Faulty "philosophy" and such,
Is TOTAL spied.

The ONE is not a dainty term,
Yet names a food, I can affirm.
Whoe'er would other men convince
Abandon must TWO TOTAL, since
It THREES to hold uncertain ground,
While truth is always elsewhere found.

C.

75. FOR THE FAIR.

Among other things found by agents of the Paris World's Fair of 1900 are the following: In an island belonging to Great Britain, (1) a body of lawyers, (2) a fine-blooded horse, (3) a bustle and (4) a number of female deer. From some mountains in Europe, (5) something mightier than the sword, (6) a mimic and (7) baseball players. From a county in Georgia, (8) a hut or shelter, and (9) an instrument that calls to worship. From another county in the same State, (10) a head of false hair. From another of the States of the Union, (11) the first boat on record, and (12) another State. From a country in Asia, (13) a kind of worsted blanket. From a country of Africa, (14) a bottomless pit, and (15) that which causes men to sink into it. From an island said to belong to Spain, (16) a lion's whelp. From a coast of Africa, (17) an English coin. From one of the United States, (18) an aboriginal, and (19) a Roman goddess: From two other States, (20) an old time slaveholder, (21) his wife, (22) unmarried daughter, and (23) beast of burden. From some islands belonging to Spain, (24) a former Spanish king, (25) part of the face, (26) a peg, and (27) a valuable timber tree. From a mountain in Maine, (28) a seat, and (29) something to put it on. From a country in Europe, (30) a cave, and (31) one of the evangelists. From a State of the Union, (32) a rule, and (33) articles offered for sale. From a country in Asia, (34) part of the face, and (35) fine porcelain. From a town in South America, (36) a ledge, (37) a Japanese coin, and (38) a hot seasoning. From a county in Indiana, (39) a bonus, (40) a nut, (41) a container for liquids, and (42) a kind of boat.

DOROTHEA.

[The editor's selection of the works of one of the poets, nicely bound in cloth, will be given the sender of the best list of the objects described in this puzzle. In case of tie, the list that is best arranged and neatest will be given preference.]

76. WORD CHANGES.

1. Change PAPER to CLOTH in seven moves. 2. Change READ to TALK in six moves. 3. Change BIRD to WOLF in five moves. 4. Change BOOK to READ in four moves.

ROSS W. SANDERSON.

ANSWERS.

69. Shallot.
70. Forty-seven.
71. Sable, fable.
72. Capernaum.
73. Ja(y)-cob.

Among answers received to July Tangles were: Mrs. M. A. Harrington, Webster, Mass., 68; J. L. B., Providence, R. I., 66, 68; Mary H. Moody, Isabel E. Stiles, Melvin, N. H., 61, 62, 63, 64; Millie Bradbury, Chelsea, Mass, 61, 62.

A Newburyport solver would greatly reduce the number of "moves" in the Word Changes (No. 62). He would "change pen to ink," for instance, in this way: "Pen, pin, ink." He overlooks the fact, however, that he not only changes the letter at each "move," but he changes the place of the letter, which is doing more than was specified.

A man must give his mind to a wife and a wife must give her mind to a husband, as well as the heart, if they are to make a success of married life —R. F. Horton.

Just Now

When inferior, low grade alum baking powders are being urged upon the public, it is well to remember that alum is unwholesome; its use in bread making is prohibited in some countries and baking powders made with alum are required in some States to be so branded.

The only acid ingredient used in Cleveland's baking powder is pure cream of tartar; no alum, no ammonia, no adulteration of any kind. It costs a few cents a pound more than alum powders, but it is worth more.

No flour is "just as good as"

"Duluth Imperial" Flour

except in the minds of dealers who want to palm off poor brands for bigger profit. If you really want DULUTH IMPERIAL, see that you get it. 20 loaves more in every barrel.

If your grocer doesn't keep it, and won't supply you, don't get another flour—get another grocer; or send us a postal, and we'll tell you where to get it.

DULUTH IMPERIAL MILL CO., Duluth, Minn.

The Conversation Corner.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS: Isn't D. F. "a man and a bother"? I have just received the proof of last week's Corner, forwarded to me from a post office in Maine, where the office secretary had sent it! What do you suppose are my feelings as I see that he has not only left out the second literary item, but substituted his curious prize offer? I am afraid now he has mixed up the whole matter so that you will not understand how to compete for any of the prizes. These are the different PRIZE OFFERS.

1. Publisher's offer. (See Corner June 15.) For best photograph of vacation scene, historic place, or other suitable picture for this page, accompanied by short description. Choice of $2 book. Time not mentioned, but better send photograph soon after return from vacation.

2. Mr. Martin's offer. (See Corner Aug. 13.) For best account of the Frigate Constitution, of General Israel Putnam, or of the Eagle as a National Emblem. Limited to 500 words. Copy of Corner Scrap Book, or other book of similar value. Limit of time, Sept. 15; of age of competitors, 18.

3. D. F.'s offer. (See Corner Aug. 20.) For the best photograph of any vehicle of travel, on land or water. Copy of Corner Scrap Book and one dollar. Limit of time, Sept. 16; of age of competitors, 19.

The motive of this offer of our Despotic Foreman is apparent, but I forgive him, and the worst wish I have is that you Cornerers will just deluge him with every possible "land vehicle or water craft" you can think of, from a schooner to a skiff, from a coach to a camel, from a balloon to a bicycle. I happen to know that just before this paper is issued he starts off on his vacation sojourn at his North River cabin. Let him have pictures enough to occupy his leisure while he is frying his fish, or stewing his sand-peeps! I give this confidential hint to Corner boys in that region, that they may look him up (close to the boundary line between Scituate and Marshfield), and get a snap-shot of him in his boat or on his "bike"—they would win his prize!

This introduces a letter from my last summer's companion in the Old Colony:

DUXBURY, MASS.

My Dear Mr. Martin: I am in Duxbury again, and thought you might like to hear from me and the old "Alphabet." There was a boat race here a while ago, but for some unknown reason the 26 did not appear. She may have been out on some voyage. When I was on the top of Mt. Washington on the twenty-ninth of June I saw a boat in the lake above the clouds which greatly resembled Captain Myles's boat. Do you suppose it could have been? KINGSLEY B.

There is nothing unreasonable in supposing that our venturesome and mysterious old Captain may have been on the summit of Mt. Washington, or anywhere else on the round earth. Now that I think of it, D. F. hinted a few days ago that he thought of going up to the White Hills, but as he has suddenly changed his plan, I should not be surprised if Captain Myles and the 26 are back again in salt water. I have written Kingsley to keep a sharp lookout for them, and report to us anything of interest.

And now for the answer, not inserted last week, to the "American Girl's" inquiry (July 16) for the poem beginning:

'Twas autumn, and the leaves were dry,
And rustled on the ground;
And chilly winds went whistling by,
With low and pensive sound.

I have had a deluge of letters about it, and copies enough of the poem to run the "first class in reading" of a "district school." It contained seventeen four-line verses, and was entitled "The Little Graves." It was published in John Pierpont's National Reader of over sixty years ago. In that and in Town's Progressive Third Reader no author is given. In No. 5 of Angell's school readers, published in Providence, R. I., also about 1835, the piece is signed "Memnon." Considerable inquiry has been made for the original of that nom de plume, but as yet without success. In a book of "Anonyms" I find a piece—perhaps not the same one—entitled "The Three Little Graves," attributed to Miss Clarence Cadey. That possibly may be a clue. I will quote from only two of the many letters kindly sent in regard to these quaint, pathetic verses of the old time and style:

GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.

. . . I learned it sixty years ago and at first thought some of the verses were forgotten, but they came to me, and I am quite of the opinion that nothing is really forgotten. If that is so how important it is that the mind should be stored with memories that will give pleasure and profit instead of pain. MRS. D.

AUGUSTA, GA.

. . . The poem recalls pleasant memories of teachers and school in far-away Providence, R. I. As I sit in my adopted Southern home, I try to imagine a salt breeze from old Narragansett, but it is too tantalizing! MRS. S.

This for the sixty and seventy years old Cornerers—now for the children.

MALDEN, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: . . . In my garden I have violets, bloodroot, columbines and corydalis. I tried to make some wild lilies of the valley and loosestrife and Solomon's seal grow, but they all died. There's a boy lives near me who said he would like to join the Corner. Our Sunday school had a picnic at Lynnfield Pond. We went out rowing and we had a ball game and races. I beat in the running broad jump. GEORGE B.

Why did you not give that boy's name? I remember going to a S. S. picnic, too, at Lynnfield Pond, but it was a long time ago.

RAVENSWOOD, ILL.

Dear Mr. Martin: I went up to Beloit and I saw some squirrels and blue jays. Once a lady gave the squirrel some nuts. When he was on the window sill getting a nut a blue jay lit on his back. The squirrel jumped and the blue jay fell off. I am going to get a wheel. Elizabeth walks, holding on to chairs. FRANK G.

I have just had a call from a young fellow who walks in precisely that way, but almost before we know it he, and Elizabeth, too, will be not only running on their feet, but riding on their wheels! These two letters remind me to report about the "America" sweet peas sent from Frank's home a long while ago, that the neighbor boy to whom I gave them for planting brought me in, on my return from my outing, some gorgeous blossoms of patriotic colors.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am seven years old. I live in Montclair, N. J. I go to Dr. Bradford's church. I go to school. I am just learning to write. I want to be a Cornerer. HALDANE J.

Six good things about that boy!

Mr. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

That Arctic Balloon. Have our readers, who were to be on the lookout for Dr. Andree's balloon, bound for the North Pole (Scrap book, Aug. 6), noticed the news about it from Spitzbergen? He had to wait a long time for southerly winds and then found four rents in his balloon. As the season of the midnight sun was nearly passed, he had to abandon his little trip for the present.

The Spitzbergen Expedition. News has come from this too. This was not an aërial excursion but one on solid—very solid—land. It was undertaken by my namesake, Sir Martin (Conway), of England, in order to cross and explore this dreary, uninhabited and practically unexplored land. You will see by your maps that this island (or archipelago) is exactly north of Norway, and northeast of Greenland. It is within seven hundred miles of the North Pole. The wise men who know what was going on three millions of years ago say that at that time Spitzbergen had a climate like that of the United States now. (We would like to have had a bit of Spitzbergen in our climate a few days ago!) Instead of perpetual snow and enormous glaciers were meadows, pine forests, pond-lilies, bees, butterflies and grasshoppers. Two centuries ago the Hollanders carried on extensive fisheries there, occupying for a few years a flourishing summer town, and in the middle of the last century seven Russian sailors were cast away on the coast and lived for seven years in a Robinson Crusoe style. Even now men go up there and bring down from the eider duck. Our readers will find the story of that strange country an interesting one to look up. Much information will be gained by this expedition of Sir Martin, which has succeeded in crossing the frozen land.

Nansen's Expedition. News has also just come from this famous Norwegian explorer, who left Christiania in 1893, in the little steamer Fram, planning to reach the polar ice by a new route and then drift with it into the supposed open sea. In March, 1895, he left a party on the Fram to do the drifting. That was in Lat. 84, and Long. 102° 27′. With another party he then proceeded northward over the ice with twenty-eight dogs and two sledges, having also two kayaks for possible open water. On April 7 he reached Lat. 86° 14′, nearly four degrees nearer the pole than Greely made in 1882. (How far was he from the pole then?) They went some further on skis, but saw nothing but rough ice and frozen breakers. For three weeks the temperature was 40° below zero. They then began their march to Franz Josef Land, losing all but two of their dogs. Aug. 12, they discovered unknown islands and a fortnight later—a year ago yesterday—went into winter quarters, building a hut of stones and moss, with a roof of walrus hide, tied down with ropes and covered with snow.

They remained there until May of this year, living on bear meat and walrus blubber, and sleeping in bear-skin sleeping bags. Cruising along Franz Josef Land on ice and in open water they met by strange accident on an ice-floe, June 17, Jackson of the British expedition, near whom they had been for some time, though neither explorer knew of the fact. They were taken to the headquarters of the latter expedition, and subsequently by its steamer to Norway, whence comes this message. Boys will be interested to know that Fridtjof Nansen, when a boy in Christiana, used to go to school four miles in all weathers, and also became one of the best snow-shoe runners in Norway. We shall await with interest news from the Fram. Next week I hope to give you tidings from another Arctic friend of yours.

L. A. M.

The Sunday School

LESSON FOR SEPT. 6 1 Chron. 22: 6-16.

DAVID'S LOVE FOR GOD'S HOUSE.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D.D.

One must know the history of Israel in order to understand the significance of the temple. It came to be regarded as the only appropriate place for the worship of God. It was the source of all authority in the government of the nation. It was the visible center of national unity. Toward it the Jew, wherever he was, turned his eyes when he prayed. The hope of rebuilding it, after it had fallen into ruin, survived among the captives in Babylon for more than a generation and impelled a great company to return and make again a house for the Lord. Such a love for the place where men meet to worship God is a great power in forming character and shaping national life. David had that love, and had also the statesmanship to provide for its cultivation among his people after his death. To foster such a love in our own nation is to do for it a great service. How can it be promoted among us? We may learn something of the way to cultivate this love by David's experience.

1. David's plan for building the temple. It had long been in his thought, so long that each part of it was distinctly outlined in his mind. He regarded the plan as imparted to him by God in all its details [1 Chron. 28: 11-19], as Moses had received the plan of the tabernacle in the mount [Ex. 25: 40]. He had thus during his life on the throne reflected on this building which he meant to erect because he was the king of Israel and because he was a priest for his people. The temple was to be the dwelling place of God. There all the people were to seek and find him, and from it the law of God was to go forth as the guide of their lives. There, through appointed sacrifices, they were to be reconciled to him and their sins were to be forgiven.

David's plan, then, included not only the structure of the temple, but its relations with the life of the people. He sought to build the knowledge of God and love for him into the national character. That was what distinguished Israel from other nations and fitted them to give the true religion to the world. The Messiah was not only the offspring of David, but of the people whom David through the temple and its meaning taught to look for and desire him. No one can have a loftier mission than to give the kingdom of God to mankind, and whoever realizes that as his mission, as David did, belongs in the list of heroes "who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, . . . waxed mighty in war, turned to flight armies of aliens."

But David was not permitted to see his plans realized. The Lord of Hosts fought his battles for him, but peace is essential to the highest mission in building the kingdom of God, and the great warrior could not also be the temple builder. He could only prepare the way for another to do the work which was his highest ambition. The man of peace is more honored by God than the man of war.

2. Solomon's plan for building the temple. He accepted his father's plan. It came to him as an inheritance, to be the greatest work of his life. Such it proved to be. He did not extend the dominion which David placed in his hands. The crowning splendor of his reign was the temple which he built, after plans and with materials placed in his hands when he ascended the throne. In taking up the purposes of his father for the religious life of the people and carrying them forward in ways suited to his own times he did the work which has made his name memorable. To continue and carry forward to larger results what our fathers have done to make known to men God's love and truth is to do the best service of which we are capable.

3. Solomon's equipment for building the temple. First of all he must be assured of the approving presence of God. He could build only under divine direction, and in the constant consciousness of it. "The Lord be with thee; . . . build the house of the Lord thy God, as he hath spoken concerning thee." Next he needed wisdom and understanding, which only the Lord can give, and which he gives only to those who diligently seek these gifts. Piety alone does not qualify any man to build a temple of God. He must know how to build. Those who seek to be teachers of divine truth without having learned it, who expect that God will give them wisdom without study, dishonor him and mar his building. Solomon needed to know and to obey the statutes and judgments which God gave to Israel through Moses. Then he needed strength and courage. With the most abundant materials, the most devoted piety and the best equipment, there are still many obstacles in the work of building the temple of God, and whatever part we have in it we can find strength and courage for it only by having daily recourse to the source of strength.

4. David's preparation for building the temple. In the midst of all his labors in organizing the nation and conquering its enemies, he had been busy both in collecting materials and in training workmen for the great object which he kept before him. It is hardly possible that the figures given in v. 14 are correct. There was not, probably, as much gold in use at that time in the whole world as one hundred thousand talents, which would be equal to nearly three billions of dollars. The total amount in the year 1870 was about eight billions. But the statements in the text are sufficient to show that David used his opportunities as king above all other things to build a house for God. For this purpose he gathered treasures in war, for this he lived, and for this achievement every Christian is indebted to the founder of the nation through which the knowledge of God and salvation through Jesus Christ have come to us.

The temple of Solomon is not the antitype of our modern houses of worship, nor can we apply to them the language which belonged to that temple. Church edifices are precious to those who worship in them, because of their sacred associations; but the true temple of God today is composed of believers in Christ, who, "as living stones, are built up a spiritual house!" Jesus Christ is its foundation stone," in whom each several building, fitly framed together, groweth into a holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God in the spirit"

Therefore it is only when believers in Christ are gathered together in a house of worship that it can truly be said that "the Lord is in his holy temple." Every true disciple led to join such a company is a stone added to the temple of God. All efforts to bring men in every nation into fellowship with Christ are work acceptable to God in building his temple. It is the most precious thing in the world and when it is completed the glory of the Lord will appear in it, the final, perfect revelation of himself to mankind. Our noblest work is to build this temple of God, and every one who loves him is called to have a part in it.

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING.

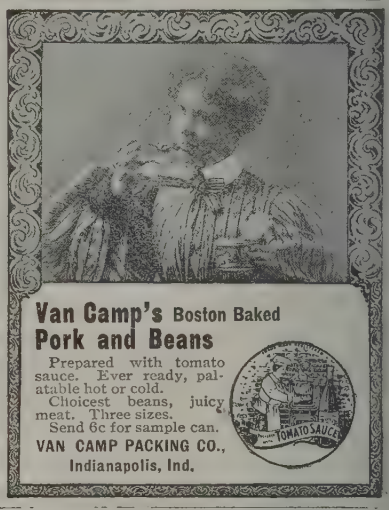
Topic, Aug. 30-Sept. 5. Jesus the Carpenter. Mark 6: 1-6; 1 Thess 4: 9-12.

The mission and teaching of Jesus as affected by his trade, the society in which he lived, his habits of toil. What was his view of the relations between wage-earners and their employers?

(See prayer meeting editorial).

The essential elements of giving are power and love—activity and affection—and the consciousness of the race testifies that in the high and appropriate exercise of these is a blessedness greater than any other.—Mark Hopkins.

Sunlight
Soap
SAVES its cost in LABOR ten times over. Rub it on lightly; let the clothes soak a short time; then rinse. It washes Clothes itself and doesn't hurt the clothes.
Pure Soap No Chemicals. No Adulteration.
Lever Bros., Ltd, Hudson and Harrison Sts., New York.



Van Camp's Boston Baked
Pork and Beans
Prepared with tomato sauce. Ever ready, palatable hot or cold.
Choicest beans, juicy meat. Three sizes.
Send 6c for sample can.
VAN CAMP PACKING CO.,
Indianapolis, Ind.
TOMATO SAUCE

Griddle Cakes are simply perfect when made of
WHEATLET
Sold in 2-lb. packages by all leading Grocers

OUR BOOK,
How to Disinfect,
Sent Free.
We desire to mail free our complete illustrated book, prepared at great expense,
"How to Disinfect," giving rules in cases of infectious diseases, and also in everyday life. The care of sinks, sewers, etc. Remember,—the intelligent use of true disinfectants is the surest defense against one half our sickness. Send your address to-day.
* * "Sanitas" Co. Ld., 636 West 55th St., N. Y.

SOMATOSE a perfect food, tonic and restorative for the invalid or convalescent. Send for free pamphlets.
SCHIEFFELIN & CO., New York.

DON'T BOIL Whitman's INSTANTANEOUS Chocolate—doesn't need it. Made in a jiffy, with boiling water or milk. Sold everywhere.

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM.

OUR OWN WORK.

Dr. Kimball's Return. Dr. Grace N. Kimball of Van, whose courage and energy in organizing and superintending relief work among the suffering Armenians have made her name well known, is on her way back to this country. She went to Van under the American Board in 1882, but returned in 1888 to take a full medical course, going once more to Van as a medical missionary in 1892. But no efforts during these four years have been availing to secure a permit from the Turkish Government allowing her to practice legally. Hoping that the desired diploma would be secured in time, she threw herself heart and soul into the relief work, manifesting so much wisdom and executive ability that the American Board had reason to be proud of such a missionary. Her services in this line, however, were at an end, the government forbade apothecaries to fill her prescriptions and the opportunity to practice her profession seemed so hopeless that Miss Kimball decided to return home and has accepted the position of medical assistant at Vassar College.

Waiting Thousands. The Foochow Mission is not the only one in China to feel the awakening of eager interest in Christianity. From North China comes news of many inquirers and constantly increasing church membership. Mr. Chapin of Lin Ching reports some fruitful meetings at that station. Three services daily were held for a week and he writes: "Our Chinese churches seem to have reached that stage of growth when revival services, resulting in a quickening of the church and gathering in of many who have known the truth for a long time without making a profession, are most helpful and stimulating. The revivals of the last two or three years clearly show that our work has entered upon a new stage. In some fields there are thousands, possibly myriads, who have lost all faith in idolatry and who are quite ready to accept the statement of there being only one true God. One of our teachers has said that the sale of incense, mock money, etc., has materially lessened in hundreds of villages around Pang-chuang. Now all that is needed is a great quickening of the church, a large outpouring of the Holy Spirit, to bring thousands under the power of the gospel. That such a revival is not far away, I myself fully believe."

THE WORLD AROUND.

The Greek Church in Japan. We of Protestant countries are prone to think that we are the elect of God and that other faiths have no such high-souled, unselfish missionaries as ours. To gain broadness of mind and a due appreciation of Christians belonging to another branch of the holy catholic church we recommend the perusal of interesting articles in The Japan Evangelist on two noble Russian missionaries, both representatives of the Greek church in Japan—Bishop Nicolai Kasatkin and the Countess of Kraftokine, otherwise known as Sister Olga. A well-informed Japanese writer has said that Japan has had three great missionaries, Francis Xavier, Dr. S. R. Brown and Bishop Nicolai, the only one of the three now living. Feeling an interest in foreign missions and the country so recently opened to other nations, Nicolai went to Hakodate as chaplain to the Russian consulate in 1861, and began his preparatory work by so devoting himself to the language and literature that he has long been one of the most scholarly and eloquent speakers among the foreign residents of Japan. The baptism in 1866 of the first Japanese convert to the Greek Church and the zeal of others who were won in the next three years led to the founding of a mission in Japan, with Nicolai as the first missionary. In 1871 he made Tokyo the center of operations, and since then has had his residence in that city. From that time the history of the Greek Church in Japan, with all its activities, has been inseparably interwoven with the history of this man who became its bishop in 1879, and whose tireless energy, sincere piety, commanding ability and intense personality have made it what it is. Instead of one believer thirty years ago, there are now nearly 25,000 guided by a band of native chaplains. Instead of being an unknown quantity, the Greek Church today is recognized as one of the great religious forces of Japan.

Sowing the Word. It is scarcely possible to overestimate the importance of the work of Bible translation and distribution in the evangelization of pagan lands, and the annual report of the American Bible Society, just issued, is always interesting reading. The issues of the society during its eighty years of existence amount to the enormous sum of 61,705,841. The total issues for last year alone, at home and in foreign lands, were 1,750,283. Over a thousand of these were volumes for the blind, making the whole number of books issued since the society undertook to print Bibles for this unfortunate class, fifty-four years ago, 21,565. In regard to translations and revisions now on hand the report shows that progress is being made by Rev. John Edwards, who has been engaged in translating into Choctaw the book of Proverbs and revising the New Testament, as well as by the revisers of the Shanghai Colloquial Scriptures and the committee in China having charge of the union version of the Bible. Rev. John Carrington of Bangkok has been carrying through the press new and revised editions of the Siamese Scriptures, and a translation of the four gospels into the language of the Bule country, by the late Dr. A. C. Good of the Gaboon Mission, West Central Africa, has been printed together with the Bible in the ancient Armenian. Steps have been taken also to give the Scriptures to the aboriginal people of South America. The report is full of interesting accounts of colportage in foreign lands as well as in the home field, but we regret to note that the society's receipts for benevolent purposes were considerably less than those of twenty years ago. But for its reserve legacy fund a serious deficit would have resulted.

PEN AND SCISSORS.

A hopeful feature of the revival at Aintab, Central Turkey, is the increased attendance at the Sunday schools, which now have a membership of over 3,000 children. It has been necessary to refuse to admit adults because there is no room to accommodate them.

During the past year the islanders of Kusaie, Micronesia, have built three new churches of the native coral rock to take the place of those destroyed by a hurricane five years ago. It required the labor of all the natives on the island for several weeks and at the dedication service the people attended in a body.

A new movement in Japan, not unlike the Salvation Army in its motive and nomenclature, is the Missionary Army, whose rank and file are made up of active Christians from seven Kumiai churches, one Presbyterian and one Methodist church in Osaka. It is distinctively a city missionary enterprise.

Several of the American Board missionaries in Turkey have established industrial enterprises to give employment to the starving people. Dr. Kimball was the first to work along this line in Van, but now Miss Shattuck at Oorfa has started some of the women in embroidery and Mr. White of Marsovan reports the employment of many persons in the manufacture of a gingham cloth which is in demand.

China is full of contradictions. Just as we are beginning to think she is looking favorably on Western agencies of civilization we learn by a letter from Mr. Ament that the new railroad line from Tientsin to Peking has been torn up by an enraged mob of boatmen and carters. They evidently feared injury to their business, but it is said that even the government support of the plan for a railroad was altogether lukewarm.

An English Unitarian minister, Rev. J. T. Sunderland, recently made a tour of India for the purpose of preparing the way for co-operation between the Unitarians of the West and the Brahmo-somaj. At a meeting of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association he advised educating three students for the Brahmo ministry in the Manchester Theological College, but two Indians who were present frankly affirmed that Unitarians could not make much progress in India so long as they called themselves Christians.

Speaking at the Evangelical Alliance Jubilee in London, Mr. Heli Chatelain declared that slavery exists and is practiced at present over the whole face of the Dark Continent. He says the evil prevails not only throughout all the European spheres of influence but in all the African colonies and protectorates of Great Britain, France and Germany. This does not coincide very well with the glowing reports we receive from time to time of the abolition of slavery in various sections of Africa.

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Sept. 6–12. Getting the Most out of the Bible. Deut. 6: 1–9.

It always seems easier to look about for some new way of reading and studying the Bible than to avail ourselves of the opportunity immediately at hand. Most of us Christians are already making use of the Bible for certain specific purposes. We are either teachers or pupils in the Sunday schools. We are following out in family worship or in our private devotions a course of reading. To be sure, we are to use our best judgment in deciding upon our system and method, but when that has been settled we need to apply ourselves to it with the same diligence and perseverence which we bring to the study of anything else. No one gets anything of value out of Shakespeare or Tennyson who dawdles over the pages with his thoughts far removed from the passage under contemplation. If we scrimp the time which we give to our Bibles, if we wait until ten minutes before the hour for going to Sunday school and then snatch up a quarterly for a hasty glance, we are practically throwing away the few minutes and the superficial attention which for respectebility's sake we are giving to the Scriptures. Whatever kind of definite use of the Bible your routine program of life includes, determine to lay hold of all its possibilities.

There are other equally valuable and perhaps personally more congenial approaches to the Scriptures. One ought to acquire an individual fondness for the Bible. He ought to have his favorite books and chapters and verses, to which he turns for refreshment as the lover of Browning resorts to certain great poems of that master of verse. It pays, also, to take up the Scriptures from time to time with a particular end in view. Now let it be the history that you endeavor to grasp; again make a specialty of Biblical biography; and at still another time concentrate your efforts upon its poetry or its ethical maxims.

Above all, in all our study and reading of the Bible let us have in mind its practical serviceableness. As has been well said, the Bible is not given us to teach us how the heavens go, but how to go to heaven, to give us a true and many-sided knowledge of God and of Christ—to make us Christlike. In the long run it is the simple, trusting, obedient, devout souls that get the most from the Bible, for they have learned that there is no other book in the world which will bring them such solid comfort, such constant inspiration in their daily struggle to rise into a noble life.

Parallel verses: Prov. 2; John 5: 39, 40; Acts 17: 10; 2 Tim. 3: 14, 17; 2 Pet. 1: 19–21; Phil. 4: 9; Rom. 15: 4; Rev. 1: 3; 22: 6, 7.

Literature

BOOK REVIEWS.

Studies Subsidiary to the Works of Bishop Butler, by the Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone. To the majority even of the graduates of our colleges the name of Bishop Butler suggests severe and painful efforts in their student days to grasp the meaning of his Analogy of Religion to the Constitution and Course of Nature, and of his three sermons on Human Nature. It is doubtful if many since leaving college have given much thought to the Bishop's arguments, even if willing to admit their importance. The style which the Bishop employed is, to say the least, somewhat lacking in simplicity and perspicuity. Even Mr. Gladstone confesses the difficulty with which his favorite author is understood. Nevertheless, he asserts that his style is for the purpose in hand the best possible, and that any efforts to improve it will be attended with failure.

We are thankful that Mr. Gladstone has thought it worth while to prepare an edition of the Bishop's works, analogy and sermons, with the necessary explanatory notes and cross references, so that hereafter it will be easier for those who desire to do so to make themselves familiar with the statements and arguments of the great thinker of the last century. In addition to this he has given us matter subsidiary, as he calls it, to the Bishop's works, which makes a volume of 370 closely printed pages. These essays and criticisms are of the highest value. Mr. Gladstone modestly calls them "studies." They fall into two groups, the first group comprising those essays or studies relating to the Bishop's personal life and mental habits, the method he employs in argument, its application to the Scriptures, his theology and his influence both in England and America.

The second and largest part of the book is composed of essays, some of which have already in substance appeared in the Nineteenth Century, which relate to such topics as a future life, necessity and determinism, the mediation of Christ, probability the guide of life. Both subject and treatment, though in every respect Mr. Gladstone's, are yet suggested by views and expressions of Bishop Butler. In this sense, therefore, they are subsidiary to his writings. For most readers this second part of the volume will be the most attractive and helpful, but for those who really desire to enter into Bishop Butler's thought the first part of the book is most valuable. Here Mr. Gladstone points out with singular clearness the advantages of Bishop Butler's method in argument, estimates the value of his argument, shows its application to present day discussions, and affirms the reasonableness of the demand that, since we employ probability as a guide in the practical affairs of life, we should not hesitate to employ it in matters of religion.

Mr. Gladstone is very skillful in meeting the criticisms of such writers as Mr. Bagehot, Miss Hunnell, Mr. Leslie Stephen and Mr. Matthew Arnold. Cheerfully admitting the objections they have brought forward, which are grounded in reason, at the same time he points out the failure of these critics, in nearly every instance, fully to apprehend the meaning of the man whom they have criticised. He will not admit for a moment that Butler's usefulness is at an end. He insists that his method is the only legitimate method which we can now employ in our treatment of agnosticism, materialism, the relation of faith to science, and that in place of the exaggerated statements we so often employ it would be well to return to the quiet understatement of the great bishop.

We heartily commend Mr. Gladstone's volume to our readers. It is written in a clear, flowing style, is enriched with the author's ample learning and wide experience, and at the same time is sympathetic both with Bishop Butler and those who may have found it hard to read him with pleasure. [Macmillan & Co. $2 00.]

LITERARY STUDIES.

Rubáiyát of Omar-Khayyám, English, French and German Translations Comparatively Arranged in Accordance with the Text of Edward Fitzgerald's Version . . . Collected and Edited by Nathan Haskell Dole. These two volumes have evidently been a labor of love. The text of the poem in Fitzgerald's translation, which may be said to have already become an English classic, takes twenty-three pages, the introduction, variants, notes, literary illustrations and index the remaining 753. Surely here is a monument of literary worship which the admirers of Fitzgerald and of Omar-Khayyám may rejoice in and call adequate. The spirit of the Persian poet has always fascinated a certain class of minds. Its enjoyment and despair, its insight into the mind of man and ironical pictures of the vanity of his life, its consciousness of beauty and delight in the intoxication of the moment hightened by a fatalism which surrounded it with black clouds of despair, and its subtle hint of faith appearing here and there have delighted and tantalized readers of a high intellectual class in different ages and lands. For those who have the requisite leisure and enthusiasm these books will bring delightful material for study. Joseph Knight Co. 2 vols. $3 50.]

Select American Classics is an addition to the list of books prepared in order to make pure literature effective as a teaching instrument in our schools. It contains selections from Irving's Sketch Book, Webster's Orations and Emerson's Essays, with historical introductions and portraits, well printed and neatly bound. [American Book Co.. 60 cents.]

BIOGRAPHY.

There is hardly a more fascinating and baffling character in all history than the Maid of Orleans. Popular interest in her marvelous career never flags but rather grows with the years which are steadily widening the distance between us. How else can we account for the almost simultaneous publication of three English books about her? Jeanne d'Arc, Her Life and Death, by Mrs. Oliphant, is written in an engaging style, and is full of enthusiastic recognition of the patriotism and devotion of the maid whom she constantly calls a great general. The book would seem to be derived from Mr. Andrew Lang and two or three other sources rather than from a careful study of all existing literature on the subject, and it is not without slight errors and misstatements. Possibly, as she was writing for the Heroes of the Nations series, there was a temptation to make the book romantic and picturesque rather than exact. She certainly has succeeded in giving us a striking and not easily forgotten picture of the peasant maiden of Domremy, whose wonderful life covered only two decades. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.]

In Madame Roland, A Biographical Study, Ida M. Tarbell gives the result of several years spent in Paris studying the life and times of this famous woman. The author has had the advantage of a friendship with the descendants of Madame Roland, who gave her the family legends as well as access to unpublished letters. The "new" features of the book are an account of the visit to Paris where, as her husband's envoy, she went to obtain a title which they thought he deserved for his services to the country but which she failed to procure; and a disclosure of the depth of her love for her husband throughout the early part of her life, a love which she was unwilling to admit during the last months when she was overwhelmed with the intensity of her passion for Buzot. These chapters form the chief value of the book for those familiar with the life of this powerful and attractive woman, while those less well informed will find it interesting and valuable throughout. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.]

SCIENCE.

In Ice-Work, Present and Past, T. G. Bonney, professor of geology at University College, London, sets forth the facts of glacial geology with the various interpretations and his own comments and criticisms. The matter is treated under three heads: Existing Evidence, Traces of the Glacial Epoch, and Theoretical Questions, and is valuable to students and not too scientific for the comprehension of the average reader. [D. Appleton & Co. $1 50.]

The Scenery of Switzerland, and the Causes to Which It Is Due, by the Rt. Hon. Sir John Lubbock, Bart., M. P., F. R. S., D. C. L., LL. D. The author of this book is a wonderfully versatile man, as the list of titles, which we print for once in full, reveals. Scientist, statesman and writer, he is one of the interesting personalities of modern England. In this book he has taken one of the most fascinating problems of dynamic geology and attempted in the case of a well known and much traveled country to show how the scenery which we all admire came to be in its present condition. No one has learned to get the most from the beauty of the natural features of a country until he has learned to distinguish and enjoy its individuality of natural form and the "personality" of its beauty—if we may be allowed the phrase. This enjoyment the author has made easy and interesting for others after evidently enjoying it himself. The book is not, however, light reading, and takes for granted some preliminary knowledge of geology, geography and some power of following careful thought and detailed description. [Macmillan Co. $1.50.]

The Pith of Astronomy (without mathematics), by Samuel G. Bayne, with illustrations. Starting from the earth as a center this convenient little manual follows our solar system out to its limits and passes to the fixed stars, giving the most recently ascertained facts and conclusions briefly and clearly. The illustrations are admirable, and the book will be found convenient and valuable for reference, as well as instructive and helpful to beginners. [Harper & Bros. $1.00.]

STORIES.

Embarrassments, by Henry James. Under this comprehensive title Mr. James has given us a collection of four short stories, with the special titles of The Figure in the Carpet, Glasses, The Next Time, The Way It Came. Each of these stories is as carefully and fully wrought out as if prolonged through three volumes. In finish and beauty of style, in keen analysis of character, in descriptions of situations, somewhat exaggerated, it is true, of occurrences in actual life Mr. James is an acknowledged master. He is always clean and pure in what he writes and the lessons he conveys are wholesome and refreshing. In Mrs. Meldrum and Mrs. Jane Highmore we have personages whose real goodness of heart draws us to them and makes us wish to know them better than Mr. James permits us to do. The publishers have made a volume which in print, paper and binding leaves nothing to be desired. [Macmillan Co. $1 50.]

Mr. William Black is a prolific writer, not influenced by the kind of fiction which happens to be in vogue, but producing novels of the same general character from year to year. In his latest story Mr. Black has taken a Greek title, Briseis, and has chosen the Acropolis—"so many centuries the cynosure of all the civilized world"—for the betrothal of his lovers, but otherwise there is nothing especially new in the tale. His style is always enjoyable, his descriptions of scenery delightful, and his characters strong, nature loving people. [Harper & Bros. $1.75.]

My Fire Opal and Other Tales, by Sarah Warner Brooks. Story writers nowadays go far afield for fresh material. The author of this book draws upon her experience as a visitor to the prisons. There is not a touch of the weak sentimentality which makes a convicted criminal an object of special pity, and there is an abundance of Christian charity, the stories are worth telling and well told, and they carry a moral which does not need to be obtruded. The Story of John Gravesend, for example, without any forcing of the lesson or trick of style, is as grim and powerful a chapter upon the alcohol question as we have often read. [Estes & Lauriat. $1.00.]

The Island of Dr. Moreau, a Possibility, by H. C. Wells, is a highly immoral book, not on the lines of sexual morality, but of the imagination and description of wanton and horrible cruelties of vivisection. Its monsters are not "a possibility," and the book has, in our judgment, absolutely no excuse. We advise our readers in the interest of their own peace and purity of mind to have nothing to do with it. [Stone & Kimball. $1.25.]

MISCELLANEOUS.

The lines of study in the Chautauqua course, which opens in early autumn, embrace French and Greek history and art, also one or more departments of natural science. In preparation for this work the following text-books have been issued and the name of the author of each is sufficient indication of the pains taken to bring the fruits of the ablest scholarship within the reach of the thousands who engage in this excellent and popular form of self education: The Growth of the French Nation, by Prof. G. B. Adams of Yale; A Study of the Sky, by Prof. H. A. Howe, director of Chamberlin Observatory, University of Denver; A Survey of Greek Civilization, by Prof. J. P. Mahaffy of Trinity College, Dublin; A History of Greek Art by Prof. F. B. Tarbell of the University of Chicago, and French Traits, by Mr. W. C. Brownell. With the exception of the last one mentioned these volumes have been definitely prepared for the Chautauqua Reading Circle and are written in a style to delight the general reader no less than to instruct the special student. [Flood & Vincent. $1.00 each.]

Few persons have a better opportunity to study the phenomena of life, in the realm of mind and spirit no less than on its merely material plane, than the Christian physician, and a book embodying the observations of such an one in the profession is usually full of sensible suggestions. Thoughts for the People, by Reuben Greene, M. D., who has practiced medicine for more than fifty years, is no exception to this rule. The laws which govern matters of diet, exercise, sleep and other bodily functions are set forth, not in technical but in plain language, and with a reverent spirit. The stress which he lays upon the influence of thought deserves the careful attention of those who have anything to do with the training of children. [Lee & Shepard. $1.00.]

Some Correspondence and Six Conversations, by Clyde Fitch. This is a witty, albeit somewhat cynical, series of flash-light pictures of human nature. On the whole its moral position is sound in spite of the skating on thin ice of the opening chapter. But is it worth while to spend so much strength on the lower side of things? [Stone & Kimball. $1.00.]

What One Can Do With a Chafing-Dish contains a great variety of recipes for this dainty and increasingly popular manner of cooking. Practical advice is also given in regard to the articles convenient to have on hand for chafing-dish use. The book is prettily gotten up, and is prefaced with appropriate quotations. [John Ireland. $1.00.]

To meet the revival of the interest in genealogy a convenient little Family Record has been prepared with spaces for information about parents, grandparents and other matters of family interest, neatly bound and printed and for sale by Rowland B. Dodge, Worcester, Mass. [50 cents.]

NOTES.

—— Dr. Henry Clay Trumbull, editor of the Sunday School Times has published four books since January and is said to have another ready for the press. It is sad, but not surprising, to learn that with this and all his editorial and teaching work he has broken down and must have absolute rest for a while.

—— The opening of the Goethe-Schiller archives in Weimar recently is a literary event of the first importance to Germany. The collection contains the letters, manuscripts and other memorials of the two greatest German poets besides other collections relating to less famous writers. The accumulation of these materials will help to make Weimar the literary center of Germany.

—— Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, the English preacher and author, tells this story against himself: "When I was going with my boy for a day's trout fishing on the loch, we chanced to meet with a grave Scotch divine, who said, 'Pray, sir, are ye the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse?' 'I am,' said I, with all the cheeriness that a holiday puts into a tired Londoner. 'Ye are not what I pictured ye when I read your buiks,' said he. 'I am very sorry,' I stammered. 'Ah, but when I read your buiks I pictured ye as long and theen and sanctimoornious looking!'"

—— Congregational ministers in Chicago have recently come forward in increasing numbers as authors. Dr. Noble has published a volume of sermons on The Divine Life in Man. Rev. J. M. Campbell of Lombard is the author of two volumes, Unto the Uttermost and The Increasing Christ, both thoughtful and valuable books. Dr. John M. Williams has issued two volumes of National Theology. Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus has already attained fame as the author of a volume of sermons, The Transfiguration, other sermons, of a novel, called Monk and Knight, in two volumes, and of two volumes of poetry, Phidias and Songs of Day and Night. Dr. J. A. Adams of The Advance has written a novel entitled Col. Hungerford's Daughter, in which social questions are discussed. Dr. Simeon Gilbert some years since published a little book giving the history of the adoption of the International Sunday School Lessons. Rev. H. T. Sell has two books on sale, Supplemental Bible Studies, which has had a wide circulation, and Bible Study by Books, just issued. Both are published by the Revell Company. Professors in the seminary have also been busy with their pens.

—— Professor Fisk's Manual on Preaching is in its third edition, is well known and highly valued. Prof. S. I. Curtiss has published a work on the Levitical Priesthood, which required much research, also a life of Prof. Franz Delitzsch and a little volume in reply to Ingersoll on the Mistakes of Moses. Professor Gilbert has a work on the Life of Jesus for the use of students, which has been warmly received, and Prof. H. M. Scott has a volume of lectures delivered to the students of Princeton Theological Seminary on the Nicene Theology, in which he undertakes to demolish the positions of the school of Ritschl and to show that the statements of the Nicene Creed grew naturally out of the opinions of the Fathers and New Testament writers. Professor Mackenzie has a book on The Ethics of Gambling. One or two small volumes on subjects connected with Sunday school work from his pen have been published in Great Britain. Professor Willcox is the author of a novel, Beyond the Veil, and a practical volume on Pastoral Theology. The work of the professors, and of Dr. G. N. Boardman also, appears in the valuable series of year-books known as Current Discussions in Theology. F. H. Revell Co. on this side the water and T. & T. Clark of Edinburgh are bringing out a volume by Rev. E. F. Williams, D. D., the representative of The Congregationalist in the West, entitled Christian Life in Germany.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

Lee & Shepard. Boston.

STORY OF THE HUTCHINSONS. By John Wallace Hutchinson, edited by C. E. Mann, with an introduction by Frederick Douglass. 2 vols. pp. 495, 416. $5.00.

Longmans, Green & Co. New York.

MILTON'S PARADISE LOST. Books I. and II. Edited by E. E. Hale, Jr., Ph. D. pp. 112.

THE SIR ROGER DE COVERLY PAPERS. Edited by D. O. S. Lowell, M. D. pp. 174.

MACAULAY'S LIFE OF SAMUEL JOHNSON. Edited by Huber G. Buehler. pp. 110.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH'S THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD. Edited by Mary A. Jordan. pp. 205. 75 cents.

ROBERT SOUTHEY'S LIFE OF NELSON. Edited by Edwin L. Miller. pp. 297.

Hominis Book Co. Vineland, N. J.

MANHOOD'S MORNING. By J. A. Conwell. pp. 242.

Star Publishing Co. Chicago.

HOW MARCUS WHITMAN SAVED OREGON. By Oliver W. Nixon, M. D, LL D. Fifth edition. pp. 339. $1.75.

Lea Bros. & Co. Philadelphia.

A HISTORY OF AURICULAR CONFESSION AND INDULGENCES. By H. C. Lea, LL.D. Vol. III. pp. 629. $3.00.

J. B. Lippincott Co. Philadelphia.

LAYS OF A WANDERING MINSTREL. By Anne V. Culbertson. pp. 180. $1 00.

PAPER COVERS.

Lee & Shepard. Boston.

WHAT IS AN HONEST DOLLAR? By Fairplay. pp. 31. 25 cents.

Charles A. Keeler. Berkeley, Cal.

THE PROMISE OF THE AGES. By C. A. Keeler.

MAGAZINES.

August. CHAP-BOOK.—FRANK LESLIE'S QUIVER.—FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.—NINETEENTH CENTURY.—OUR DAY.—GOOD HOUSEKEEPING.—SUNDAY.—GOOD WORDS.

September. PALL MALL.—CASSELL'S.

News from the Churches

Meetings to Come.

NEW HAMPSHIRE FEMALE CENT INSTITUTION AND HOME MISSIONARY UNION, annual meeting will be held in connection with the meetings of the General Association at Littleton, Sept. 23, at 2 o'clock P.M. Mrs. H. S. Caswell of New York will address the ladies. Auxiliaries are requested to send delegates All women interested in home missions are cordially invited.
ALICE M. NIMS, Secretary.

Benevolent Societies.

THE CONGREGATIONAL HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY is represented in Massachusetts by the MASSACHUSETTS HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY, No. 9 Congregational House, Rev. Joshua Coit, Secretary; Rev. Edwin B. Palmer, Treasurer.

WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Room No. 32, Congregational House. Office hours, 9 to 5. Annual membership, $1.00; life membership, $20.00 Contributions solicited. Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Treasurer.

AMERICAN BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS, Congregational House, No. 1 Somerset Street, Boston. Frank H. Wiggin, Assistant Treasurer; Charles E. Swett, Publishing and Purchasing Agent. Office in New York, 121 Bible House; in Chicago, 153 La Salle St.

WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS, Rooms 1 and 2 Congregational House. Miss Ellen Carruth, Treasurer; Miss Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Bible House, New York. Missions in the United States, evangelistic and educational, at the South and in the West among the Indians and Chinese. Boston office, 21 Congregational House; Chicago office, 153 La Salle Street.; Cleveland office, Y. M. C. A. Building. Donations may be sent to either of the above offices, or to H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer, 108 Bible House, New York City.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH BUILDING SOCIETY —Church and Parsonage Building. Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., Secretary; H. O. Pinneo, Treasurer, 59 Bible House, New York; Rev. George A. Hood, Congregational House, Boston, Field Secretary.

CONGREGATIONAL EDUCATION SOCIETY.—(Including work of former New West Commission.) Aids four hundred students for the ministry, eight home missionary colleges, twenty academies in the West and South, ten free Christian schools in Utah and New Mexico. S. F. Wilkins, Treasurer. Offices, 10 Congregational House, Boston, 151 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. Address, 10 Congregational House, Boston.

CONG. SUNDAY SCHOOL & PUBLISHING SOCIETY.—Contributions used only for missionary work. Rev. George M. Boynton, D. D., Secretary; W. A. Duncan, Ph. D., Field Secretary; E. Lawrence Barnard, Treasurer, Congregational House, Boston.

MASSACHUSETTS BOARD OF MINISTERIAL AID.—Treasurer, Mr. Arthur G. Stanwood, 701 Sears Building, Boston Address applications to Rev. A. H. Quint, D. D., Congregational Library, 1 Somerset Street, Boston.

MINISTERIAL RELIEF.—In order to afford a little timely aid to aged and disabled home and foreign missionaries and ministers and their families, the committee of the National Council asks from each church one splendid offering for its permanent invested fund. It also invites generous individual gifts. For fuller information see Minutes of National Council, 1892, and Year Book, 1893, page 62. Secretary, Rev. N. H. Whittlesey, New Haven, Ct.; Treasurer, Rev. S. B. Forbes, Hartford, Ct. Form of a bequest: I bequeath to the "Trustees of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States" (a body corporate chartered under the laws of the State of Connecticut) (here insert the bequest), to be used for the purpose of Ministerial Relief, as provided in the resolution of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States at its session held in Chicago in October, 1886.

THE CONGREGATIONAL BOARD OF PASTORAL SUPPLY, established by the Massachusetts General Association, offers its services to churches desiring pastors or pulpit supplies. Careful attention is given to applications from without the State. Room 22A, Congregational House, Boston. Rev. Charles B. Rice, Sec.

THE BOSTON SEAMAN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, organized 1827. Chapel and reading-room, 287 Hanover St., Boston. Open day and evening. Sailors and landsmen welcome. Daily prayer meeting, 11 A.M., Bible study, 3 P.M. Sunday services, usual hours. Meetings every evening except Saturday. Branch mission, Vineyard Haven. Is a Congregational society and appeals to all Congregational churches for support. Send donations of money to B. S. Snow, Corresponding Secretary, Room 22, Congregational House, Boston. Send clothing, comfort bags, reading, etc., to Capt. S. S. Nickerson, chaplain, 287 Hanover St. Bequests should read: "I give and bequeath to the Boston Seaman's Friend Society the sum of $——, to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said society." Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS.

We are not surprised to read, after the statement that a Kansas church is denying itself pastoral service until its debts are paid, that its "spiritual condition was never better." A church taking such a stand for practical righteousness is in the best possible condition for a work of grace.

We note frequent invitations to ministers to preach in their former pulpits in vacation, an arrangement affording mutual enjoyment, we should think. Few ties are stronger and few reunions more delightful than those between pastor and people.

That college service in a Minnesota church might profitably be duplicated in other localities where increased interest in higher education is desired.

An exchange of pulpits for a month or more is a favorite method of securing partial rest and a change of surroundings at slight expense.

Reports from Kansas churches this week emphasize views advanced in a recent editorial on Redeeming the Hard Times.

NEW ENGLAND.

Boston.

Midsummer church-goers in our city and vicinity were privileged to hear visiting clergymen last Sunday, as follows: At Park Street, Rev. David Gregg, D. D., of Brooklyn; Old South, Dr. E. H. Rudd of Albion, N. Y.; Shawmut, Rev. C. M. Southgate of Auburndale; Highland, Rev. G. Y. Washburn of Waterville, Me.; Second Church, Dorchester, Rev. C. S. Mills of Cleveland, O.; Harvard Church, Brookline, Dr. John Wood of Bishop's Stortford, Eng.; Franklin Street, Somerville, Prof. E. S. Parsons of Colorado College.

Massachusetts.

EVERETT.—First. Rev. Oliver Brown, pastor 30 years ago, supplied acceptably Aug. 2. Rev. W. H. Ashley of Shelburne Falls preached Aug. 9 a thoughtful sermon. The 16 inst. Rev. G. Y. Washburn of Waterville, Me., was gladly welcomed back by his many friends, among them some of the large number of young people received into the church during his seven years' pastorate. Mr. Washburn preached for the Mystic Side church the previous Sunday.

NEWBURYPORT.—North. Rev. C. P. Mills is spending his vacation at Rye Beach, the church being closed in his absence.—— Whitefield. Rev. J. H. Reid, pastor, is resting among the hills of Alton, on Lake Winnepesaukee, and the church is closed during August.——Prospect Street. Rev. M. O. Patton took a trip with Deacon Charles Bliss to Nova Scotia, and has since been in Maine. The church laments the death of one of her best young men, Mr. Edward S. Plummer.——Belleville. The house of worship was closed one Sunday only in the absence of the pastor, who spent his vacation in Michigan. Aug. 18 was the 49th anniversary of the ordination over this church of the senior pastor, Rev. Daniel T. Fiske, D. D. The occasion was celebrated by the people after prayer meeting, who gathered about the parsonage door and sang, "Blest be the tie that binds." There is every prospect that this long pastorate will be graciously continued far beyond the half-century.——Oldtown. Rev. F. W. Sanborn, after 12 years of faithful and successful ministry, terminates his pastorate Oct. 31, contrary to the expressed desire of the church.

ATTLEBORO FALLS.—The council held June 23 came to a result which has just been made public. It unanimously found that charges against the pastor, Rev. J. H. McLaren, were "not proven," but that he had been "exceedingly indiscreet," and recommended that the church accept the resignation which he had offered. The council commented with some severity upon the "bitterness of spirit" shown by some of the witnesses, and of course it advised peace and harmony. The church has not yet taken action, because public worship is at present suspended.

AUBURN.—Work upon the new edifice is progressing rapidly. The pastor, Rev. C. M. Pierce, with his wife and son, the latter a student at Yale Divinity School, are spending their vacations at Barrington, R. I. They will return Sept. 1.

NORTH BROOKFIELD.—First. This church and society unite in extending to Rev. J. L. Sewall of Kansas City, Mo., a call to become their pastor, at a salary of $1,500 and parsonage. There is a strong probability that he will accept.

WAQUOIT.—The people are rejoicing in a church house bought and fitted up by the women of the village. For 30 years the prayer meeting has been held in the schoolhouse and the farewell meeting there last week, led by the son of a former pastor, was tender and impressive. The following evening occurred the dedication of the new house, the program including a prayer and address by the pastor, Rev. H. K. Craig, and an address by Prof. William Fairley, D. D., of Philadelphia. The house contains a hall for social meetings, with ante-rooms, and a supper-room on the second floor with kitchen and pantry. During the pastor's vacation the pulpit is being supplied by the sons of Rev. Samuel Fairley, a former pastor, who are summer residents of the village.

SPRINGFIELD.—First. Repairs amounting to about $3,000 are nearly completed, and it is expected that the building will be ready for use Sept. 1. The interior has been thoroughly renovated, the ceiling newly frescoed, and the pews varnished and recushioned. The book-racks will probably be provided with some arrangement for holding individual communion cups. Outside, a covered porch has been built between the main edifice and the chapel, for the protection in stormy weather of members of the Sunday school who have to cross from one to the other.

WILLIAMSTOWN.—White Oaks. The audience-room of the famous chapel built here by the late Prof. Albert Hopkins has been enlarged and the other curious rooms renovated, without interfering with the original construction. About $2,300, mostly the gift of outside friends, have been spent. Mr. Warren Morse, a student at Williams College, has led the people to this rare success. He now gives place to Mr. G. V. Stryker, three years a student at Princeton, N. J., and an earnest Christian worker.

Maine.

SOUTH PARIS.—The pastor, Rev. R. J. Haughton, and wife have returned from a five-weeks' vacation at St. John, N. B. The pulpit was supplied one Sunday by Rev. S. S. York, county missionary, and two Sunday mornings it was most acceptably filled by Rev. W. H. Bolster, D. D., of Dorchester, Mass., a native of the place. A good interest prevails, and the auditorium, which seats about 300, is often comfortably filled.

EAST STONEHAM.—Through the labors of Mr. E. W. Pond, a Yale student, a church was organized a year ago. Much interest is manifest. During the present pastorate sixteen members have been added on confession, eight of them men, and five heads of families. The audience-room is filled every Sunday, some attendants riding eight miles.

NORTH WATERFORD.—The parish has been abolished and the church incorporated according to the laws of the State. The building has been painted, a new furnace and new hymn-books furnished, and at present the question of horse sheds is being agitated.

PORTLAND.—St. Lawrence Street. The contract for the new edifice has been let. Mr. Payson Tucker is reported to have offered to furnish the trimmings of dressed granite, of which the estimated value is $1,500, from his redstone quarries.

BLUEHILL.—Rev. A. J. Haynes of Harwich, Mass., preached Aug. 16, Professor Hill of Vassar presiding at the organ, assisted by Prof. Wulf Fries on the violoncello, in audition to the usual choir and Mr. Howe, soloist.

BETHEL.—Rev. G. Y. Washburn of Waterville supplied the pulpit during parts of July and August. His sermons were received with deep interest by the large congregations of townspeople and summer visitors.

BRIDGTON.—The pastor, Rev. George M. Woodwell, exchanged with Rev. E. P. Wilson of Woodfords, who began his ministerial life here 27 years ago.

New Hampshire

CORNISH.—For some years it has been the custom here to gather the aged people of this and neighboring towns for an annual old folks' festival in response to previous invitation. Such an occasion occurred at the church Aug. 19, and was largely attended, not only by the old people, but by many others who delighted to do them honor. Beside the usual social festivities, refreshments were served on tables for the "guests" of the occasion, while others enjoyed a basket picnic. Many sunny memories were carried away.

HILLSBORO CENTER.—More than a hundred parishioners called at the parsonage, Aug. 11, on the occasion of the 25th wedding anniversary of Rev. and Mrs. Samuel Eaton, to extend their hearty congratulations, and left behind them many useful and valuable presents as a testimonial of the high esteem in which the worthy couple are held by an appreciative people, for their own and their works' sake, here and in Bradford, where Mr. Eaton also supplies regularly.

DUBLIN.—Through the instrumentality of Rev. J. S. Colby of Marlboro, for the second summer the church has been opened and provision made for regular Sunday services. Dr. Lysander Dickerman of New York supplies for the present on Sunday mornings, and members of the C. E. Society of Marlboro have held other meetings, thus enlarging the sphere of their influence.

BARTLETT.—A movement started some time ago looking to the erection of a new church edifice has been successful, and ground has already been broken for its realization. This is a fine summer resort on the border of the mountain region, and often attracts many distinguished guests for summer rest, filling the church with attentive and interested hearers.

ACWORTH.—A fine orchard and other valuable real estate has lately come into possession of the church by the will of the late Judge J. H. Dickey.

Vermont.

MORRISVILLE.—The corner-stone of the new edifice was laid Aug. 12 with appropriate exercises, among which was a historical sketch read by Dr. J. A. Robinson and an address by Hon. P. K. Gleed. Among the numerous articles deposited in the corner-stone were a recent photograph of the old church, copies of the church manuals of 1875 and 1888, the historical sketch read on this occasion, and a recent photograph of the pastor, Rev. G. N. Kellogg. The gavel used was carved from the cherry pulpit placed in the old meeting house in 1839.

SHARON.—The following bequests of the late Dr. E. K. Baxter have been made public: To the Mary Hitchcock Hospital $5,000; the Vermont Domestic Missionary Society $2,000; the American Board $2,000; the Vermont Bible Society $1,000; the A. M. A. $1,000; the Vermont Humane Society $500; the Massachusetts Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals $500, and the Vermont Domestic Missionary Society in trust for Sharon Church $1,500. The widow has a large interest in the estate, and a resulting trust may bring larger gifts to the societies mentioned than the original legacies.

COLCHESTER.—Mr. Clarence J. Harris, installed Aug. 11 as pastor over this church, went from a business life in Boston to the Lay College at Revere, Mass., after which he preached two years at Windham, Vt., a pastorate fruitful in conversions. Parts of the next two years he spent at Bangor Seminary, supplying during vacations at Londonderry and Peru, Vt The council was pleased with his spirit and bearing, and thought his theological equipment remarkable considering his broken courses of study.

Connecticut.

FALLS VILLAGE.—The new bell tower recently completed is a handsome symmetrical structure over 60 feet high and 12 feet wide at the first story and 10 at the second, having dormer windows. The part in which the bell is hung is entirely open to give the sound full opportunity to escape. The inner doors are cloth-covered and open noiselessly either way. On the north side is a porte-cochère 15 feet long and 12 feet wide, well finished and conveniently arranged for carriages of all hights. This is a handsome addition to the church, and the new bell has long been needed.

SOUTHINGTON.—Rev. Samuel Dunham of Binghamton, N. Y., preached at both services at the First Church last Sunday, the Baptists uniting with the Congregationalists in the absence of their pastor. The new cushions had arrived and were used for the first time, and other improvements were completed.

PUTNAM.—After Rev. F. D. Sargent's return from his European trip, the Ladies' Social Circle gave him a reception, which was largely attended by members of the church and congregation He occupied his pulpit Aug. 16 for the first time since his return, being greeted by a large congregation.

ROCKVILLE.—The largest congregation for several weeks assembled Sunday, Aug. 16, when the new pastor, Rev. Charles E. McKinley of Yarmouth, Me., occupied the pulpit. His installation will occur Sept. 16.

WINDHAM —A recent entertainment at the Center netted about $90 for the church treasury. A large part of this sum came from the summer visitors.

THE INTERIOR.

Ohio.

CHARDON.—Rev. Owen Jenkins of Collinwood accepts a unanimous call to this place. The ladies have presented to the church a fine portrait of their late pastor, Rev. T. D. Phillips.

Illinois.

CHICAGO.—Covenant. This church, organized some years ago as a branch of the First Church and about 10 years ago becoming independent, receiving at that time, as a free gift from the mother church, the property it occupies, has so prospered as to require a new building. The house is now crowded uncomfortably at every service, and the Sunday school work seriously crippled by lack of room. Arrangements have now been made for a new two-story edifice of brick and stone, to cost $30,000. It will occupy the present site (Polk Street and Claremont Avenue, West Side) and will be 100 feet x 63. The audience-room will seat 850 persons, the lecture-room 250 and the Sunday school room 1,000. Other rooms for committees, pastor's study and the like will be provided. Work upon the new structure is to begin soon. Rev. J. T. Blanchard is pastor.

Indiana.

INDIANAPOLIS.—People's. Rev. C. N. Pond of Oberlin, O , occupied this pulpit Aug. 16, and spoke also in the Presbyterian Tabernacle and other churches in the interest of industrial education among the colored people. Collections were taken in behalf of the work.——Union. This church, organized last April and at present in care of Rev. O. D. Fisher, has secured the paid up deeds of desirable lots, and has let contracts for the edifice upon plans designed by Mr. Fisher. It expects to complete the work of erection this fall.——Broad Ripple. Rev. Oscar C. Helming, pastor at Atchinson, Kan., who was instrumental in gathering this church, while visiting his parents at Indianapolis supplied its pulpit Aug. 23.——Brightwood has appointed a building committee and has planned to remove the present small building to the rear of the lot for a chapel and erect a more commodious house for public worship. This step is made necessary by the inadequacy of the present structure to accommodate the people.——Pilgrim. Mrs. Mary A. Ayres of Huntsville, O., is temporarily supplying the pulpit to the satisfaction of the congregation. She is the wife of a former Ohio army chaplain, and has had much experience in church work.

FORT WAYNE.—South. Aug. 13, during a severe storm, a thunderbolt shattered the graceful spire and seriously damaged the front gable. The building had been repaired and renovated during the past few months at considerable sacrifice, and further need of expenditure is to be deplored.

Wisconsin.

SUN PRAIRIE.—The golden jubilee of the church was celebrated Aug. 19, with appropriate services, in which all denominations joined in a spirit of hearty good fellowship. The program included a historical sketch by Miss Fannie Carleton, a retrospective address by Rev. H. A. Miner, another of a prophetic nature by Mr. H. H. Jacobs, and greetings from former pastors and neighboring clergymen, including the Catholic priest. One of the most enjoyable features was a banquet in which about 130 persons participated. Rev. H. F. A. Oberhaus is the present pastor.

THE WEST.

Iowa.

BURLINGTON.—The exercises commemorating the 50 years' pastorate of Dr. William Salter, which took place April 12, have been preserved in an attractive memorial volume, giving the full text of the pastor's anniversary sermon, with other addresses, and illustrated with photographs of persons chiefly concerned in the history of the church.

CLEAR LAKE.—Owing to the illness of Rev. Edwin Ewell, who has been serving this people during the pastor's vacation, the pulpit was supplied, Aug. 16, by Rev. C. P. Boardman of Webster City. Rev. N. L. Packard of Buffalo Center will preach Aug. 23.

OGDEN.—Rev. S. D. Horine has been unable to preach since April on account of illness. He had recovered sufficiently to drive out, but recently has suffered relapse. The church is without regular pastoral supply.

Minnesota.

GARVIN.—Since the coming of Rev. R. H. Upton a subscription has been raised for a parsonage and the work begun, the pastor doing much of it with his own hands. This substantial advance greatly cheers the little church, with its yoke-fellow at Custer.

NEW RICHLAND —Rev. F. H. Oehler, the first resident pastor, has completed his year's service. Work has been begun at an out-station and the church greatly strengthened. He accepts an invitation to remain another year.

GROVELAND.—Rev. E. E. Rogers has completed a pastorate of three years in this little church on the shores of Lake Minnetonka. Upon his resignation his son, Mr. Walter P. Rogers, was invited to preach for two months.

OWATONNA.—The departure of Rev. J. A. Chamberlin, who goes to the First Church, Newark, N. J., occasions genuine regret, not only in his own church, but in the ranks of the ministry throughout the State.

PELICAN RAPIDS.—A Sunday service was recently held in the interest of Carleton College. Present and former students spoke arousing much interest, and three new pupils have been secured to enter this fall.

Mr. H. H. Stutson, a student from Chicago Seminary, has labored at Detroit for the summer, greatly to the uniting of the church.

Kansas.

SALINA.—Several churches have joined in union services on Sunday evenings. August 2 the topic was Church Music. Rev. T. V. Davies of the Congregational church took charge of the elaborate musical program, and other pastors spoke on What Can the Choir, the Church and the Pastor Do to Improve Church Music? The members number 180 and are progressing along spiritual lines. The

Continued on page 313.

First

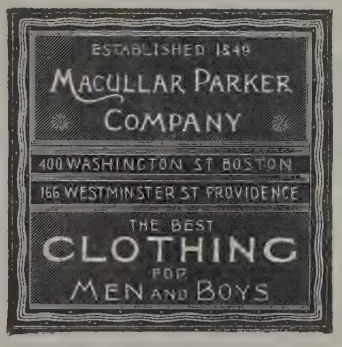
Last and always advertised as a true blood purifier, the most wonderful cures on record are made and the greatest sales won by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I was afflicted with scrofula and was in such a condition I was hardly able to walk. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla by the advice of friends, and after I had taken a few bottles I was almost well. I have found this medicine the best of anything I could get for scrofula."—R. O. CHANDLER, Push, Va.

HOOD'S
Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.



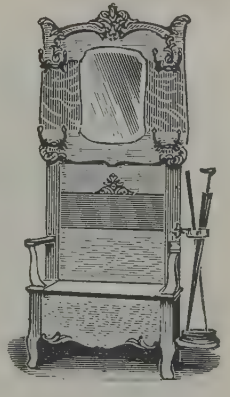
FATAL ECONOMY.

Excepting marriage, there is no noose so attractive as a bargain. You can run your head quite easily into this noose by over-cultivating your economy until, from a virtue, it becomes a vice.

Don't do it! You cannot have value without cost. Take a single case—for example, the purchase of a Hall Stand. Would you rather pay us $18.50 for a finely built piece of cabinet work like this, or would you rather pay elsewhere $15 for some cheaper pattern, and lose in beauty, convenience, style and durability at least the equivalent of $10?

In the above design the back is panelled, with a projected upper section carved in deep relief. The glass is French plate, with wide bevel.

A deep robe chest, rustless drip tank, brass combination hooks, broad arm rests, wide seat, superb carvings—only $18.50.



JUST ISSUED—General Catalogue for 1896-97. Square octavo, 256 pp. 300 Illustrations. Sent to any address on receipt of five 2-cent stamps for postage.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,
48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.

Why pay the same price for the inferior "just as good" when you can get

S·H·& M· REGISTERED TRADE MARK

BIAS VELVETEEN SKIRT BINDING

by asking and insisting?

If your dealer WILL NOT supply you we will.

Samples showing labels and materials mailed free.

"Home Dressmaking Made Easy," a new 72 page book by Miss Emma M. Hooper, of the Ladies' Home Journal, tells in plain words how to make dresses at home without previous training; mailed for 25c.

S. H. & M. Co., P. O. Box 699, N. Y. City.

Ostrich Boas and Collarettes

Wraps and boas feel decidedly comfortable these cool evenings. Every woman needs an Ostrich Boa or Collarette—they give the best protection to the throat, and, again, they're very stylish. We want you to see the beauties we are now displaying.

Black Ostrich Collarettes—

Fine Quality Black Ostrich Collarettes, warranted first quality stock, at

3.48 and 3.98

Black Ostrich Boas—

First quality, warranted to wear well, at 9.00, 12.00, 14.50

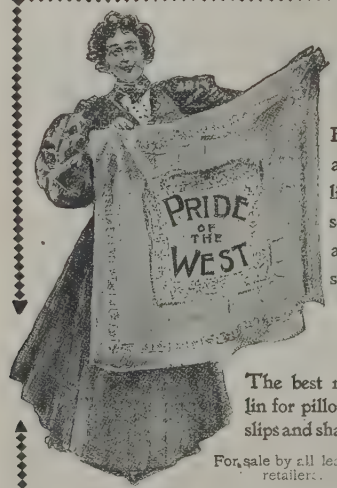
We have a great assortment of Boas and Collarettes at all sorts of prices, but the above lots are special value.

Wm. S. Butler & Co.,

TREMONT STREET, BOSTON.



Fine as linen, soft as silk.

The best muslin for pillow slips and shams.

For sale by all leading retailers.

POT GROWN STRAWBERRY PLANTS

Fine stock. Prices reasonable. Send for catalogue before ordering elsewhere.

C. S. PRATT, Reading, Mass.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

The hope of each succeeding week, to be able to chronicle an improvement in the industrial and commercial situation, does not seem to blossom into reality. The distress has been keener the past week, if anything. Money is tight and very difficult of collection, which factors aid in thrusting so many firms into bankruptcy. Some important failures occurred this week, and had not the present bad state of affairs been largely provided against by merchants large and small, failures would be widespread throughout the country.

Aside from cotton, which strengthened on reports of crop damage, agricultural products continue terribly depressed. As regards corn, another enormous crop is in prospect, and good judges believe that this will drive the price still lower, although present prices are abnormally and ruinously low. This great depression in farm products in the West is plainly reflected by the small movement of merchandise westward, the rate wars among the railroads and the craze for the free coinage of silver.

In the iron trade apathy reigns supreme. Few mills are running steadily, and no great improvement in the situation is expected until after election. An effort is making to form an iron pipe pool, which is one of the results of the trade stagnation.

The cotton and woolen manufacturing industries show no improvement. More mills are shutting down than are starting up, but there is no market for the goods. Here, again, no great change for the better is expected until after the election. In lumber and leather there is the same story to tell, namely, lethargy all along the line.

A feature of the week in financial circles has been the orders for imports of gold. The fact that gold is being imported from natural causes, for the first time since 1892, inspires the hope that the country is actually about to round the corner and leave panics and depression behind it. This is a pretty hope, it is true, but Wall Street speculators should remember that a very important presidential election is yet to come off, and that at the present time the general trade situation is very bad. Personally, the writer is of the opinion that the next couple of years will witness a period of prosperity, but during the next few months several important questions must be settled.

FALSE economy is practiced by people who buy inferior articles of food. The Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Infant Health is the title of a valuable pamphlet for mothers. Sent free by New York Condensed Milk Co., N. Y.

GOOD AS GOLD.—Every drop of Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam is actually worth its weight in gold to any one suffering from Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma or other Throat and Lung complaints. Sold at 35 and 75 cents by all druggists.

BE sure you are right and then go ahead. If your blood is impure, your appetite failing, your nerves weak, you may be sure that Hood's Sarsaparilla is what you need. Then take no substitute. Insist upon Hood's and only Hood's. This is the medicine which has the largest sales in the world. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the One True Blood Purifier.

HOOD'S PILLS are prompt, efficient, always reliable, easy to take, easy to operate.

£ THE BEST MONEY for Travelers abroad.

Cheque Bank Cheques.

Excellent for remittances. See circular.

Agency of the U. S. Cheque Bank, L'd.

FREDERICK W. PERRY, Manager,

40 and 42 Wall St., N. Y.

YOU SELL WE BUY

DO YOU WANT TO SELL A Western Mortgage or Western Land—avoid foreclosure costs—stop sending good money after bad—get a good 5% investment instead. State exact location, condition of title, and your lowest price. Over $2,000,000 in Western securities successfully handled by the present management of this corporation.

THE BOSTON REALTY, INDEMNITY AND TRUST CO.

Send for our Bond List. 38 Equitable Building, Boston.

After.... Taking

a course of Ayer's Pills the system is set in good working order and a man begins to feel that life is worth living. He who has become the gradual prey of constipation, does not realize the friction under which he labors, until the burden is lifted from him. Then his mountains sink into molehills, his moroseness gives place to jollity, he is a happy man again. If life does not seem worth living to you, you may take a very different view of it after taking Ayer's Cathartic Pills.

Financial.

HOME INSURANCE COMPANY

OF NEW YORK,

OFFICE, NO. 119 BROADWAY.

Eighty-Fifth Semi-Annual Statement, January, 1896.

SUMMARY OF ASSETS.

Cash in Banks	$469,914 59
Real Estate	1,705,895.91
United States Stocks (market value)	1,418,425.00
Bank, Trust Co., and Railroad Stocks and Bonds (market value)	3,946,493.00
State and City Bonds (market value)	855,927.93
Bonds and Mortgages, being first lien on Real Estate	463,009.13
Loans on Stocks, payable on demand	426,550.00
Premiums uncollected and in hands of Agents	515,227.06
Interest due and accrued on 1st January, 1896	52 185.92
	$9,853,628.54

LIABILITIES.

Cash Capital	$3,000,000.00
Reserve Premium Fund	4,395,659.00
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Claims	752,514.13
Net Surplus	1,705,455.41
	$9,853,628.54

D. A. HEALD, President.
J. H. WASHBURN, E. G. SNOW, Vice-Presidents.
W. L. BIGELOW, T. B. GREENE, Secretaries.
H. J. FERRIS, A. M. BURTIS, Ass't Secretaries.

NEW YORK, January 7, 1896.

7 PER CENT. NET.

First Mortgage Loans on Improved Farms in the Wonderfully Fertile Red River Valley

and in North Dakota and Minnesota. 20 years of experience in the business, and an actual residence of over 8 years in the Red River Valley and of over 22 in Minnesota and North Dakota. A personal knowledge of lands and values. Loans only made to industrious, thrifty farmers, on well improved farms. I give my personal supervision to the business. Loans made in your name and interest coupon-notes and mortgages and applications sent to you and held by you. Interest collected by me and forwarded to you by New York Check. Funds now earning you only 2, 3, or 4 per cent. in Savings Banks will here earn you 7 per cent.—about doubling your income. Remit funds for investment by New York or Boston Draft, or by personal check payable to my order. Address financial burden is heavy because installments on the subscriptions for the edifice have to be paid in addition to current expenses. The church has a fine property and an open field in an important commercial center.

E. P. CATES,

2628 Portland Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

Continued from page 311.

ALANTHUS AND FAIRVIEW WESTERN.—These new rural churches in Gove County were recognized by a council held in Banner Grove, near Collyer, July 21. They are the fruit of revivals conducted last winter by Rev. I. M. Waldrop, pastor at Buffalo Park and Collyer. He also preached regularly at these points and still has calls from needy districts impossible for him to reach.

OBERLIN.—The church has decided to remove its services from the courtroom to a commodious and more attractive hall. Though weakened by removals, it keeps bravely on with its work. A pound party was recently given to the pastor which netted a liberal sum.

NETAWAKA.—This church has systematically arranged to pay deficits on current expenses by Jan. 1, and will not engage a pastor till then. The regular services will be maintained by reading sermons, and the spiritual condition was never better.

ONEIDA AND GOSHEN.—These churches, whose edifices were destroyed by cyclones, are attempting to rebuild, but need more outside help to make this possible. They are anxious to get into their houses of worship this fall.

POWHATTAN AND COMET.—An arrangement has been made with Mr. A. W. Wyatt, a teacher in the vicinity who will study for the ministry, to supply for a few months while deficits in current expenses are being met.

The weekly prayer meeting at Valeda has been resumed and the opening is unusually good for effective Christian work this fall.——The Dunlap church mourns the loss by death of Deacon M. H. White, one of its most valued supporters.——The church at Alton has prospered during the summer under the care of a student and is well organized for progressive work.

In the greater part of the State sufficient rain fell in June and July, but the first half of August has been hot and dry. The corn is somewhat injured, but hopes of a full average crop are still entertained.

In all quarters of the State the churches are showing a progressive spirit, and making gain in spiritual efficiency notwithstanding the unusual financial stress.

North Dakota.

HATTON.—A promising church of six members was organized here Aug. 16, Rev. E. H. Stickney assisting. Rev. J. T. Killen of Portland is in charge.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

SAN FRANCISCO.—Third. Under the lead of Rev. Wm. Rader $250 have been raised for next year's C. E. convention.——Fourth. Rev. Frederick Flawith resigns the pastorate after 14 months' service. He is contemplating a return to England, his native land.——Park, despite the fact that Harvard Presbyterian Church has just moved into a new edifice on an adjacent corner, is prospering under the leadership of Rev. J. B. Orr. Hopes are entertained that the Church Extension Society will provide a lot worth $6,000, upon which the church may build a modest chapel. Toward this enterprise Cooper Church, the youngest of the San Francisco sisterhood, has pledged twice the amount asked of her.——Plymouth. Dr. Williams goes East for a month's vacation. On the way he is to deliver an address at a large gathering of the Welsh in Denver, Col., early in September. Professor Lloyd of Pacific Seminary is to supply the pulpit for a part of the time, at least.

SAN JOSE.—Rev. H. M. Tenney, having returned from vacation, is ill with intermittent fever. Rev. J. C. Perkins of India spoke there and at Campbells Aug. 9, giving interesting addresses on work in his mission field. This brother is to speak at the several associations on the coast this fall.

Mr. William Kidd, once a member of the Salvation Army, having been approbated to preach, has gone to Trinity County to labor under the direction of Rev. H. Hammond Cole, residing at Weaverville, the county seat. A certificate has also been granted Mr. Arthur Alexander, a former student of Pacific Seminary. He is to labor at Beckwith, Plumas County, where a new edifice has just been erected.

Are You Nervous?
Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. M. C. GROPPNER, Holyoke, Mass., says: "I am prescribing it in nervous diseases, with the best result. It makes a delicious drink.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR, ECKSTEIN } Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, BRADLEY, BROOKLYN, JEWETT, ULSTER, UNION } New York.
SOUTHERN, SHIPMAN } Chicago.
COLLIER, MISSOURI, RED SEAL, SOUTHERN } St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS. CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY, SALEM Cleveland.
CORNELL Salem, Mass.
KENTUCKY Buffalo.

THERE IS A RIGHT WAY to paint and a wrong way. The right way is to have the best Paint—Pure White Lead and Linseed Oil—applied by a practical painter. The wrong way is to get some mixture about which you know nothing and apply it yourself or have some inexperienced, irresponsible person do it.

Pure White Lead

can be readily tinted to any shade required by using NATIONAL LEAD CO.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, prepared expressly for this purpose.

Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New York.

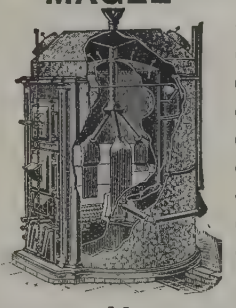
MAGEE RANGES & HEATERS ARE THE BEST ALWAYS RECEIVE HIGHEST AWARD

MAGEE

GRAND RANGE.

THE MOST ECONOMICAL and EFFECTIVE HEATING & COOKING APPARATUS in the WORLD.

MAGEE



BOSTON HEATER.

YOU SHOULD SEE the "MAGEE" Ranges and Heaters, embodying the latest developments in the manufacture of heating and cooking apparatus. Famous on account of their patented features, and appreciated and praised by users everywhere. Sold by leading dealers. Correspondence solicited.

MAGEE FURNACE CO., 32-38 UNION ST., BOSTON.
AGENCIES: 86 LAKE ST., CHICAGO. 27 NEW MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO.

A well-dressed shoe looks small—
Brown's Shoe Dressing— 'nough said
For Ladies and Children's Shoes

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

NEPHRITIC COLIC.

WM. C. WILE, A. M., M. D., LL. D., of Danbury, Ct., reports the following (New England Medical Monthly December 15, 1888): "In a recent outbreak of NEPHRITIC COLIC in our own person, the attack, under the BUFFALO LITHIA WATER was speedily cut short, the stones quickly passed, and the debris which followed showed a thorough cleansing of the kidneys and bladder of all foreign substances. All of the reflex symptoms and sequelæ were promptly relieved, and we feel under a deep debt of gratitude to this most excellent Water for wonderful relief.

Sold by Druggists. Pamphlet free. Proprietor, Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.

Keep Well

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT. TRADE MARK REGISTERED

By taking an Occasional Dose of

The cooling, refreshing, invigorating cure for Constipation, Indigestion and Sick Headache

Pleasant to take. Sold by druggists 50 years.

ESTABLISHED 1836.
ISAAC RILEY,
Successor to Baird & Riley,
PLUMBER AND SANITARY ENGINEER
85 Joy St., Near Cambridge St., Boston.
Telephone, Haymarket 294.

TRADE MARK.

NURSING CORNS

doesn't pay when you can cure 'em for 15c. A-Corn Salve is made to cure—does cure—corns. At the nearest druggist's, or mailed by GIANT CHEMICAL CO., 305 Cherry St., Phila.

Does Your Hair Fall Out?

Is it getting thin—lessening in volume? If so, I can help you. If totally bald do not write. Select family patronage for ten years. Send self-addressed stamped envelope to Miss RACHEL T. WYATT, Centerville, Mass

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. MARK GOULD.

His years were close upon fourscore and five, yet was not their strength labor and sorrow. His eye saw, his ear heard, thought and memory were clear up to the hour when, murmuring "Home! home!" he went to his Father's house. Mr. Gould loved life, and strove to lead a full and helpful life. Great interests and great reforms, such as anti-slavery and temperance, he loyally supported. The Christian faith and ministry commanded his intense devotion. A clear and thorough thinker, he so reverenced the Word of God and had so proved its divine power that he was always ready with challenge or defense in behalf of the doctrines of grace. Prayer was to him a solemn reality, he kept lists of those for whom he interceded long after he had ceased to be their pastor. Possessing a strong love of poetry and an ability to express himself easily in verse, he published several volumes, the last of which, called "The Mosead," from its great hero, had been a life work.

Mr. Gould was born in Wilton, Me., Dec. 2, 1811, graduated from Bowdoin College in 1837 and from Andover Seminary in 1841. He was ordained and installed in Andover, Me., in 1851. He also held pastorates in Standish and Monmouth, Me., and in Chichester and Nelson, N. H. For the past thirteen years he resided in Worcester, Mass., where he died Aug. 7. C. M. S.

CHARLES MARSH KITTREDGE, M. D.

Dr. Kittredge, well known as the superintendent for many years of a home for nervous invalids at Fishkill-on-Hudson, died very suddenly at his native place and summer home, Mt. Vernon, N. H., Aug. 19, at the age of fifty-eight. He had just closed a pleasant address at the reunion of the alumni of McCollom Institute, when he fell back and died almost instantly. The assembly was deeply moved, but at the instance of the chaplain of the day (Rev. C. P. Mills of Newburyport), began singing, "Nearer, my God, to Thee," and when it was announced that he had gone they kept on singing, "Or if, on joyful wing." Dr. Kittredge was a graduate of Amherst College, 1862, an officer in the War of the Rebellion and an earnest, noble, liberal Christian man.

WEEKLY REGISTER.

Calls.

BERRY, Edw. A., Chattanooga, Tenn., to First Ch., Cedar Rapids, Io.
BOLTON, Chas. E., Kincardine, Can., to Garafraxa and Belwood. Accepts.
CHAMBERLIN, Jas. A., Owatonna, Minn., to First Ch., Newark, N. J. Accepts, to begin at once.
COOK, Levi H., Gowrie, Io., to Jewell.
DAY, Chas. O., Brattleboro, Vt., to presidency of Talladega Univ., Ala. Declines.
DOANE, Frank B., to remain another year at Dayton, Wn.
ELLSWORTH, Jno. S., late of Newark Valley, N. Y., to Le Raysville, Pa., a former parish.
GRAY, John, Sibley, Io., to Howard and Vilas. Accepts.
HAMLIN, Cyrus, Beloit, Wis., to the normal department of Tougaloo University, Miss. Accepts.
HARRIS, Robt. N., Second Ch., Coaldale, Pa., to Mt. Carmel. Accepts.
HARWOOD, Clement M. G., Oak Park Ch., Minneapolis, Minn., accepts call to Fergus Falls.
HOUSE, Albert V., New Salem, Mass., declines call to Enfield.
JENKINS, Owen, Collinwood, O., to Chardon. Accepts.
KEPHART, Wm. H., Plymouth Ch., Binghamton, N. Y., to North Ch., New York city.
MILLS, Harlow S., Union City, Mich., to Benzonia.
MYLNE, George W., Freeport, Mich., to Carson City.
OEHLER, Fred H., to remain another year at New Richland, Minn.
PLASS, Norman, late of Vine St. Ch., Cincinnati, O., to Barrington, R. I. Accepts.
PRATT, N. Miller, Barton, Vt., to Bethany Ch., New York, N. Y.
SEWALL, Jno. L., Clyde Ch., Kansas City, Mo., to First Ch., N. Brookfield, Mass.
SIDDALL, G. Ward, St. Johns, N. F., to Heath Ch., Halifax, Eng.
VAILE, Chas S., to be acting pastor at Monrovia, Cal., for the rest of the year.
WRISTON, Jno., Beachmont, Mass., to Beechwood. Accepts, to begin work Sept. 1.

Ordinations and Installations.

HARRIS, Clarence J., o. and i. Colchester, Vt., Aug. 11. Sermon, Rev. J. P. Bixby; other parts, Rev. Messrs. A. D. Barber, T. D. Bacon and C. H. Merrill.
KELLEY, Matthew, o. Listowel, Can., July 30. Addresses by Rev. J. Morton and others.
RICE, Geo. H., o. Red Cliff, Col., Aug. 11. Sermon, Rev. F. T. Bayley; other parts, Rev. Messrs. Horace Sanderson, E. P. Root and Isaac McRae.

Resignations.

BRINTNALL, Loren W., Hartwick, Io.
COVELL, Arthur J., Waterbury, Vt., to accept a post-graduate scholarship at Harvard. Resignation will take effect Sept. 30.
EXCELL, Wm., Hennepin, Ill.
EXTENCE, Geo., Williston, N. D. He will return to Canada.
FLAWITH, Fred., Fourth Ch., San Francisco, Cal.
HUFFMAN, Wm. N., Tipton, Cal.
JENKINS, David T., Dwight, N. D., to take effect in October.
MCCLANE, Wm. R., Randall, Minn., to resume study at Carleton College.
MERRIAM, Frank N., Ventura, Cal., to take up post-graduate study. Resignation will take effect Sept. 10.
RICHARDSON, Chas. A., Genoa, Neb.
ROGERS, Enoch E., Groveland, Minn.
SANBORN, Francis W., Newbury, Mass., to take effect Oct. 31.
SECORD, A., Barrie, Ont., to resume study at Montreal College.
WADE, Justin G., Dongola and Mill Creek, Ill., to accept a call to Chicago.

Take a Combination Case of the LARKIN SOAPS
and a "Chautauqua"
Reclining Easy Chair or Desk
ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL.

CASE CONTAINS . . .
100 Bars Sweet Home Soap. 10 Bars White Woolen Soap.
9 Packages Boraxine. 18 Cakes Finest Toilet Soaps.
Perfumes, Cold Cream, Tooth-Powder, Shaving Soap.
If changes in contents desired, write.

The Soaps at retail would cost $10.00
Either Premium is worth . $10.00
Both if at retail . . . $20.00
From factory to family, Both $10.
AND ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL. IF SATISFIED, YOU REMIT $10.00; IF DISAPPOINTED, HOLD GOODS SUBJECT TO OUR ORDER.
The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Buffalo, N. Y.
Our offer explained more fully in The Congregationalist, Nov. 14, 21 and 28.

NOTE.—The Larkin Soap Company have used the columns of The Congregationalist for two or three years past in advertising their "Combination Box of Soap" sent in connection with an oil heater, desk or chair. The publisher of this paper has written personally to a number of subscribers who have responded to the advertisement and purchased the soap. Without exception they state that they are perfectly satisfied with the soaps and with the business methods of the Larkin Co. The letters speak in praise both of the soap and of the premiums that accompany it.—The Congregationalist.

NOTE.—We have examined the goods and premiums offered by the Larkin Co. They are all they say. A man or woman is hard to please who is not satisfied with such a return for their money.—The Watchman, Boston.

PRICE REDUCED FROM $25.00 to $10.00.
The Electropoise TRADE MARK
CURE WITHOUT MEDICINE.
THIS MOST WONDERFUL TREATMENT now within the reach of all.
The above price is ordered from July 1 to Oct. 1, 1896. $10.00 by Express, $10.25 by Registered Mail, with Book of Directions complete. Do not miss this opportunity.
L. A. BOSWORTH, 36 Bromfield St., Room 18, Boston, Mass., General Agent for New England States.

A GOOD WATER SUPPLY
For GENERAL FARM USE, COUNTRY RESIDENCES, IRRIGATION, Etc.
IS INSURED BY A PROPERLY ERECTED
ECLIPSE WINDMILL —OR— GASOLENE ENGINE.

Eclipse Wooden AND Fairbanks Steel Windmills & Towers.
TANKS.
Send for Catalogues.
FAIRBANKS-MORSE GASOLENE ENGINES.

2 TO 75 H. P.
For Pumping or Power. Send for Catalogues.
We have every facility for putting in complete WATER SUPPLY AND POWER OUTFITS, and will submit estimates upon application.
CHARLES J. JAGER COMPANY,
174 HIGH ST., BOSTON, MASS.

FREE LECTURE
DR. R. C. FLOWER
of Boston will deliver his new free lecture entitled
"Health, Happiness and Beauty of Women,"
—AT—
ASSOCIATION HALL,
Y. M. C. A. Building, Boston,
Wednesday Evening, Sept. 2,
AT 8 P. M.,
AND AT ODD FELLOWS' HALL,
LYNN,
Monday Evening, Sept. 7.
AT 8 P. M.

THE GENUINE DR BLAUD'S IRON PILLS
have been prescribed with great success for more than 50 years by the leading physicians of Europe, in the treatment of female patients. Specially recommended for Poorness of the Blood and Constitutional Weakness.
Imported by E. Fougera & Co., N. Y.
To avoid imitations BLAUD is stamped on each pill.

The "Harris" Method of Giving
This little tract has been of immense service to the churches in suggesting systematic methods of giving. It was first published as an article in the Congregationalist, and attracted wide notice. Many large editions of the "True Method of Giving" in its present form have been sold. Price, 100 copies, $2.50; 35 copies, $1.00.
For sale at the office of The Congregationalist, Boston

IT WILL SERVE THE INTERESTS OF ALL CONCERNED IF, IN CORRESPONDENCE SUGGESTED BY ANNOUNCEMENTS IN OUR ADVERTISING COLUMNS MENTION IS MADE OF THE FACT THAT THE ADVERTISEMENT WAS SEEN IN THE CONGREGATIONALIST.

A SERIES OF STRANGE EXPERIENCES.

War of Words and Bullets.

SAVED BY FATE.

"Do I believe in fate?" queried Professor McComber of New York of a party of gentlemen in the smoker of a Washington south bound sleeper, "Many an argument have I had with the late Hon. James G. Blaine on this subject. He believed in fate, in destiny. I did not; though I do to a great extent today.

"A few years ago I, in company with a noted physician of Boston, started from the Hub to Florida. It was the first day of the terrible blizzard which cost Roscoe Conklin and hundreds of others their lives. We were snowbound in Connecticut until Thursday afternoon, when we slowly made our way to New York. We were due to leave New York that Thursday night at nine o'clock on the Tampa sleeper. Our berths were reserved. It was 10 o'clock before we reached New York, and the Florida train had left on time. We left Jersey City on the very early train the next morning, which reached Washington at 10.45 A. M. and Savannah, Ga., the next morning at 7 A. M., which was the same time the train leaving New York at 9 o'clock the night before reached Savannah, and from Savannah the sleepers of the two trains were consolidated and went on southward as one train.

"On this occasion, as travel was very heavy, each train went southward from Savannah as a section. The train which left New York at 9 Thursday evening comprised the first section. We were the second section; every seat was full in each train, and many were unable to secure accommodations on either.

"The sleeper of the first section went through to Tampa, and it was necessary that the doctor go on it in order to reach his winter home at Palatka that evening, as section No. 2 stopped at Jacksonville. The doctor tried to exchange seats with a Mr. Redmond of Montreal who was in the first section. This Mr. Redmond refused to do, though he did not go farther than Jacksonville that day.

"Just this side the Blackshear River we were signaled by a man waving a red handkerchief. Our train came suddenly to a halt, and we were informed that the bridge had given way and the entire train of eleven cars had come down a precipice of seventy feet.

"Dr. Flower took care of most of the wounded and that evening he took a car load of the wounded and 13 of the dead to Jacksonville. Had he not been there very many of the wounded would soon have been among the dead. Now, the wonderful part of this story is this: The lady and gentleman to whom was sold (Thursday evening in New York) the section Dr. Flower had had reserved for himself were in the midst of the wreck. The man was killed outright and the lady fatally injured, only living a few weeks. The Canadian who refused to exchange seats to accommodate the Doctor had both legs broken, his shoulder and elbow badly mashed, besides being seriously injured internally. Twice was Dr. Flower saved from this terrible wreck.

"In 1884 Dr. Flower made a professional trip to Kansas. While in southern Kansas he took a day off for hunting. Wandering away from his companions while strolling along the border of the Indian Territory where game seemed most plentiful, he was surprised by four robbers who suddenly appeared from a thicket. He was ordered to throw up his hands. 'All right, boys,' he said, 'up goes my hands, but don't point your guns this way. The appearance of the muzzles gives me the neuralgia.' They seemed to enjoy his half impudent reply. After the leader had relieved him of his watch and money he shook hands with the Doctor and started to go, when Dr. Flower remarked, 'I don't mind your taking my money and watch, but I feel sorry for you because they can never do you any good.' 'Why so?' demanded the outlaw. 'Because you are now suffering with Bright's Disease of the Kidneys, and have also a heart trouble which of itself must soon kill you.' 'How do you know I have kidney and heart trouble?' asked the robber. 'I did not think any one in this wide world could tell a sick man his trouble without asking any questions except Dr. R. C. Flower of Boston.' It was now the Doctor's turn. Drawing himself up to his fullest hight, and fastening his eyes on the bandit, he said, 'I am Dr. Flower of Boston.' The robber said in a nervous tone, 'I have long wanted to see you. You can help me, can you not?' 'Yes, under certain conditions.' 'Name them,' said the robber. 'That you return to me what you have taken, and that you give me $1,000, and change your present way of living.' 'I can only give $700 today, but I will agree to the other terms.' 'All right,' said the Doctor. 'Now hands up and shell out,' and the robber good-naturedly handed over the $700 and what he had taken from the Doctor. 'Now,' said Dr. Flower, 'give me your name and address.' 'My name is Bob Cockerel but send everything for me to Wm. Newmier, Mound City, Kan., and I will receive it, and I trust to your honor to preserve my secret.'

"Today Bob Cockerel under another, and his real, name is a happy, prosperous farmer, at the head of a family in northern Missouri.

"I have seen scores of Dr. Flower's patients at different times, and they all tell of his examination of their cases in the same accurate and wonderful way. I am thoroughly convinced that there is a kind of fate or destiny about that man which enables him to perform almost supernatural wonders in his profession.

"He is the most pleasing man personally you ever met. Polite, kind and sympathetic to an extreme; children are especially fond of him and never want to leave him. He is the most eloquent and fascinating orator on the American platform. His language is the expression always of the most beautiful and poetical speech.

"Socially he is genial and generous; he is absolutely fearless. I don't think he knows what fear is. He believes that whatever is, is best; that he is in this world to do a work, and that he will stay here until it is done. He has great confidence in himself, and has good reasons to have. I don't think he ever knew defeat, and if he did I don't think he would recognize it, or would be long in turning it to a victory. He is most peaceably inclined, but when forced to a fight he is the most dangerous and determined foe man ever had.

"But the most wonderful feature of this wonderful man's life is his ability to diagnose accurately any disease in man, woman or child without asking a question or ever being told a thing. I am absolutely certain that there is not a sick man or woman on this earth, I don't care how subtle and complicated their disease, but that if Dr. Flower could take them by the hand he could tell them their exact condition better than they could tell him, and without asking a question or being told anything, and furthermore I believe he is the only living man who can do so, unless it is his eldest son, R. C. Flower, Jr., whom, I understand, has inherited the same gift. And when a man can tell a patient his disease accurately and in detail, without having had previous knowledge, he is not likely to make mistakes in treating his patient.

"Here is a tabulated and condensed statement," said Professor McComber, "from authentic reports of Dr. R. C. Flower's wonderful and almost miraculous work in curing the sick, and any sick person within reach of Dr. R. C. Flower should not fail to see him.

"Sumner Doan, 553 Asylum St., Hartford, Ct., cured of Bright's Disease (hardening and engorgement of the liver), when in the most advanced stages, and given up by his physicians to die.

"Mrs. J. R. Sprague, of Brewster, N. Y., cured of cancer of stomach and womb, when given up as incurable by nearly all the physicians of the country.

"Mrs. M. C. McOmber, Balston Spa, N. Y., of the most malignant internal growths when given up as incurable and abandoned to the knife by the leading physicians of the State.

"Mrs. Horn, wife of the Maine tanner, J. S, Horn, of Norway, Me., was cured of similar troubles after two operations had been performed and the growth had returned, and she had been given up as incurable by the most eminent physicians of the east.

"Dr. M. F. Brooks, of Portland, Me., one of the most brainy, cultured and prominent men of the east, was cured by Dr. R. C. Flower of a fungus growth in the stomach after it had ruined his health and almost ruined his life.

"Mrs. Josephine Boardman, Norwich, Vt., was cured of a desperate and developed case of blood poisoning and cancer after all hope had been abandoned.

"Miss E. A. Marshall, of Stowe, Vt., one of the most beautiful and accomplished young women of New England, cured of bronchial and lung consumption.

"Mrs. J. A. Clough, of Holyoke, Mass., cured of lameness of eight years' standing, after going on crutches for five years.

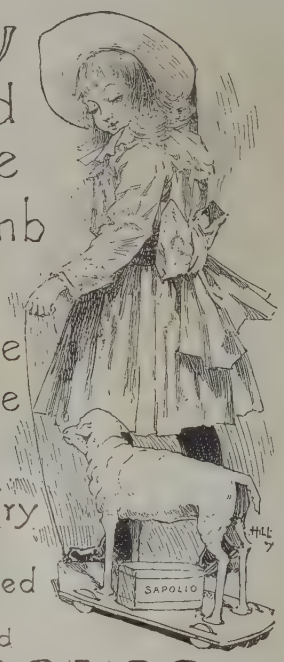
"Theodore Harrington, Southbridge, Mass., one of the largest manufacturers and most prominent men of New England, cured of fungus cancer of stomach and catarrh of the bowels, after he had been given up by numerous physicians as incurable, and had returned from Hot Springs, Ark., to his home to die, has gained since his cure 48 pounds in weight.

"A little book sent free to the sick on receipt of four cents in stamps, called 'Health and Happiness,' by Dr. Flower. Should be in the hands of every sick person on this earth.

"Address Dr. R. C. Flower at his home office, 729 Boylston St., Boston, for this book."

"Washington City!" cried the conductor; "change cars for the south and west." And this interesting group scattered on their different journeys.

Mary had a little lamb With fleece as white as snow And every time she washed it well she used SAPOLIO



IVORY SOAP

Copyright 1896, by The Procter & Gamble Co., Cin'ti.

A wise young woman understands
That Ivory Soap is best to use
For outing flannels, sunburned hands,
Light summer gowns and tennis shoes.

The Cyclist's Necessity.

POND'S EXTRACT

WILL CURE CUTS, BURNS, BRUISES, WOUNDS, SPRAINS, SUNBURN, CHAFINGS, INSECT BITES, ALL PAIN, AND INFLAMMATIONS. . . . . .

USED INTERNALLY AND EXTERNALLY.

GENUINE IN OUR BOTTLES ONLY, BUFF WRAPPERS, SEE OUR NAME, POND'S EXTRACT CO., NEW YORK, 76 FIFTH AVENUE.

USE POND'S EXTRACT OINTMENT FOR PILES.

Sent by mail on receipt of 50-cents.

THREE VERY GOOD BOOKS.

TWENTY-THIRD THOUSAND.

A SINGULAR LIFE.

By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS. 16mo, $1 25

"Miss Phelps's book is one which men and women will be better for reading. The very heart of life, pure and true, passionate and strong, pulses in it, and to that heart of life no one can approach save with reverent footsteps. Every line in the book is worth re-reading. . . . Miss Phelps is satisfied with nothing less than the best—in life, in love and in religion."—London Christian World.

"This very readable story is fresh, bright, graphic, deeply pathetic, eloquent, powerful."—New York Times.

"No American novel, since the days of 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' has approached 'A Singular Life.' Into this book has gone the perfection of Miss Phelps's powers in all their maturity."—LILIAN WHITING, in the Chicago Inter-Ocean.

THE LIFE OF NANCY.

By SARAH ORNE JEWETT. 16mo, $1 25.

"Among recent volumes of short stories 'The Life of Nancy' is one of the most delightful. . . . As we have often said before, in our judgment no other writer surpasses Miss Jewett in intelligence and sympathetic appreciation of New England character or in the ability to describe it effectively."—The Congregationalist, Boston.

"Miss Jewett's charm is perennial."—New York Times.

THE SUPPLY AT ST. AGATHA'S.

By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS. With illustrations. Square 12mo, gilt top, $1 00.

"The story stands forth strongly imagined and vigorously told. The style which has secured to Mrs. Phelps Ward the admiration of a great audience is here, and the fervid religious feeling peculiarly hers glorifies the pages."—The Independent, New York.

Sold by booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

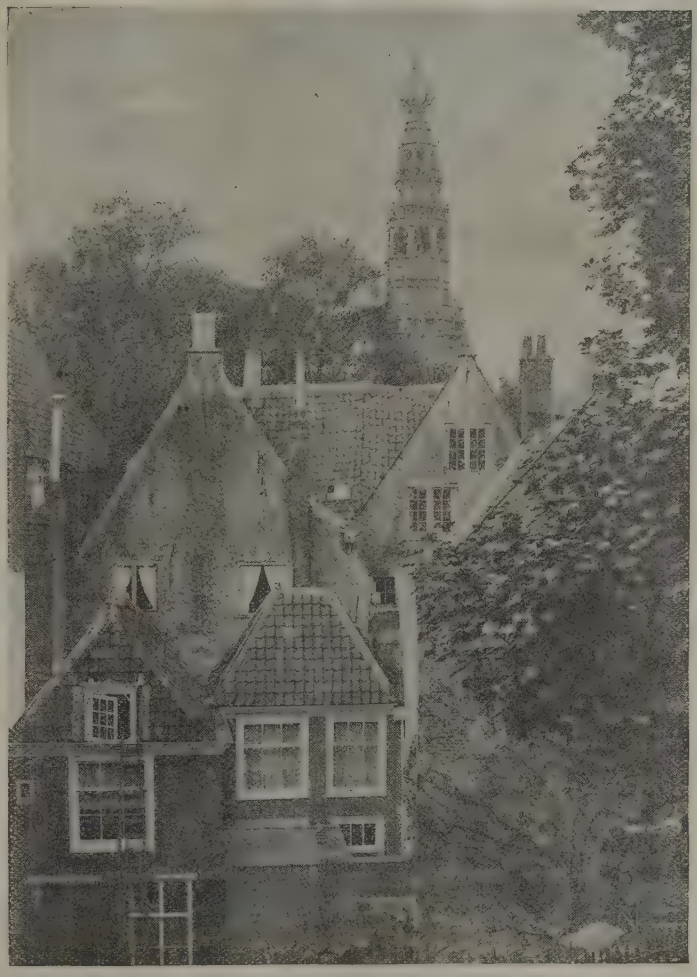
HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., BOSTON.

Volume LXXXI Number 36

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Boston Thursday 3 September 1896

LEIDEN



Visited by THE CONGREGATIONALIST'S Pilgrimage July 4-6, 1896

DO IT TO-DAY!

The phenomenal sale of The Encyclopædic Dictionary has puzzled the world and reduced some of our disappointed competitors to a state of jealous frenzy.

COST $750,000 TO MAKE IT.

The secret of this tremendous success may be told in two words—unapproachable superiority. Five times our introductory prices were advanced, and with each advance our sales doubled many times over. Why? Because each delighted buyer becomes a living advertisement, and by his willing and hearty commendation influences other orders; otherwise the $200,000 we have spent in advertising might have been wasted.

5 CENTS A DAY BUYS IT.

But this is an age of progress and, at any cost, The Encyclopædic Dictionary will be kept strictly up-to-date. We have therefore completed an entirely

NEW AND MAGNIFICENTLY ILLUSTRATED EDITION

Four massive volumes, each 9 in. wide, 11 1-2 in. long, 3 in. thick, containing 5,359 pages, 16,000 columns of clear type matter, 3,000 illustrations; 250,000 words defined, 50,000 encyclopædic topics. Weight of set, about 40 lbs.

JUST AS THEY LOOK.

of this unrivaled self-instructor, THOROUGHLY REVISED TO JUNE 1, 1896, and printed from new plates never before on press. This new edition is not only a peerless reference work—the only one in the world that is strictly up-to-date—but is also a genuine triumph of art. It contains all the newest words, phrases, and definitions in use today; also, more than 700 superb new illustrations, in seventeen colors and in monotone, comprising 54 elegant single and double pages of engravings—the most attractive and expensive art work ever made for any reference book; together with other special new features of the utmost importance and educational value. These extensive improvements have added thousands upon thousands of dollars to an original investment of three quarters of a million; hence it is not to be expected that we can furnish our beautiful new edition for less than regular prices—$42 to $70 a set.

UNTIL OCTOBER 1

Nevertheless, in accordance with our well-known and popular methods of introduction, we have determined to give early applicants one grand opportunity to secure this great practical self-educator at less than half price, and upon terms so easy as to place it, for the time being, within the reach of everybody. This is an opportunity not to be neglected by any ambitious mechanic, engineer, electrician, machinist, inventor, apprentice, student, farmer, merchant, professional man or housewife. Until October 1st only, this latest and greatest of all home libraries will be supplied to any reader of this paper on payment of $1.00 With Order $1.50 A Month For 1 Year.

TOTAL COST (Cloth Style) $19.00; REGULAR PRICE, $42.00.

POSITIVELY THE GREATEST BARGAIN EVER OFFERED!

IT IS THE LATEST Dictionary in existence, and contains thousands of words not found in any other reference book. Among these are such very recent coinages as "vitascope," "aseptolin," "Roentgen Rays," "skiagraph," "fluoroscope," and scores of other terms recently called into existence by the progress of modern science and now forming a necessary part of every scholar's vocabulary. It gives the history, derivation, spelling, pronunciation, and various meanings of each legitimate English word, past and present. Compared with this thoroughly-up-to-date publication, even the latest of other reference works is years behind the age.

IT IS THE BEST of all Encyclopædias, because the most practically useful, as well as the latest and highest in scholarship. Just think of it! The whole range of human knowledge condensed for your convenient use by such world-famed scientists as Huxley, Proctor, Morris, Estoclet, and a hundred other educators of hardly less renown. A time-saver for the busy mechanic, engineer, electrician, or inventor; a brain-developer for the plodding student; a technical education for the ambitious apprentice; an inexhaustible treasure-house of knowledge for each member of the family; a helpful companion for the most profound and finished scholar. Nothing can fill its place.

EXAMINE IT FOR YOURSELF BEFORE BUYING.

We earnestly desire comparison with any and all of the best reference books published. This great work easily takes the place of any half-dozen others that could be named. It is truly a family necessity. Investigate thoroughly before you purchase. Note that our terms give you ten days in which to make a thorough examination. Could anything be more fair?

HOW TO SECURE THIS GREAT BARGAIN. Send $1.00, and the entire four handsome volumes, bound in cloth, will be forwarded. Every month thereafter send $1.50 for twelve months, making a total payment of $19.00 (regular price of this style, $42.00). If Half-Russia style is desired, the monthly payments are $2.00 until $25.00 is paid (regular price of this style $52.50). If Full Sheep style is wanted, monthly payments are $2.50 until $31.00 is paid (regular price of this style $60.00). The first payment in any case is only One Dollar. Any one wishing to pay all cash may deduct 10 per cent. This allowance is practically cost of keeping account if purchased on monthly payment plan. We always recommend the Half-Russia binding as the most serviceable. (When ordering be sure to mention style binding wanted). Understand, the complete set of four volumes is sent after the first payment of $1.00, which gives you the use of them for a year while paying the remainder at the rate of only a few cents a day. All freight or express charges must be paid by purchaser. That you will be entirely satisfied is shown by our willingness to send you a valuable set of books upon payment of only $1.00. We refer to any Bank, any Newspaper, or any Commercial Agency in Philadelphia.

Books guaranteed as represented or money refunded if returned within 10 days.

80 Specimen Pages, Beautifully Illustrated, FREE for 10c. to pay postage.

REMEMBER! This great special offer is made to readers of this issue only. An investment aggregating nearly a million dollars demands an adequate return; and we cannot afford, even for advertising purposes, to furnish many sets of our expensive new edition for less than regular prices—$42 to $70 You may not see this announcement again; therefore act now and make sure of this opportunity of a lifetime. When ordering, please mention this paper.

SYNDICATE PUBLISHING CO., 234-236 S. Eighth St., Philadelphia.

Investigate the Church Cushion question in your church. Send for our free book, "Testimonial Wonders," proving that our Patent Elastic Felt Cushions have given as many as 44 years continuous service, and are now "as good as new." This is the kind you want. A sample cushion and specimens of coverings sent free.

OSTERMOOR & CO.,
116 Elizabeth St., New York.

THE CINCINNATI BELL FOUNDRY CO.
CINCINNATI, OHIO.
SOLE MAKERS OF THE BLYMYER BELLS
FOR CHURCH, SCHOOL, FIRE ALARM &c.
Catalogue with 2500 testimonials. Prices and terms FREE.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS In the World.
PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).
Send for Price and Catalogue.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

BELLS
Steel Alloy Church & School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

CHURCH REMODELING.

THOMAS W. SILLOWAY, Church Architect,
10 Park Square, Boston.

Mr. Silloway's long practice in building or remodeling over 400 church edifices enables him to save and utilize all the valuable parts, and for a comparatively small outlay produce a building preferable to a new one of much greater cost. He proposes to continue the work of remodeling as a specialty, and tenders his services to committees who would practice economy, and where the means are limited.

Blake Bell Foundry

Established in 1820.
Successors to WM. BLAKE & CO.
Manufacture bells of every description, single or chimes, of Copper and Tin. Address
BLAKE BELL CO., Boston, Mass.

CHURCH CARPETS AT MANUFACTURERS' PRICES. JOHN H. PRAY, SONS & CO., CARPETS AND UPHOLSTERY, 658 WASHINGTON ST., OPP. BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON.

The HOME Department.

A History of the Movement.

By M. C. HAZARD, Ph. D. Price, 50 cts.

Its history, purpose and plan, organization, methods, requisites and difficulties. A full treatment of this most important agency of the Sunday School.

A Story.

THE BOYNTON NEIGHBORHOOD.

By FAY HUNTINGTON. Price, $1 00.

A charming book, describing in a most interesting manner the good work accomplished in a difficult locality through the instrumentality of this agency. The story will create enthusiasm and give information of a very practical kind.

Requisites.

A COMPLETE OUTFIT is published by us. Blanks, letters, records. Full list on application.

FREE We send three months' outfit free to any Congregational Sunday School which has no Home Department but which will agree to organize one at once.

Congregational S. S. & Publishing Society,

BOSTON AND CHICAGO.

Free Coinage and Prosperity.

The original champion of the Free and Unlimited Coinage of Silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation on earth.

The Rocky Mountain News,

T. M. PATTERSON, Editor, DENVER, COL.

Daily Circulation, 27,000.
Sunday Circulation, 35,000.
Weekly Circulation, 5,500.

The largest, handsomest and best edited daily paper in the West. Employs the best artists—its cartoons arouse the admiration of all its readers. Publishes all the important news from the gold and silver camps of the world.

IT'S AN EDUCATOR.

Clear and convincing on the silver question. By mail, 65 cents per month; three months, $1.90; one ear, $7.50.

A Profitable Medium for Advertisers.

GOSPEL HYMNS, 1 to 6.

Excel. Mus. Ed., $75 per 100; Words Ed., $10 upwards per 100. Christian Endeavor Hymns. $30 per 100.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.,
76 East 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

TIMELY Congregationalist Leaflets

1. Planning.
3. Young Men in Politics.
4. Somebody is Wasting.
5. Renewal of Good Citizenship.

3 cts. each; 100 copies, $2.00.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST, Boston, Mass.

KANSAS.

KANSAS, WICHITA.

Fairmount College,

WICHITA, KANSAS.

The second year of this College will open in all departments, Music, Fine Arts, Academy, College proper, September 9, 1896.

Three parallel courses of study, Classical, Scientific and Literary. New England standards in requirements, and modern methods by New England instructors.

For information and catalogues, address

N. J. MORRISON, President.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER.

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
- Paragraphs 321
- The Ethics of the Money Question 321
- Hawkbit and Pimpernel 322
- September Is Here 323
- The Need of Spiritual Enterprise 323
- Current History 323
- In Brief 325

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE:
- New York 329

CONTRIBUTIONS:
- Charity Chance. Chap. VII. Walter Raymond 326
- Pilgrimage Letters. No. XI. The Week in Holland. F. J. D. 328
- Unrest and Silver. Charles A. J. Marsh 330
- The Farmer's Burdens and Grievances. H. E. Butler 330
- Not a Question of Repudiation. T. W. D. L. 331
- Silverites Misrepresented. Warren L. Noyes 331

THE HOME:
- Waiting—a selected poem 332
- Paragraphs 332
- In Rip Van Winkledom. Louise Manning Hodgkins 332
- Afield with Young Naturalists. The Study of Beetles. Charles Upson Clark 333
- "The Pious Captain." S. B. 333
- Closet and Altar 334
- Mothers in Council 334
- John, the Disciple. Mr. Martin 335
- Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 336
- Corner Scrap-Book 336

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for Sept. 13 337
- Notes 344

Y. P. S. C. E.—Topic for Sept. 13-19 347
- Notes 338

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM 338

LITERATURE 339

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 341
- Weekly Register 345

MISCELLANEOUS:
- Notices 341
- Business Outlook 344
- Who Can Spare Some Hymn-Books? 344
- Marriages and Deaths 346
- Biographical 347

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER.

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849.

Published every Thursday,

At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.

PER COPY, 6 CENTS. PER YEAR IN ADVANCE, $3.00.

TWO YEARS IN ADVANCE, $5 00; FIVE YEARS, $10.00.

IF PAYMENT IS DELAYED, $3.50 PER YEAR.

ONE OLD AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION, $5.00.

CLUB OF FIVE, ONE AT LEAST BEING NEW, $10.00

On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 cents.

RECEIPTS for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.

DISCONTINUANCES.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

ADVERTISING RATES.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 11½ inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.

READING NOTICES, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston.

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd.

A TIMELY BOOK.

AN ESSAY ON THE PRESENT DISTRIBUTION OF WEALTH IN THE UNITED STATES.

By CHARLES B. SPAHR, Ph D., Associate Editor of The Outlook. 12mo, 184 pp. Appendices, Index. (Vol. XII. in Crowell's Library of Economics and Politics.) $1 50.

Dr. Spahr's book is concise and logical; it appeals to the reason and deserves to be read by all thoughtful men. It cannot fail to have a powerful influence on the thought of the time.

RECENT BOOKS ON PUBLIC TOPICS.

ELY (R. T.). Problems of Today. $1.50.
Taxation in American States and Cities $1.75.
HOWE (F. C.). Taxation and Taxes in the United States Under the Internal Revenue System. $1.75.
KINLEY (DAVID). Independent Treasury System of the United States. $1.50.
SALTER (WM. M.). Anarchy or Government? $0.75.
SCOTT (W. A.). Repudiation of State Debts in the United States. $1.50.
WEYL (W. E.) AND OTHERS. Equitable Taxation. $0 75.

The above are for sale by all booksellers, or will be sent, postpaid, upon receipt of price, by the publishers.

THOMAS Y. CROWELL & CO.,
New York and Boston.

Educational.

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY.
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established, 1855.
3 EAST 14TH STREET, N. Y.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.
4 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; and Los Angeles, Cal. 100-page Agency Manual free. EVERETT O. FISK & CO.

THEOLOGICAL.

MASSACHUSETTS, ANDOVER.

ANDOVER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
Term begins Sept. 16. Opening lectures at 4 P. M. For catalogue or further information apply to GEORGE HARRIS, Pres. of the Faculty.

CONNECTICUT, NEW HAVEN.

YALE DIVINITY SCHOOL.
Term opens Sept. 24. The School offers many University advantages. For catalogues or information, address Prof. GEO. B. STEVENS, New Haven, Ct.

OHIO, OBERLIN.

OBERLIN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
62d year opens Sept. 23d With special advantages in the College and the Conservatory of Music.
E. I. BOSWORTH, Sec.

CONNECTICUT, HARTFORD

HARTFORD THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, 63d Year Opens Oct. 7, 1896.
Unexcelled Advantages or College Graduates.
HARTFORD, CT.

NEW YORK, AUBURN.

Auburn Theological Seminary.

Established 1820.

Next term begins Wednesday, Sept. 16, 1896. Opening address by PROFESSOR WILLIS J. BEECHER, D. D.

For information, write to

HENRY M. BOOTH, President, Auburn, N. Y.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.

Union Theological Seminary

700 Park Avenue, New York.

The next Term will begin Wednesday, Sept. 23, 1896. Students entering will meet the Faculty in the President's room, at 9.30 A. M.

Rooms will be drawn at 2 P. M.

The opening address, by PRESIDENT HASTINGS, will be delivered in the Adams Chapel, Thursday, Sept. 24, at 4 P. M.

E. M. KINGSLEY, Sec'y.

Educational.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

NEW LONDON, N. H.

COLBY ACADEMY.

$200 to $250 a Year. Coeducational. 44th Year. Send for Catalogue. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, President.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, EXETER.

THE PHILLIPS EXETER ACADEMY.

The 114th year begins September 16, 1896. Eighty Scholarships awarded to students of high standing. For catalogue and illustrated supplement, address HARLAN P. AMEN, Principal, Exeter, N. H.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, MERIDEN.

KIMBALL UNION ACADEMY,

Meriden, N. H. New buildings. Enlarged facilities. Beautiful and healthful location. Four-years courses of study. The Departments of Oratory and Physical Culture just established. Young men and women fitted for our best colleges. Students of limited means received on the "$100 a year plan." 82d year begins Sept. 9, 1896. Send for Catalogue. W. H. CUMMINGS, A. M., Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS.

MASSACHUSETTS, DUXBURY.

POWDER POINT SCHOOL (FOR BOYS).

F. B. KNAPP, S.B., Duxbury, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, SOUTH BYFIELD.

DUMMER ACADEMY (Home School).

Founded 1763. Thorough training for College and Technical Schools. PERLEY L. HORNE, A. M.

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.

MISS KIMBALL'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,

Worcester, Mass. Thorough preparation for College. Intermediate, Academic and Special Courses. Send for Illustrated Circular.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.

Boston Normal School of Gymnastics.

Established in 1889, by the late Mrs. Mary Hemenway. Eighth year will begin September 29th. Address AMY MORRIS HOMANS, Director, 9 Appleton St., Boston.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL,

New Hall, Ashburton Place,

Opens Oct. 7. Boston, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, ANDOVER.

ABBOT ACADEMY

For Young Ladies. Begins its 68th year September 17th, offering enlarged opportunities. Three Seminary courses of studies and a College-fitting Course. Address Miss LAURA S. WATSON, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, BRADFORD.

CARLETON SCHOOL for Young Men and Boys. College preparatory and general course of study. Individual teaching. Gymnasium bowling alley, etc. Circulars. I. N. CARLETON, Ph.D.

MASSACHUSETTS, MONTVALE.

ASHLEY HALL HOME SCHOOL

For Young Ladies.

Ten miles from Boston. Music, Art and Languages. Thorough preparation for college. Miss WHITTEMORE, Principal, Montvale, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, ASHBURNHAM.

CUSHING ACADEMY,

Ashburnham, Mass. Co-educational. Six courses of study. New buildings. Large Gymnasium. Five Laboratories. $200 a year. Send for catalogue to H. S. COWELL, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.

College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Men and women. Rules of Assoc. Am. Med. Colleges 17th year opens Sept 16. Part tuition for clinical service. 20,000 med. calls in '95. Near Boston City Hospital. AUGUSTUS P. CLARK, A.M., M.D., Dean. (Send for Catalogue.) 517 Shawmut Ave., Boston, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, DANVERS.

MAPLEBANK HOME SCHOOL

For Boys. Best of care and instruction guaranteed. Small boys a specialty. Send for catalogue containing full information. Address HENRY N. DE NORMANDIE, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, SOUTH HADLEY.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE

Offers three Collegiate courses. Music and Art. Library, Laboratories, Cabinets and Observatory. The sixtieth year opens Sept. 17, 1896. Board and tuition $250. Mrs. E. S. MEAD, President.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.

SCHOOL OF DOMESTIC SCIENCE

and Christian Workers. Courses for Teachers, Matrons, Home-Makers, City Missionaries, Pastor's Assistants, Y. W. C. A. Secretaries, etc. Ninth year. Address for circulars Miss L. L. Sherman, Principal (formerly principal D. L. Moody's Training School), 52 Berkeley St., Boston, Mass. (B. Y. W. C. A.)

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.

HIGHLAND MILITARY ACADEMY,

Worcester ("The Academic City"), Mass. 41st year. Best preparation for College, Professional or Business life. Healthful location. Careful selection and supervision of students. Small Classes. JOSEPH ALDEN SHAW, A. M., Head Master.

MASSACHUSETTS, DANVERS.

WILLARD HALL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

Tenth Year begins Sept. 22.

College Preparatory and Elective Courses.

Principal, SARAH M. MERRILL.

Educational.

MASSACHUSETTS.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.

Chauncy-Hall and Berkeley

SCHOOLS

Boylston, cor. Berkeley Sts., Boston.

The consolidation of Chauncy-Hall, the oldest Boston Private School, with the Berkeley School is the union of two strong forces, forming an institution of the highest order, to be known hereafter by the older name.

Thorough preparation for Colleges and Professional Schools. Full Grammar and High School courses. In all classes Special Students are received.

Opens Sept. 21. Send for '96 Catalogues.

TAYLOR, DeMERITTE & HAGAR.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.

In the heart of Boston, accessible to musical events of every nature, with comprehensive courses in music, elocution and modern languages, under the best masters that money can bring together, with a large, commodious and suitable building—is it any wonder that the

New England Conservatory OF MUSIC

has become the most famous of its kind in America? Send for prospectus to Frank W. Hale, General Manager, Boston, Mass.

THE

RE-OPENS SEPT. 1st, 1896.

THE COURSE OF STUDY

is thorough, complete and practical. Pupils are fitted for the duties and work of every-day life.

THE FACULTY

embraces a list of more than twenty teachers and assistants, elected with special reference to proficiency in each department.

THE STUDENTS

are young people of both sexes, full of diligence and zeal.

THE DISCIPLINE

is of the highest order and includes valuable business lessons.

THE PATRONAGE

is the LARGEST of any similar institution in the world.

THE REPUTATION

of this school for originality and leadership and as being the Standard Institution of its kind is generally acknowledged.

SPECIAL COURSE.

Shorthand, Type Writing, Composition and Correspondence may be taken as a special course.

SITUATIONS

in business houses furnished pupils among the varied inducements to attend this school.

THE SCHOOL BUILDING,

608 Washington Street, Boston, is centrally located and purposely constructed. Office open daily, from 9 till 2 o'clock. Prospectus Post Free.

H. E. HIBBARD, Principal.

Educational.

MASSACHUSETTS.

MASSACHUSETTS, FRAMINGHAM.

STATE NORMAL SCHOOL,

Framingham, Mass. Entrance Examination TUESDAY, September 8, 1896. For Circulars address Miss ELLEN HYDE, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, BRADFORD.

BRADFORD ACADEMY.

Founded 1803. For the higher education of young women. Classical and scientific course of study, also Preparatory and optional. Year begins Sept. 16, 1896. Apply to IDA C. ALLEN, Principal, Bradford, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, NORTON.

WHEATON SEMINARY

For Young Ladies. Regular and elective courses, literary, scientific, classical. Pupils also fitted for advanced courses in leading colleges. Excellent advantages in art and music. Fine library, laboratory, observatory, gymnasium, bowling alley; outdoor sports, careful physical training. Perfect sanitary arrangements. Best home influences. Beautifully situated, 28 miles from Boston.

62d year. Fall term, Sept 10, 1896. For illustrated prospectus, address Miss A. E. STANTON, Principal, Norton, Mass.

RHODE ISLAND.

RHODE ISLAND, EAST GREENWICH.

EAST GREENWICH ACADEMY.

Founded 1802 Both sexes. On Narragansett Bay. Steam heat and electric light. Elegant new dining hall just completed. Endowed. Twelve courses. September 15. Write for illustrated catalogue. F. D. BLAKESLEE, D. D., Principal.

CONNECTICUT.

CONNECTICUT, NORWALK.

MISS BAIRD'S INSTITUTE FOR GIRLS,

Norwalk, Conn. 25th year. Primary, Academic, and College Preparatory courses. Music, Art, and the Languages. Careful attention to morals and manners. New buildings, steam heat, gymnasium.

CONNECTICUT, STAMFORD.

"What we do, we do well."

Betts Academy,

Stamford, Conn.

On September 21st the old bell will ring in our 68th year.

Home life and the individual are the keynotes at this school. Each boy is taught how to study—how to think and reason for himself, and is trained in observation and research.

Preparation for any Technical School or University, and a liberal, practical training to those not intending to enter college.

New building, modern conveniences. Large, beautiful grounds adapted for athletics and out-door sports of all seasons. Illustrated catalogue on application. Personal inspection preferred. (One hour from New York.) WM. J. BETTS, M.A. (Yale), Principal.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, PEEKSKILL.

THE PEEKSKILL MILITARY ACADEMY

Peekskill, N. Y. 63d year. Send for illustrated catalogue. COL. LOUIS H. ORLEMAN, Prin.

NEW YORK, POUGHKEEPSIE.

LYNDON HALL SCHOOL.

For Young Ladies. 48th year. College preparation. SAMUEL WELLS BUCK, A.M., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.

Miss S. D. Doremus

BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. RE-OPENS OCTOBER 1ST. 735 Madison Avenue, New York.

NEW YORK, CORNWALL-ON-HUDSON.

NEW YORK MILITARY ACADEMY,

Cornwall-on-Hudson, N. Y. For boarding cadets only. Completely equipped and beautifully located on Hudson River, near West Point. For catalogue, address S. C. JONES, C. E., Supt.

NEW YORK, KEUKA.

KEUKA COLLEGE,

Institute and School for Christian Workers. Institute prepares for college and business. College offers two courses, classical and Latin scientific. School for Christian Workers (interdenominational) aims to increase the efficiency of young people in our churches. $175 covers all expenses. Year begins Sept. 8. Apply to Rev. N. M. CALHOUN, President.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.

MRS. LESLIE MORGAN'S

Boarding and Day School for Girls, 15 West 86th Street, New York City. Thorough English from Kindergarten through College Preparatory. Miss Catherine Aiken's Method of Concentrated Attention in Mind Training a special feature; also conversational French and German. Home and Chaperonage for special students.

PENNSYLVANIA.

PENNSYLVANIA, PHILADELPHIA.

THE WALTON-WELLESLEY SCHOOL,

2101 and 2103 Spruce St., Philadelphia. For Girls Possesses finest private property in city. Boarding and day. 15th year Academic, College Preparatory and Musical Depts. For illus. cat. and refs., address Dr. and Mrs. JAMES R. DANFORTH.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Volume LXXXI Boston Thursday 3 September 1896 Number 36

HANDBOOK No. 11 (July, 1896).

Anglo-American Comity. By Rev. WASHINGTON GLADDEN, D D

HANDBOOK No. 10 (April, 1896).

Eighty Years of Congregationalism. WALKER.
Eighty Years of Christian History. HURST.
Eighty Years of Political History. HART.

✠ TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS. ✠

6 Months for $1.00
3 Months for 25 cts. 4 Weeks Free.

TIMELY FORTHCOMING ARTICLES.

In the course of the next few weeks we shall publish these among other interesting articles:

The Duty of the College Bred Man in the Present Crisis. By Pres. C. F. Thwing, LL. D.

The Surprises of a Mission Tour. By Abby B. Child.

The Catholic Summer School of America. By Rev. Thomas J. Conaty.

A Character Sketch of Ian Maclaren. By Albert Dawson.

Christ and Perplexities. By Rev. Wayland Hoyt, D. D.

Wanted—New Measures and New Men. By Rev. H. A. Stimson, D. D.

The Return to Common Sense. By Z S. Holbrook.

The Man From London. By W. J. Dawson.

THE marvels of photography bid fair to be among the crowning wonders of the century. We have all been startled with the actual and possible achievements of the X rays and now inventive spirits are experimenting with aërial photography by means of which they expect to obtain views of great cities and of large tracts of land as they appear from the upper air. Kite flying, from being a boyish diversion, has become a scientific pursuit. The passion to see the world as it actually it, to understand thoroughly the human frame, is spurring on the men of science in all departments to daring feats. Let us rejoice that we live in an age when as never before truth and reality are sought and prized, and let them find their fairest exhibition in the life that calls itself moral and Christian.

We referred last week to the part which summer visitors may have in leaving with the churches on the hilltops and by the shores substantial tokens of their Christian regard for these struggling representatives of a common faith. And we pointed out the special appropriateness of such action on the part of men returning to the homes of their boyhood. It is equally fitting to call attention to the obligation of the rural community to exhibit a degree of local pride in what still remains to them of intellectual and spiritual advantages. For this reason we are glad to see that so many country towns this summer have held reunions or observed anniversaries to which the sons of the town from far and near were invited, as well as the summer residents in the vicinity. Such celebrations as have taken place in Massachusetts towns like Ashfield, New Salem, Coleraine and Shelburne within a few weeks are of great value to all who participate in them. They strengthen the forces for good which still have their home even in communities whose population is dwindling, and they make clear the reciprocal obligations of city and country. We could wish that many a remote town would once in half a dozen years, at least, make it an object for its children and friends to come back to the old church, the academy and to the homes scattered here and there over the hillsides.

It is a pity to spoil a good story, all the more a story that so many friends of home missions all over the country have been thankful to read in their newspapers. But it is, unfortunately, not true that the society's good friend, "Franklin Woodruff of Berlin, Ct., left to the C. H. M. S. a legacy of $175,000." He did generously remember the cause in his will, but if, after the needful delay in settling his estate and the usual shrinkage of securities the society shall realize somewhere from $40,000 to $50,000, its expectations will be fully met. It is to be hoped that in this time of dearth givers are not planning to reduce their usual offerings because of the exaggerated report here corrected.

In reckoning up the special educational forces of the summer we ought not to pass by the large and wholesome influence of the Old South Lectures for young people, given in Boston at the Old South Meetinghouse every Wednesday afternoon. For fourteen seasons, through the generosity of Mrs. Hemenway, the boys and girls of the public schools have had opportunity to hear distinguished men speak on themes with which they are exceptionally familiar. It is gratifying, indeed, that six or seven hundred young people are willing each week to lay aside their outdoor sports and spend an hour in that historic structure, listening to instructive and inspiring words. School children are proverbially jealous of their summer vacations, but the eager interest on their healthy, happy faces proves that it is no hardship for them, even on a hot afternoon, to spend an hour under such auspices in the pursuit of wisdom. This course has been so successful an institution in Boston that all the lectures are now repeated in Brooklyn, during the succeeding winter, and only last week Dr. Hillis, Professor Swing's successor in Chicago, called upon Mr. E. D. Mead, who secures the lecturers and directs the progress of each course, with a view to having this year's course duplicated in Chicago later in the year.

The general theme of the course, which closes this week with John Fiske's lecture on Parkman, has been the American Historians, from the time of Bradford, Winthrop and Cotton Mather to Motley and Parkman, not passing by Bancroft, Prescott and Washington Irving. Each of these famous historians was assigned to a lecturer who has made special researches in regard to him and all the eight gentlemen selected stand high in the world of letters. Massachusetts is fortunate in having a governor whose scholarship justly entitles him to a place in the list, and his address on Prescott was a classic of its kind. The only clergyman who has lectured this year is an honored minister of our own denomination, Rev. W. E. Griffis, D. D. His theme, Motley and His History of the Dutch Republic, afforded Dr. Griffis an opportunity to set forth his well-understood views with reference to the influence of the Dutch in America, and this he did with his usual vigor and enthusiasm.

THE ETHICS OF THE MONEY QUESTION.

We print on another page a broadside of objections to The Congregationalist's position on the central issue of the political campaign, and take the occasion to make that position clear. We believe that honest differences of opinion are best met by careful definition and exact statement of fact, and do not believe that men who are opposed to us are consciously unpatriotic, although we are convinced that most of them argue from mistaken premises to dangerous conclusions. We repudiate sectional prejudice and are unmoved by the easy temptation of the partisan stump speaker who appeals to an unpatriotic and un-American hatred of class for class. There is no prejudice in the East against the farmer or the laborer or the Western man, all of whom are our brothers, but the hónor of the country and its prosperity for many years to come are both at stake in the present demand for the free and unlimited coinage of silver by the Government.

The question of the law of 1873, by which the standard of value was determined in favor of what was then the cheaper metal, seems to us a purely academic question. The wrongs involved, if any, are beyond undoing. If it was a mistake, which we do not believe, it was a mistake which the Chicago Democracy proposes to repeat, on a far larger scale. The difference in value then between the metals was very slight; now it is very marked. Then every creditor was "robbed" of a cent or two on the dollar, now every creditor would be robbed of nearly half his claim. The law does not care for trifles, and the adjustment to the lower level then was so easy that, by the express claim of the supporters of free silver now, it was long unnoticed by the people. Now it would mean to the working men of the country, who are the chief creditors always, a loss which would be instantly and severely felt. How many of the debts of 1873 are in existence now? Of Government obligations only the Pacific railroad bonds; of debts to working men we suppose not one; of mortgage loans, which usually run from one to five years, not one but by the forbearance of the creditor, which certainly amounts to a renewal of the loan. The law since then has been that the measure of the dollar is a measure of gold, and ignorance is no excuse. Is there nothing immoral or dishonest in the proposition to make a sudden change after twenty-three years for the express purpose of allowing debts which were contracted in one currency to be paid in another and a cheaper one? That would be none the less dishonest, in our opinion, because it was done on a large scale and by the national legislature.

It is said, however, that gold has appreciated since it became the sole standard of value, and has forced down the price of commodities as it rose. This is certainly a fact to be considered, if it is a fact. But is it true? Wheat was worth a dollar a bushel, and now brings something over forty cents. But how about corn, which has varied very little all these years? How about labor, which, in spite of immigration, has in most trades risen in value. Railroad charges for transportation of freight and passengers have gone steadily down in America, but the wages of the men employed by the railroads have for the most part remained stationary or increased. If it is the appreciation of gold which has depressed wheat in the United States, the employment of silver in India and the Argentine Republic should, by parity of reasoning, have elevated the price per bushel there. The fact is that the distressed farmers of America have mistaken a coincidence for a consequence. Their competition on the new and fertile lands of the West drove the English farmer out of wheat-raising, and now a competition by the cheaper lands or cheaper labor of South America and India is distressing them in turn. Will free silver in America drive a single Indian wheat farmer out of business? The argument is that free silver will raise prices, but if wheat is higher in America the European dealer will not come here for his supply.

The hope of the American farmer is in diversification of crops and a home market. He can no longer command the international market at high rates or grow rich on a single crop. Nor can the farmers hope to be exempt from the risks of all commercial undertakings. If they have chosen farms with poor judgment, or too far in advance of a market, or if the providential ordering of storm or drought is against them, they cannot expect the country at arge to be taxed to help them out. The percentage of failures in other mercantile ventures is very high, among farmers it is comparatively low, but in manufacturing or farming alike the law of self-reliance is the only law which makes for permanent prosperity and manliness. These are hard facts, but they are facts which must be faced.

Granting, for the sake of the argument, that gold is appreciating in value, in spite of the enormous unconsumed accumulations of the past and the rapid increase of discovery and output from the mines, the question recurs whether the substitution of the cheaper metal would bring relief. It is complained that gold is unstable, but the recent instability of silver is notorious. What we want is the nearest approach to stability which is within our reach in order to confidence, and, under present conditions, this can never be supplied by silver.

There is capital enough for every legitimate business enterprise, and by the processes of credit it can be multiplied indefinitely, but it cannot be set at its work so long as men fear that it will be suddenly cheapened in the using. Capital brings no return to the owner unless he somehow puts it at the service of the community, but the tempting lure the lenders follow is profit, and when the risks are great the profits must be also great. Remove the thought of risk and hoarded capital will be set free, mills will start up, railroads undertake extensions and improvements; hopeful enterprises commend themselves to investors. As it is, pending the decision of the value of the dollar, no one is spending, everybody is hoarding. We live from hand to mouth with the machinery of prosperity idle at our doors.

"But a silver dollar now is just as good as gold," men say. Yes, for the trade from hand to hand. No one wishes to drive silver wholly out, but its acceptability depends inexorably upon its limitation in volume and its service to the convenience of the public. It is worth its promise in domestic trade so long as a certain limit is not exceeded, but any overplus brings popular distrust. We seem to have reached the limit for prosperous times, and the stringency has already brought the beginnings of distrust. Does any one in ordinary transactions see a "greenback" or a government note nowadays? They are reserved and hoarded, precisely as the market woman saves her new quarters and pays out the scratched and worn ones first in change.

First stability, then confidence, then prosperity—these are the rounds of the ladder which we must climb. And deliberate unsettlement of long-established standards and definitions of value in the supposed interest of a class could hardly fail to result in national dishonesty and dishonor.

HAWKBIT AND PIMPERNEL.

It would be easy to guess from this mere corner of the roadside that the ocean was not far away, even if the song of the waves along the shore were missing, for are not the hawkbit and the pimpernel here to tell the tale? The hawkbit, it is true, is a wanderer. Another generation may cease to associate its golden disks with the grassy slopes of seaward-looking parks and pastures, but it is from these, its original and favorite New England resorts, that it has traveled westward, and its slow journeys have not yet removed it beyond the reach of the ocean winds. It is content to leave the sea, but it is not in haste.

As for the pimpernel, it is the sea's companion, nestling among the rocks or in the hollows of the sand along the shore, as if its weakness felt the need and security of the ocean's strength and the breath of the salt mist were essential to its perfect life. With its recumbent stem, its close-set ovate leaves, pale above and marked beneath like the blotched egg of some tiny sea loving bird, its star of golden anthers poised on violet bearded filaments and its fringed petals that open so reluctantly and fall to the ground after a single day of bloom, it seems the weakest and most helpless of all the immigrants which have come to us across the sea, and yet is not least beautiful.

If in its clinging to the shore it makes us think of ill-assorted friendships, it makes us wonder whether true friendship can ever be ill assorted or unequal after all. If the sea is necessary to the pimpernel, we remember that all around its shores, between the tropic heats and the Arctic cold, the pimpernel answers the mood of summer sun and storm, and feel as if the ocean nourished and caressed and cared for it and would miss its presence. Are there not many such unequal friendships among men? And are they not among the most wonderful and beautiful of all? Is there not strength that leans upon weakness, and weakness that gives the crown of joy to strength? How shall we measure the spiritual forces which go from heart to heart? According to our estimate that last grace of faith, which the strong man wins only from his friend, counts for little, while really it is the crowning grace of his whole life. How much the child's simplicity means to the world-hardened and doubt-burdened man! How often does he turn from his perplexities to some pure woman's intuition of the way of peace! Nothing is better in the world than friendship, and shall we always claim that he whom we hold fast and trust and delight in shall be exactly like ourselves?

We have wandered far from the faint reds and yellows of the road above the rocky shore, and the contrast of the broad levels of the ocean makes the thought of conscious relation between sea and flower seem almost laughable. It must, at least, needs be a woman's friendship, for the pimpernel is as graceful and self-willed, as yielding and persistent a coquette as ever would, or would not, smile. Did not even the botanists, whose lack of humor in nomenclature is notorious, call her Annagalis—"delightful"? It is almost nine on a sunny morning and not a petal has she opened to the day. It rained yesterday, and she will take nothing for granted but make absolutely sure before she ventures.

And what a woman is the sea with her moods and changes—who ever, in our modern world, called her anything but woman? Even the Greeks surrounded Neptune with a crowd of goddesses and nymphs, who graciously relieved him of most of his burden of authority, while they expressed to human thought the dimpling beauty and entrancing changefulness of the blue waves seen from the rocky shores. Only the stern Hebrew prophets felt the demoniac force of the sea which God alone could tame. Theirs were no smiling bays and lapping waters. They saw the terror of the storm, the fury of the waves that brake in pieces the ships of Tarshish, the wild destroyer who had overwhelmed the earth. To them the calm was but an interlude for which men gave thanks as for relief from pain. "The sea is his and he made it," filled up the measure of Jehovah's power.

To us, this morning, the level deep stretches to a dim horizon under the hazy summer sky. The waves sing in and out of the rock caves. The alluring, inviting, tremulous, restful siren, ready to listen to and reflect our lightest moods and sing them back to us in the low, chanting surf until her own hour of madness wakes at the storm wind's call, is at our side, with a charm that never diminishes because it is never for an hour the same.

The first intimation that we have had that the Christians of Germany had any sympathy with the persecuted Armenians came from the Catholic congress last week, which passed a resolution deploring the fact that no Christian Power had effectively espoused the cause of Armenia.

SEPTEMBER IS HERE.

September brings the summer wanderers home. It carries with it the suggestion of educational beginnings. It re-enforces the thin ranks of attendants upon the worship of city churches and gives promise of a full gathering of the church family in the prayer meetings. Those who have borne the burden and heat of the summer in the responsibilities of church work during the absence of their fellow-Christians, require no sympathy. Their responsibility has been a privilege, and their faithful service has brought its own reward. They are entitled, however, to something better than sympathy—to the prompt co-operation of a fresh enthusiasm.

Nothing is more discouraging than to see that those who went away for rest have come back with jaded nerves and chilled enthusiasms, grudging the contribution of energy which they owe to the church and ready to evade responsibility. And nothing is more helpful than the ready hand and voice, the evidence that change of scene has not lessened home love or the home feeling in the church to whose activities the returning traveler is bound. The success of the winter will largely depend upon the beginnings which are made before September passes. Why not look ahead and plan large and wise activities for Christ and the church before we have lost the first enthusiasm born of the vacation rest and change?

THE NEED OF SPIRITUAL ENTERPRISE.

Are we as individuals doing for Christ all which reasonably can be asked of us? Are the churches in which we are interested accomplishing as much as they ought? Some of us certainly would find it hard, if not impossible, to crowd more work into our time and here and there a church seems to be covering thoroughly the field in which it is situated. But in many instances more might and ought to be attempted at the least.

The study of opportunities, therefore, is a duty, especially at this season when the new year of church work is opening. Organization doubles energy and increases enthusiasm. Churches which drift from month to month, well disposed but lacking systematic adaptation of ability to opportunity, grow slowly and accomplish little. This is preeminently an age of system in business and no department of life fails to feel the impulse. Christian work certainly should be done as carefully as any other. Organization cannot supply a lack of consecration, but consecration is much more efficient when it avails itself of organization.

Everybody can do something to help on the work of the church, and most of us can do some things for which we do not yet perceive our own fitness. Tastes, circumstances, natural advantages and evident opportunities suggest how we can work best, but even those who are not aware of any particular call of duty will soon become interested and useful when once fairly set at work. Where there is such a willing and zealous purpose the fruits of true spiritual enterprise soon appear.

Louisiana reports to the State Department that it cannot find, or has not found, the lynchers of the three Sicilians, and the State Department will again, as of yore, have to inform Italy that it is unable to promise the punishment of the guilty. Mortifying!

CURRENT HISTORY.

Guests from Abroad.

Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, the British colonial secretary, is on his way to this country, ostensibly to visit with his wife her relatives in New England. But it is thought that while here he will confer with Secretary Olney respecting some of the few points still at issue between the United States and Great Britain growing out of the Venezuelan dispute, and that after he leaves the United States he will proceed to Canada, to confer with Premier Laurier concerning the future commercial policy of Canada and its attitude toward Great Britain and the United States.

One of the greatest of Frenchmen, recently premier of France, M. Ribot, is now in New York, summoned hither by his wife, also an American. While he will not receive any official receptions, it is to be hoped that he will be shown the courtesy and attention which is his due, for he is one of the ablest and most honorable of Frenchmen, and still wields a power that can foster or blight American interests, commercial and diplomatic.

Viceroy Li Hung Chang, with his suite of thirty minor officials, arrived in New York harbor on the steamship St. Paul last Friday morning, and his reception by officers of the navy and army and the representatives of President Cleveland was brilliant and impressive. No guest from abroad ever saw a more imposing and suggestive array of American men-of-war than that which Li Hung Chang gazed upon as the St. Paul steamed up New York Bay, and if China is really about to place orders abroad for vessels to add to her at present crippled navy Li Hung Chang at least has reason to know that the Cramps on the banks of the Delaware can construct vessels that are the peers of those built on the Clyde. President Cleveland being unwilling to return to Washington, he received Li Hung Chang in the palatial home of Hon. William C. Whitney in New York city, and while it was a dignified and formal affair it also was one of "democratic simplicity." With the President were four of the members of his cabinet, his private secretary, three American private citizens—old friends of Li Hung Chang's—and Mr. Whitney. Li Hung Chang handed to the President a letter from his august sovereign and expressed his own gratitude for the continued friendship of the United States for China. President Cleveland improved the opportunity to impress upon the nation's distinguished guest that a "strong, beneficent government has been established here by those who loved freedom"; and that we have "a patriotic and generous people, who love their government because it is theirs, controlled by them, administered for them, and protected and saved from harm by them." On Sunday Li Hung Chang visited the tomb of General Grant, his old friend, and later called upon Mrs. Grant.

Perhaps the most significant event of the American tour of Li Hung Chang thus far is the banquet given in his honor at the Hotel Waldorf on Saturday evening, when sixty American citizens, either past or present American missionaries and diplomats in China, made known to the distinguished statesman their appreciation of his work as a progressive citizen, and his unvarying friendliness for Americans and American interests in China. Our own denominational constituency was represented by President Angell of Michigan University, formerly United States minister to China. Several of the secretaries and missionaries of the Presbyterian and Methodist boards of foreign missions were present, and the address of welcome was given by Hon. George F. Seward, ex-minister to China. The viceroy in his reply made the significant admission that he considered the United States "the best type of the modern civilization of the Western world," and that forty years of constant contact with the scholars, statesmen, soldiers, sailors, theologians and merchants of Europe and America had convinced him that Western civilization "will prove in the world of evolution as the fittest to survive." He expressed the hope that upon his return to China he might be able to "cement and solidify the most cordial relations between the far East and the extreme West and lead China in the development of its large, natural resources, using "the most modern administrative skill for the general welfare and happiness of the two hemispheres of the globe."

Statesmen Speak.

So long as the citizens of this country can read or hear such letters and speeches as those written or spoken during the past week by such men as Hon. E. J. Phelps, Mr. McKinley, ex-President Harrison and Hon. T. B. Reed—to mention the most notable—they need not fear lest they be compelled to follow demagogues. Patriots and statesmen, right in feeling and purpose, ripe in wisdom and replete with knowledge, still survive to inspire and guide an intelligent and honest people. The letter of Mr. Phelps, formerly United States minister to Great Britain, announcing his abhorrence of the Chicago platform and his determination, though a veteran Democrat, to vote for Mr. McKinley, is dignified yet full of intense feeling, and its influence upon thoughtful Democrats will be marked. Mr. Reed's Old Orchard speech was dispassionate, packed full of homely illustrations, elevated in tone and the utterance of a statesman. Ex-President Harrison's speech in Carnegie Hall confirmed the public's former high estimate of his ability as a convincing, lucid speaker, while the arguments educed by him, based on profound study of the Constitution and his experience as a president, had and will have great weight because of his unblemished character as a man and official. In his opinion, the great issue of the campaign is not the question of a gold or silver standard, or of a high or low tariff. It is, to quote his own words, the duty of "protecting the power and duty of the national courts and national Executive," and his sober words respecting the gravity of this issue as raised by the Chicago platform, every word of which Mr. Bryan indorses, will serve as a keynote for many other speakers during the campaign.

Mr. McKinley's Letter of Acceptance.

This lengthy document is so simple in its style, so logical in its argument, so unmistakable in its convictions, and so fraternal in its spirit of yearning for the prosperity of all men and all sections that its author at a bound has risen to a higher place in the opinion of many who hitherto had distrusted him, while those who never have questioned his ability or candor can scarcely find words expressive of their pleasure. Those who feared an equivocal adhesion to the St. Louis platform, so far as it insists on the gold standard, are happily disappointed, for no more popular, orderly and cumulative argument against the free coinage of silver theory of Mr. Bryan has yet been formulated than Mr. McKinley has put into this letter. Naturally, he indorses the demand for protection of industries as well as for adequate Federal revenue, and those who expected him to refrain from dwelling on his own and his party's belief expose themselves to the rebuke of ex-President Harrison, who, in his Carnegie Hall speech, reproved those who expect that "the Republican party will reorganize itself because the Democratic party has disorganized itself." Mr. McKinley's words of conciliation to the South, and his pledge that if elected he will do all in his power to abolish sectional misunderstandings and hatreds, are evidences of a noble spirit and will not fail to be appreciated as the days and years go by. His unqualified adherence to the non-partisan theory of civil service administration will attract to him those who have fought to purge nation and State from the "to the victor belong the spoils" conception.

The Political Campaign.

Ere this is read Vermont will have held its State election, and the gold standard Democrats will have met in Indianapolis, formulated a platform and named candidates. The size of the Republican majority in Vermont, as compared with those of other years, will be interpreted as indicating to a certain degree the strength or weakness of the Republican platform and candidates. The State conventions of gold standard Democrats, held last week in many of the States of the Union, were enthusiastic gatherings of men of principle, and the convention at Indianapolis promises to be one with a personnel of the highest quality, fit to plan wisely, not only for the present crisis, but for the future of the party and the nation. The campaign in Maine is waxing in intensity, owing to the proximity of the State election, which, even more than that held in Vermont, is supposed to be indicative of the drift of opinion. Mr. Bryan, in his trip homeward through New York and Ohio, has gathered about him very large crowds of men, presumably voters. Whether he has vote-winning power remains to be seen, but as a crowd-getter his success is undeniable. The fusion between Populists, silver Republicans and Bryan Democrats is being perfected in so many States that it seems probable that on election day there will be a united foe to the gold standard in many of the States South and West. But by the very terms of the fusions thus far perfected Mr. Sewall is to be slaughtered in the effort to elect Mr. Bryan, and Mr. Watson, who is still belligerent and insistent upon Mr. Bryan being made aware formally of his Populist nomination, bids fair to have more votes in the electoral college than Mr. Sewall. Commercial travelers, tourists and politicians just home from the Interior and West report a waning of the silver talk.

The United States and Turkey.

While there is no official declaration supporting the statement, it is believed that President Cleveland, as commander-in-chief of the army and navy, has ordered the dispatch boat Bancroft to Constantinople to protect American interests and add weight to the demands which Minister Terrell is making in obedience to the instructions of the State Department. Certainly the events of the past week in Constantinople and the outlook for the future would warrant such a course even were there no controversy between the United States and Turkey, and the only comment we have to make is one of surprise that such action was not taken long ago. If we have the right to enter the Dardanelles now with a vessel of the armament of the Bancroft we had the same right six months or a year ago, and there has not been an hour during the last year when the presence of an American armed vessel near Constantinople would not have lessened the official cares and added to the influence of our United States minister, and at the same time it would have cheered the hearts and braced the nerves of American citizens resident in the Turkish empire laboring valiantly for the good of their fellowmen. It will be interesting to see whether the Department of State will insist that the Bancroft be allowed to take its place with the vessels that are protecting the interests of Europeans resident in Constantinople, and, what is of more consequence, whether the ordering of the Bancroft to Turkish waters is the first step in a policy of state which has for its object compelling Turkey to settle, without further delay and characteristic duplicity, those claims for indemnity which were filed soon after the massacres at Harpoot and Marash, which claims the State Department has again and again called to the attention of the Turkish Government.

The Constantinople Riots.

The events of the past week in Constantinople demonstrate what the last massacres at Van prophesied, i. e., that the Armenian revolutionists are determined to force Europe to consider and settle the Armenian question, even if in so doing they cause the death of thousands of their countrymen. It is easy to see and assert the foolishness and almost criminality, if you please, of the course which the revolutionists are pursuing, but those who criticise are not those whose fathers and brothers have been slaughtered, whose mothers and wives have been outraged, and whose property has been stolen, and the supineness of Europe and the calculating, cruel selfishness of Russia have driven many men who might otherwise have been conservative into support of radical measures.

To enter the great Ottoman Bank of Constantinople, as a body of Armenian revolutionists did last week, capture its officials, barricade its doors, and for a time hold it against the assaults of the Turkish troops, perhaps availed little for the cause of Armenian autonomy, but it furnished a most natural excuse for organized bands of Turks to sally forth, who, unrestrained by police or Turkish troops, have for the last five or six days scoured the streets of Constantinople and its suburbs, hunting Armenians and other Christians, murdering them with fanatical ferocity and looting their houses. Estimates of the number of dead range from 3,000 to 10,000. Not a few foreign residents have sought refuge on the naval vessels, and guards have been placed over all property held by foreigners, such as the Bible House at Stamboul and the American College at Scutari. A joint note from representatives of the Powers in Constantinople has been sent to the sultan, warning him that his toleration of such a state of anarchy will surely hasten the downfall of his authority and bring about a conflict the end of which neither he nor they can predict.

It would seem as if the long expected disintegration of the empire might be at hand. If it be true, as reported from Vienna, that Russia and Austria have come to an understanding which will guarantee to the sultan the integrity of his empire and the perpetuity of his power, then little change can be expected. If this is one of the results of the czar's visit to Vienna last week and is the last stroke of the Russian diplomatist, Prince Lobanoff, so suddenly deceased, then the tour of the czar to European capitals has already borne fruit in a way to disappoint those who within the past month had begun to hope for a less selfish and more humane policy of state, for there seemed reason to believe a few weeks ago that, as the result of the audience granted to and facts stated by an American Protestant Episcopal bishop, the czar would change Russian policy to conform to the dictates of humanity.

Prince Lobanoff's death is an event of far-reaching significance, for it must be conceded that men of his astuteness and force are not to be found for the seeking, and his successor may not wield the same authority with the czar nor be so successful in dealing with and outwitting other diplomats as Lobanoff has been. It is generally conceded now that Great Britain, France and Russia have agreed upon a measure of reform for Crete which the Cretans are measurably satisfied with, and the sultan was about to accept, but whether he will do so now that new perils have arisen cannot be asserted.

The Future of Zanzibar.

The events of the past week in Zanzibar may or may not illustrate perfectly how easy it is, to quote the Montreal Witness, > to change a British suzerainty into a British protectorate, or that into direct British rule. The relationship may be at first that of a simple mortgage on a country, with power to collect certain revenues. Then it becomes necessary to advise and virtually direct the financial administration and the foreign policy. And last of all, should the native government lapse, it becomes necessary to take up all the responsibilities of government.

Germany already has taken action to prevent Zanzibar from becoming an out and out British crown colony, and if she insists upon this attitude there will be another bone of contention between Great Britain and Germany to be snarled over and fought for. British merchants will surely demand that nothing be done to lessen British trade, and the moral forces of Great Britain will indorse resolute action and extreme measures provided they mean the abolition of domestic slavery and the slave trade with the continent.

The events which have caused this question to emerge may be briefly summarized thus: Hamid Bin Thwain died suddenly Aug. 25. The British marines immediately landed to preserve order, and British influence instantly was thrown in favor of his cousin Hamoud. Said Khalid, a relative of the dead sultan, who with his followers had seized the palace, was given warning of his future fate if he persisted in defying the British authority. He rashly persisted, and the next morning British men-of war bombarded the palace for fifty minutes. British marines on shore assisted in the process of asserting British authority and power. The palace and custom house were destroyed, many of the followers of the usurping sultan were killed and the usurper driven out to seek refuge in the German consulate. Hamoud, who enjoys the good favor of the British, has been placed on the throne and future developments are awaited with anxiety by the inhabitants of the island and those whose commercial interests are at stake. All Americans escaped injury and, so far as known, loss of property.

NOTES.

The new armored United States cruiser, the Brooklyn, built by the Cramps, by steaming at an average speed of 21.92 knots over the trial course off Cape Ann last week, earned a bonus of $375,000 for her builders, and made a record unparalleled by the cruisers of our own or foreign navies.

Not until more information comes from Japan can the full significance of and reasons for Premier Ito's resignation be understood or stated. It is said to have carried with it the dissolution of the present cabinet, and to have been due to differences of opinion as to the appointment of a new minister of foreign affairs.

The unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of New Jersey, affirming the constitutionality of the law legislating out of office the lay judges of the Courts of Common Pleas of the State, establishes a much needed reform in the judiciary. Too often the lay judges have either been ignorant or venal, and the tools of political bosses.

General Weyler's latest decrees, laying still further restriction upon the commerce of Cuba, are likely to cause another clash between Spain and the United States. The revolt against Spain in the Phillipine Islands has gained such proportions that fighting has begun, a state of siege has been declared, a man-of-war has been dispatched and the Spanish officials are calling for re-enforcements.

Young men who have made their mark as municipal reformers are coming to the front as men fitted to enter on the same work in larger spheres of civic usefulness. Michigan's Republican candidate for governor is Mayor Pingree of Detroit, who has fought the corporations in the interests of the people; and the New York Republican State Convention last week nominated for governor the least objectionable of Mr. Platt's lieutenants, Hon. Frank S. Black of Troy, now in Congress, who first emerged as a public man in the fight against the Troy ring, of which Senator Murphy is head. He is a Maine farmer boy, was educated at Dartmouth, and is a man of superior ability and character.

A series of insults to women traveling alone in English compartment cars has aroused a widespread sentiment in favor of the "corridor," that is, the American, system of car building. "We have nursed the British bogy of privacy until we have fostered a race of railway sharks who find that our vaunted privacy is an excellent cloak for outrage," says the Independent and Nonconformist. Already corridor cars are in use on some lines and a more general adoption of them is sure to come. We are only sorry it needed a recurrence of these particularly ugly offenses to arouse John Bull. So much has been said about careful British management of railroads and steamboats that we may also note that on a Sunday recently three large excursion boats made a record of four groundings, three collisions and a big hole in the stern.

IN BRIEF.

"City quiet, Americans safe," is the reassuring news from Constantinople by cable to the American Board.

A helpful list of books on the currency question, representing all phases of the subject, appears in the Literature department this week.

Though the fiscal year of the American Board closed Aug. 31, the books of the treasurer will not be closed until Sept. 7. So there is a chance yet to help prevent a debt.

Dr. Dunning was heartily welcomed by his associates in The Congregationalist office on his arrival from Europe this week Tuesday in good condition after his absence of several months.

The death of Mrs. G. M. Cooke in Honolulu is announced. She was the teacher of the later generations of royalty in Hawaii, six of her pupils having become monarchs in the islands.

Mr. Depew does well to ask Mr. Bryan: "Who, if not 'the masses,' elected Lincoln, Grant, Garfield and Hayes? Who elected Harrison and Cleveland?" There will be 14,000,000 votes cast next November, and most of them will represent convictions, not cash.

"I know more about the clouds than I did two months ago," said a busy city pastor this week who has just returned from vacation. His sermons this autumn will have all the more carrying power because he has been sensible enough almost every day to stretch himself on the ground and gaze skyward.

From a private letter from a Minnesota pastor we take this sentence, which we presume applies to more than one Western community today: "The political pot is boiling furiously out here. We are all saying how calmly the campaign ought to be carried on and with what a dispassionate spirit, and at the same time are calling each other horrible names." Score one, however, for the intention to keep cool.

What does it mean when we are told that American citizens along the Northern border are withdrawing money from the savings banks on their own side of the line and redepositing it in Canada? Simply that there is distrust of the stability of the measure of value on one side and unquestioning faith on the other. In the one element of public confidence Canada is, for the moment, richer than "the States."

Li Hung Chang, in visiting the Bank of England, is said to have inquired about the probable course of silver prices, and when assured that the appreciation of silver was very doubtful to have replied, "That is a question for China, Japan and America to settle." This, it seems to us, is practically the international financial partnership which is prefigured by the Chicago platform.

It seems to be conceded by all that in the renewal of voting in the Methodist conferences on the admission of women to membership in the General Conference there will be no opposition worth considering. Of this the entire absence of discussion in the denominational newspapers is a sign—as it must be a relief to the editors. Evidently the opposition is tired out and means to take its defeat in graceful silence.

Dr. Pearsons, the benevolent Illinois gentleman who befriends so many Western colleges, advises the Republican managers to employ Salvation Army methods and go right down among miners and lumbermen. Persons from their own ranks who know how to talk, Dr. Pearsons thinks, can be tremendously effective. Politicians copying after enthusiastic soul-winners would, indeed, be another of the strange spectacles of this anomalous campaign.

Dr. Parkhurst's fame as a mountain climber influenced an Englishwoman who sat by his side at dinner in one of the Swiss hotels this summer to inquire: "Have you really been up the Matterhorn, and did you ride up on a mule?" "Yes," replied the doctor, with a countenance as imperturbable as if he were attending a Presbyterian General Assembly, "I rode up mule back and came down on a bicycle." For the rest of the meal the English lady kept bestowing side glances of wonderment upon the New York divine.

Clergymen who officiate as chaplains at political conventions this year must beware lest their phraseology is partisan or open to misinterpretation or perversion. Thus, last week, the reverend gentleman who prayed at the opening of the New Jersey Republican convention closed with the amiable hope that his hearers all "might gain that beautiful city, whose walls are made of jasper and whose streets are paved with gold." This statement did not cause that wrath which would have followed its declaration at a Populist convention, but it called out applause and demands for a speech.

We stated recently that young Dr. Shapleigh of Boston, who has just gone to China under the auspices of the American Board, was the only new missionary sent out in the last ten months. The statement needs to be qualified, since on May 27 Rev. F. C. Wellman, M. D., started under the auspices of the Board for the West Central Africa Mission, with his wife and child, and one young lady was also sent out still earlier in the year. It is still sadly true, however, that there has not been a year in the recent history of the Board when so few appointments were made.

The Sunday newspaper, which Horace Greeley denounced as a plague, appeared for the first time in Honolulu not long since, but it did not live long. Whether it died of inanition or assault, we do not know, but it is safe to assume that "sons of missionaries"—as the New York Evening Post would say—had something to do with it. Sir Charles Russell, Lord Chief Justice of England, was asked by a Montreal interviewer last week, "Have you seen our Sunday newspapers?" "Yes; I think they are monumental and awful. It is something we do not have in England. Whenever I see one I am reminded of the case of an old gentleman of Oxford, who read his paper with great care and thoroughness, but whose progress was so slow and whose paper was so large that he was always six months behind the current issue."

Bishop Potter of New York, as usual, is alert and awake to the peril of the hour. He has prepared a prayer for use by the clergy of the New York diocese, which says:

O Almighty Lord, who fashionest the hearts of men and considerest all their works, grant, we beseech thee, to us and to all the people of this land the spirit of obedience to thy commandments; that, walking only in thy fear, we may, under thy mighty protection, continue to dwell in righteousness and peace. Defend our liberties, preserve our unity, save us from dishonesty, lawlessness and violence, from discord and confusion, from pride and arrogancy and from every evil way. Continue thy goodness to us, that the heritage received from our fathers may be preserved in our time and transmitted unimpaired to the generations to come; that all the nations of the earth may know that thou, O Lord, art our Saviour and mighty Deliverer, and our King forever. Grant this, we beseech thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.
Amen!

Few preachers have had a more appreciative congregation the past two Sundays than Rev. John Wood, D. D., of Bishop's Stortford, Eng., at the Harvard Church, Brookline. Last Sunday he delivered two uplifting sermons, speaking in the morning on the text, "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord," on the joys of heaven—the heaven which we find in God himself and in our own souls—while his evening subject was The Inner Life of Devotion. In his morning discourse he made clear a truth, too often overlooked, that the gospel message is not only for our salvation but for our sanctification. "We are meant not merely to find hope in God, but to become like God." Dr. Wood speaks in a pleasant, conversational manner, without manuscript and with scarcely a trace of accent to suggest that he does not belong on this side of the water. This is the second summer that Dr. Wood has visited America, and he has made a large place for himself in the hearts of those who have heard him preach and who have come in contact with his strong and attractive personality.

Charity Chance.*

A Serial Story by Walter Raymond.

Summary of the Previous Six Chapters.—The scene of this story is Somerset, in the west of England. Miss Graham, a maiden lady of means and a cripple, has adopted Charity Chance, who calls her aunt. Miss Graham's nephew, Graham Poltimore, the son of her dead sister, seeks the hand of Charity Chance in marriage and is accepted, though the girl has some misgivings in relation to the depth of her affection for him. Miss Graham is delighted to have her heart's desire thus gratified, and Charity, who cherishes her fondly, finds a satisfaction in having acceded to her patron's wishes for her. Miss Graham visits her brother-in-law, Mr. Poltimore-Briggs, the sole surviving trustee of her property, to inform him that she has but a brief time to live and to arrange to settle some money upon Charity, but he advises postponement, and the interview is interrupted, to his evident relief. A somewhat lackadaisical poet, Alfred Prentice, a friend of Graham Poltimore, appears on the scene and mingles socially with the other characters.

VII. THE PLEACHED BOWER.

THE wicket gate at the end of the shrubbery path opened into a ride through a small larch plantation, whence a broken footpath meandered up the coombe side to the top of the wood. The way was steep and rugged. In places huge bowlders of smooth blue rock, hidden from below by overspreading branches, stood boldly out from the hill.

Upon the crest of one of these promontories a leaning ash formed a natural and unsuspected bower. But for years the place had been known to Charity.

In early childhood, no sooner was she free of the wood than this wild craig captivated her imagination. It was the background of all her dreams; the scene in which was re-enacted every story she knew. And Charity's childhood had been brought up on stories of the best, for the little cripple, to whom fable was more real than fact, fascinated by the open eyed wonder of the child, would go on and on for hours. Thus the place became by turns a bandit's castle, the Tarpeian rock, and the cave of Polypheme. And it was all her own, for either Graham had not heard the stories, or from a tree-top looked down with lordly contempt upon such make-believes.

This haunt had never lost its charm. The fading visions of childish fancy were replaced by a keen sense of the natural beauty of the nook. There Charity spent many a summer hour and no one ever came. The casual trespasser wandered heedless by. Unaware that he was watched, the village boy ran through the wood below and stopped to peer into the trees for nests. And this inviolable secrecy made of this bower a sanctuary to which the girl fled when pursued by the spirit of her own restlessness.

There also she often went to work. The evening readings with Miss Graham, although they sometimes lasted deep into the night, could not satisfy her passion for poetry and fiction. And there was no dearth of books besides, for strange volumes from the library of the late Dr. Graham, sleeping in one of the disused rooms of Babblemouth House, found their way into the hands of Charity Chance.

Moreover, she was writing a tale, and had been for a long time—a story of village life, which made little progress because she never could satisfy herself with what was done. In the room above the porch, at night when all was still, in an ecstasy of excitement and delight, she would write pages. It was beautiful. She could see it, feel it all, and read by the pale lamplight it filled her eyes with tears. She lay awake with gladness to dream it over again. But in the morning, in the calm solitude of her retreat, everything was changed. The freshness had faded; the sweetness was gone. It was no better than the flower plucked yesterday, and withered in an hour. Sometimes it seemed impossible that a thing wrought with such emotion could be so poor. Then in despair she cast it aside and did no more for weeks.

Yet the hope never forsook her heart. To the child of her imagination she must at last return. And meanwhile she watched eagerly to catch the soul of humble country life, and the quaint ways of it, which looked so much like humors and were not.

Amongst other things, she collected the sayings of John Sprake.

Already they covered reams, those similes bequeathed from an old world where no man might be merely bald, but "so bald as a bladder o' lard," and nothing crooked was allowed to be less crooked than "a dog's hind leg." The furniture of John's brain had been in his family for generations.

After the sail some days elapsed before she again met Mr. Prentice. He mooned away by himself along the cliffs, Graham told her with a laugh. She could understand that. He had need of solitude to mature his great thoughts. But even to have spoken to a poet reawakened all her longings and aspirations. Again the neglected manuscript saw the light, and she carried it that morning with her into the wood.

The summer weather remained unchanged, and through the still air came quite clearly the talk and laughter of hay makers in the meadows across the coombe. "Captain ah, whoa!" called the boy to his horses as they moved the load. In one of the great oaks above a wood-pigeon kept cooing all the time. There came a footstep in the wood. She raised her head to listen, but she did not look. What could it matter to her who passed that way? She was secure from interruption in her retreat, and with impatience she turned again to the closely written sheet.

THE RETIRING TRESPASSER DID NOT TURN ROUND.

Suddenly from below came the voice of Jan Sprake raised in high expostulation.

"There idden no vootpath thik way, zir. You can't go 'long there no ways 't all. I've agot my orders zo clear as the day to turn everybeddy back out o' theäs wood. Gentle or simple, back they've agot to go, sure as a gun. There idden no two ways 'bout it. 'Tis so much as my life's wo'th if Squire Poltimore-Briggs were to zee. He'd rear the place. 'T have agot to be kep' zo quiet as the grave—'bout the pheasants, you see, zir."

From the hight of argument Jan's voice gradually sank into the confidential whisper of regret. He was such a stickler for duty, however painful it might be. Charity crept forward and peered over the brink of the rock. Jan had taken off his hat, and was ostentatiously wiping his heated brow with a red handkerchief. Mr. Prentice stood looking at him with an evident lack of interest as to whether he went forward or back which nothing could disconcert.

* Copyrighted, 1896, by Walter Raymond.

"I only came here out of the sun," he said.

"You zee," Jan went on, instructively, "there's a hen-pheasant—or may be two—do nest hear so reg'lar as the year. An' if he don't vind 'em, why Squire Briggs he do fuss about like a vly in a glue-pot. An' he don't forget to talk loud nother. But there, to be sure, a gen'leman like you don' want to go a-tearen about the wood like a mad feller—no, no. You thought just to stalkety roun' like, under the shade o' the leaf like."

"It is of no consequence. I'll get back the way I came," interrupted the great man in his impressive bass, and turned upon his heel.

"There, you've agot no call to do that," said Jan, in a manner suddenly become coaxing. "There idden a soul 'pon earth to say a word to ee 'ithout 'tis I myzelf, an' I mus' run back zo shuttle as a rabbit an' exercise my 'ho'ses. Why you mid walk here till doomsday an' no man never the wiser. An' you had no need to zay I've a-zeed ee. I shan't come up to ee no more. Fags! I be pretty well a-swetered, sure 'nough. There, 'tis my duty to come up, fear 'tis some poachen feller, look y-zee. There, vor my part, I do often wish to God there were no pheasants, e'ens 's mid zay. For 'tis wo'th a shillen to come up here. Zo 'tis. Pon my life 't is."

In vain he dramatically mopped his head, for the retiring trespasser did not turn round.

"All a shillen," reflected Jan Sprake, with deep conviction.

But there was no response.

"An' more, too," he growled, with growing discontent.

"This gentleman is a friend of Mr. Poltimore, John."

Jan was startled. The voice, familiar but indignant, came out of the clouds. As he explained later on, when subsequent proceedings had rendered even this small incident of public interest, he was that "tookt aback" that he turned "so white as a hound's tooth." He looked all ways to once. "An' there, sure enough, were Miss Charity a-stood 'pon top o' the rock so bold as a statute."

But Jan thought nothing of this at the time. He only muttered an apology, that he "saw the gen'leman wur a gen'man so soon as ever he clapped eyes 'pon un, and if it hadn' a-bin for his duty he wouldn' a-wored out shoe leather to a comed up." Then he turned away and went thoughtfully home to the house.

Alfred Prentice caught a glimpse of a pale summer frock disappearing amongst the leaves. Then Charity came hurrying down the wood to him.

She felt ashamed, and in anxiety to prove him welcome spoke with warmth, almost with emotion. "Please do not go away, Mr. Prentice. I am quite sure Miss Graham would be vexed beyond measure. The foolish man has been here so long that he believes the place his and acts entirely without authority. And as to pheasants—there are no pheasants. There was one once, but, rest his soul! he's dead. You are more likely, it appears, to meet with a beast of prey."

"Or a dryad, perhaps," he suggested, solemnly. Then, noticing the roll of papers in her hand, he added: "But you were at work and I have interrupted you." He appeared pained. His brow contracted with sympathetic grief and his voice quite quavered with regret. It seemed to say: "Too well I know myself these terrible encroachments upon the solitude of the soul."

She hastened to reassure him. "O, I only amuse myself. I like to go up under the trees out of sight and sit alone. I have found a place where no one ever comes."

"Show me such a place," he said, quite softly, and sighed.

Was this affectation, or merely the manner natural to a spirit very delicately strung? As she led the way between the gnarled trunks, and under the twisted branches of the oaks, she kept asking herself this question, for what was affectation in another might be quite natural to a poet.

They reached the top of the rock. Half-hidden by brake and undergrowth lay a slanting slab of stone, and without ceremony he sat down upon it. He took off his hat and passed his hand over his long black hair, but for a while he did not speak. The house, the mill and the cottages below looked like toys, and from this hight the distant line of the blue sea came almost level with the brim of the cliffs.

"Those are the happy people," he said, pointing down at the haymakers. "They understand each other and are understood. Their life is full of light and laughter. They are never alone. They never seek a place where no one comes."

He spoke with deep melancholy, in pity mostly for himself, but partly for a people so supremely happy.

"I am glad to have met you again, Mr. Prentice," said the girl, warmly. "Something you said the other night impressed me deeply. I was afraid you might be going. Do you remember saying that in every house is some great tragedy. That may be, perhaps, and people keep their deeper troubles hidden. But it seems to me that into every life comes a great sorrow. Now these people that you speak of—I know them all, every one. They are too simple to hide a trouble. They seem to want to tell it to get relief. That tall woman, for instance, raking apart by herself, is a widow. Only last week she lost her son, killed in a colliery in Wales. And he was so good to her, too."

The girl spoke in deep earnest, and the last phrase as she uttered it was rich with sympathy and regret. He scarcely glanced at the lonely figure in the field, for already, whilst Charity was speaking, he had drifted into reverie. The cadence of that sentence recalled his attention. Not the real sorrow of the woman so much as the sound of Charity's voice touched his sensibilities. The emotion of the girl was more powerful to move him than the story itself, which indeed he could not have correctly told. "And he was so good to her, too." She was standing on the edge of the rock, and when he looked up there was at least a moisture in his eyes. Had she spoken ten words more he would have been in tears.

What a heart this man has, thought Charity. She felt humiliated to remember that at first she had accused him of affectation.

He began to talk quickly and with growing excitement.

"Yes," he sighed, "there is always a deep sorrow. But the griefs that are common to humanity are understood of all mankind. Death comes, and people flock with flowers to hide the barren blackness of the bier. Even strangers lay a cool, sweet leaf upon the wound, and soon there remains nothing but a scar, at last forgotten if it be not rudely touched. But who can minister to the unknown sorrows of the mind?"

He paused, and looked away across the sea.

"But surely"—she hesitated. His words moved her to compassion, they sounded so real, and she felt shy of seeming not to understand. "Surely it is better to outlive an illusion. That is—well—one step towards truth. And to bury a hope is not despair. Other hopes spring up."

She stopped abruptly. He had fixed his eyes upon her, and she was disconcerted. Her halting sentences could go no further.

"I am glad I wandered this way. From the first moment I saw you at Poltimore's I wanted to talk to you," he went on, speaking quite intimately, as if he had known her for years. "The other people had been bothering me—making me read and that sort of thing. But I knew that you were sympathetic. And they had been saying you were so fond of poetry. Ah—have you read me?"

Very little, she was forced to confess.

"Do you come here every day?"

"O, no, only occasionally."

"Tomorrow?"

"I never know beforehand. I must go. I see Miss Graham in the garden. She will want me."

"Come tomorrow," he whispered, "and if you will permit me I should like to bring you my poor book. What there is of me is in it."

She thanked him heartily in her frank, girlish way. "I am quite sure it is beautiful," she said, and having hastily shaken hands she hurried down the hill.

She came into the garden glowing with excitement and delight. Her imagination was on fire. She had talked of something deeper than the babble and trivialities of Babblemouth.

Miss Graham was sitting in the bath-chair on the lawn.

"Why, Charity, what a color you have, child! I feel the wind here. Push me down to the dropping ash. Where have you been?"

"In the wood; I met Mr. Prentice, and had quite a talk with him. Graham's friend, you know—the poet."

"Poet!" flashed out the shrewd little lady, with an impatient wave of the hand. "That's not a poet. I have seen him on the road several times, but to look at him once is quite enough. No, dear, I have met men of genius in years gone by. But there is nothing real about that person—except the affectation."

The girl's face was out of sight behind the creases of the leather hood, and her impulse to make quick reply passed unobserved of those keen gray eyes. She, too, had harbored a little prejudice, and she longed to contradict—to set this false impression right. But there were moments of rapid nervous perception, when Miss Graham could not brook even a difference of opinion. And she had spoken with such emphatic, clear decision. The moment passed, and Charity remained silent. And for the first time in her life she was not altogether frank with the woman whose tenderness had befriended her for more years than memory could look back.

(To be continued.)

Pilgrimage Letters. XI.

The Week in Holland.

A consciousness that the time had come for the beginning of separations from each other added to our feelings of tender regret upon leaving old England. Two of our number, Messrs. Dexter and Whittemore, were to accompany us no farther, and as we brake bread together for the last time in the quaint banqueting-room of the Maid's Head at Norwich an unwonted quiet fell upon our spirits. Dr. Richardson, General Wheeler and others, in behalf of the party, thanked these two gentlemen for their efficient services, and each in reply adverted to the singular unity and good fellowship which had marked the trip from the outset. It is doubtful if an equal number of persons, most of whom were almost or quite strangers to each other when they embarked, ever traveled together more harmoniously. The speakers also took occasion to express the unanimous sentiment of appreciation felt by the party to The Congregationalist's management, both for the first conception of The Pilgrimage idea and for the manner in which the elaborate plans had been successfully worked out.

Devout recognition was made of the still more remarkable circumstance that not a single plan had miscarried, from illness or any other cause, and that each individual whose name appeared on the original membership list, printed a week before leaving America, was enabled to place his or her autograph on the register of the Old Meeting House in Norwich on this last day. Mr. Whittemore, in a deeply reverent and rarely graceful speech, disclaimed the idea of any real breaking up of a party having a purpose like ours, for the sacred shrines we had visited together were a token of the eternal bond existing between Christian believers. Verily there

> Are things with which we never part;
> From clime to clime, o'er land and seas,
> We bear them with us in our heart.

An exceptionally smooth passage across the North Sea brought us, on the morning of July 3, to the mouth of the Maas, and as we sailed up the river all the picturesque features of the Dutch landscape were clearly outlined in the bright sunlight. What a fascinating picture it is, especially when seen for the first time! Windmills that have flapped their unwieldly arms for centuries lazily revolve against the horizon, clumsy barges creep at a snail's pace up and down the innumerable canals, peasants clatter along in wooden klompen, dogs drag the diminutive milk carts, women wear curious caps of snowy whiteness, pinned on with priceless heirlooms in the shape of gold spirals, all life moves leisurely and the hands on the dial of time seem to have been set back hundreds of years.

Our party was reenforced at Harwich by several English friends, among them Dr. Mackennal and his daughter of Bowdon, Rev. E. J. Dukes of Bridgewater and Mr. George Hardy of London. Dr. Mackennal, as chairman of the English cooperating committee, was largely influential in making our reception in England such a success. Mindful that our chief aim was to retrace the footsteps of our exiled fathers, we first took a carriage drive around the city, thence to Delfshaven, and saw in imagination that memorable farewell so pathetically described by Bradford. He says: "Truly doleful was the sight of that sad and mournful parting: to see what sighs and sobs and prayers did sound

JOHN ROBINSON HOUSE, LEIDEN.

ST. PETER'S CHURCH, LEIDEN.

amongst them, what tears did gush from every eye and pithy speeches pierced each heart; that sundry of the Dutch strangers that stood on the quay as spectators could not refrain from tears."

Fourth of July was spent at The Hague, where Li Hung Chang and his suite happened to arrive at the same time, and for their accommodation we had to yield the quarters engaged for us at the best hotel. However, we had a fine opportunity to see the Celestial group and solaced ourselves with a few patriotic after-dinner speeches, "making a great deal of noise," as Dr. Park wittily remarked, "in the land of William the Silent." On the Lord's Day we tarried in Leiden, where the exiles found an asylum for eleven years. The significance of Puritan history again took on a new meaning as we worshiped in the great church of St. Peter, close by the house bearing a tablet with the inscription: "On this spot lived, taught and died John Robinson." A hospital now occupies the site and in the afternoon we held a most impressive service in a bare little room in the lodge, climbing up the frightfully steep stairs which are a common feature in Dutch architecture. The place was hot and crowded to excess, so that we stood in a double row around the walls, there being no seats. But we came to worship and to thank God for his wonderful mercy, and the thought of all present naturally reverted to the time when Robinson here preached to his devoted followers. They must have looked upon the same huge church which towered over us, and we could easily imagine what sad forebodings filled their minds, for the loftiest faith never dreamed of the glorious development awaiting their cause. Dr. Mackennal made a thoughtful, earnest address, Dr. Robinson, the worthy descendant of his pious ancestor, led us in prayer, and the exercises closed by singing,

> My country, 'tis of thee.

The old university, which Niebuhr calls "the most memorable room of Europe in the history of learning," was another interesting shrine that claimed our attention, and it was pleasant to find one of our own countrywomen, Miss Putnam of New York, a student there. She is a daughter of the well known publisher and enjoys the distinction of being the first American woman to be matriculated at a Dutch university. While our guest at luncheon she entertained us with a vivacious account of her life among this conservative, sturdy and intelligent people.

In Amsterdam traces of the Separatist church are well-nigh obliterated, as its members abode there less than a twelvemonth. But through Dr. Brown's fascinating book, Pilgrim Fathers of New England, we were enabled to form a mental picture of Francis Johnson, the first pastor, "a single young man and very studious," who once "lived on ninepence a week and subsisted on boiled roots." Associated with him as teacher was Henry Ainsworth, of whom Bradford said there is "not his better for the Hebrew tongue in the university nor scarce in Europe." We also recalled a characteristic incident in the life of the late Dr. Dexter during his last visit to that city. Confident that in the old Stadhuis he could find the missing record of Governor Bradford's marriage he interviewed the custodian, who politely informed him that Prof. de Hoop Scheffer and other eminent antiquarians had made exhaustive search for the names of English exiles with only indifferent success. Moreover, with a shrug of the shoulders, the official averred that such searches were "very dusty and disagreeable!" But a ten shilling piece modified his views on that point and the precious record was found, also the only known signature of Ainsworth. The custodian was amazed and exclaimed, "How is it that you come hither 3,000 miles and in five minutes discover what our local students have all along searched for in vain?" Professor Scheffer was among the first to express appreciation of the find and subsequently sent Dr. Dexter 118 of these valuable marriage records between the dates of 1598 and 1617.

During our stay in Holland excursions were made to Katwyk, six miles from Leiden, where immense sand dunes pleasantly relieve the monotonous level of the country, and where clumsy, square-prowed Dutch boats are drawn up on the beach. Beneath the shadow of their gayly painted hulls, and all along the shore, one may see wonderfully interesting types of peasant life in costumes that for antiquity and picturesqueness far exceed those at the more aristocratic watering place of Scheveningen, near The Hague. The Isle of Marken in the Zuyder Zee and Alkmaar, the famous cheese market, which, on Fridays, presents a scene unparalleled elsewhere in Europe, were also visited by means of a specially chartered steamer. This method of travel through the canal is far and away more delightful than by rail and gives one a most satisfactory idea of the unique landscape of the Netherlands. Several hours were devoted to the superb art galleries in Amsterdam and The Hague, with their incomparable portraits by Rembrandt, tiny interiors, perfect in every detail, by Gerard Dou, rollicking street scenes by Jan Steen and inimitable faces by Frans Hals, of whom some one has said, "He could paint a laugh, a great, boisterous, ringing, roystering laugh as no painter has given before or since."

From this point onward our paths radiated all over Europe to Germany, Italy, France, Austria, Norway and Sweden, and only twelve of the original pilgrims returned together to the New World. A retrospect of our forty days' wanderings as an unbroken party, not through a wilderness but through a "land of pure delight," will form the basis of next week's letter.

F. J. D.

The Gordon Missionary Training School in connection with the Clarendon Street Church, Boston, opens the first Wednesday in October. This institution is designed for the education of Christian workers in the home or foreign field, who, owing to age or other reasons, cannot pursue academic, collegiate or seminary courses. The instruction is mainly Biblical and practical, the effort being to cultivate a profound spiritual life, to impart a comprehensive and ready knowledge of the Scriptures and to afford constant and effective practice in Christian work. The course of study covers two years. The tuition is free. Among the instructors are Rev. Messrs. F. L. Chapell, J. M. Gray and J. A. McElwain, Prof. R. L. Perkins, Dr. Julia M. Plummer, while for special lectures Rev. Messrs. A. S. Pierson and Robert Cameron have been secured.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM NEW YORK.

More Speeches.

The speaking still goes on. That on Thursday night in Carnegie Hall, by ex-President Harrison, was one of the best considered and effective of the campaign, so far, ranking for careful study, truthfulness, practical usefulness and calm, deep thought with those of speakers Reed and Cockran, and with the letters of Mr. McKinley and ex-Minister Phelps. The disappointed were many, the applicants for tickets being fully ten times the number of seats, but the enthusiasm of the fortunate hearers could not be restrained even by wise and witty chairman Depew. When Mr. Harrison ended calls of the audience compelled a few words, and they were telling words, from President Hill of Rochester University, Mr. Hanna, Mr. Wanamaker and Mr. Lauterbach. Then, at last, the happy, hopeful crowd went slowly out. One of the best features of this campaign of education is the amount of literature of permanent value on financial matters, which will be read by intelligent people of all parties, but which—more's the pity—will never reach the unreading, unthinking masses. Another joyful meeting was that of the New Jersey Republicans at Trenton on Thursday, when ex Governor Griggs made an address unanswerably defending the sound money position.

A Good and Useful Life Ended.

Rev. Dr. John M. Stevenson, whose forty-two years' connection with the American Tract Society made him widely known throughout the land, and whose genial, charitable, fraternal spirit won for him the friendly regard of ministers and laymen of every evangelic name, died at his New Jersey home Aug. 22, aged eighty-four years. Graduating at Jefferson College, his theological training was received partly in Lane Seminary, under Dr. Lyman Beecher. As pastor, teacher and secretary he earned a good report among good men, and will be long remembered for his sterling Christian virtues and winning personal qualities.

Another Honored.

Another veteran minister, still living and working, however, to complete his honorable record, is Rev. Job Bass, now eighty years of age, well known hereabouts as for thirty years the faithful chaplain of the King's County penitentiary, Brooklyn. After useful city missionary service, army and navy chaplaincy, etc., he began his work in the prison, which he has continued until now, ministering to both the spiritual and temporal welfare of the prisoners and their dependent families, with special care to procure honest work for the convicts on their release. The history of his experience with convicts of all nations and every grade of culture—many of the Federal prisoners being men of education and social refinement—would make a most interesting volume. The thirtieth anniversary of Mr. Bass's prison work was commemorated last week at the prison, when a purse of $1,000 was presented to the veteran by friends as a token of their appreciation and esteem.

A Summer Revival.

This too rare experience has rewarded the faithful labors of Pastor Arrighi and his helpers in the Italian Evangelical Mission, holding Sunday afternoon services in the Broome Street Tabernacle of the City Mission and Tract Society. The Italians can have the use of the tabernacle only in the afternoons at four o'clock. At that hour, in the unprecedented heat of this summer, the attendants must have found it easy to believe that they were still under the scorching sun of southern Italy. Yet the audience-room has been well filled and sometimes crowded with eager hearers, many of them anxiously inquiring after the way of life, and on the first Sunday in August seventeen well accredited converts were added to the church. A lady has offered to give $10,000 toward a greatly needed house of worship for these people, and friends of the enterprise are seeking for enough to begin building.

An East Side Vision.

Many thousand New Yorkers never saw a large portion of the city between the east side of the Bowery and the river. If they ever do they will know far more of the need and the danger of that section than they ever dreamed of. A walk through the district will fill one who ever went before with gratitude to Colonel Waring for putting and keeping the streets in a sanitary condition heretofore unknown. But neither he nor the police can hope to revolutionize the fixed habits of the residents—Russian, Polish, Hungarian, Austrian, with a smaller sprinkling of south of Europe Jews, who make the sidewalks, and often a good share of the street, their places of business, in which they prey upon each other to their heart's content. It is hard to press one's way through the dense mass of unsavory men, women, children, decaying fruit and foul matters sold as food and clothing. It will be a prized relief if at the further end of his trip he may duplicate this unexpected experience of a recent visitor. Upon a truck by the sidewalk sat alone a lovely girl of perhaps three and a half years, clad in pure clean robes of white, pink and blue. Her fair hair fell in ringlets around her neck, her eyes were intensely blue,

> Blue, blue, as if the heaven let fall
> A flower from its cerulean wall.

In a foreign tongue she was singing to her doll, blonde like herself, and no parlor in Fifth Avenue could show a fairer vision—still fairer for the contrast with the sordid beings in childhood's shape just left behind. No one could help speaking to the little beauty and the speaker's tones were of the gentlest, but scarcely was the first word uttered when, with a look of intensest fear, the little creature sprang from her seat, darted across the sidewalk and was halfway up the stairs of her home before the eye could fairly follow her. Evidently the child of loving parents, she had, no doubt, been permitted to hear from other children the street stories of the "patter-rollers," dreadful beings in man's shape whom they imagine to be ever prowling around to capture and make prisoners of little ones like this vision of childish beauty, the remembrance of which will remain when matters of more solid moment will have passed away.

HUNTINGTON.

The Turkish Government has notified its legation in Washington that "the access of the empire is expressly forbidden to the Jewish emigrants," which we suppose means that Russian Jews returning from America must not hope to find a refuge in Turkey. In spite of this prohibition the number of immigrant Jews in Jerusalem and Palestine continues to increase.

The Financial Issue in the Present Campaign.

Certain Complaints and Criticisms.

In order that both sides may have a hearing, we have brought together these letters from readers who disagree with our position on the financial question in the present campaign. Our own view of the matter we have stated at length on the editorial page. The only justification for devoting so much space in current issues to this subject lies in the fact that we consider the main question at issue not a political one but one touching the honor and morality of the nation, and one which has already largely changed party relations and thus ceased to be a partisan question.

UNREST AND SILVER.

In The Congregationalist of July 23 Rev. W. G. Puddefoot gives Some of the Causes of the Present Unrest. He says: "If some great mind could show how the millions of needy in the world could get, in an honest way, some of the great surplus it would hasten the millennium." That is just what some of the "millions," West, South and East, to whom he refers in the latter part of the article, are trying to do for this country and for the world. There is reason for sympathy, not only with the "poor farmer of our great prairies," but also with the mechanic out of employ, the laborer standing idle on the street corner "because no man hath hired him," and the business man whose brain reels as he sees the accumulation of years slipping away from him or swallowed up in the failure of what he supposed to be his best investment. It is this all round and long continued depression which proves that something is wrong. It also emphasizes the necessity of doing something to right the wrong in order to "hasten the millennium."

Mr. Puddefoot states very fairly "some causes" which have combined to produce this "unrest" and which demand adjustment, but has he stated the most potent cause? The bimetallist claims that the fall in the prices of productions and of properties, and as well that the failure of labor to find employment, is due almost entirely to the demonetization of silver in our own and other countries in 1873. It is claimed, moreover, that such decrease is the legitimate result of the contraction of the primary money of the world, and that it has been about the same in productions and properties as in silver, so that silver has been reduced to a commodity and is in circulation only as token money.

Of course it becomes one answering Mr. Puddefoot to be very modest in writing about silver, for in his wisdom he has said that East and West, "There is profound ignorance on the silver question on the part of millions of misguided men." Some of these ignorant, misguided men have read the statement made by Hon. James G. Blaine in 1878: "If, as the most reliable statistics affirm, there are nearly $7,000,000,000 of coin or bullion in the world, very equally divided between gold and silver, it is impossible to strike silver out of existence as money without results which will prove distressing to millions and utterly disastrous to thousands." This is a very accurate statement of what has actually taken place since silver was stricken out as primary money in 1873. Was Mr. Blaine an ignorant, misguided man? Prof. F. A. Walker of New Haven said only last April: "The demonetization of silver, in the first instance, was a disastrous measure, and every step since taken in that direction has brought fresh evils." Is Professor Walker an ignorant, misguided man? But these are the very results that silver men ascribe to the acts of 1873.

Again, Mr. Puddefoot says, "The cry for free silver is with millions an honest delusion." Will he please tell who in all the West or South cries for "free silver" in the sense he uses the words? His answer is, "There cannot be free silver any more than free gold," and he adds, "There is only one really free thing on earth, and that is air." Either Mr. Puddefoot must know that the cry for free silver is, not that it be made free, as the air is free, but that it have free access to the mints, free in this sense just as gold is free, and in no other sense; or the conclusion must be, as he states in another line, that "This state of confusion is not confined to the poor farmer or laborer, but ministers, above all others, seem to be as deluded as any." He does not specifically include ministers among the millions of the ignorant, but what is the fair inference when he says, "It seems to me little short of a crime for the Secretary of the Treasury to begin coining silver at the rate of $3,000,000 a month while there are hundreds of millions already in the mint that cannot be got into circulation"? Will he have the goodness to name the mints containing these millions and state how much is in each? Is it not true that for all silver held by the Government silver certificates or treasury notes have been issued, so that it is all practically in circulation, unless it be the seigniorage not yet coined? If there is a demand for this silver, wherein is the crime of coining it?

Mr. Puddefoot is surprised that "an otherwise wide-awake people could be made to believe that in a room in England two or three men could buy up the United States Senate." So are many others, and no less surprised that Henry Clews of New York in a financial review, dated May 24, 1896, and sent out from Wall Street the same evening to the press of the country, should state, and no denial of his claim has been seen nor heard of by the writer, that "Wall Street has learned to believe that there are greater potencies than party platforms"; that "there are situations and events which can easily coerce and convert the most reckless legislators into willing servants"; that "the near prospect of the authorization of free coinage would evoke in Wall Street conditions that no Congress has ever dared to disregard." Who is not surprised at such claims? Can it be that at the prospect of securing free coinage, that which the Republican party pledges itself to promote by international agreement, and that which all other parties are pledged to secure, Wall Street would evoke conditions that "no Congress has ever dared to disregard." Is this a government "of the people, by the people and for the people," or a government of the people, by Wall Street and for Wall Street?

Mr. Puddefoot also thinks men ought to "know that to go to the United States mint with less than ten dollars in silver and bring away over eighteen dollars in coin is to rob the Government of over eight dollars." Is not this a false assumption? How is the Government being robbed when it only weighs and stamps the silver brought and the owner carries away just what he brought and no more? Is not the assumption false in another respect? When silver was demonetized in 1873 it was at a premium compared with gold of over two per cent. From 1831 to 1873 it varied but little, and the variation in the relative amount produced caused no appreciable variation in the relative market value of the two metals. For seventy years prior to 1873, a period during which there was great variation in the relative production of the two metals, France was able to maintain the parity of gold and silver on a basis of 15½ (15.62) to one, without interfering "with the use of the coined gold and silver as primary money." Is, therefore, any one justified in assuming that if silver is again given free access to the mint it will not recover its commercial value of sixteen to one as compared with gold?

The readers of The Congregationalist, West South and, no doubt, East, are studying this silver question much more than Mr. Puddefoot seems to think. We have not all of us decided the whole question, but the time is not distant, when by our vote, we must express our best judgment and abide the result. Till then we are seeking more light. A decision in favor of a gold standard is not hastened by charging the "millions" who are agitating this question as being "deluded, ignorant, misguided, dishonest men, and willing, even, to rob the Government."

CHARLES A. J. MARSH.

Minneapolis, Minn.

THE FARMERS' BURDENS AND GRIEVANCES.

To read some of the current editorials and speeches and, alas, some of the sermons, one might suppose that a good share of the people South and West, with a fair sprinkling from the East, had actually gone crazy over the situation, and had become either "fools," "idiots" or "villains." Now do these eminently respectable men, who so thoroughly pity the ignorance of those who do not agree with them, and who scatter their epithets with great profusion, imagine that a hard-handed Western farmer, who has been thinking and reading carefully upon this subject during more than one long year, is going to be convinced merely by a choice collection of epithets and the fullest assumption of superior knowledge?

And then, what if the farmer of the West and the miner of the mountain actually has the hardihood to "deny the soft impeachment"? What if they proclaim their desire to listen to argument and declare that it is because they have read so much and thought so much that they believe so thoroughly? I shall, in an hour from my present writing, go to the post office. I shall pass little knots of men who are discussing the "money question" with quiet eagerness. If you stop and listen you will find that there is hardly a phase of the matter which has escaped their consideration. The history of United States coinage is familiar. The international phases do not escape them, the amount of precious metals in the world they can give you. The sooner the men who suppose that there is only one side of this question disabuse themselves of the opinion, the better it will be for the country. I can take the readers of The Congregationalist to farmers' clubs that have been reading and discussing these questions for a long time. I can introduce them to plain men who have anticipated all the arguments which I have yet seen or read upon the matter. These plain men can tell more, I honestly believe, about the history of coinage laws than many a banker who smiles upon their ignorance. They know more about the value of mortgages, the methods of international exchange, the relation of supply to demand, than some ministers who feel it their duty to protest against the "great crime" proposed.

These men have been compelled to study the matter from the side of personal burdens. I talked about "money" and "mortgages" and "currency" with a man yesterday who said that he had to count every cent for fear he should pretty soon not have enough to eat. Some of these men are living on farms which cannot be sold for their mortgage value. They bought the farm when wheat was worth a dollar a bushel. The farm has shrunk in value. The wheat has shrunk. Is there an essential wrong in asking why the mortgage has not shrunk? Is it "besotted ignorance" to ask why the money which was received is not good enough to pay? Is it an "idiot" at one end of the transaction who wants to know why it is not as fair to say money has increased in value as that wheat has decreased in value, when every book on political economy which was ever written is teaching the farmer that gold is a commodity possessed of exchangeable value just as much as a potato or a peck of beans?

No, friends, in your comfortable homes, you must answer the farmer's questions if you want to remove him from the charge of idiocy. You must tell him how it happens that thirty years ago seventy-five per cent. of the country's wealth was in the hands of the country and now that seventy five per cent. is in the city. You must tell the operative in the factory near me how it has come about that 8,000 families own ninety per cent. of the wealth of the land, an average of $7,500,000, and fifty-two per cent. of the people own only three per cent. of the wealth. You must give him good reason, too, if you think this is a desirable state of things. If you blame him for thinking an income tax is such an awful transgression of the moral law you will be very likely to find him asking you what honesty there is in the conduct of his neighbor, who has millions invested in untaxable bonds from which he derives an assured income, while his little house and garden is taxed till his assessment would almost make him a millionaire and his neighbor a poor man. Is it a good thing that the country population is rapidly passing into a tenant condition, till now in twenty-two States thirty-two per cent. of the farm families and sixty-two per cent. of the home families are tenants? Quite likely your farmer critic may ask you for a reason why the little State of Rhode Island grew in wealth during the last decade $41,000,000, more than the four States of Illinois, Indiana, South Carolina and Mississippi, or how it came about that the State of Massachusetts gained as much during that time, into three millions, as the five great Western States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa and Missouri, or why the State of New York gained $29,000,000 more than the nine States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, Kansas and Nebraska. And while you are considering these questions, perhaps he will suggest that you tell him how to pay a mortgage made when produce was forty per cent. higher than now, and the constant tendency to lower instead of higher prices, and whether it may not be possible that gold has "appreciated in value" as well as silver lowered, or whether it is so very certain that a man is an "idiot" for continuing to believe what the platform of all political parties of the nation have advocated until this year.

Please remember that the questions which these men are asking are among the very highest which a nation can consider, that they have learned how other republics in older days went to pieces before such questions, and that when the process of transferring property from the many had gone on a little farther than it has already gone in our own country the republic went down to its grave. Will not the good friends in comfortable circumstances, who rejoice in an assured income which now gives them a good many more pounds of butter and cheese and potatoes and bread than when the income began, think occasionally of those to whom all this sort of thing is reversed, the same laws and conditions which have made them easy having made the vast majority uneasy, the same process which by its working has brought comfort to a few having brought discouragement to the many? And, once more, when tempted to think all the discontented are knaves, will they not also remember that the farmers and miners of the West are in sight of schoolhouses, that there is no part of the land which is richer in the fruits of the schoolhouse, and these "anarchists" and "idiots" are many of them sons of the Pilgrims, and who, because they are of that sturdy stock, propose not to be frightened by a name or refrain from a conscientious vote because the name upon the vote is not approved by the more favored classes in the nation?

St. Johns, Mich. H. E. Butler.

NOT A QUESTION OF REPUDIATION.

I enter an earnest protest against the tone of the editorial in The Congregationalist, July 16, entitled The National Peril. The whole tenor of the article seems to me unfortunate, but the words to which I wish to call attention are these: "The issue now is whether our national obligations to foreign and native creditors are to be repudiated." My objection to that statement is that it is calculated to mislead. I do not think for a moment that that was the design of the writer, but believe that that will be the effect of his statement. It gives a wrong impression of what was done at Chicago.

What are the facts? The Democratic convention at Chicago declares for the free coinage of gold and silver at the ratio of sixteen to one, and demands that each be equally a legal tender for all debts, public and private. Now I submit that that does not contemplate repudiation, that it does not necessarily lead to it if adopted, and that it is at least an open question whether it would lead to the payment of our obligations in what might be justly termed a depreciated coin. What is repudiation? The refusal to meet one's obligations fairly and squarely. Take those obligations which call in the contract for coin (for those in which the contract specifies gold must be left out of the discussion), is it a violation of obligation to elect the coin in which we will pay them? You say that gold was the legal tender coin when these debts were contracted, hence we wrong our creditors if we do not pay in that metal. But previous to 1873 silver was also legal tender. Was there any implied promise to these creditors which would forbid our Government to return to silver whenever it should so elect? Was not this a risk which they themselves must take? If not, then the Government has debarred itself from ever returning to bimetallism so long as it remains a debtor without first obtaining the consent of every single creditor, and the proposal of the Republican platform to secure bimetallism simply by international consent is a dishonest proposal, looking in the direction of repudiation.

When silver was demonetized twenty-three years ago it was at a premium. Remove the legal disabilities by which it has been handicapped and in due time it will recover its former place. But not so, you cry, lest we inflict a wrong upon our creditors. But this crippling of the white metal has already inflicted a wrong of twenty-three years' duration upon our debtor class, which is not only much larger in numbers but also much weaker in resources, and therefore much less able to support the burden. Do their wrongs and woes excite no remorse? Shall we perpetuate a palpable wrong, pressing with remorseless force upon millions, for fear we may possibly do an injustice to somebody else? Why this over-solicitude for creditors and this under-solicitude for debtors? Are we not especially warned to deliver the poor and needy when he crieth?

Thousands upon thousands who are advocating free silver believe to the bottom of their hearts that they are laboring to undo a great wrong. They are as honest and intelligent people, both leaders and followers, as are to be found anywhere. I ought to know something about them, for I have lived among them all my life, in Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, and now in California. I was brought up a Republican, but for many years have voted in the main the Prohibition ticket. But I have come to have a very deep sympathy for my struggling fellow-countrymen, sinking deeper and more hopelessly into debt every year. It is not repudiation that prompts them to seek relief by the restoration of silver. It is that they may avail themselves of the assistance of that form of money of which they feel themselves wrongfully deprived and without the aid of which they know not where to look for relief. If you can convince these people that they are mistaken, and that the legitimate outcome of their efforts will be repudiation, they are ready to listen to reason; but why begin by charging with repudiation those who are struggling for life while smarting under a sense of a great injustice?

San Miguel, Cal. T. W. D. L.

SILVERITES MISREPRESENTED.

Mr. Puddefoot's article in The Congregationalist, July 23, misrepresented the advocates of the free coinage of silver, whether ignorantly or willfully it matters little. The man who charges the advocates of the free coinage of silver with a purpose to take to the mint less than ten dollars' worth of silver and carry away eighteen dollars in coin is simply slandering. Again, in the issue of July 30, under Current History, speaking of the national silver party, the writer says, "Being composed chiefly of Western men, formerly Republicans, who have left that party because of its refusal to substitute silver for gold as the standard of value," etc. Of course the writer knows that the Republican party has never been asked to "substitute silver for gold as a standard of value" and that no party in the country advocates any such thing. What these men demand is the remonetization of silver and a double standard of gold and silver. This was the money of our fathers, the money of the Constitution. Talk about free coinage of silver or bimetallism as a "departure"! Is The Congregationalist aware that in the history of our country such a thing was never before known as a political platform declaring for a single gold standard until the Republican party so declared in St. Louis in June last?

Again, under The Gold Reserve on the same page it is said: "Thanks to the resolution and wisdom of bank officials, . . . who have deposited about $15,000,000 in gold in the subtreasuries in exchange for legal tenders," etc. Indeed! And so another bond issue is averted? Yes, and wherefore? A political trick. Why did not the magnanimous "bank officials" make manifest their "resolution and wisdom" at an earlier day and avert the last issue of bonds? Why did they not avert the first issue? To some of Mr. Puddefoot's "deluded" brethren it occurs that Mr. McKinley had not then been nominated and put upon a platform declaring for gold. And so these "bank officials" let the country slide, gold reserve and all. But to allow another issue of bonds now, on the eve of election, would smash to flinders the platform under McKinley's feet. Hence the "resolution and wisdom" of these "bank officials" is that it will not do to milk the cow too often. They will milk only night and morning, and instead of milking at noon give her some meal—to increase the next milking! Will the "bank officials" stand by the gold reserve after election?

Castleton, Vt. Warren L. Noyes.

Peculiar advantages are offered to American girls and young women in the Parisian Home School, to be opened in Paris, Oct. 1, under the direction of Dr. W. L. Montague, formerly professor of French, Italian and Spanish in Amherst College. French will be the language of the family and the best opportunities will be afforded for the acquisition of modern languages, music and art, with preparation for American colleges if desired. The school will be in no sense denominational but religious instruction for the purpose of developing a reverent spirit and a practical Christian character will be a part of the c urse.

The Home

WAITING.

Serene I fold my hands and wait,
Nor care for wind, or tide, or sea;
I rave no more 'gainst time or fate,
For, lo! my own shall come to me.

I stay my haste, I make delays,
For what avails this eager pace?
I stand amid the eternal ways,
And what is mine shall know my face.

Asleep, awake, by night or day,
The friends I seek are seeking me;
No wind can drive my bark astray,
Nor change the tide of destiny.

What matter if I stand alone?
I wait with joy the coming years;
My heart shall reap where it has sown,
And garner up its fruit of tears.

The waters know their own, and draw
The brook that springs in yonder hight;
So flows the good with equal law
Unto the soul of pure delight.

The stars come nightly to the sky;
The tidal wave unto the sea;
Nor time, nor space, nor deep, nor high,
Can keep my own away from me.

—John Burroughs.

In these days of robbery and murder it is cheering to have our attention called to an instance in which man's better nature overcomes his worst in response to the direct appeal of helplessness. One evening a woman was walking from one of our suburbs to another, and on account of the gathering dusk very imprudently chose the railroad track as a shorter path. She had not gone far when she met a man whose appearance was, to say the least, most unprepossessing. After passing her he waited a few moments, then turned and followed her, easily regaining the distance between them. When the thoroughly alarmed woman could no longer doubt that he intended to overtake her, she summoned her self-control and, waiting till he reached her side, said, "I see we are going the same way, and as I am timid and it is growing dark perhaps you will let me walk with you." After an instant of surprised hesitation the man replied, "Why yes, ma'am, of course." So the two walked on together, the woman eagerly keeping up a conversation on any possible theme till the town was entered. Then she thanked her companion for his kindness, and said he need not trouble to go further as she was no longer afraid. He insisted, however, on seeing that she reached her very door in safety. While it is certain that this woman will never again choose a path that invites so many dangers, it is also true that she has a new confidence in human nature. We wish we might believe the response to appeal would always be as ready, but we do feel sure that in many cases a confident assumption of good intent will call such good into existence, or at least prevent the working of evil.

There seems to be a prevalent idea that the entrance of women into business and industrial pursuits is crowding out the men, and thereby creating social conditions which are fraught with peril. On the contrary, as pointed out by Hon. Carrol D. Wright in Our Day, the last decade shows a decrease of women and children engaged in manufacturing and mechanical industries and an increase of male laborers. The marked change for the better in respect to children is the outcome of wholesome agitation ending in wise legislation that restricts the employment of boys and girls under ten years of age. One has only to read the annals of factory life half a century ago to realize the improved public sentiment of today. No longer does Mrs. Browning need to utter the pathetic cry of the little children:

> For, all day, we drag our burdens t'ring
> Through the coal-dark underground,
> Or, all day, we drive the wheels of iron
> In the factories, round and round.

If you have been away this summer, whether for a week or for an entire season, how does the home appear to you on returning? Does the routine of daily duties seem less irksome, or do you resume them with increased discontent? Do the house and furniture look shabby in comparison with finer appointments elsewhere, or have even the homeliest articles gained a new value and beauty in your eyes? We can often test the benefit of a vacation by the emotions that are awakened when we slip back into the old niche. Blessed are those who return from their wanderings in the spirit of a friend who writes: "After my long absence home is very sweet. Its dear seclusion, the conscious remoteness from the world, its innumerable ties, whether of joy or sorrow, and the familiar voices audible or inaudible all make me deeply thankful to be here once more. With my own church near by and the close folding of the world unseen of which all this unspeakable summer beauty is the outward sign I do not see how anything more could be asked."

IN RIP VAN WINKLEDOM.

BY LOUISE MANNING HODGKINS.

On the opposite side of the clove from the famous Kaaterskill Falls in the Catskills lie, or rather are perched one above the other in rocky ledges, Sunset, Twilight and Santa Cruz Parks. Long the haunt of poets, artists, naturalists and sportsmen, it is only within a decade that by the building of good roads, the clearing of forests, the erection of comfortable cottages and luxurious hotels, that the pilgrim feet of the summer sojourner have found rest in this American Clovelly. Like that unique West England town, immortalized by Kingsley in Westward Ho and Dickens in Steepways, the parks, practically one, opening into each other merely by rustic gateways, are a mountain village built into every available cleft and cranny, 2,000 feet above sea level. As in its English prototype one may climb three flights of stairs to look out from one's back window on a level, or up to towering hights whence other eyes from nobler distances yet look down.

As yet every spot elected for a nesting place by its owner seems a special coign of vantage and the tenth commandment, as far as locality is concerned, is an unviolated law with the residents of the Catskill Mountain Parks. Most sites command a view of the well-known Kaaterskill clove, through whose lengthening loveliness one sees the valley of the Hudson, starred with twinkling villages, the river winding like a silver ribbon between, and beyond the blue Berkshire hills, nearly seventy miles away, limiting the farther horizon.

Several years ago the writer spent a charming summer vacation at Nordeney, a sea girt pleasuring island in the North Sea. A chief attraction to this point of high latitudes was that the art of living was raised to the nth power through the arrangement of a central clubhouse, surrounded by small lodging cottages. In the former meals were taken socially together; in the latter one lived at any degree of sociability desired. The hive life, the press of nothings, so inimical to rest and true recreation, are similarly avoided at the parks, where a variety of artistically furnished clubhouses, decorated in exquisite harmony of color, gather, for social interchange of thought, for the necessity of meals, for lectures, musicals or religious services, the residents of perhaps a dozen cottages, each clubhouse retaining only a score or more in its own dormitories.

It was the well-known Twilight Club of New York City that discovered the general resources of the head of the clove, opened its delights to the tourist and gave it its own beautiful name. Hither have come, for the most part, seekers after tranquillity, whose ideas of mortal pleasure are not bounded by morning games of whist or late evening hops. Among them, in the later seasons, have been Frank R. Stockton, the novelist, Olive Thorne Miller, the ornithologist, John Burroughs, the naturalist, himself a native of a neighboring Catskill village, Mary A. Lathbury, artist and poet, Emily Huntingdon Miller, Bishop Satterlee of the Episcopal Church and his artist-nephew, Walter Satterlee, Lyman Abbott, Bishops Foss and Andrews of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Mrs. J. F. Willing of evangelistic fame, Lady Henry Somerset and Frances E. Willard.

The cottage of the eminent temperance specialist, happily named Eagle's Nest, is a veritable eyrie commanding a view worthy that lofty and soaring spirit. It will be recalled that this summer home, with its furnishings, was the gift of American friends five years ago. I remember once in London, weary of city sights and sounds, I asked a busy London editor, "Where is the quietest spot in England?" "At Lyndehurst in New Forest," was the prompt reply. To Lyndehurst I wended my way. Straying into the little country church one afternoon, I viewed with spell-bound delight the chancel picture of the late Sir Frederick Leighton, "Five of them were wise and five were foolish," whose photographic reproduction is included in all fine art collections. A lighter surprise, but akin to it, awaited me in visiting Miss Willard's cottage in Twilight Park, in the exquisite mantelpiece painting of Miss Lathbury, with its praising ideal angel forms above the motto, "Fire and heat, bless ye the Lord!" Both parlor and study of Eagle's Nest form an autograph album of Miss Willard's friends, "writ large," in the furniture, pictures and bric-a-brac with which they have adorned its interior. One wonders how the owner can ever be charmed away from so captivating a summer home and so pacific an outlook.

The artist finds here subjects for a hundred studies to be worked up on winter canvas, the ornithologist studies his Burroughs books with peculiar delight in this region, recalling that it was here the famous master of bird-lore began his studies. Although August is called the dumb month of bird-folk, it is still the busy month, and juncos, blue-backed and the exquisite myrtle warblers, vireos, titmice and winter wrens make a flutter of wings in every clump of bushes or along any moist brookway.

Every variety of tree furnishes every variety of woodpecker. I noted yesterday an odd reproduction of Dignity and Impudence a bird Landseer would have delighted in. A large hairy woodpecker had found a particularly appetizing bug "spread" under a bit of bark; along came a tiny, ruby-throated humming-bird, and making a bold surmise that here was good picking and pecking, with his needle-pointed bill soon drove the rightful possessor of the feast off the premises. Having devoured that portion he found his Goliath a second and even a third time, thrice winning the field.

The botanist finds here the flowers she has missed for a decade of summers. I found a friend the other day making a study of seeds and fruits of the earlier spring and summer flowers. Even amid the golden-rod and purple asters, the bright scarlet berries of the painted trillium, the pendulous rubies of the twisted stalk, the corals of the hobble bush, the lapis lazuli of the blue cohosh or the darker-hued clintonia, the clustered pearls of the baneberry or the emeralds of the mountain laurel lose nothing in comparison for hight of tone or glory of coloring. Among these gorgeous tints rises here and there the rigid, spectral stem of the Indian pipe, a pipe symbolic of the peace of the dead, rather than of the joy of the living.

This is the time, too, to study seed life in its idea of perpetuation. Seeds with wings to fly, like those of the rock maple, with prongs to pierce, like the coreopsis, with burrs to stick, like the common burdock, with balloons to soar, as in the oakesia, with sails to spread, as in the linden, are borne on every breeze that blows.

They who hasten home from many a mountain fastness or light and lovely shore in the coming weeks will doubtless bring many a fagot bundle or driftwood pile for winter fires, but none, I dare prophesy, will come more heavily laden than the summer dwellers on the park side of the New York Catskills.

Santa Cruz Park, The Catskills.

AFIELD WITH YOUNG NATURALISTS.

THE STUDY OF BEETLES.

BY CHARLES UPSON CLARK.

Few persons have any idea of the number and variety of beetles to be found all about us. Every one knows the June bug, the potato bug and the rose bug, but the majority of people would be puzzled to add to this list. Yet in the United States there are over 10,000 kinds of beetles, and a careful observer in almost any part of the country ought to become familiar with a thousand of them without much trouble. And if their abundance is astonishing, their different forms, colors and habits are even more remarkable. They may easily be distinguished, as a rule, from other insects by their hard outer wing-cases, or elytra, in the coloring of which the greatest variety is shown. Though tropical beetles surpass ours in brilliancy, yet on our northern hills they may be found with every shade of green, blue and yellow, striped and spotted, lustrous and metallic. Some, like certain fungus-beetles, are hardly to be made out against the bark on which they walk about. Others, like some of the tiger-beetles and wood borers, are perfect gems, their elytra changing constantly from golden green to peacock blue.

Their habits are as diverse as their colors. One group, the burying-beetles, is responsible for the fact that dead birds and small animals are so rarely to be seen. Hardly has the breath left their bodies before these gayly spotted insects appear, excavate the ground beneath the carcasses and shove them into the grave thus prepared. In this way the flesh, which would have wasted away, is kept a long time for the beetles' grubs to feed upon. A common sight in many places is a ball of manure rolled along by a pair of "tumble-bugs," whose eggs are to be deposited in it. On our roads, especially in sandy places, several kinds of the fierce tiger-beetles may be seen, flying up quickly as one approaches and settling a rod or two ahead. Under stones and logs are to be found many sorts of ground-beetles, which hide there during the day and forage about at night. Flowers, particularly those of the thorn bush, elder, chestnut, spirea and golden-rod, attract great numbers of brilliant and interesting species. Recently felled trees, especially white pine, yield a rich harvest of wood-borers, many of which have very long feelers, or antennæ. Almost every kind of plant is attacked by leaf-beetles. The meadow grass itself, when swept with an insect net towards dusk, rewards the collector with many little beetles which he would otherwise have difficulty in finding. The water, too, is tenanted by them, and a weedy pool is an admirable collecting ground.

The simplest way of preserving beetles is to put them immediately into alcohol, which kills them and keeps them unimpaired for a long time. But this injures hairy and delicately colored species, and so many collectors use a cyanide jar. This is made by setting a few lumps of the deadly poison, cyanide of potassium, in a wide-mouthed bottle and covering them with sawdust, on which is placed a piece of paper the size of the inside of the bottle. Plaster of Paris is then poured over the whole. This soon hardens, and the jar is ready for use. Insects are almost immediately killed by the pungent vapor of the cyanide, and are then in excellent shape for mounting. Beetles over one-third or one-half an inch in length are best mounted by running an insect pin through their right elytron, about one-fourth of the way from the thorax. Smaller ones, which would be injured by having a pin thrust through them, should be mounted on the apex of narrow cardboard triangles, through the base of which the pin is placed. Shallow pasteboard shirt-boxes, when lined with sheet-cork, covered with thin white paper, make excellent insect-boxes. In them the mounted specimens, each furnished with a label giving the date and circumstances of its capture, are easily accessible for the study necessary to classify them. The commoner beetles may easily be identified from the descriptions in general works on insects. The naming of the smaller and rarer species is difficult for a beginner, and his best course is to send duplicates to the curator of some neighboring museum, who will generally name them for him for the privilege of keeping the specimens. An excellent way to increase one's collection is to trade off duplicates by exchange with collectors in other localities, though of course a small collection thoroughly representing one locality, with careful notes of the habits of each species, is of far greater value than a large collection made up of the commoner species of a great many localities, with no more indication of their life history upon them than a meager date and locality label.

The student who carefully observes a few kinds of uncommon beetles will soon come upon facts which are new and which others will be glad to learn. A few years ago a scale insect made its appearance in California and threatened to destroy the orange groves there. But some collector had noticed that in its home this insect was kept down by a kind of lady-bug. The beetle was introduced and the scale insect speedily disappeared. The scientific knowledge, the training in accuracy which a collector receives from careful study, is not his only reward. He becomes acquainted with the woods and fields; he gains some idea of the wonderful wealth of nature; and his powers of observation, thus cultivated, will be a source of pleasure and profit to him through life, causing him to pity those unfortunate mortals who see no beauty in what they are pleased to call "ugly, loathsome creatures," nothing of interest in that busy, restless insect life ever going on in the meadow and the forest, on the hill and in the plain.

"THE PIOUS CAPTAIN."

Captain H—— was master of a whale ship sailing from a Long Island port. He made no pretensions to piety, but during one voyage, for some reason which he could not explain, he became strongly impressed with a sense of his duty, took a decided stand for Christ, and became a Christian. The next Sunday he called his crew together and conducted divine worship. The men said, "What's the matter with the captain? Nobody's been aboard to make him a Christian."

Not long after, one Sunday, several whales appeared in sight. There were other whaling vessels near them, and every other ship sent out boats' crews to take the whales. But Captain H—— said, "This is Sunday. Not a boat leaves my vessel today." When he returned from that voyage he was met with a discharge by the owners. They wanted no such captain. When there were whales, whales must be taken, Sunday or not. After his return it transpired that in the town from which he had sailed, a number of the good Christian people in his absence had been thinking about Captain H——, and had made him the subject of special prayer. At that very time when they were praying he was converted, and the Sunday when he commenced having divine worship on shipboard was the next one after they had been offering special prayer for him. But now he was suffering for Christ's sake, and these Christian men, feeling that they had prayed him into trouble, thought that they ought to pray him out of it. They also believed that prayer and works should go together. A number of them formed a sort of syndicate. They bought as fine a whaling ship as could be found in the United States, placed Captain H—— in command of her, and he continued master of that ship as long as he wanted to go to sea, and was known as "the pious captain."

Although fidelity to principle is not often, perhaps, followed so promptly by recognition and reward as in this case, yet we may be sure that he who has the Christian manliness to act up to his convictions of duty, though it be apparently to his own loss, shall not lose his reward here or hereafter.

S. B

Closet and Altar

Thy large bestowing makes us ask for more.

It seems as if life might all be so simple and so beautiful, so good to live, so good to look at, if we could only think of it as one long journey, where every day's march had its own separate sort of beauty to travel through.—Phillips Brooks.

A man's world is what his heart makes it to be. When his heart changes the world changes. When faith has come in and renewed his heart he henceforth walks in a new world. A new aspect comes over the face of all things. Faith reveals to him new and important truths concerning everything so that he can no longer take a step in just the mood that he formerly did, nor look upon a single individual as he once did.—George Bowen.

Not in the silence only,
Nor in the solitude,
Let my thoughts rise to thee in praise,
My God, so great, so good.

But mid the din and noise
Of city conflict rude;
In crowded street, where daily pours
The hurrying multitude.

. . . . . .

Not on the Sabbath only,
In the dear house of prayer,
Where earthly din cannot intrude,
And only God is there,

But all week long, in spite
Of care and vanity;
That thus, even in the crowd, I may
Be still alone with thee.

—Bonar.

Christ's joy would be incomplete if we were not with him in the Father's house. It would diminish our gladness, our anticipation of supreme bliss if we did not know that our presence with him would heighten his own happiness. He is not so absorbed in the splendors of his eternal throne, nor in the great tasks which belong to him as Lord of the heaven and the earth, as to be indifferent to the affection that binds him to us and to God. If on the one side of his nature he is eternally one with God, on the other side of his nature he is eternally one with us; and fellowship with us in the perfection of our righteousness and blessedness is as necessary to the heavenly glory of Christ as his fellowship with the Father himself.—R. W. Dale.

Help me, Father of my spirit, to live as one of thy children. Let not the world have dominion over me, however intimate my contact with it may be. May I have the vision of heavenly things so constantly before my gaze that all unconsciously the spiritual shall take possession of my life, and the divine influence shall permeate all my doing. Creator of all, help me to interpret all that is, and, mindful of thy grace in Christ Jesus, may I live as in a world of spirit, becoming more and more a partaker of the divine nature. Let not the world dictate my life to me, but rather be thou the arbiter of my lot, O Father ever blessed. May the impulses of my soul rather than the imperious world incite to all my activity; and grant to me, in the name of thy Son, Jesus Christ, and for his sake, that peace of God which passeth all understanding, because my soul is learning to do thy will. Amen.

Mothers in Council.

"SHOULD CHILDREN BE TAUGHT THAT THEY ARE SINNERS?"

This question, asked in our issue of July 23, was answered in the affirmative by one mother, who narrated her method in detail, but here is another who takes a different view.

The method taken by the mother in the sketch given seems wise and logical upon the surface, but the question is open whether she began from the right side in teaching so young a child. The first impressions made upon the mind of children are most lifelike and lasting, therefore the truth we seek to impress upon them should reach into the widest scope, as well as contain the true essence and spirit of the divine Teacher. There may be exceptional cases, like the one given, but very few children of four years of age are sufficiently developed to go through the reasoning and experience described as working so effectually with little "Avie." The ordinary child, several years older, is not capable of grasping in its entirety any broad, abstract principle. It is only by repeated, concrete examples, by going "from the particular to the general, from the seen to the unseen," that the wise teacher or parent impresses abstract truths upon the mind. Even the simplest principles of elementary arithmetic are not clear to the juvenile mind, till first by the easiest and gradually by more difficult examples the mind is trained and strengthened to take hold of the principles, till finally, in a few years, the widest and most abstract theory of the higher mathematics can be mastered. Until the mind is developed to take in the wider principle, it will only receive it in a partial, and therefore distorted, form.

Thus to bring before the mind of an infant the doctrines upon which even our best theologians differ in presentation would naturally have the tendency to crush the truly childlike attitude we would have them hold towards a loving heavenly Father. To be taught to look upon themselves as poor lost sinners, upon God as an inexorable lawmaker and judge, before they had learned to reach out unto the great receiving Father heart would have a lasting and injurious influence. In striving to live a life of obedience to the example of Christ they will soon learn that they have a sinful nature.

In teaching our children we cannot find a better example than our Saviour. The central truth and aim of all his teaching was to show forth the Father and his love to man. He takes a little child as a type of fitness for the kingdom of heaven. Why? Surely because of the lowliness of mind, the trust, the clinging love the true child exercises towards those upon whom it is dependent. Then let our teaching appeal to these qualities, and from the ideal of the earthly parent may the child be taught of the greater love and power and wisdom of the heavenly parent. Then where does the Saviour come in? They should be taught that it is sin which separates from the Father. This they can understand from their own experience that nothing so soon banishes them from the loving embrace and communion of father or mother as a guilty conscience, as Adam and Eve of old hid from the presence of God, and then the Saviour comes in as he who brings together, who reconciles us to the Father. It is well to impress the truth most forcibly that it is sin that banishes us from the Father, not that separates him from us; that Christ is a Saviour we daily need to save us from the sin that separates from God, rather than to save us from its punishment. A life that draws its source from the great Life of love and service is mightier than one seeking to walk obedient to law.

A. L. C. M.

Every burden of responsibility holds within itself somewhere a sweet compensation.

CHILDREN'S PRAYERS.

Rev. E. H. Byington has written this supplement to the familiar evening prayer of childhood the world over, "Now I lay me down to sleep":

Now I wake from out my sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep;
Dear Jesus, help me all this day
To speak and do as thou dost say.
In thy dear name I thus do pray.
Amen.

There are those, however, who object to incorporating the idea of death into a little child's petitions. The view of such is reflected by a writer in a recent number of The Standard, who says:

Blessed is the child who, seeing mother's face in prayer, feels the presence of a friend unseen, and following his God-given instinct of imitation takes mother's posture and follows her spirit. Now needs the mother wisdom from above, lest, all unconsciously, she make of her child a mere formalist. If a mother has in any sense revealed God, why need a child learn new words by which to speak to him? Why, as soon as God is known as mother's dearest friend, her Father and baby's other papa, should baby learn of "a soul to keep" and his "dying before he wakes?" Why not rather of him who,

That our sleep may be more calm and bright
Kindly takes away the light;

and waken to sing or pray,

Father we thank thee for the night,
And for the pleasant morning light.
For rest and food and loving care,
And all that makes the world so fair.

Permit him to speak as naturally to God as to any other member of the home circle his "good morning," "good evening"; thank him only for things that the child has traced to God; in other words say nothing in prayer that is not natural for him to say. Let him "pray," not "say prayers."

Another principle in the religious education of little children is illustrated in what the same writer says of pictures:

Very early may a beautiful picture of Jesus become precious to a child, even as does the photograph of some absent relative. Much depends upon the mother's expression in face and voice as she brings her little one for the first time to meet the Saviour in a picture. Then follows an easy ascent by short steps, each step a sweet story of his life such as comes within the comprehension or experience of the child, higher and higher, "in the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, whom to know aright is life eternal." Well-chosen pictures illustrating these stories are of great value. Frame them inexpensively and hang where the child may live with them.

WHICH DO YOU USE?

We hope the questions asked below will elicit a general response. One who signs herself A Perplexed Mother writes: "Surely I am not the only one who would be helped by a full answer, with reasons, to this question, Which version of the Bible shall I have my children learn? And, having memorized much of the Authorized Version, is it worth while for me to commit to memory the new?"

BE CONSISTENT.

People are often very rash in their generalizations with children, not reflecting that as their utterances are made oracularly they will sink deep into young minds and be given wide application. A child is told, for instance, that because his mother is older and more experienced than he she knows that a certain kind of conduct is wrong. Perhaps the same day his father or his grandmother contradicts this, and affirms that it is harmless. They are equally old and experienced, more so. The doctors disagree, and the young pupil turns critic. His mother has based her affirmation upon untenable grounds, and it falls through. She essayed to seem infallible and is justly found out. Suppose, instead of asserting positively that which she had only reason for believing true, she had, recollecting that all knowledge is relative, expressed a qualified opinion, or given advice with the avowal that her affection and interest made her solicitous that the child should do thus and so. There are no weak points in this armor. A child never seeks to pick flaws in love. He will cling loyally to it, even if it cannot give a conclusive answer to all his questions.—Nursery Ethics.

JOHN, THE DISCIPLE.

A SERMON FOR THE CHILDREN.

BY MR. MARTIN.

It is vacation time, and some of you may be too far from church to allow you to hear a sermon there. The last "Home" sermon (June 25) was from the text, "His name is John." That was John, the Baptist. You remember that there was something remarkable about the name, as well as about the man. Our Eskimo boy, Pomiuk, has got a new name, the name of the angel Gabriel—but that Bible boy was named by Gabriel himself! Did you ever think why this name John is the commonest of all names throughout the wide world—not only in England and America, but in every nation and language where the story of Christ and his disciples has gone? In French it is Jean; in Spanish, Juan; in Italian, Giovanni; in German and Dutch, as also in Danish and Swedish, Hans, Jan, Johann; in Welsh, Evan; in Russian, Ivan; in the East, Yohanan, etc. Jane, Joan, Janette are corresponding feminine names; the surnames Jones, Johnson, Jenkins, Hanson, Evans have the same derivation. It is pleasant to think that all these names, and others like them, are traced back to two men of the gospels. One of them was John, the Baptist, the other John, the Disciple.

I think you can write a part of this sermon about this second John yourselves on Sunday afternoon, after looking through your New Testament and noting down what you find about him. You can give his father's name and what his business was; his mother's name and who her special friends were; the place of his early home and the names of some of the boys with whom he probably went to the synagogue school and who were afterwards his companions in seine-fishing; the four strange experiences he had on the sea in their company and the company of another Blessed Friend; what became of him after the resurrection of Jesus; what five books he wrote; on what island he was an exile and a prisoner. If you will do this, I will add five things about John which I like to think of.

1. He was a disciple. You know that means a scholar, or learner. He was a disciple first of the other John, John the Baptist, and carefully heard what that Voice crying in the wilderness said about Christ. Then he was a disciple of the "Teacher come from God." He learned of Him. He kept close to Him wherever He went and listened to all His sayings. He believed them, he remembered them, he obeyed them. He learned of Jesus to be good. We are apt to think that John was good and gentle, naturally. On the other hand, his nature was strong and fierce. Jesus called him and his brother, "The sons of thunder." He wanted a thunderbolt from heaven to destroy their Samaritan enemies. But he learned to be like his Teacher, "meek and lowly," and loving.

2. He was probably the youngest disciple. He was the first disciple of the Twelve. It is something to be remembered that after thousands of years of waiting for the Saviour of the world to come this young man John should be the very first one to seek Him and receive Him. Read his own account of it [John 1]. He and Andrew saw Jesus walking on the bank of the Jordan. They went towards Him. He turned towards them. He said, "Come and see." They went with Him. So simple a thing was it for John to begin to be a Christian! He never forgot that turning point in his life. Very many years after—perhaps fifty or sixty—he recorded that "it was about the tenth hour"; he remembered that the sun was about two hours high when he first saw the Sun of Righteousness!

3. He was "the disciple whom Jesus loved." John wrote that down five times (see if you can find the places). It is no wonder he remembered that—no greater honor or joy could come to any person than this, that Jesus Christ loved him! Why did He love him? John is represented in the old paintings as being very handsome—probably he was, for his pure soul must have looked out of his eyes. But it was surely his moral beauty that Jesus loved. He loved him because he was teachable, gentle, affectionate, obedient, faithful. I am sure Jesus would have noticed that John was always good to his mother, for we must not forget that John's mother was one of the faithful women who journeyed with the Master and cared for him in his travels, even to his death and burial. Was not this the reason why he committed to John the charge of His own mother? A boy—or man—who is kind to his mother has the respect of men and the favor of God.

4. John was a disciple who loved others and wanted to help them. He was a "witness" [John 21:24, Revised Version]. What he had seen and heard of Christ he wanted to declare to others, so that they might be full of joy. All his long life he preached the glad tidings about Jesus Christ, his friend and Saviour. He wrote his book about Jesus, so that people might believe on Him. He wrote letters to the fathers and the young men and to little children, so that they might be strong and overcome the wicked one. When he was an old man in prison Jesus showed him wonderful things and told him to write it in a book, and blessed would they be who read it! That was John—loving everybody and trying to do them good in Jesus' name.

5. John was a happy disciple. He did not try to be happy. He couldn't help being happy. His faith in Jesus, his friendship with Jesus, his service for Jesus made him happy. He lived to be a very old man—perhaps ninety or a hundred years old—he suffered many things, all the other disciples were gone, his brother had been killed by Herod, but he was happy still. He remembered Christ's promise to come and receive His disciples; he knew that he should soon go to be with Him; that made him happiest of all. His last word was: "Come, Lord Jesus"

This sermon is for boys and girls soon to change vacation for school. Have you imitated John and become a scholar of Jesus Christ in your youth? It will be as simple a step for you as for him. You can be the disciple whom Jesus loves. Do not for a moment think that you give up happiness by becoming a Christian—that is the only way to be truly happy. And the more you do for others "in His name," the happier you will be!

I lie amid the golden-rod,
I love to see it lean and nod;
I love to feel the grassy sod
Whose kindly breast will hold me last,
Whose patient arms will fold me fast—
Fold me from sunshine and from song,
Fold me from sorrow and from wrong.
Through gleaming gates of golden-rod
I'll pass into the rest of God.

—Mary Clemmer.

That the temperance cause, which was hitherto only mooted in small gatherings and on philanthropic platforms, should have grown to be one of the great tests of strength in the political arena; that it should be at this hour regarded as the most vital and living practical political question; that even those who oppose us most bitterly should look upon the solution of the licensing question as the "Sphinx" riddle, is, to my mind, one of the signs of these days that speak to us of approaching victory.—Lady Henry Somerset

Pure Sure

The best that money can buy

·Absolutely Pure·Delicious·Nutritious·

The Breakfast Cocoa
MADE BY
WALTER BAKER & Co. LIMITED
DORCHESTER, MASS.
COSTS LESS THAN ONE CENT A CUP.
NO CHEMICALS.
ALWAYS ASK YOUR GROCER FOR
WALTER BAKER & CO'S. BREAKFAST COCOA
MADE AT DORCHESTER, MASS. IT BEARS
THEIR TRADE MARK LA BELLE CHOCOLATIÈRE
ON EVERY CAN.
·AVOID IMITATIONS·

The Conversation Corner.

DR. ANDREE'S balloon, Nansen's dog sledges, the Spitzbergen and Franz Josef expeditions are of little account to us now—we have got an "exclusive" report from the "Deep Sea Mission" in the ice land of Labrador, and from our crippled protégé, Pomiuk! He spent the winter at an extemporized hospital at Burntwood Cove, near the Hudson Bay Company's station at Rigoulette, away up Hamilton Inlet. Now Dr. Grenfell writes us from the shore hospital "on the outside," at the mouth of Hamilton Inlet—about Lat. 54° 30'.

INDIAN HARBOR HOSPITAL,
July 31, 1896.

Dear Mr. Martin: . . . Arrived here at midday yesterday. I had on board a huge deck load of lumber for our new church, and having a heavy side roll our poor old boat creaked and groaned like a badly oiled London bus. We took a lot of water aboard, and had much trouble with it getting into the engine-room. People would think one a lunatic to start from Dover to Calais, which is only twenty-one miles, in a thirty-years-old pleasure steam yacht, with a load of deck cargo above the rails. But our distance was thirty-five miles and shoal water nearly all the way. Where things have to be done, they have to be done—that's all!

As I steamed in here I noticed a flag stuck out of one window of the hospital. It was white, with my red cross on it, and with the glasses we could see it was tied onto a crutch!!! I guessed it must be Pomiuk's flag, and so it proved. The patients in the ward told me he ate no dinner when he heard we were in the offing, and the poor little chap was almost crying with pleasure. He really has more affection than I credited the whole Eskimo race with before. He had carved me two little bony tokens, Hope and Love. I read him your letter. He chimed in with "ah," or "aila" or "mai," periodically. The lad seems as happy as can be, laughing merrily over almost any happy thing, like a Christian ought to do. You know Mrs. Gatty's parable, "Purr when you are pleased," don't you? I love it. How one does feel damped, like a moist rag, when people show no appreciation. Doesn't your big cat purr?

Now I'm going to put Pomiuk—or Gabriel, as the dear old Moravian father would christen him—into the "Corner Cot." Not that his leg allows him yet exactly to fly, but that one day when we meet in the beautiful land of "no more sorrow," we trust he and many of our other loved ones will no more suffer the effects of sin in "the body of our humiliation." [Phil. 3:21, Rev. Ver.] Pomiuk eats no more raw walrus. He wants to come a cruise with me to Nackvak, but I can't possibly take him. He still goes in a [medicated] bath every day. Mr. Wilson, the good agent of the Hudson Bay Company, whose family so kindly tended Pomiuk all winter at our Burntwood Cove hospital, made him a beauty of a bath tub of wood, lined with zinc. The boy has fallen in love with Dr. Willway and Sister Williams, is as happy as a cricket, and far better than when I left him last summer. He is, however, thin and still has a high temperature every night. We cannot get all the matter clear somehow. What I shall do with him next winter I don't yet know. He got your winter letter. . . . We have been trying him with crutches which our carpenter made, but at present he is frightened and has made no progress. I inclose a picture of our winter hospital at Burntwood Cove, with Pomiuk in front of it. Yours in Christian service,

WILFRED GRENFELL.

Yes, there he is on his blankets, looking out towards the sea. Back of him are, I presume, Manasseh and his wife, who had charge of the little hospital. The white lady is probably the kind Mrs. Wilson of the Hudson Bay post. But let us see what the dear boy says for himself:

CORNER COT, INDIAN HARBOR HOSPITAL.

Aukshenai Martin: I got your letter. I very glad to see you. Me like to see Martin. I very glad Doctor Grenfell come back. I put flag up doctor come back. Me all right. I'm happy Christmas. Me got shirt, Mrs. Wilson. Plenty sweets. I got new name now. Mr. Schultse Gabriel me. I got picture-book. Thank you picture-book. [A fit of laughter!] Me stop sister hospital all summer. Me got lame, can't walk. Me learn. Love Martin. Me

POMIUK, GABRIEL

The letter was dictated by Pomiuk, but the signature is his own, and the Maltese cross and heart, for faith and love—beautiful emblems of his trust and affection. Wasn't that a happy thing for him to tie his signal flag to a crutch and put it out at the hospital window? It was his greeting to his benefactor: "Hello, doctor; me all right, Pomiuk Gabriel, your lame boy—Hello!" I would rather be that Christian surgeon, blessing men's bodies and souls and having their grateful affection, than to discover the Northwest Passage! The doctor asks what he shall do with him next winter. Keep him in the "Corner Cot," if that is the best thing for him. We Corner-ers will pay the expense—will we not?

Mr. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

Arctic Explorations. The record of Nansen's expedition, reported in this column last week, being the highest latitude yet made, calls for exact statistics of previous voyages. The following tables show the different points reached in the Eastern and Western hemispheres, with the names of the commanders, the date and the approximate locality. The facts are from Lieutenant Greely's National Geographic Magazine, the degrees of latitude being changed to distance (from the pole) in miles by the London Leisure Hour.

EASTERN HEMISPHERE.

Barents,	1594	879	Near Cape Nassau.
" (3d voyage),	1596	694	North Spitzbergen.
Hudson,	1607	670	Spitzbergen Sea.
Phipps,	1773	639	" "
Scoresby,	1806	590	" "
Parry,	1827	503	" "
Nordenskiold,	1868	577	(Highest by ship.)
Payer,	1874	550	Franz Josef Land.

WESTERN HEMISPHERE.

Davis,	1587	1,234	West Greenland.
Hudson,	1607	1,180	Off East Greenland.
Baffin,	1616	850	Smith Sound.
Inglefield,	1852	810	" "
Dr. Kane,	1854	680	Greenland.
Hall,	1870	543	Frozen Sea.
"	1871	548	Greenland.
Nares,	1875	500	Grinnell Land.
"	1876	460	Frozen Sea.
Greely,	1882	455	North of Greenland.

This last northing (made by Lockwood and Brainard), viz, 83° 24', has now been exceeded, as given last week, by Nansen's sledge party, which reached 86° 14'. That is about 260 miles from the pole, a distance not much greater than from Boston to New York, which a good bicyclist could make in two long days. (By the way, have any of these expeditions carried a "Columbia" or a "Warwick"?) But even if some of these explorers should succeed in getting their boats or dogs or balloons across the polar sea, and should hoist the Stars and Stripes, or Union Jack, or the Norwegian ensign, whatever it be, to the top of the North Pole, would it do so much real good to humanity as the annual expedition of Dr. Grenfell to that same region, from which we hear in the adjoining column?

Solid Facts about Liquid Water. As a contrast to the above paragraphs about the solid form of the same element, let us note some "curiosities of water," as contained in a very interesting article in the Leisure Hour. It calls water a tricky sort of fluid, protean in form—a solid, a liquid, a gas. Fluids usually expand with heat; water at 32°, when heated, contracts until 39° is reached, then expands. The colder water therefore in a pond rises, and ice forms first at the top, not at the bottom. The result of this painful eccentricity of water—expanding one-eleventh of its bulk in the freezing process, instead of continuing to contract—is destruction and confusion to water pipes and boilers but it saved the lakes from freezing solid and killing all the fish. At its other extreme the behavior of water becomes positively weird. Changing from gas to water three volumes are reduced to two; changing from water to vapor the two volumes do not become three, but over three thousand! This mighty increase in bulk and elasticity makes steam the mechanical power of the world.

L. A. M.

The new society of Jesus was a magnificent initiation, and he who entered it must lay aside the world standards and ideals of character and become as a little child.—Ian Maclaren.

The Sunday School

LESSON FOR SEPT. 13. 2 Sam. 22: 40-51.

DAVID'S GRATITUDE TO GOD.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

This lesson includes the whole of one of the most magnificent of the Psalms, the eighteenth. It is divided into five parts. Taking the verses as numbered in 2 Sam. 22, we have: (1), an ascription of praise to Jehovah as an introduction [vs. 2-4]; (2), a description of God's power in delivering David, the imagery being suggested by a thunderstorm [vs 5-20]; (3), a statement of the principle of the divine government, rewarding the righteous and punishing the wicked [vs. 21-28]; (4), this principle illustrated in David's life [vs. 29-46]; (5), a summary of God's goodness to David and his gratitude therefor. The verses selected to be printed specially emphasize four things on which David had relied for success in his eventful life—four aspects of God on which he had habitually looked and which had inspired in him courage to overcome all things which stood in his way. These four things are:

1. The source of power to conquer his enemies [vs. 39-43]. This song is a kind of retrospect of David's whole life. A large part of it was spent in war. But he does not boast of his prowess. In every victory he considered himself only an instrument in God's hands. A divine hand girded him with strength for the battle. The same hand smote his enemies. Even deeds which in the better light of our time we cannot approve seemed to David to be inspired by God, and his courage was invincible because he believed that God was with him and against his foes.

Such trust in God, with the steadfast conviction of having been appointed to carry out definite plans for him, is all conquering. General Gordon, the hero of the Soudan, was a conspicuous figure before the world a few years ago. Every one who knew him knew that he was fearless because he believed he was doing what God had sent him to do. When he was about to undertake a most difficult task, he wrote to a friend: "I go alone with an infinite, almighty God to direct and guide me, and am glad so to trust him as to fear nothing, and indeed feel sure of success. I feel my own weakness, look to him who is almighty, and leave the issue without inordinate care to him." This is the true soldierly spirit in which every child of God should go forth to life's battles. This consciousness of divine leadership made David a great general.

2. The source of power to govern his kingdom [vs. 44-46]. It was a very difficult task to bring the twelve tribes into unity, to banish old feuds, to kindle a common patriotism and inspire them to purposes great enough to make them a nation. Not less difficult was it to keep in subjection other tribes whom David had conquered, and to make them acknowledge him as king. From the borders of Egypt and the coast of the Mediterranean to the river Euphrates he had to maintain peace, to repel the attacks of other nations who sought to wrest from him his territory and to put down revolts which were at any time liable to arise. Yet in spite of disturbances in his own court, which culminated in the rebellion of Absalom, and of outbreaks in different places, which no doubt often occurred, though they are not mentioned in the brief history in the book of Samuel, David held his throne and made wonderful progress in the organization of the kingdom he had won.

In this great business he depended on God. In all the remarkable events of his history he saw providential guidance, and the assurance of it made him strong. In the peaceful development of our own country there are thousands of men and women whose responsibilities would be too great for them but for this same reliance on a divine hand guiding them, and the vision to see help and deliverance provided by God in both the smaller and greater crises of life. Many of them, like David, frankly declare their faith in that ruling providence, as from time to time, in ways that seem wonderful to them, they have been helped to success in worthy efforts for themselves or for others. Their testimony is of great help to young men facing the difficulties of entering on independent life and to all who struggle in the name of God to do service to their fellowmen. Every one who believes that God has helped him to do what he has honorably sought to do owes it to the world to acknowledge before men that divine help.

3. The object of his praises [vs 47-50]. David probably did not write so many of the Psalms as have been ascribed to him in our Bibles. But proof is ample that he wrote this one, and it indicates his character. To God he attributed all worthy achievements he had made and all good that came to him and his people. The habit of grateful recognition of the presence, love and power of God have much to do with inspiring confidence in those who would lead in the community. When that habit finds expression in songs worthy to be used as expressing devout experience such service is a permanent blessing to mankind. David is remembered for his songs of praise to God more than for anything else he did. It is a high honor for any one to have written a hymn which has deserved and found place among the songs of the church. They deserve our gratitude who have wrought out of their experience what the children of God have adopted as the expression of their feelings toward him, and no one has truly praised God by his life and word who has failed to add something precious to the Christian Church.

4. The ground of his confidence [v. 51]. Underneath all his thoughts was this one, that he was God's king. That anointing by Samuel he never had forgotten. His mind returned to it in his latest hours as he looked forward to an unending glory for the house which God had established through him. That is the assurance which sustains every Christian. He has been set apart by the divine will for a divine service which is to have no end. The hour of his confession of Christ is sacred in his memory; and it is also an inspiration. Whenever, as at the Lord's Supper, he renews his covenant vows he remembers that he is set apart to a sacred trust, and that, if he be faithful to that trust, his success is certain.

Here we take leave of David in our study of the history of Israel. He had great faults, which oftenest are found with men of sanguine temperament and strong emotional nature. But for his sins he was repentant, while his virtues and his service to mankind were so great that he must ever hold his place as one of the world's greatest heroes. It is fitting that our last vision of him should be the one which most truly represents him—an old man looking back on his life and then upward to God from whom, as he clearly saw, came all his power, which gave success to his career, and all his happiness, which made him willing to remember his history and look forward to his unending influence over men for their good.

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING.

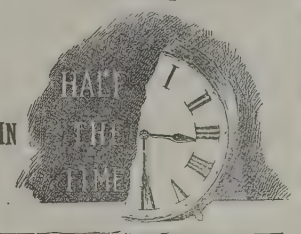
Topic, Sept. 6-12. The Need of Spiritual Enterprise. Matt. 4: 23-25; John 4: 34-38.

What are the opportunities for Christian work the coming season? How can our church best plan its work? How can we enlist all in doing the work?

(See prayer meeting editorial.)

When traditionalism has the upper hand it burns its opponents as the Roman Church did John Huss, or annoys them as the Church of England did Robertson of Brighton; when evangelism is strong it clears an open space where men can breathe and see Jesus.—Ian Maclaren.

USE
Sunlight Soap
IT WILL
Save your Hands and Clothes
It will do a large wash



usually taken.
Less labor. Greater comfort.
Lever Bros., Ltd., New York.

Pure and Wholesome
describes the new article of food just being introduced and for your health's sake you should investigate our
Cocoanut Butter
It is a superior article of guaranteed purity to be used in place of butter, lard or compounds in cooking. Requires only one-half to two-thirds the quantity used of other shortening. Endorsed by physicians for purity and by bakers and chefs for its economic value. Sold by all grocers. Write for free book about it.
THE PURE FOOD PRODUCT CO.,
544-554 N. Water St. CHICAGO.
McLellan, Brigham Co., 51 Chatham St. Boston.

Pale and Thin people get vigorous and increase in weight from Somatose

A Perfect Food, Tonic and Restorative.
It is a powder made from the most nourishing elements of meat, prepared for the nutriment and stimulus of weak systems. May be taken dry, or in milk, water, etc.
At druggists, in 2-oz., ¼, ½ and 1 lb. tins.
Also the following combinations, Somatose-Biscuit, Somatose-Cocoa, Somatose-Chocolate each containing 10 per cent. Somatose. Very convenient and palatable preparations.
Pamphlets mailed by Schieffelin & Co., New York, agents for Farbenfabriken vorm. Friedr. Bayer & Co., Elberfeld.

GET Whitman's INSTANTANEOUS Chocolate
Pure, wholesome, convenient—made in a jiffy—NO BOILING.

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM.

OUR NEIGHBORS, THE ESKIMOS, CHINESE, INDIANS, MOUNTAIN WHITES AND NEGROES.

(Parallel with The Congregationalist's October Topic for Missionary Meetings.)

From 1846 to 1896, a half-century of humanitarian, educational, evangelistic effort among these five races, neighbors in our own home land, involving an outlay of millions of dollars and the life energy and consecration of thousands of missionaries; a field extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from Florida to Alaska; Christian schools and colleges to the number of 117, as well as almost twice that number of Congregational churches; hundreds of thousands of youth enlightened and helped to self-support; multitudes of homes refined and uplifted and thousands of down-trodden and neglected ones shown the high possibilities of Christian manhood and womanhood—this is the glorious record to which the American Missionary Association triumphantly points in this its jubilee year. A brief review of its organization and the activities of fifty years will help us to join more intelligently and enthusiastically in the celebration of this anniversary in Boston next month.

In the early days of organized resistance to slavery, religious and political, Sept. 3, 1846, the A. M. A. was formed in Albany, N. Y., its object being, according to its constitution, "to conduct Christian missionary and educational operations and to diffuse a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures in our own and other countries." It endeavored to discountenance slavery "by refusing to receive the known fruits of unrequited labor or to welcome to its employment those who hold their fellow-beings as slaves." This new society was preceded by four missionary organizations, which were subsequently merged into it, the Amistad Committee and the Union Missionary Society, both having anti-slavery aims, while the other two, the Committee for West India Missions and the Western Evangelical Missionary Society, were for the evangelization of the freedmen in Jamaica and the American Indians. We have almost lost sight of the foreign work which the A. M. A. did in its early years, just as the American Board carried on for a time a home enterprise among the Indians, but we learn that in addition to the missions received from the above societies it took under its care one missionary in the Sandwich Islands, two in Siam and a number of missionaries and teachers laboring among the colored refugees in Canada. In its foreign department in 1854 its workers numbered seventy-nine, located in Africa, Jamaica, the Sandwich Islands, Siam, Egypt and America. At the time of the Civil War, however, much of the foreign work was wisely relinquished and the association's efforts mainly concentrated upon the new field in the South. In 1882 an arrangement was consummated with the American Board by which it transferred to the A. M. A. its Indian missions in this country, the latter society withdrawing from missions in foreign lands.

The first work of the A. M. A. in the South was not for the Negro but among the white people of Kentucky, and was conducted on an avowedly anti-slavery basis. The pioneer in this movement was Rev. J. G. Fee, a Kentuckian by birth, but an ardent anti-slavery advocate, who collected a church of non-slaveholders and applied to the association for a commission. Another similar church was organized, Sunday and day schools were opened. Berea College was the outgrowth of the missionary work of Mr. Fee and his colleagues. The Civil War, in which 170,000 of these sturdy, high-spirited men from the mountain regions of Kentucky, Virginia, Tennessee, Alabama and North Carolina served in the Union ranks, interrupted the earlier efforts, and it was not until 1882 that work in the mountains was renewed, under the leadership of Rev. A. A. Myers, who organized a church and built a schoolhouse in Williamsburg, Ky. The news quickly spread among the neighboring towns and it was pathetic to witness the thirst for education and a better life displayed by these isolated and neglected people. The work is constantly enlarging as the railroads open up the mountain region to enterprise and education, and is limited only by the lack of means necessary to plant the schools and churches the eager highlanders so sorely need. According to the last annual report, fifty-one churches, having 1,521 members, and seventeen schools, with over 2 000 pupils, are to be found in the mountain region today under the care of the A. M. A.

But the great work of the association, begun under the guns of Fortress Munroe, near the spot where the first slave ship landed its cargo, in the fall of the first year of the war, when the slaves first came within the Union lines, has been its educational efforts among the American Negroes. To the A. M. A. belongs the honor of having been the first organization to begin school work among those who had been slaves, and to follow the armies with faithful missionaries and teachers. In Hampton, Va., Rev. L. C. Lockwood opened among the contrabands gathered there the first day school for freedmen with 800 pupils. This was the nucleus, not only of the present noble Hampton Institute, but of the six colleges, thirty-nine normal and graded schools and twenty-nine common schools which the association now supports in the South. Many of our readers do not need to be reminded of the enthusiasm in the North as soon as the Proclamation of Emancipation was issued, which led hundreds of men and refined women to offer their services in behalf of the freedmen who were in the bogs of degradation and illiteracy. The A. M. A. rapidly extended its missionary and educational work. Crowds of adults and children attended its schools. By 1864 it employed 250 missionaries and teachers, and the following year was enabled to enlarge its operations still more as the National Council recommended the churches to raise $250,000 for the enterprise among freedmen. And so the work of enlightenment and of social elevation and of spiritual uplift has gone on and must continue. It is much to be able to point to the 20,000 Negro teachers today in our public schools, to bring forward such men as Hon. Frederick Douglass and Booker T. Washington to prove the inherent possibilities of the race, and to turn hopefully to the hundreds of graduates coming out every year from the A. M. A. schools, equipped not only with a good school education but with a useful knowledge of various industries; but still the gravest problems and vastest needs remain and must be met, we believe, by the Christian Church.

Out on the Nebraska bank of the Missouri River, at Santee Agency, is a group of eight buildings which might well be termed a social settlement among the Indians, though it stands for much more than is usually implied by that word. The Santee Normal and Industrial School, with its cottage homes, its normal and theological departments, its carpenter's, blacksmith's and shoe shops, as well as its extensive farm, is one of the largest Indian training schools in the country, while the native church not only supports an Indian minister but has helped to do missionary work in other communities. This and other Indian schools and churches at Fort Berthold and Standing Rock Agency, N. D., Oahe and Rosebud Agency, S. D, Skokomish, Wn., and Crow Agency, Mont., are the fruits of the Indian work of the A. M. A., which was begun very early but has been chiefly developed since 1882. Last year the association preached the gospel to twenty tribes of Indians in its stations and out-stations in five different States. Savages are being converted into preachers and deacons and worthy members of its fourteen native churches as well as teachable pupils in its twenty-one Indian schools.

Two other races share in the opportunities for education and Christianization which the A. M. A. is striving to place within the reach of our foreign neighbors. We must not forget that 1,000 Mongolians have been gathered into its schools in California and that last year it ordained the first Chinese minister on the American continent; nor should we lose sight of its enterprise for the Eskimos at Cape Prince of Wales, Alaska, where Rev. H. R. Thornton laid down his young life, and to which Mr. W. S. Lopp has just returned. Who can consider and study this five-fold work for Christ, for humanity and for our native land without a deepening appreciation of the consecrated efforts of the past fifty years, a new grasp of present needs and opportunities and a reaching forth to larger purpose and achievements in the future? But a month yet remains of this jubilee year, which has been darkened not only by severe retrenchments but by a heavy debt. There is, however, a favorable difference of $38,000 between the financial standing now and at this date last year. The Jubilee Share Fund now aggregates pledges of over $14,000. Shall not the coming days before the annual meeting, Oct 22–24, see such a large number of fifty-dollar shares taken that the grand old American Missionary Association shall once more be set free?

Sources of Information.

The American Missionary for Sept., 1896.
The Congregationalist (under Progress of the Kingdom) for Jan. 3, 1895.
Among Our American Highlanders, Among the Indians, Chinese Missions, In North Carolina, Freedmen and Freemen, The Burden of the Nation in the South, A Brief History of the A. M. A., and other pamphlets published by the American Missionary Association, Bible House, New York.
The Administration of the A. M. A., Congregationalist Handbook, No. 8.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

The Friends have appointed a denominational C. E. superintendent of foreign missions to circulate missionary literature and to promote giving.

For an hour just before the weekly prayer meeting of their church the Endeavorers of a society in Richmond, Ind., meet their pastor to study the Bible.

Alabama has gained a place in the roll of States having prison societies through the formation of a society with 11 members, which will receive the help of the nine societies forming the Birmingham Union.

Newark, N. J., has what is supposed to be the only Italian C. E. society in America. During its first six months the membership has doubled. The society has had printed several thousand copies of its constitution in Italian, with the intention of circulating them in this country and in Italy in order to form more societies.

There were thought to be 10,000 persons in attendance at a C. E. rally and picnic planned by the societies in Minneapolis and St. Paul. Lunches and receptions were held separately by the different societies represented, and all united in a song service and in a meeting addressed on the subject of Christian citizenship by Rev. D. J. Burrell, D. D., of New York. The societies have received a powerful impulse from the gathering and St. Paul is making arrangements for a similar one.

A circular urging evangelistic services in school houses, parks, penal institutions, and homes, has been sent to each society in her district by the president of the Central District of Minnesota.—A special committee in Worcester County, Mass., has recommended Rev. J. H. Lingley, of Worcester, to conduct evangelistic work with the societies of the county in cases where the pastors judge it advisable. Rev. O. C. Bailey has charge of arranging the dates. It is hoped that the State convention will be preceded and followed by many series of meetings.

An active missionary committee in a society in Toronto, Ont., has started a missionary library, has conducted a study of China lasting for three months and closing with an examination, and issues a minature missionary weekly, each number containing a question on missionary topics, the answers to be called for at the next meeting of the society. Some special subject for prayer connected with the missionary work is suggested for each day of the week, and in each prayer meeting the topic is considered by some one with special reference to missions.

Literature

BOOKS ON THE CURRENCY QUESTION.

It may be convenient for some of our readers to know what books upon the financial questions now agitating the country are authoritative and accessible. In the following list we have given books representing both views and appended prices. Three important works are reviewed or noticed in our literary department this week: Professor Hadley's new book on Economics, the cheap reprint of Horace White's Money and Banking, and Logan G. McPherson's The Monetary and Banking Problem. Publishers and prices will be found appended in each case. These three are all in favor of the gold standard.

Other books are: History of Banking in the United States, by W. G. Sumner, $3.00 (gold); Bimetallism, by Wharton Barker, $1.25 (scientific bimetallism); Monetary Systems of the World, by M. L. Muhleman, $2.00 (gold); The Natural Law of Money, by William Brough, $1 00 (gold); International Bimetallism, by Francis A. Walker, $1.25 (double standard); The Gold Standard, by Brooks Adams, 25 cents (silver); Coin's Financial School, paper, 50 cents, and sequel, Up to Date, 25 cents, by W. H. Harvey (silver); "Coin's Financial Fool," by Horace White, 25 cents (gold); The Battle of the Standards, paper, 25 cents, by Henry M. and James H. Teller; Robinson Crusoe's Money, by David A. Wells, paper, 50 cents, (gold); The Monetary Situation, by S. Dana Horton, paper, 50 cents (bimetallism); An Honest Dollar, by President Andrews of Brown University, paper, 75 cents (bimetallism); History of the Monetary Legislation of the United States, by Hon. Robert E. Preston, the director of the mint, 25 cents (gold). These books can be purchased through any bookseller, and the list might be indefinitely extended, though mainly on the gold side. A convenient Bulletin of Books on the Currency Question, issued by the Baker and Taylor Co. of New York, contains a much larger list than we have here given, with indications of teaching and price.

BOOK REVIEWS.

Economics, An Account of the Relations Between Private Property and Public Welfare, by Arthur Twining Hadley, of Yale University. Professor Hadley has accomplished a large task in an exceedingly satisfactory manner. The tone of the book is judicial, and the author speaks out of a wide range of knowledge with the authority of a master. One turns naturally to such a book for definitions of popular terms of speech and finds them well considered and clearly stated, as well as sufficiently illustrated. To take, for example, the author's treatment of a burning question. "Money," he says, "is best defined as a thing which, by common consent of the business community, is used as a basis of commercial obligations." Whatever may be chosen for this purpose becomes, by the very fact of being thus used, a convenient standard for measuring private wealth—a value demoninator, as it is sometimes called—by means of which the power and advantage attaching to the ownership of different kinds of salable property can be compared." We commend this definition, with its right insistence on the materiality of the measure of value and the necessity of the common consent of the business community, to those who believe that the government can create value out of nothing or permanently hold any commodity above its natural level of worth.

The whole chapter on Money is useful reading in these educative days and would sober many a wild talker if its facts and conclusions could be mastered; and this, together with the following chapter on Credit, ought to be printed as a tract and scattered broadcast East and West.

Professor Hadley is singularly fair in presenting the arguments of the side to which he is opposed, as the passages on Malthusianism and on bimetallism show; and he has the large patience of the evolutionist who watches the stream of tendency, seeking to teach men to conform to its flow, but sure that nothing can resist it.

The book justifies its title and is much the most satisfactory text and reference book of formal economic science which we have seen. It deserves a wide reading and careful study. The making of the book corresponds admirably to its contents. It is well indexed, printed and bound. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50]

A plain, sensible and well-written book on the financial question is The Monetary and Banking Problem, by Logan G. McPherson. Beginning with history, he goes on to theory, and shows advantages of the least variable standard of values in a way which is very convincing. [D Appleton & Co. $1 00.]

Mr. Horace White's admirably clear and competent Money and Banking Illustrated by American History has been issued by the publishers in paper covers. It ought to have the widest possible circulation. [Ginn & Co. 50 cents.]

RELIGIOUS.

Social Meanings of Religious Experiences, by George D. Herron. These lectures were delivered in Chicago and afterwards in Boston. Dr. Herron has a teasing fashion of saying things which we all believe in such a way that we are inclined to wish they were not true in order to have the pleasure of disagreeing with him. Furthermore, he has a fashion of using words in definitions peculiar to himself. Add to this that he seems to us to read into Scripture incidents meanings which are wholly modern and foreign to the experience of the actors, and you have some of the difficulties and irritations of this strong and suggestive book. There is much that is germinally suggestive in Jacob's wrestling but nothing in the immediate circumstances or after history to show that "nothing more distinctly discloses the social ground of religious experience than this story of Jacob's wrestling." Between Dr. Herron's accusation that Jacob, "having overreached Laban, his father-in-law," had "stolen away with his family, his servants and herds, and likely what else he could lay his hands on," and Jacob's indignant denial, we prefer to believe Jacob. Nor are we ready to listen to the repeated and unmeasured accusations against modern commercial life which find their culmination in sharp but anonymous accusations against men who rob the public and endow universities, and statements like that which declares that "all of us who live in any measure of comfort live more or less by economic stealing, no matter what our occupations or intentions. Our comforts are bought with the poverty, and even the lives, of beaten men and women."

Dr. Herron is too much of a man to indulge in such railing accusations, nor do they help his cause. But when we have said all this, the book is too suggestive to go unread, and too full of the spirit which dictated the second table of the law to be without fruit in thought and life. [Thomas Y. Crowell & Co. 75 cents.]

An admirable book for private reading or study classes is Robert E. Speer's Studies of the Man Christ Jesus. The author has grown into a wide usefulness and is one of the most capable of the younger religious leaders of the time. The book has come out of practical experience in teaching young men in conferences at Northfield and Keswick, Eng., as well as with selected groups in colleges. It is, in fact, an inductive study of the greatest life, pursued in a reverent spirit, with clear insight and illumination from a wide range of reading. [Fleming H. Revell Co. 75 cents.]

Among devotional books designed to give courage and comfort to the sorrowing we have seldom read a more thoughtful, helpful little volume than In Tribulation, by Dr. H. Clay Trumbull. He probes the inner meaning of words in a very suggestive way, seeking, for instance, to give the root idea of "tribulation," "trouble," "chastisement," and "comfort," and there are excellent chapters on the conduct of life, such as Waiting as a Duty, Never Giving Up, and Giving Expression to Sympathy. We can say nothing better than that Dr. Trumbull's book is true to his own definition of the purpose of comfort, in that it is "strengthening, invigorating, inspiring." [John D. Wattles & Co. 75 cents.]

The growth of the liturgical movement among Presbyterians is indicated by Selections from the Psalter for Use in the Services of the Churches, arranged by Elijah R. Craven, D. D., and Rev. Louis F. Benson. It is strictly a selection, arranged in lessons of convenient length, for use responsively by alternate verses, and is beautifully printed and bound in limp cloth. [Presbyterian Board of Publication. 30 cents.]

TRAVEL.

The Ouananiche and Its Canadian Environment, by E. T. D. Chambers. Illustrated. This beautiful book of travel and sport is appropriately frontispieced by a picture of a corner of Lake St. John, which is the habitat of the ouananiche and the resort of its pursuers. Lieut. Colonel Haggard, in his introduction, describes sitting on the head of a six-pound specimen in a canoe, "while he with his brawny tail administered unto me such a castigation as had fortunately never been my lot to receive since my early boyhood days at school," and Mr. Chambers himself describes it as "the gamest fish for its size that swims." It is a sportsman's and fisherman's book, but not that alone, for it describes with knowledge and skill the environment as well as the fishing, and devotes attention to the characteristics and folk-lore of the Indians. The class of stay-at-home fishermen, who do not go to the wilds because they cannot, will get much pleasure from the perusal of this volume, and it will be of interest to the student also. The index is good and the pictures effective, and the book is well made throughout. [Harper & Bros. $2.00.]

STORIES.

Mrs. Gerald, a novel by Maria Louise Pool, shows decided power in the portrayal of New England character and simple village life. To our thinking, however, the author is more successful with the minor personages of the story than with the heroine and her husband, on whom she has spent her chief care. They seem more like psychological studies than real people. But Hanford Grover stands before us a typical shiftless, lazy, selfish Yankee, content to be supported by his wife and daughter. The plot is not remarkable and the story is sad and tragic. Judith, a poor girl, is asked in marriage by a millionaire, whose nephew she loves. In order to help her mother and sisters she becomes his wife, the absence of love being perfectly understood on both sides. But the apparent lie of the marriage is hateful to her truth-loving nature, and the situation is made worse by the presence of the nephew and the fact that all three know the real state of affairs. The book ends with the insanity and suicide of the husband, and the inference that the true lovers will at last be united. While some will think the story overdrawn and improbable, no one can deny the power with which its lesson is enforced. [Harper & Bros. $1.50.]

A Strange, Sad Comedy, by Molly Elliot Seawell. The Southern gentleman and his daughter, impoverished by the war but having lost no whit of family pride, types familiar enough in recent American fiction but very cleverly drawn in this book, are brought to Newport and in contact with English people and the Briticized Americans who are supposed to haunt that watering place. The daughter is a humorous and interesting creation and plays her baronet off against her American lover with a genuine enjoyment of coquetry which the reader heartily shares. The cynical old man of the story, who delights to give and to torture, is strongly drawn, and the ending of his career is well managed. Altogether the story is carefully planned, well constructed and the interest is fully sustained. It admirably fulfills its mission as a piece of bright and enjoyable "summer reading." [Century Co. $1 25.]

The Under Side of Things, a novel by Lilian Bell. The style in which this story is written is very bright but far too hard. Its pictures of a Pennsylvania town and the people who lived there are clever and interesting and the love story is enjoyable. But to carry the wife at last back into the chill and slavery of her mother's house makes the book a quite needlessly ignoble tragedy and adds nothing to its charm or unity. But the story is American throughout and told with real power and insight into character. [Harper & Bros. $1.25.]

The Failure of Sibyl Fletcher, by Adeline Sergeant, is distinctively a love story without any admixture of "problems," social, religious or any other sort. A girl artist of fine qualities of character is discarded by her lover for a butterfly type of young womanhood who has a prettier face, and the artist marries a strong, masterful fellow below her own station in life though of good ancestry. He is moody and possessed of a violent temper, but by the magic of love she transforms him into the gentlest of husbands, acts as a peacemaker between the other couple, who quarrel sadly at first, and everything turns out happily. Several quite dramatic situations are introduced and the author shows real power in her analysis of human passion. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.]

Scotland and The Orient are the latest additions to the series of Stories by English Authors. The former bears six notable names, each one represented by a characteristic sketch. Naturally it is the well-loved Doctor of the Old School which stands for Ian Maclaren, while The Heather Lintie is the selection from S. R. Crockett, The Courting of T'Nowhead's Bell from J. M. Barrie, and Thrawn Janet from R. L. Stevenson. Wandering Willie's Tale by Sir Walter Scott and The Glenmutchkin Railway by Professor Aytoun complete the volume, which seems to us the best thus far published. The Orient gives the first place and a third of its volume to The Man Who Would Be King, Rudyard Kipling's cleverly developed, impossible tale. Of the remaining five The Revenge of Her Race is perhaps the strongest. Thy Heart's Desire, an intensely sorrowful story by Netta Syrett, has nothing Oriental about it except that the English characters are forced to live for a time in the East. [Charles Scribner's Sons. 75 cents.]

From Whose Bourne, by Robert Barr, is a very slight story of the "detective" kind. It begins in the spirit world, and excites interest in a theory of departed souls which is not at all justified by the course of the narrative, which soon gets to the earth of mortals again and derives what interest it has from the not very thrilling mystery of a supposed crime. Altogether it seems to us quite unworthy of the author's reputation. [Frederick A. Stokes Co. 75 cents.]

MISCELLANEOUS.

Laws Relating to Religious Corporations, by William Henry Roberts, D. D., LL. D. This is a full handbook of the statute law of the States and Territories relating to churches and religious societies. Dr. Roberts himself warns the reader against making it a substitute for skilled legal counsel, a warning which should be heeded by all managers of church interests. It is the business of the courts to interpret statute law, and the law as they declare it is the law which governs transactions. This law of judicial decisions and precedents is wholly untouched in the book, and indeed lay outside its purpose. The book is compiled with the author's well-known care and thoroughness and, with this caution, will be of great value to the churches. [Presbyterian Board of Publication. $3.00.]

A second edition of Demon Possession and Allied Themes, by the late Rev. John L. Nevius, has been issued with considerable additional matter by the editor, Mr. Henry W. Rankin. It is evident from the criticisms, both hostile and favorable, cited here that the book has excited wide interest and attention. It challenged the prevailing mood and presupposition in and through which the modern psychologist and pathologist approaches the study of the phenomena depicted, and its facts must either be accounted for or current theories must be greatly modified. For our part we believe, with Dr. Agnew, that "these demoniacal seizures, mentioned in the New Testament, fall within a realm which has never been invaded by the studies of the pathologist," and can say of Dr. Nevius with Professor James of Harvard that, "we have to thank him for an extremely good contribution to a really important subject." [Fleming H. Revell Co. $1 50.]

A Primer of Modern British Missions, with references to American Missions. Edited by Richard Lovett, M. A. The author of this book was the biographer of James Gilmour of Mongolia. He has carried out a difficult task of arrangement and condensation with ability and success and the work will be exceedingly convenient for reference. [Fleming H. Revell Co. 40 cents.]

The Story of a Piece of Coal, by Edward A. Martin, F. G. S., is a monograph in simple and popular style and fully illustrated upon coal, its origin and its uses. Originally written in England, it has been changed to adapt it to American readers and it is both interesting and complete. [D. Appleton & Co. 40 cents.]

NOTES.

— Mr. Wilson Barrett's play, The Sign of the Cross, of which we gave a description some months ago, has proved more profitable than any other play of the season in London.

— Li Hung Chang is said to be getting up early in order to keep up his journal of travel. A full translation of his shrewd comments upon Western civilization would be of the greatest interest, though it might not conduce to our self-conceit.

— Over 2,500 different sermons by Spurgeon are in print, and there are manuscripts enough remaining to continue their weekly publication, which goes back in unbroken continuity for forty-one years, for some time yet. We referred last week to a recent order for 1,000,000 copies recently placed with the printers.

— Dr. George E Post of Beyrout, Syria, has just completed a work on The Flora of Syria, Palestine and Sinai. It has involved enormous care and labor during thirty years both of travel and research. An edition of 700 copies has been printed at the mission press in Beyrout. The price of the book, postpaid and registered to destination, is one guinea (£1, 1s.), which should be sent by exchange or postal order to Rev. George E. Post, M. D., Syrian Protestant College, Beyrout, Syria.

— There has been much complaint that people would not read books, and now that Chautauqua Circles and university extension lectures are setting all sorts of people to reading some are complaining that it is all superficial work. If so surely even that is better than no reading at all. In this connection we may quote the story which The Citizen, which is the organ of the American Society for the Extension of University Teaching, tells:

When a representative of the American Society asked at the Philadelphia Library for lists of newly acquired books for publication in the society's journal he was told that the attendants were already bothered to death by the calls of university extension students, and that this troublesome avidity for reading could not be encouraged. The Mercantile Library had an uncut copy of MacPherson's Annals of Commerce, which had been preserved in this condition for about fifteen years. A university extension student actually cut the leaves and read it.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

Lee & Shepard. Boston.
PROTESTANTISM. By Edward P. Usher. pp. 440. $1.50.

Copeland & Day. Boston.
CINDER-PATH TALES. By William Lindsey. pp. 210. $1.00.

G. P. Putnam's Sons. New York.
CAMPING IN THE CANADIAN ROCKIES. By W. D. Wilcox. pp. 283. $4.00.

Thomas Whittaker. New York.
SOME MODERN SUBSTITUTES FOR CHRISTIANITY. By George W. Shinn, D. D. pp. 87. 50 cents.

John D. Wattles Co. Philadelphia.
RECENT RESEARCH IN BIBLE LANDS. By Prof. J. F. McCurdy, Ph. D., LL. D., and others. Edited by Herman V. Hilprecht. pp. 269. $1.50.

S. W. Straub & Co. Chicago.
BEAUTIFUL SONGS AND LIVING FOUNTAIN. By S. W. Straub. pp. 320. 35 cents.

Christian Publishing Co. St. Louis.
JESUS AS A TEACHER. By B. A. Hinsdale. pp. 330.

MAGAZINES.

August.—THE PULPIT.—OUR COUNTRY.—YALE REVIEW.

September. WHAT TO EAT.—SCRIBNER'S.—ATLANTIC.—HARPER'S.

News from the Churches

Meetings to Come.

NEW HAMPSHIRE FEMALE CENT INSTITUTION AND HOME MISSIONARY UNION, annual meeting will be held in connection with the meetings of the General Association at Littleton, Sept. 23, at 2 o'clock P. M. Mrs. H. S. Caswell of New York will address the ladies. Auxiliaries are requested to send delegates. All women interested in home missions are cordially invited.
ALICE M. NIMS, Secretary.

FALL STATE MEETINGS.

Montana,	Billings,	Tuesday, Sept.
North Dakota,	Fargo,	Tuesday, Sept. 15.
New Hampshire,	Littleton,	Tuesday, Sept. 22.
Minnesota,	Faribault,	Tuesday, Sept. 15.
Washington,	Tacoma,	Tuesday, Sept. 22.
Maine,	Ft. Fairfield,	Tuesday, Sept. 22.
North Carolina,	Haywood,	Thursday, Sept. 24.
Oregon,	Portland,	Tuesday, Sept. 29.
Wisconsin,	Antigo,	Tuesday, Sept. 29.
Wyoming,	Wheatland,	Sept.
Idaho,	Boise,	Oct.
New Mexico,	Albuquerque,	Oct.
Utah,		Oct.
California,	Sacramento,	Tuesday, Oct. 6.
Colorado,	Denver,	Tuesday, Oct. 6.
California, South'rn,	Claremont,	Tuesday, Oct. 13.
Nebraska,		Monday, Oct. 19.
Alabama,	Shelby,	Wednesday, Nov. 11.
Connecticut Conf.,	Winsted,	Tuesday, Nov. 17.

Benevolent Societies.

THE CONGREGATIONAL HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY is represented in Massachusetts by the MASSACHUSETTS HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY, No. 9 Congregational House. Rev. Joshua Coit, Secretary; Rev. Edwin B. Palmer, Treasurer.

WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Room No. 32, Congregational House. Office hours, 9 to 5. Annual membership, $1.00; life membership, $20.00 Contributions solicited. Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Treasurer.

AMERICAN BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS, Congregational House, No 1 Somerset Street, Boston. Frank H. Wiggin, Assistant Treasurer; Charles E. Swett, Publishing and Purchasing Agent. Office in New York, 121 Bible House; in Chicago, 153 La Salle St.

WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS, Rooms 1 and 2 Congregational House. Miss Ellen Carruth, Treasurer; Miss Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Bible House, New York. Missions in the United States, evangelistic and educational, at the South and in the West among the Indians and Chinese. Boston office, 21 Congregational House; Chicago office, 153 La Salle Street.; Cleveland office, Y. M. C. A. Building. Donations may be sent to either of the above offices, or to H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer, 108 Bible House, New York City.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH BUILDING SOCIETY —Church and Parsonage Building. Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., Secretary; H. O. Pinneo, Treasurer, 59 Bible House, New York; Rev. George A. Hood, Congregational House, Boston, Field Secretary.

CONGREGATIONAL EDUCATION SOCIETY.—(Including work of former New West Commission.) Aids four hundred students for the ministry, eight home missionary colleges, twenty academies in the West and South, ten free Christian schools in Utah and New Mexico. S. F. Wilkins, Treasurer. Offices, 10 Congregational House, Boston, 151 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. Address, 10 Congregational House, Boston.

CONG. SUNDAY SCHOOL & PUBLISHING SOCIETY.—Contributions used only for missionary work. Rev. George M. Boynton, D. D, Secretary; W. A. Duncan, Ph. D., Field Secretary; E. Lawrence Barnard, Treasurer, Congregational House, Boston.

MASSACHUSETTS BOARD OF MINISTERIAL AID.—Treasurer, Mr. Arthur G. Stanwood, 701 Sears Building, Boston Address applications to Rev A. H. Quint, D. D., Congregational Library, 1 Somerset Street, Boston.

MINISTERIAL RELIEF.—In order to afford a little timely aid to aged and disabled home and foreign missionaries and ministers and their families, the committee of the National Council asks from each church one splendid offering for its permanent invested fund. It also invites generous individual gifts. For fuller information see Minutes of National Council, 1892, and Year-Book, 1893, page 62 Secretary, Rev. N. H. Whittlesey, New Haven, Ct.; Treasurer, Rev. S B Forbes, Hartford, Ct. Form of a bequest: I bequeath to the "Trustees of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States" (a body corporate chartered under the laws of the State of Connecticut) [here insert the bequest], to be used for the purpose of Ministerial Relief, as provided in the resolution of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States at its session held in Chicago in October, 1886.

THE CONGREGATIONAL BOARD OF PASTORAL SUPPLY, established by the Massachusetts General Association, offers its services to churches desiring pastors or pulpit supplies. Careful attention is given to applications from without the State. Room 22 A, Congregational House, Boston. Rev. Charles B. Rice, Sec.

THE BOSTON SEAMAN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, organized 1827. Chapel and reading-room, 287 Hanover St., Boston. Open day and evening. Sailors and landsmen welcome. Daily prayer meeting, 11 A.M., Bible study, 3 P.M. Sunday services, usual hours. Meetings every evening except Saturday. Branch mission, Vineyard Haven. Is a Congregational society and appeals to all Congregational churches for support. Send donations of money to B. S. Snow, Corresponding Secretary, Room 22, Congregational House, Boston. Send clothing, comfort bags, reading, etc., to Capt. S. S. Nickerson, chaplain, 287 Hanover st. Bequests should read: "I give and bequeath to the Boston Seaman's Friend Society the sum of $——, to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said society." Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS.

That idea of raising church extension funds by steam is worthy of Chicago enterprise.

Those Minnesota Christians must be thoroughly consecrated, pocket-books and all, judging from reports of finances in certain of the churches.

A good suggestion for prayer meeting topics comes from Kansas Careful study of the church covenant would not come amiss in other congregations.

An Indiana church and pastor are to be congratulated on their new and tasteful equipment for service. And the best part of it was that all bills were paid before rededication.

That up-to-date Maine church deserves a large attendance of cyclists. The steed of steel, however tricksy on the road, when at rest is sufficiently lamblike in behavior to attend church as well as school.

The mutual helpfulness of that Chicago church and its neighboring seminary settlement is noteworthy. The experience gained by the visiting members must amount to a course in practical sociology.

The faith of that pastor in North Dakota, who tries to eke out his meager salary by farming, must be severely tried. Truly, what the silver bug spared hath the hailstorm devoured. We trust that through the bounty of Christian friends he may receive twice as much as he had aforetime.

The present is eminently fruitful in pleasant social devices for raising church funds. In many cases, as in New Hampshire this week, summer visitors join heartily with residents in this form of service. Such helpful, inspiring guests are always welcome and, as they return to their homes, leave behind many fragrant memories.

The summer, when interest in church work sometimes flags, is just the time to organize Sunday schools, and our Iowa friends evidently appreciate this fact. The Y. P. S. C. E., too, has been doing yeoman's service the past season, carrying on Sunday schools, holding cottage prayer meetings and in many cases assuming care of the regular church services.

NEW ENGLAND.

Massachusetts.

BOSTON.—There was a perceptible falling off in the number of clergymen from abroad heard in this city and its suburbs last Sunday, owing to the fact that a number of the pastors had returned from vacations and occupied their own pulpits. Rev. H. A. Stimson, D. D., of New York city preached at the Old South and Dr. John Wood of England at Harvard Church, Brookline; Rev. S. L. Loomis of Newark, N. J., was heard at Highland Church, Roxbury, and Rev. F. H. Means of Windham, Ct., at Second Church, Dorchester, while the people of Franklin Street Church, Somerville, listened to Rev. C. H. Cutler of Bangor, Me.

WARREN.—The council that dismissed Rev. H. G. Hale last week put on record its appreciation of his faithful and efficient labors covering five years and accruing to the benefit of the church and the community in many particulars. He takes up his residence in Brookline at once, preparatory to his assuming charge of the new enterprise there.

SPRINGFIELD.—First. Rev. F. L. Goodspeed will be in his pulpit Sept. 6. During his absence an interesting series of topics has been used in the prayer meetings on the lives of Saul, David and Solomon, the Psalms and the preparation of the Old Testament for the New.

Maine.

ELLSWORTH FALLS.—The C. E. Society has decided to hold its meetings for the present in connection with the regular midweek prayer meeting. The music for the Sunday evening service is in charge of a committee of five, each retiring committee appointing the next to serve. Five bulletin boards for church notices have been placed in conspicuous places about town.

BUXTON.—Bar Mills. Rev. C. H. Gates, pastor here for the last eight years, has resigned on account of ill health. The resignation will take effect the last of September.——Rockland. Rev. C. A. Moore has been elected chaplain of the Tillson Light Infantry. The company attended his church in a body Aug. 23.

NORTH BRIDGTON.—The meeting house has been renovated within and without, and a new vestry built, the expense of the whole amounting to over $2,000. A dedicatory service was held Aug. 18, Rev. D. P. Hatch preaching the sermon.

The edifice at Bucksport, which has been closed for several months for repairs and decoration, was reopened Aug. 23.——Rev. Henry Blodgett, D. D., for so many years a missionary of the A. B. C. F. M., spoke recently at Bluehill on the work in China.——Booker T Washington of Tuskegee, Ala., has given an address at Bar Harbor on Negro Education.——An apartment under the pulpit for storing bicycles is provided by the church in Winterport.

New Hampshire

DUNBARTON.—The pastor, Rev. A. K. Gleason, has been ill for the last three or four weeks with rheumatic fever. Meanwhile his people have worshiped with the Baptists, whose pastor also has taken charge of the midweek meeting. The summer visitors of this hill town have recently shown their friendly interest in the church by furnishing a delightful musical and literary entertainment in the town hall, which was enjoyed by all present and netted more than $20. A Longfellow social was given later, proving enjoyable and financially successful.

JAFFREY.—A birthday musical, with a choice program, was recently held here, proving an enjoyable occasion and netting nearly $100. Later the women held their annual fair, realizing as net proceeds about $109. Rev. W. E. Strong of Jackson, Mich., and Rev. H. S. Bliss of Montclair, N. J., who are spending their vacations here, have recently occupied the pulpit, to the general satisfaction of the people. A family reunion of Livingstones, of four different States, was lately held at the parsonage.

STODDARD.—A promising movement has been inaugurated through interested friends for the purchase of a new bell and the renovation of church and parsonage.

Mrs. Sarah A. Webber, late of Concord, left a legacy of $400 to the State Missionary Society.

Vermont.

BELLOWS FALLS.—Ever since the church assumed self-support, more than 20 years ago, it has been known as a working organization, and has been receiving almost constantly accessions, indicating a steady and substantial growth. Beside the home Sunday school, which has always been vigorous and flourishing, it now sustains three branch schools in different parts of the town of Rockingham. One teacher in the home school, to strengthen the ties binding his class together, has been accustomed annually to give past and present members of the class a reception at his hospitable home, soliciting for the occasion from those unable to be present some communication expressive of their interest to be read. Past and present pastors are also honored with an invitation. Refreshments and reminiscences are always in order, and a pleasant and profitable evening is thus spent together. The church has recently been sorely afflicted by the death, after a long and painful illness, of Mrs. Sarah A. Phelps, for nearly forty years a highly-esteemed and useful member, and long the efficient president of the Ladies' Benevolent Society.

BRAINTREE.—The 80th anniversary of the circular conference, embracing at present 11 churches in Braintree, Randolph, Brookfield, Williamstown and Bethel, was held, Aug. 25, with the church on Braintree hill. The exercises were mainly reminiscent, the musical part of the program consisting largely of old-time hymns and anthems.

Rhode Island.

BRISTOL.—Rev. H. A. Stevens has again tendered his resignation, to take effect after the three months' required notice. Last December he resigned but was persuaded to withdraw his action. He has been pastor for more than 14 years. His letter to the church, read Aug. 12, recognizes the lack of appreciation of his endeavors and of the cordial co-operation essential to successful work. In December last 119 voted out of a total of 137 were against accepting his resignation.

PROVIDENCE.—Central. During the absence in Europe of Dr. E. C. Moore, Prof. George Moore of Andover has been oftenest in the pulpit. Union services with the First Baptist Church have been held during July and August.

Connecticut.

NEW LONDON.—Second. The excursion to the quarters of the Harvard crew on the Thames, Aug. 27, was attended by a serious accident, resulting in the death of one woman and severely injuring a number of others. The party was just going ashore when some of the boys removed the blocking to a hand car used in the quarries, and it came bowling down the steep hill toward the crowd on the dock, giving them no opportunity to get away. One woman was knocked down by the car and injured so that she died two hours later. Another was severely injured, but will recover in time. Thirteen others were precipitated off the dock into the river, but as the boat hands and swimmers in the party jumped in to the rescue, all were taken out safely, though at first it seemed as though some must surely drown, as only one of the 13 could swim.

WINCHESTER.—Not for a quarter of a century has such a momentous event occurred in this lofty little village as the celebration, Aug. 26, of the 125th anniversary of the organization of the first ecclesiastical society and the incorporation of the town. Over 1,000 invitations were issued, the town was gayly decorated and all the residents kept open house. The noteworthy features of the morning program were an historical address by Rev. Arthur Goodenough, pastor here for 26 years, and a paper on the original church members by Mr. B. W. Pettibone. A banquet was served at noon, and speeches in the afternoon closed the celebration. The church now worships in its third meeting house.

WEST HARTFORD.—A committee has been appointed to ascertain as far as possible the exact conditions accompanying all funds and legacies now held in trust by the church for benevolent purposes. It is also proposed to turn over to the church all legacies now held and managed by the ecclesiastical society, and that may hereafter be left to it. At the preliminary meeting of the bazar committee it was voted to appropriate $75 from the amount to be received to the Free Library, and to equally divide the remainder between the ecclesiastical society and the parsonage fund.

DANIELSON.—Rev. Joseph Danielson of Southington occupied the pulpit for the last two Sundays, being greeted by large audiences. Mr. Danielson is a descendant of the family after whom this borough was named, and was a former member of the Westfield church here.

WOODBRIDGE.—The oldest house in town, and one of the most interesting, was burned last week. It was built in 1697 by Rev. Mr. Woodbridge, the first pastor here, after whom the town was named, and its 200th anniversary was to have been celebrated next year.

BRISTOL.—Open air meetings were held by the Swedish Congregationalists Aug. 30, both morning and afternoon, with large attendance. The Swedish string band of New Britain assisted, and several out-of-town clergymen took part in the services.

WESTBROOK.—Rev. E. B. Sanford, D. D., formerly pastor here and author of a History of Connecticut, is moving his household goods to New Haven, where he will reside in the future.

COLCHESTER.—On account of the severe illness of his daughter, Rev. E. G. Stone of Westchester was unable to supply the pulpit Aug. 23, and in consequence no service was held.

SIMSBURY.—One of the boarders at the McLean Seminary is Rev. Dr. Robert Crawford who is 96 years of age. He was formerly pastor of the church at Deerfield, Mass.

STANWICH.—The women of the church netted $109 at their recent annual fair, one of the most successful ever held.

The Connecticut Sunday School Association has been active during the spring and summer in organization and in evangelistic work in neighborhoods remote from places of worship. September will be devoted to a conference campaign covering the entire field. The State secretary, W. H. Hall of West Hartford, has prepared a schedule of about 150 conferences, to be held in series of eight or nine meetings each, for the most part in the smaller country communities; and it is proposed to carry forward an active and thorough campaign, in which all the officers of the association will participate.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

BINGHAMTON.—Plymouth loses its pastor, Rev. W. H. Kephart, who resigns to accept a call to the North Church, New York city. Mr. Kephart has served Plymouth Church acceptably for seven years.

CORTLAND.—In addition to other extensive repairs a new carpet is being laid in the audience-room.

MAINE.—After being closed four weeks for repairs the meeting house was reopened Aug. 30. The walls have been newly papered and a new carpet laid.

THE INTERIOR.

Ohio.

MADISON.—Rev. A. D. Barber, one of our oldest pastors, has been aided for three weeks by Evangelist Reed, his spiritual son. Mr. Reed assisted in admitting 13 members last Sunday on confession. One of the converts was a man 86 years old, the same age as his pastor. Father Barber took the pastorate of this struggling church a few months since, and is building it up in courage and spiritual power. The excessively hot weather has not prevented his walking several miles daily in pastoral visitation.

CINCINNATI.—Walnut Hills. The pastor, Rev. Sydney Strong, before going abroad was a regular contributor to the Cincinnati Commercial Tribune, under the heading The Preacher about Town. Now that he is in Europe his papers are printed under the title The Preacher Abroad. He is making a bicycle tour of England with a party of seven boys from Chicago, Columbus, Mansfield and Cincinnati.

Illinois.

CHICAGO.—Tabernacle. This, sometimes called the Neighborhood Church, is the only English-speaking Protestant congregation in its ward and has peculiarly close and friendly relations with the settlement at Chicago Commons. The pastor and his family live there and the Sunday school superintendent, the principal of the industrial schools and the teacher of the adult Bible class are also among the residents, most of whom attend this church; while, on the other hand, many members of the congregation frequent the Commons and assist in its varied departments. The settlement issues a bright monthly describing its work, entitled Chicago Commons.——Washington Park. Services of a revival nature were begun Aug. 23 with good attendance and promising results. They are under the direction of Rev. C. F. Van Auken, aided by John R. Bursch as a singer. They were held four nights in succession in a hall on State Street, where the church now meets, waiting patiently till at least a part of its new building shall be ready for occupancy. In the absence of Dr. W. D. McKenzie Rev. A. M. Ingraham has served the people. What the church needs is sufficient funds to give it a suitable edifice. The season is favorable to building, but it is difficult to secure money. Even the Chicago City Missionary Society is crippled for lack of means. In hope of adding a little to its treasury a few enterprising members of Plymouth Church arranged an excursion for Aug 29 to Milwaukee and back on one of the largest lake steamers, all profits to go to the society. The excursion brought a large number of pleasant people together for a day's outing. The amount of profit is not yet known.

Indiana.

KOKOMO.—The church lot is of unusual size and beauty, central and valuable. Three buildings, meeting house, parsonage and pastor's study, have long occupied a portion of it, and large trees and a lawn have made it attractive. Early in 1896 money was raised for extensive improvements. The two minor buildings have been removed, a large Sunday school room now joins the south side of the church, from which it is separated by rolling partitions. In the rear of this is a kitchen and the new study is to the north. The edifice has new art windows, quartered oak pews and has been carpeted and frescoed throughout. A large vestibule has been added and a new choir loft built. The exterior has been remodeled and painted. The cost was $3,500. Services of rededication took place Aug. 30, with special music and a sermon by the pastor, Rev. R. J. Smith. The spacious interior is furnished and decorated in harmonious tints. All bills are paid and no special subscriptions were called for at the service.

WHITING.—This church, pastorless since April has been supplied in part by Evangelist W. B. Cullis and in part by students from Chicago Seminary and Moody's school. Several leading members have recently removed to Bayonne, N. J., the Standard Oil Company having a refinery at both places. Matters are brightening up, however; $60 was recently sent the C. C. B. S. The Y. P. S. C. E. is active. The large organ put in at dedication a year ago, not proving satisfactory, has been exchanged for a smaller one. Mr. Sewell, who is called to the pastorate, has supplied here several weeks and it is hoped that he will accept.

WASHINGTON.—Rev. Rocliffe Mackintosh has joined his wife in England for vacation, the trip being made possible by the gift of a friend. Miss Hattie D. Peabody is supplying the pulpit. She has studied at Oberlin and at a school for Christian workers in New York city.

Wisconsin.

RHINELANDER.—Union. The church celebrated its 10th anniversary Aug. 22, 23. Its early records were lost, but much of the history was recovered by correspondence with former pastors. The mission was started in 1883 by Deacon Tibbetts, "the gospel breaking plow," in North Wisconsin, but not until 1886 was it possible to organize, and then with only nine members. Two years later the resident membership was reduced to four, and for half of its his-

Continued on page 343.

Keep

Up your appetite, assist digestion, strengthen your nerves by making your blood pure, rich and nourishing with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Last spring my little girl had no appetite and was weak. I gave her one-half bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, which cured her. We will now take no other medicine but Hood's Sarsaparilla and recommend it to every one for weakness and loss of appetite."—WM. F. HANES, Brysonia, Pa.

HOOD'S
Sarsaparilla

Is the One True Blood Purifier. All druggists. $1.

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; easy to take, easy to operate. 25 cents.

EXTREMES MEET.

For a dozen years bedsteads have been made with a convexed footboard, but apparently no one has thought of going to the other extreme and attempting the concave form.

Our experiment in this direction is shown herewith. Whether it is an artistic success or not is a point on which opinions may differ, but the enormous popularity of this new pattern is not open to question.

To meet the unusual demand we have reproduced this Concave Bedstead in three different woods—oak, white maple and curly birch. The very oddity of the concaved lines, repeated as they are in all the detail of the pattern, is sure to attract the attention of each new beholder.

The same beauty which characterizes the Bedstead is present in the other pieces of the set, and one might travel far before discovering at low cost so unique and effective a suit of chamber furniture.

JUST ISSUED.—General Catalogue for 1896-97. Square octavo, 256 pp., 300 illustrations. Sent to any address on receipt of five 2-cent stamps for postage.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,
48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.

Continued from page 342.

tory as a church the office of deacon has been vacant for lack of male members. The history is a record of much tribulation, but finally the church has become self-supporting, with a resident membership of 70 and an excellent meeting house and parsonage. The anniversary sermon was preached Aug. 23 by Supt. T. G. Grassie. In the evening the pastor, Rev. J. H. Chandler, read a full history of beginnings in town and church.

THE WEST.

Minnesota.

BIG LAKE.—Meeting house and parsonage have been renovated for the coming of the new pastor, Rev. F. P. Ferguson. The church is a union of different denominations and all are heartily united in calling a new pastor, who has been upon the ground for a month. At Orrock, the out-station, there is great interest. More money has been pledged at both places than ever before. The widow of the former pastor, Rev. W. H. Evans, has been cared for by the church, a house having been built for her.

CAULDRUM.—A Swedish church has been organized here and a building is in progress of erection. With a little aid from the C. C. B. S. it is hoped to dedicate a house of worship costing $1,000. The people give liberally out of deep poverty.

CHOKIO.—A church building has been erected and seated with opera chairs. It is built by the people of the town without aid from the C. C. B. S. Church organization will follow soon. This is the result of the labors of Rev. H. A. Cotton of Graceville.

ROSE CREEK AND TAOPI.—These two yoked churches have been pastorless for a few months, but are taking steps to secure a minister. The parsonage at Rose Creek has been greatly improved during the year.

ST. PAUL.—Hazel Park. The church is greatly pleased with a grant of $500 voted by the C. C. B. S. This pays all indebtedness. Congregations and interest are increasing under the pastorate of Rev. T. A. Turner.

Kansas.

ATHOL.—This church of 70 members is the only one in town. During the eight years of its existence the members and community have steadily declined to favor the starting of any other church, this being amply sufficient for the population. The audiences are large, the average Sunday school attendance is 100, and from 35 to 60 persons attend the weekly prayer meeting. Although in western Kansas, the church is self-supporting and prospers temporally and spiritually.

TOPEKA.—First. The Church Covenant has served as a prayer meeting topic for several weeks. Interesting essays on the different obligations in this covenant have been read by members of the church. Free discussion of the various topics has deepened the impression, and the whole exercise has been permanently profitable.

ATWOOD.—The pastor has been laid aside for a few weeks by illness, but the church has been strengthened by a visit from Evangelist Veazie, who called on nearly all of the members and preached to a full house in the evening.

SEABROOK.—This church systematically reaches a wide rural territory. The pastor is planning to hold a revival meeting early in September in the home missionary tent in a country district five miles from Topeka.

MACON.—The people have purchased a schoolhouse, moved it several miles to the church lot, placed a foundation under it which provides a good room in the basement, and hope soon to hold services in it.

VALENCIA.—This field comprises two preaching stations, and the pastor also preaches at Willard. The work is more hopeful than at any previous period.

The recent revival meetings held by Rev. Messrs. Thompson and Hull in the home missionary tent in Meade County resulted in an awakening of religious interest over a wide territory, besides conversions and the reclamation of backsliders. They have opened the way for much permanent evangelizing work, and appeals for preaching services come from destitute sections at long distances from the missionary's home.

Nebraska.

FAIRFIELD.—This church, pastorless since the death of Rev. E. L. Sherman in May, has been maintaining its work with faithfulness and, now that the obligation to the late pastor is nearly met and the church is practically out of debt, a pastor will soon be secured. Mrs. Sherman and her family remain here, the eldest son being principal of the high school.

WAHOO.—Rev. W. H. Brearly has been camping with some of his people on the G. A. R. grounds at Lincoln. The church is making good progress, the Sunday school enrollment having reached 140. The Y. P. S. C. E. cares for two country Sunday schools.

ULYSSES.—The second pastoral year of Rev. B. F. Diffenbacher with this church will close Dec. 1. On Aug. 22 he was unanimously requested to serve another year, and a month's vacation was granted him.

LINCOLN.—Superintendent Bross, returning from a week's stay in Colorado, preached, Aug. 23, for First Church in the absence of Rev. Lewis Gregory, and in the evening for Vine Street Church.

North Dakota.

NIAGARA.—A severe hailstorm swept over this place Aug. 7, destroying nine-tenths of the crops. Rev. W. B. Cunningham, who is obliged to cultivate a small farm to supplement his salary, lost his entire harvest, leaving him with practically nothing to support his family of seven during the coming winter.

WILLISTON.—Rev. Geo. Extence closes excellent work here Aug. 31, and returns to his old home in Ontario. His departure is greatly regretted. He deserves much credit for his untiring efforts, in the face of many difficulties, to erect a house of worship.

ROSE VALLEY.—Rev. M. J. Totten, who has served here faithfully for two years, on account of failing health has decided to return to his former home in Canada. He is a man of sterling character and is universally respected.

HATTON.—The little church organized here Aug. 16 is the only one in which English is spoken in this growing town in one of the richest agricultural districts in the State. It promises to do a work worthy of its field.

MICHIGAN CITY.—This place, together with the other points served by Rev. U. G. Rich, suffered severely by the hailstorm of Aug. 7. At Crary, however, the people hope to complete the new church building.

PINGREE.—The pastor, Rev. Evan Halsall, is leading a movement for erecting a house of worship. At Melville, on the same field, a new foundation is being placed under both meeting house and parsonage.

The new meeting house at Rose Hill was dedicated Aug. 23, Rev. J. F. Dudley, D. D., preaching the sermon.

Oklahoma.

Evangelist L. J. Parker has traveled over 200 miles during the last two months, visiting and preaching at Paradise, Enid, Turkey Creek and other places. Accessions have followed his work at each of the churches named, 30 new members uniting at Paradise.

Continued on page 346.

There's no Reason Why your skirt should look shabby
if you use
S·H·& M·
REGISTERED TRADE MARK.
BIAS
VELVETEEN
SKIRT BINDINGS.
They protect the skirt and the shoes and give the richest and most elegant finish.
Don't fail to look for S. H. & M. on the label of every bolt and of the reel especially. Refuse all others.
If your dealer WILL NOT supply you we will.
Samples showing 1 bias and materials mailed free.
"Home Dressmaking Made Easy," a new 72 page book by Miss Emma M. Hooper, of the Ladies' Home Journal, tells in plain words how to make dresses at home without previous training: mailed for 25c.
S. H. & M. Co., P. O. Box 699, N. Y. City.

Lace Curtains
"The Princess" Lace Curtain is one of the novelties of the season. You should see them. We start them this week at $3.50 and $5.00
Per Pair.
Irish Point Lace Curtains.
159 pairs only—$4.00 quality Irish Point Lace Curtains, cream color. This is a curtain which we cannot duplicate, for they can't be made for this price—
Only $2.50 Pair.
Third Floor—Take Elevator.
Wm. S. Butler & Co.,
TREMONT STREET, BOSTON.

Handsome Lamps and China Dinner Sets.
We have ready for exhibition the largest, most valuable and comprehensive stock of FINE LAMPS and DINNER SETS ever shown by us. The former display is on the Gallery Floor and the latter in the Dinner Set Department (3d floor). Whether fine table services complete, course sets, or matchings to old sets, intending buyers or those interested in seeing the best productions of the potters' and glass makers' art will find an extraordinary collection. Prices were never lower than now on Crockery, Glass and Lamps.
Visitors will also find new specimens of —Genuine O'd Blue Delft Plaques—
—Doulton Loving Cups—
—Rich Carlsbad Glass Loving Cups—
—Rich Cut Crystal Glass—
—Copeland Pitchers with Football Scenes—
—Boston Historical Plates—
—Boston Souvenir Pitchers—
—London China Tea Infusers—
—London Pudding Dish Collars—
—German Beer Flagons—
—French Jardinières—
—Rich Vienna China—
—Punch and Lemonade Bowls—
—Fine Lamps and Shades—
—German Beer Mugs—
—Camphor Wood Chests—
—Umbrella and Cane Holders—
—Palm Pots and Pedestals—
—English Maxims China—
—China Whist Prizes—
—Rich Fancy Pitchers—
—Rich Chocolate Pitchers—
Jones, McDuffee & Stratton Co.,
China, Glass and Lamp Merchants,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
120 FRANKLIN.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

Although the volume of general business has not increased during the interval since our last report, the feeling in financial and commercial circles is somewhat improved. The cause is undoubtedly found in the large imports of gold from abroad, the first from natural causes since 1892. Were the political situation not so uncertain we should very likely experience a boom in stocks and a great access of confidence in business circles as a result of these gold imports and the prospects of their continuance.

Until after election, or until it becomes more certain than it is at present that McKinley will be elected, men of affairs will be cautious in making new commitments or in extending present operations. However, the gold imports have relieved some of the tension in the money market, and monetary rates are easier nominally if not in actual quotation. Names and collateral are still scrutinized with great care, and commercial paper is difficult of sale. Banks are taking care of their own customers, but they do not extend credit beyond that circle.

As to the movement of general trade some Western centers report larger orders for merchandise, which come as a result of the marketing of the crops. The jobbing class, however, prefers to let the manufacturer carry stocks, and the latter is and has been resorting to curtailment of production to induce healthier markets. Under such conditions it is not surprising that prices as a rule should be both low and easy. The cotton manufacturing industry shows little or no improvement, and woolen mills are merely filling orders as they are received. The large number of failures reflects the poor state of trade, and they constitute one of the most disturbing factors of the day. Bank clearings for the United States form another index to the extent of the depression, aggregating last week only $748,000,000, nearly eight per cent. less than the week previous, and fifteen per cent. less than for the corresponding period of 1895.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Between October, 1895, and June of the present year the schools of Massachusetts showed an increase of enrollment of 11,289, making the total 326,175 in 1,915 schools. There are 39,162 officers and teachers reported. The percentage of population in the Protestant evangelical schools is 13.7.

Indiana started during the past year an average of seven new schools every week, or one for every day in the year, Allen County leading with twenty-four. In their organized work the State ranks as fourth of those who have Banner Counties, being excelled only by New York with 60, Kansas with 39 and Illinois with 38.

New Jersey enjoyed the benefit of three summer schools of primary methods. Two of these continued for one week each, and were held at Asbury Park and Ocean City. The programs were made up to touch the work in a very plain, practical way, and the best workers from several States were among the speakers and teachers.

House to house visitation will be undertaken in Orleans County and Grand Isle, Vt., on Sept. 23, and the Massachusetts State committee has recommended that the two weeks from Sept. 14 to 26 be set apart for as thorough a visitation in each town as circumstances will permit. A number of localities have already planned to undertake the work.

"Rally Sunday" will be observed more generally this year than usual. Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts and Connecticut have taken formal action, through their interdenominational State organizations, and have adopted the fourth Sunday, Sept 27, as "Rally Sunday." Indiana and Ohio will also observe the same day, and a suggestion has been made that a "Rally Day" be as universally adopted as a Children's Day.

Several States hold their annual conventions in the summer. Among those which did so this year are Mississippi at Wesson and Nebraska at Omaha, in July. In August six States held their meetings during the last week—Kentucky at Owensboro, North Carolina at Chapel Hill, South Carolina at Florence and Missouri at Jefferson City on the same days, and middle Tennessee at Clarksburg and Arizona at Flagstaff. Not a single State holds its annual convention this month.

Four of the New England States meet in convention during October. Massachusetts at Northampton and Connecticut at Hartford on the 6th to the 8th; Maine at Saco and Vermont at Burlington on the 13th to the 15th. New Hampshire meets in Nashua, Nov. 10-12, and Rhode Island at Providence, Nov. 13, 14. All are annual meetings except Connecticut, which is biennial.

"After the Primary—What?" This question has greatly troubled the superintendents of many schools. At the International Convention in Boston Mrs. M. G. Kennedy gave an admirable address at one session which was not in manuscript or stenographically reported. In response to numerous requests she has written it out in full and it appears in the September issue of The Evangel. It will repay careful reading.

WHO CAN SPARE SOME HYMN-BOOKS?

I visited a chapel recently that needed some. When a book was handed me I felt that I was depriving some better person of the privilege of singing. The chapel has about thirty and needs about thirty more. The book is Songs for the Sanctuary, edition 1872, with Responsive Service at the end. As some one, evidently, gave these, could not some one else kindly look in his church attic and find a few of these books to help out this needy chapel? Any sent to me will be gladly placed where they will do the most good. THOMAS TODD,

7-A Beacon Street, Boston, Mass.

WOMEN who are weak and nervous, who have no appetite and cannot sleep, find strength and vigor in Hood's Sarsaparilla.

I'LL TRY GAZE'S TOURS GOOD IDEA.
52 YEARS OF SUCCESS
Escorted Parties leave as follows October 6:

ROUND THE WORLD	All Included	Choice of Routes	Programs Free By Post
Southern Europe and Italy	By American Line	By North German Lloyd	Sept. 30 and Oct. 3 & 31
Excursions to Rome	Sept. 19 and Oct. 10	Special Rates All Included

53 DAYS $280.00 UPWARD.
60 DAYS $450.00 UPWARD.
Write for Programs of Oriental Tours. Also First Class.
113 DAYS $860.00, All Included.
Independent Travel Tickets Everywhere. Good Steamer Berths by all Lines.
WRITE FOR TOURIST GAZETTE AND SAVE MONEY.
Post Free Upon Application.
H. GAZE & SONS, Ltd.,
113 Broadway, New York, or
W. H. EAVES, New England Agent,
201 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
PROGRAMS WILL BE FURNISHED NOW.

BARON VON LIEBIG Long ago predicted that the excessive starch flour eating would result in disaster to the race, the truth of which is now being plainly seen in many directions. THE FRANKLIN MILLS FINE FLOUR of the ENTIRE WHEAT contains all the Phosphates and is Nutritio in the highest sense. Always ask for "Franklin Mills." All leading Grocers Sell it.

Financial.

Guaranty Trust Co.
of New York.
Formerly New York Guaranty and Indemnity Co
Mutual Life Building,
65 CEDAR STREET, N. Y.
CAPITAL, - - - - - $2,000,000
SURPLUS, - - - - - - $2,000,000
ACTS AS TRUSTEE FOR CORPORATIONS, FIRMS AND INDIVIDUALS, AS GUARDIAN, EXECUTOR AND ADMINISTRATOR. TAKES ENTIRE CHARGE OF REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATES.
INTEREST ALLOWED ON DEPOSITS subject to check or on certificate.
WALTER G. OAKMAN, President.
ADRIAN ISELIN, JR., Vice-President.
GEORGE B. TURNBULL, 2d Vice-President.
HENRY A. MURRAY, Treas. and Sec.
J. NELSON BORLAND, Assist. Treas. and Sec.
DIRECTORS.

Samuel D. Babcock,	Adrian Iselin, Jr.,
George F. Baker,	Augustus D. Juilliard,
George S. Bowdoin,	James N. Jarvie,
Frederic Cromwell,	Richard A. McCurdy,
Walter R. Gillette,	Walter G. Oakman,
Robert Goelet,	Alexander E. Orr,
G. G. Haven,	Henry H. Rogers,
Oliver Harriman,	Henry W. Smith,
R. Somers Hayes,	H. McK. Twombly,
Charles R. Henderson,	Frederick W. Vanderbilt,
	William C. Whitney.

7 PER CENT. NET.
First Mortgage Loans on Improved Farms in the Wonderfully Fertile Red River Valley
and in North Dakota and Minnesota. 20 years of experience in the business, and an actual residence of over 8 years in the Red River Valley and of over 22 in Minnesota and North Dakota. A personal knowledge of lands and values. Loans only made to industrious, thrifty farmers, on well improved farms. I give my personal supervision to the business. Loans made in your name and interest coupon-notes and mortgages and applications sent to you and held by you. Interest collected by me and forwarded to you by New York Check. Funds now earning you only 2, 3, or 4 per cent. in Savings Banks will here earn you 7 per cent.—about doubling your income. Remit funds for investment by New York or Boston Draft, or by personal check payable to my order. Address
E. P. CATES,
2628 Portland Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

£ REMITTANCES to foreign countries can be made in
Cheque Bank Cheques.
Best form for travelers.
Ask for circular
Agency of the U. S. Cheque Bank, L'd.
FREDERICK W. PERRY, Manager,
40 and 42 Wall St., N. Y.

Subscribers' Wants.

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

Church Wanted. A successful minister desires a church. Age, 39. Salary not less than nine hundred. Address Rev. A. L. Brown, Dayton, Wyo.

Graduate of Smith College desires position to teach. Experienced in families and private schools. Address until Sept. 7, Box 283, Franklin Falls, N. H.

Rooms and Board. Near to Boston, in a clergyman's family, two rooms and board may be secured by addressing N. A. S., Congregationalist Office, Congregational House, Boston, Mass.

Teacher. Wanted, by a high school graduate, a position to teach Algebra, Geometry, or Pianoforte, with the opportunity of study in higher Mathematics. Correspondence solicited. Miss A. S. KEZER, Kittery Point, Me. Gerrish Estate.

Religious Notices.

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, etc., published under this heading at ten cents a line.

LAY COLLEGE FOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS, Station R, Boston, fits for all kinds of Christian work.

THE REV. DR. FRANCIS E. MARSTEN, of Columbus, O., may be addressed by correspondents until Oct. 1 at Attleboro Falls, Mass.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the Society at New York.

JAMES W. ELWELL, President.
REV. W. C. STITT Secretary.
W. C. STURGES, Treasurer.

WEEKLY REGISTER.

Calls.

ACKERMAN, Arthur W., Sheffield, Ill., accepts call to First Ch., Portland, Ore.
DIFFENBACHER, Benj. F., to remain another year at Ulysses, Neb. Accepts.
FERGUSON, F. P., to Big Lake, Minn. Accepts.
JENKINS, J. Alex, formerly of Mt. Carmel, Pa., to Pacific Ch., St. Paul, Minn. Accepts, to begin work Sept. 1.
JONES, Fred. V., to remain another year at San Mateo, Cal.
LANGDALE, Thos. G., declines call to remain at Clark, S. D., and accepts one to De Smet.
LUCE, Frank L., Boston, Mass., to Broadway Ch., Fall River. Declines.
OEHLER, Fred. H., accepts call to remain another year at New Richland, Minn.
PRATT, N. Miller, Barton, Vt., accepts call to Bethany Ch., New York, N. Y.
PRESTON, Chas. L., Sheridan, Mich., to Grand Blanc.
SEWALL, Jno. T., Clyde Ch., Kansas City, Mo., accepts call to First Ch., N. Brookfield, Mass.
SEWELL, B. Frank, Lyonsville, Ill., to Whiting, Ind.
SWAIN, Carl J., Sauk Rapids, Minn., accepts call to Lyle.
WHEELER, Edgar C., Yale Divinity School, to Ellensburg, Wn.

Ordinations and Installations.

BLUE, Jas M., o. Lawrence, Mass., July 14. Sermon, Rev. C. R. Brown; other parts, Rev. Messrs. J. W. Churchill, D. D., F. R. Shipman, H. E. Oxnard, Fred. Page.
FRASURE, Chas. A., o. Westmoreland, N. Y., Aug. 26. Sermon, Rev Jas. Chambers, D. D.; other parts, Rev. Messrs. Q. J. Collin, Nathan Allen, Walter Mitchell, C. W. Mason, W. A. Bray and S. D. Miller.
HENSEL, Wm. A., o. Spencer, Neb., Aug. 19. Sermon, Rev. J. F. Bacon; other parts, Rev. Messrs. G. T. Noyce, Chas Anderson, Prof. Geo. Hinman. Mr. Hensel is pastor at Spencer and Butte.
KLINE, Marion A., o. p. Wyanet, Ill., June 10. Sermon, Rev. A. W. Ackerman; other parts, Rev. Messrs. E. F. Schwab, C. C. Jessee, Edwin More, Jr., and Wm. Anderson.

Resignations.

DOANE, Frank B., Dayton, Wn.
GATES, Chas. H., Bar Mills, Buxton, Me., to take effect Oct. 1.
HUMFREYS, John, Grand Haven, Mich., to take effect Sept 1.
LYTLE, Jas. A., S. Williamstown, Mass.
MASON, Philip H., Rico, Col.
MATHER, J. Bruce, Harlan, Io.
NORTON, Edwin F., Almont, Mich.
QUEEN, Chas. N., Plymouth Ch., Guthrie, Okl.
RUSSELL, Frank H., Kirwin, Kan., to take effect Sept. 15.
SHEARER, Herman A., Hobart and Ross, Ind., to take effect Oct 1.
STEVENS, Henry A., Bristol, R. I.
THOMAS, Jno. A., Fifield and Butternut, Wis.
TOTTEN, Matthew J., Rose Valley, N D., to return to Canada.
TURNER, Jonathan, Gaylord, Mich., to pursue theological studies.

Dismissions.

HALE, Harris G., First Ch., Warren, Mass., Aug. 25.

Churches Organized.

CAULDRUM, Minn., Swedish.
DE RUYTER, N. Y., 9 Aug., 23 members.
HATTON, N. D., 16 Aug., six members. Rev. J. T. Killen of Portland is in charge.

Miscellaneous.

ARMES, Josiah L., and wife, of Nashua, N. H., celebrated, Aug. 11, the 55th anniversary of their marriage, by an informal reunion of their large family.
COLLINS, Jno. C., had his pocket-book stolen at the railway station in New Haven, Aug. 19. His loss was $66.
COVELL, Arthur J., leaves Waterbury, Vt., having received a Williams College fellowship at Harvard—not a Harvard scholarship, as stated last week.
CUMMINGS, Geo. H., of Thompson, Ct., has been presented with a bicycle, which will be of great service to him in getting about in his parish.
MCGREGOR, Duncan, of Antwerp, N. Y., was recently surprised by his people with the gift of an Overland bicycle.
MCHENRY, Feargus G., and wife, have returned to their people in Cortland, Neb., after a month's vacation among the mountains in Colorado.
NEWCOMB, Osra R., has closed his year's work at Hill, N. H., and returned to his home in Ohio. Rev. Mr. Frye of Ohio is to serve the church as acting pastor for one year from Sept. 1.
PALMER, Wm. S., of Lebanon, Ct., has been spending a part of his vacation at Narragansett Pier and a part at Silver Lake, Brandon, Vt. The 16th ult. he preached in Phillips Ch., So. Boston.
PATCHIN, John, and wife, N Olmstead, O., celebrated their golden wedding, Aug. 27, receiving numerous rich gifts. All their children, several grandchildren and many friends were present. Mr. Patchin's ministry has extended over fifty years and he is still an able preacher.
ROGERS, Walter P., has accepted an invitation to preach for two months at Groveland, Minn.
STROUGH, Francis A., of Albany, N. Y., is supplying at Tannersville during August.

POND'S EXTRACT, used forty years for pain by physicians. This success stamps every bottle of the Genuine.

AMONG the beautiful novelties in pottery are the small trays having photographic underglaze pictures of celebrities, the likenesses being as perfect as the photographs and imperishable except by percussion. Those just landed by Jones, McDuffee & Stratton have Governor Wolcott, ex-Gov. George D. Robinson and Phillips Brooks.

THE RAGE FOR NOVELTY.—For over three years the craze for novelty in furniture has been the ruling passion in every purchaser. "Give us something new!" has been the cry in every furniture warerooms. Perhaps there is no place in this city where so many novelties are shown in furniture as at the Paine warerooms on Canal Street, and among their latest interesting pieces is a concaved bedstead. This is simply a reversal of the usual convex form of framing, but it is surprising how attractive is this new design, which has become immediately popular.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR, ECKSTEIN } Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, BRADLEY, BROOKLYN, JEWETT, ULSTER, UNION
SOUTHERN, SHIPMAN } Chicago.
COLLIER, MISSOURI, RED SEAL, SOUTHERN } St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS. CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

IF YOU DON'T KNOW, ask the practical, responsible painter—ask anyone whose business it is to know—and he will tell you to use Pure White Lead and Pure Linseed Oil. They make the best and most durable paint. To be sure of getting examine the brand (see list genuine brands). For colors use the NATIONAL LEAD CO.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors. No trouble to make or match a shade.

Pure White Lead

Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades, forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New York.

ANY ONE CAN COOK WITH A
GLENWOOD RANGE

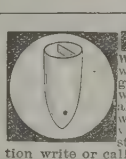
As it is fitted with a THERMOMETER attached to the oven door, that indicates the exact heat in the oven at all times.

For sale in all prominent cities and towns throughout New England.

MADE BY WEIR STOVE COMPANY, TAUNTON, MASS.

ESTABLISHED 1836.
ISAAC RILEY,
Successor to Baird & Riley,
PLUMBER AND SANITARY ENGINEER
85 Joy St., Near Cambridge St., Boston.
Telephone, Haymarket 294.

DROPSY TREATED FREE Positively CURED with Vegetable Remedies. Have cured many thousand cases called hopeless. From first dose symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two-thirds of all symptoms are removed. BOOK of testimonials of miraculous cures sent FREE. 10 Days Treatment Free by mail.
Drs. Green & Sons, Specialists, ATLANTA, GA.



DEAF-NESS & head noises relieved by Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums—helps where medicine fails; stops the progress of deafness; concentrates sound waves to one point upon Natural Drum; also takes the place of Natural Drums when wholly or partially destroyed; invisible, comfortable, safe—no wire or strings to irritate. For full information write or call for 144-page book on Deafness and Testimonials, FREE. WILSON EAR DRUM CO.,
Offices { 335 Trust Bldg., Louisville, Ky.
R. 351, 1122 Broadway, New York.

Does Your Hair Fall Out?

Is it getting thin—lessening in volume? If so, I can help you. If totally bald do not write. Select family patronage for ten years. Send self-addressed stamped envelope to Miss RACHEL T. WYATT, Centerville, Mass.

Grand National Prize of 16,600 FRANCS at Paris
QUINA-LAROCHE

Possesses in the highest degree the entire active properties of Peruvian Bark. Endorsed by the medical faculty as the best remedy for FEVER AND AGUE, MALARIA, POORNESS OF THE BLOOD, GENERAL DEBILITY and WASTING DISEASES; INCREASES THE APPETITE, STRENGTHENS THE NERVES and builds up the entire system.

Paris: 22 Rue Drouot
New York:
E. FOUGERA & CO.,
26-30 N. William St.

The Congregationalist
. . SERVICES . .
THIRTY-THREE SERVICES READY.
100 Copies, 60 Cents, postpaid.
THE CONGREGATIONALIST,
1 Somerset Street, Boston.

"THOUGHTLESS FOLKS HAVE THE HARDEST WORK, BUT QUICK WITTED PEOPLE USE SAPOLIO

Continued from page 343.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

SAN FRANCISCO.—Rev. Henry Kingman and family have been here on the way to their field of labor in Northern China. Sufficiently restored in health after two years' rest, he gladly returns to his missionary work.

SAN MATEO.—Rev. F. V. Jones has returned, after an absence of three months on account of his eyes. At the annual meeting just held he was asked to continue his services. Great success has attended his labors.

HUMBOLDT.—Miss M. F. Williams, president of the Young Woman's Branch, has been making a tour of the county, speaking to the six churches of our order and greatly interesting them in foreign missions.

Bay Conference held a delightful meeting in Third Church, San Francisco, Aug. 11. The was The Sabbath, discussed under the hea Value, Dangers Threatening, and Preservat

Oregon.

PORTLAND.—First. Rev. W. H. Day of Chicago supplied this pulpit Aug. 16. Rev. A. W. Ackerman, Sheffield, Ill., has accepted the call given him. He will be with the church Sept. 13.—Hassalo Street. Rev. C. H. Curtis is improving his vacation by aiding Supt. R. A. Rowley of the C. S. S. and P. S. in some of the outlying districts of Clatsop County.

SALEM.—Central. The pastor of this mission church, Rev. P. S. Knight, who organized it over two years ago and has ministered to it ever since without salary, has been appointed by State authorities superintendent of the deaf and dumb school.

ASTORIA.—Services have been regularly maintained all summer with fairly good congregations, all things considered, and the pastor, Rev. E. S. Bollinger, has been greatly encouraged.

FOREST GROVE.—Rev. Alonzo Rogers was granted four weeks' vacation, but services have been maintained regularly. Supt. C. F. Clapp supplied part of the time.

Washington.

PORT ANGELES.—This church, Rev. G. W. Nelson, pastor, has been providing for the sailors of the naval squadron now in the harbor, as a substitute for the saloon, a pleasantly decorated room near the dock, where ice cream, cake, coffee and other light refreshments are offered to the seamen as they come ashore. It is hoped that this will profit both its patrons and the church. Admiral Beardslee has five ships for special training drills. A small floating Endeavor Society is found aboard the Philadelphia, and joint meetings have been held with it by the "on shore" C. E. Societies.

QUILLAYUTE.—The Puddefoot Church dedicated its new chapel Aug. 16, Supt Samuel Greene of the C. S. S. and P. S. and Supt. and Mrs. A. J. Bailey of the H. M. S. assisting. These people, through the increasing influence of their pastor, Rev. R W. Fletcher, and his family have erected at great sacrifice an exceedingly neat chapel. They feel grateful to the C. C. B. S. for its grant of $300. The visiting friends spent three or four days in the vicinity holding meetings at every out-station.

Marriages.

The charge for marriage notices is twenty-five cents.

GILMORE—DUGANNE—In Valley Springs, S. D., by Pres. H. K. Warren of Yankton College, Rev. William C. Gilmore, pastor of the Congregational church, and Nellie M. Duganne, both of Valley Springs.

Deaths.

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

CRAFTS—In Pittsburg, Pa., Aug. 2, suddenly, of heart disease, Walter Crafts of Columbus, O., formerly of West Newton, Mass., aged 57 yrs.

HYDE—In Pottsville, Pa., Aug. 18, Adeline Eliza Whitcomb, wife of Col. Breed Noyes Hyde, daughter of the late Samuel Whitcomb of Springfield, Vt., and sister of William W. Whitcomb of Boston, aged 62 yrs. Her faith was unswerving and her death a sleep of peace. Springfield (Vt.) Recorder please copy.

SMITH—In Agawam, Mass., Aug. 27, Adelia May, daughter of Cornelius W. and Mary L. Smith, aged 22 yrs.

TUCK—In Coral, Mich., Aug. 16, Rev. Mark W. Tuck aged 69 yrs. He spent thirty-two years in the ministry before he was obliged, by ill health, to retire from active service.

WHEELER—In Worcester, Aug. 21, Sarah H., wife of Henry M. Wheeler, and a member of Central Church, aged 65 yrs. She left two children, Henry H., of Pomona, Cal., and Fanlie T., wife of Professor Eaton of Phillips Academy, Andover.

REV. MERRICK KNIGHT,

Who died at his home in West Hartford, Ct., Aug. 10, was born in Northampton, Mass., Jan. 15, 1817, and received his academic education at Monson Academy and Amherst College, graduating at the latter in the class of 1846. He at once began his studies in theology at the Theological Institute of Connecticut, now Hartford Theological Seminary, and was graduated in 1849. His ministerial life of more than forty years was passed in Connecticut, Chaplin, Hebron, Broad Brook, Rocky Hill, New Hartford and East Hartland being his successive fields of labor. The hand of God was upon him and the blessing of the Lord followed him, and during his ministry several of these churches were greatly strengthened by revivals in which many were added to the Lord.

As a preacher of the Word he was forceful and impressive. His thought was clear and vigorous, his manner simple and unaffected, his message—his Master, Jesus Christ He was a painstaking and tactful pastor, a wise counselor and a man of rare judgment, commanding the respect and esteem of his people. His work among the children and young people, by whom he was greatly beloved, was signally fruitful. In him they found a companion and a friend. He was deeply interested in their higher education as a basis of a stronger character and larger usefulness. Through his influence, encouragement and assistance, several young men were led into the Christian ministry. He possessed a wholesome amount of local pride and always took an active interest in the towns where he was called to labor. During his pastorate in East Hartland he represented the town in the General Assembly.

At the termination of his pastorate in East Hartland, Mr. Knight received a unanimous call to the church in Gilead, which he declined, modestly thinking that he was no longer equal to the demands of the pastorate, and as a retired minister came to West Hartford to live where he immediately made a place for himself and family in the affections of the people. So long as he was able he was actively interested in the work of the First Church, and was the quiet and unobtrusive instrument in comforting and enriching not a few. He who had been a loyal and faithful minister easily and gladly became a valuable and loyal parishioner.

Mr. Knight was married in 1850 to Miss Abbie Ward of Ashford, Ct., who, with three sons, Dr. W. W. Knight of Hartford, Ct., Rev. Edward H. Knight of Springfield, Mass., and Frank H. Knight, a lawyer in New York city, survives him.

Servant of God, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy. T. M. H.

FEED them properly and carefully; reduce the painfully large percentage of infant mortality. Take no chances and make no experiments in this very important matter. The Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk has saved thousands of little lives.

TO Cure That Cough

or Colds of any kind, Bronchial Troubles, Sore Throats, Asthma, or any Lung Disease, there is nothing equal to

ADAMSON'S BOTANIC Cough Balsam.

It brings relief with the first dose. Soothes irritation, heals the lungs and throat, and in a few days effects a perfect cure. It has been 30 years in existence, and once used is always kept in reach.

10,000 TESTIMONIALS.

$5,000 Reward for a single one not genuine.

PRICES 35 and 75 CTS. A BOTTLE.

C SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

IT WILL SERVE THE INTERESTS OF ALL CONCERNED IF, IN CORRESPONDENCE SUGGESTED BY ANNOUNCEMENTS IN OUR ADVERTISING COLUMNS MENTION IS MADE OF THE FACT THAT THE ADVERTISEMENT WAS SEEN IN THE CONGREGATIONALIST.

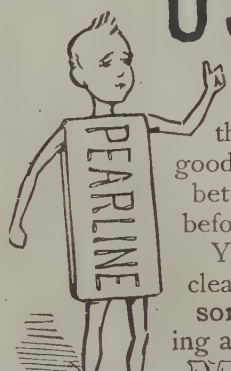
USE NO SOAP



with Pearline. 'Twould be absurd. It isn't necessary. Pearline contains everything of a soapy nature that's needed or that's good to go with it. And Pearline is so much better than soap that it has the work all done before the soap begins to take any part.

You're simply throwing away money. It's a clear waste of soap—and soap may be good for something, though it isn't much use in washing and cleaning, when Pearline's around. 491

Millions NOW USE Pearline

NEW ENGLAND COOKING is Famous.
THE MAGEE RANGES are in General Use throughout New England.

The American kitchen is to the home what the foundation is to the house, and needs a Cooking Apparatus which Meets all the Requirements for the Most Exacting Work.

Such a type is the

MAGEE GRAND RANGE.

It Never Fails, it Saves Time and Economizes Fuel, being fitted with Special Features, found only in the MAGEE RANGES:

☞ Full Sheet Flue, Dock-Ash Grate, Oven Heat Indicator, Etc.

Thousands of families will use no other. Endorsed by Leading American Authorities on Cooking, and the Great Expositions, as the Highest Achievement in Cooking Apparatus.

MAGEE FURNACE CO., 32-38 UNION ST., BOSTON.

AGENCIES: 86 LAKE ST., CHICAGO. 27 NEW MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO.

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Sept 13–19. Our Tongues for Christ. Prov. 15: 1, 2, 4, 7, 10, 14, 23, 26, 28.

Were we deprived for an hour, a day, or a lifetime of the power of speech we should better appreciate this gift of God. To be able to express our thoughts, and, more than that, to put them into clear, accurate English, to say the proper thing at the proper time—this is, indeed, a fine art, to the cultivation of which every man, and certainly every Christian, ought to give his best thought and energy. The tongue is a weapon the possibilities of which, both for offensive and defensive purposes, we ought to realize. It is a tool to be kept in good order and applied only to the noblest uses.

Perhaps less use of the tongue, rather than more, is what many of us might profitably strive for. A part of the fame of William the Silent and General Grant was due to the fact that each avoided the evils almost certain to result from frequent and profuse speaking. The range of evils involved in too much speaking is wider than we commonly suppose. Profanity and obscenity we revolt from, but how about flattery, insincerity, irreverence, flippancy, slander? Would any of our utterances ever be classified under one of these heads?

How much good we can do in a single day by the right use of our tongues! We long sometimes to be missionaries, to accomplish great things for Christ, when we neglect to say the considerate and sympathetic word to the friend right at our side, to encourage the disheartened student, to help the doubter toward the light, to cheer the bereaved and desolate soul. Human sympathy gets far too little expression in this busy world, and it does not take very much of one's time to speak a word whose results are far-reaching. In the healthy Christian life thought, action, speech will be in harmonious accord. The stream will be pure because the fountain is pure. The disciple of Jesus will use his tongue for Jesus in the Christian Endeavor meeting, fulfilling there the solemn pledge which he has taken, but he will also use his tongue for Christ on the street and in the shop and schoolroom. Jesus spake as no other man ever spoke because he lived as no other man ever lived. His followers, joined to him in fellowship of heart and life, will also, in their talk, through which channel life finds its most frequent expression, reveal his Spirit.

Paraliel verses: Ps. 19: 14; 40: 8, 9; 107: 21, 22; Eccl. 12: 10; Isa. 43: 10–12; Dan. 12: 3; Matt. 10: 9–20; John 15: 26, 27; Acts 1: 8; Heb. 12: 15; 1 Tim. 4: 6, 14; 2 Tim. 3: 23; Jas. 1: 26.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. THEODORE J. CLARK.

The death, in Springfield, Aug. 23, of Mr. Clark removes an aged, well-known and deeply loved minister in Western Massachusetts. He was born in Northampton, Feb. 14, 1815, graduated from Williams College in 1836, being one of its oldest alumni, and completed his course at Andover Theological Seminary in 1841. His first pastorate was in Cummington, where he remained seventeen years, and he afterwards had charge of churches in Bernardston, Ashfield and Northfield, in which place he preached for fifteen years. Of late years he has lived quietly in retirement at the home of a daughter.

REV. C. M. SANDERS.

Many will learn with surprise of Mr. Sanders's death at the home of his brother in New York city, Aug. 14. He has been so active in the denomination and had attached to himself so wide a circle of friends both in the East and the West that it will be hard not to think of him as still among the world of workers. Born in New Ipswich, N. H., his education was somewhat limited but after a career in business he felt called to distinctively religious work. This impulse took its rise when he was a member of Pine Street Congregational Church in Boston, now Berkeley Temple, and it led to his employment in city missionary work. Thence he went to Chicago Theological Seminary, preaching frequently while a student there, in connection with mission enterprises. He was ordained at Lyonsville, Ill., April 19, 1867, the day after he graduated from the seminary. After a few months of service in connection with the Moody Mission in Chicago, he organized the Mayflower Church in Indianapolis and went from there to Waukegan, Ill., and later to Cheyenne, Wyo., when frontier conditions prevailed there. He was just the man for the hard task and soon the defunct enterprise was resuscitated and in 1879 became self-supporting. His success in this difficult field led to his appointment in 1886 as home missionary superintendent for the Rocky Mountain district, which position he held for seven years. He was unsparing of effort and planted and helped sustain many a church in out of the way places as well as in the new and growing cities. Since he has preached in Marseilles.

For a Nerve Tonic
Use Hosford's Acid Phosphate.

DR. H. M. HARLOW, Augusta, Me., says: "I regard it as one of the best remedies in all cases in which the system requires an acid and a nerve tonic."

Keep Well
By taking an Occasional Dose of
ABRANTS SELTZER APERIENT
TRADE MARK REGISTERED
The cooling, refreshing, invigorating cure for Constipation, Indigestion and Sick Headache
Pleasant to take. Sold by druggists 50 years.

KNICKERBOCKER.
No more round shoulders. Shoulder Brace and Suspender combined. Easily adjusted. Worn with comfort. Sizes for men, women, boys and girls. Sold by druggists, appliance stores, general stores, &c. By mail $1 per pair ($1.50 silk). Send chest measure around body under arms. Circulars free. Address
KNICKERBOCKER BRACE CO., EASTON, PENN., U. S. A.

Hunterston

A Sanitarium and Winter Home for the cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, and all afflictions of the breathing organs, by Antiseptic Air Inhalation.

It is under the sole medical direction of Dr. Robert Hunter, of 117 West 45th Street, New York, who for over forty years has made diseases of the breathing organs a specialty. He was the first to introduce and successfully apply Inhalation treatment to the arrest and cure of Consumption, and has attained world wide reputation by his success. A host of grateful witnesses proclaim the cure of their cases by Dr. Hunter's treatment.

The Sanitarium is situated at Netherwood, New Jersey, in a beautiful country surrounded by lovely drives, charming scenery, and every requisite for the restoration of health. It was built and equipped at a cost of over $300,000.

All patients are under the direct supervision of Dr. Robert Hunter as to treatment and care, assisted by the following physicians composing the medical staff:

James John Hunter, M. D., Resident Physician.
Edwin William Hunter, M. D., Consulting Physician.
E. W. Ware, M. D., Chemist.

For pamphlet explaining treatment, terms and all particulars, apply to Dr. ROBERT HUNTER, 117 West 45th Street, New York.

L P Fisher Jan 96

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE.

Nothing but Royal Baking Powder will make the biscuit, cake and pastry so light, sweet, tender, delicious and wholesome.

There are many mixtures offered as a substitute. None of them is the same in composition or effectiveness, or will make such fine food, or is so economical.

The Cyclist's Necessity.

POND'S

WILL CURE CUTS, BURNS, BRUISES, WOUNDS, SPRAINS, SUNBURN, CHAFINGS, INSECT BITES, ALL PAIN, AND INFLAMMATIONS. . . . . .

USED INTERNALLY AND EXTERNALLY.

GENUINE IN OUR BOTTLES ONLY, BUFF WRAPPERS, SEE OUR NAME, POND'S EXTRACT CO., NEW YORK, 76 FIFTH AVENUE.

EXTRACT

USE POND'S EXTRACT OINTMENT FOR PILES.

Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cents.

INFANCY

What does it mean to the mother who cannot nurse her own babe? Without NESTLÉ'S FOOD it means anxiety, worry, the health, perhaps the life, of her baby. Those mothers who use NESTLÉ'S FOOD tell of healthy, strong, vig rous children—ask some of them—their experience is worth more to you than our tale of facts.

Nestlé's Food is invaluable in the prevention of Cholera Infantum and summer complaints. In its preparation water only is required, thus avoiding the use of cow's milk, whose use in summer is always a source of worry and danger to careful mothers. Our "Book for Mothers," full of valuable hints, and a sample can of Nestlé's Food, free.

NESTLÉ'S FOOD

THOS. LEEMING & CO., 73 Warren St., New York

Volume LXXXI Number 37

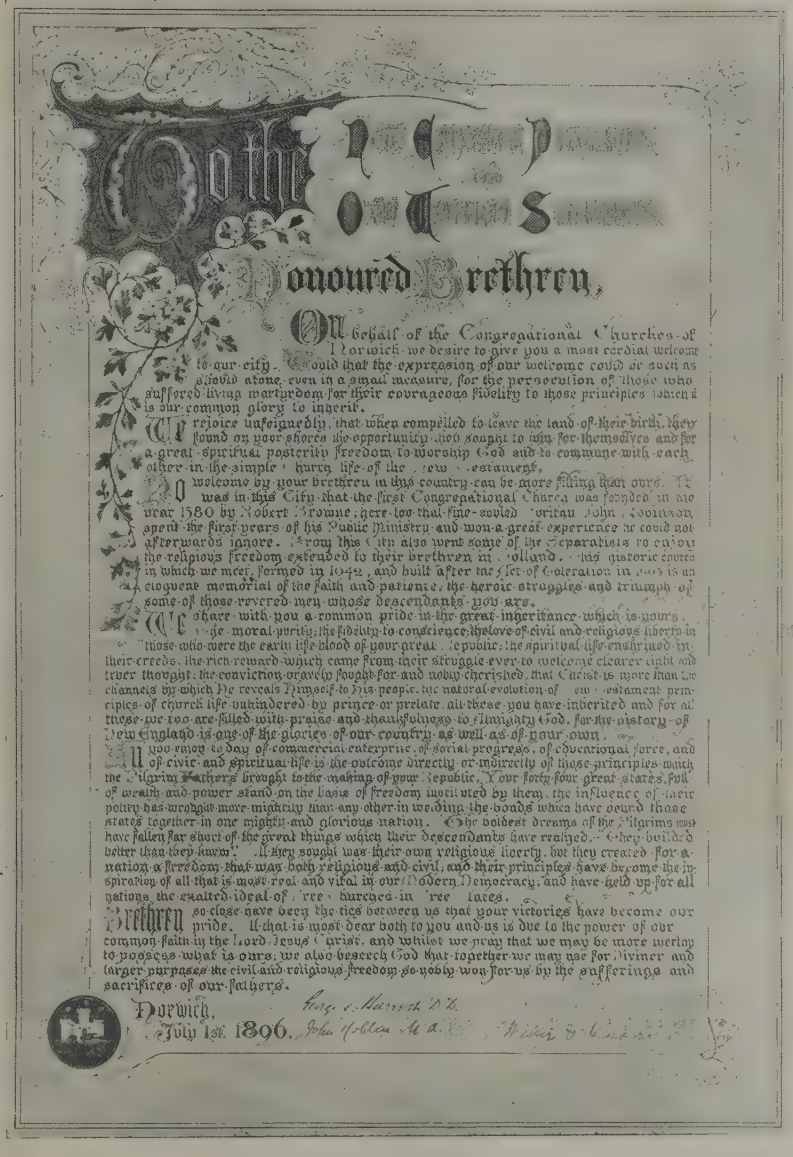
THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Boston Thursday 10 September 1896



To the [illegible] Pilgrims

Honoured Brethren,

On behalf of the Congregational Churches of Norwich we desire to give you a most cordial welcome to our city. Would that the expression of our welcome could be such as should atone, even in a small measure, for the persecution of those who suffered living martyrdom for their courageous fidelity to those principles which is our common glory to inherit.

We rejoice unfeignedly that when compelled to leave the land of their birth, they found on your shores the opportunity they sought to win for themselves and for a great spiritual posterity freedom to worship God and to commune with each other in the simple church life of the New Testament.

To welcome you by your brethren in this country can be more fitting than ours. It was in this City that the first Congregational Church was founded in the year 1580 by Robert Browne; here too that fine-souled Puritan John Robinson spent the first years of his Public Ministry and won a great experience he could not afterwards ignore. From this City also went some of the Separatists to enjoy the religious freedom extended to their brethren in Holland. This historic centre in which we meet, formed in 1642, and built after the Act of Toleration in 1693 is an eloquent memorial of the faith and patience, the heroic struggles and triumph of some of those revered men whose descendants you are.

We share with you a common pride in the great inheritance which is yours. The moral purity, the fidelity to conscience, the love of civil and religious liberty in those who were the earth life blood of your great Republic; the spiritual life enshrined in their creeds, the rich reward which came from their struggle ever to welcome clearer light and truer thought; the conviction bravely fought for and nobly cherished, that Christ is more than the channels by which He reveals Himself to His people, the natural evolution of New Testament principles of church life unhindered by prince or prelate all these you have inherited and for all these we too are filled with praise and thankfulness to Almighty God, for the history of New England is one of the glories of our country as well as of your own.

If you enjoy to day of commercial enterprise, of social progress, of educational force, and of civic and spiritual life is the outcome directly or indirectly of those principles which the Pilgrim Fathers brought to the making of your Republic. Your forty four great states, full of wealth and power stand on the basis of freedom instituted by them, the influence of their polity has wrought more mightily than any other in welding the bonds which have bound those states together in one mighty and glorious nation. The boldest dreams of the Pilgrims may have fallen far short of the great things which their descendants have realized. They builded better than they knew. All they sought was their own religious liberty, but they created for a nation a freedom that was both religious and civil, and their principles have become the inspiration of all that is most real and vital in our Modern Democracy, and have held up for all nations the exalted ideal of free churches in free states.

Brethren so close have been the ties between us that your victories have become our pride. All that is most dear both to you and us is due to the power of our common faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and whilst we pray that we may be more worthy to possess what is ours, we also beseech God that together we may use for diviner and larger purposes the civil and religious freedom so nobly won for us by the sufferings and sacrifices of our fathers.

Norwich, July 1st. 1896.

THE ADDRESS OF WELCOME

Presented to The Congregationalist's Pilgrims in the Old Meeting House at Norwich, Eng.

Educational.

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY.
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established, 1855.
3 EAST 14TH STREET N. Y.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.
4 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; and Los Angeles, Cal. 100-page Agency Manual free. EVERETT O. FISK & CO.

THEOLOGICAL.

MASSACHUSETTS, ANDOVER.
ANDOVER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
Term begins Sept. 16. Opening lectures at 4 P. M. For catalogue or further information apply to GEORGE HARRIS, Pres. of the Faculty.

CONNECTICUT, NEW HAVEN.
YALE DIVINITY SCHOOL.
Term opens Sept. 24. The School offers many University advantages. For catalogues or information, address Prof. GEO. B. STEVENS, New Haven, Ct.

OHIO, OBERLIN.
OBERLIN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
62d year opens Sept. 23d. With special advantages in the College and the Conservatory of Music.
E. I. BOSWORTH Sec.

MAINE, BANGOR.
BANGOR THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
Choice between two courses of study, Classical and English Biblical, in Junior year; one course in Middle and Senior years. Optionals in Hebrew and Cognates, and in Greek. Entrance examination on Wednesday, Sept. 2, 9 A. M. Apply to Prof. C. A. Beckwith, or Prof. G. W. Gilmore, Bangor, Me.

CONNECTICUT, HARTFORD
HARTFORD 63d Year Opens Oct. 7, 1896.
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY,
Unexcelled Advantages or College Graduates. HARTFORD, CT.

NEW YORK, AUBURN.
Auburn Theological Seminary.
Established 1820.
Next term begins Wednesday, Sept 16, 1896. Opening address by PROFESSOR WILLIS J BEECHER, D D.
For information, write to
HENRY M. BOOTH, President, Auburn, N. Y.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.
Union Theological Seminary
700 Park Avenue, New York.
The next Term will begin Wednesday, Sept. 23, 1896. Students entering will meet the Faculty in the President's room, at 9.30 A. M.
Rooms will be drawn at 2 P. M.
The opening address, by PRESIDENT HASTINGS, will be delivered in the Adams Chapel, Thursday, Sept. 24, at 4 P. M. E. M. KINGSLEY, Sec'y.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

NEW LONDON, N. H.
COLBY ACADEMY.
$200 to $250 a Year. Coeducational. 44th Year.
Send for Catalogue. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, President.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, EXETER.
THE PHILLIPS EXETER ACADEMY.
The 114th year begins September 16, 1896. Eighty Scholarships awarded to students of high standing. For catalogue and illustrated supplement, address
HARLAN P. AMEN, Principal, Exeter, N. H.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, MERIDEN.
KIMBALL UNION ACADEMY,
Meriden, N. H. New buildings. Enlarged facilities. Beautiful and healthful location. Four-years courses of study. The Departments of Oratory and Physical Culture just established. Young men and women fitted for our best colleges. Students of limited means received on the "$100-a year plan." 82d year begins Sept. 9, 1896. Send for Catalogue.
W. H. CUMMINGS, A. M., Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS.

MASSACHUSETTS, DUXBURY.
POWDER POINT SCHOOL (FOR BOYS).
F. B. KNAPP, S.B., Duxbury, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, SOUTH BYFIELD.
DUMMER ACADEMY (Home School).
Founded 1763. Thorough training for College and Technical Schools. PERLEY L. HORNE, A. M.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.
BOSTON UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL,
New Hall, Ashburton Place,
Opens Oct. 7. Boston, Mass.

Educational.

MASSACHUSETTS.

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.
MISS KIMBALL'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
Worcester, Mass. Thorough preparation for College. Intermediate, Academic and Special Courses. Send for Illustrated Circular.

MASSACHUSETTS, ANDOVER.
ABBOT ACADEMY
For Young Ladies. Begins its 68th year September 17th, offering enlarged opportunities. Three Seminary courses of studies and a College-fitting Course. Address Miss LAURA S. WATSON, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, BRADFORD.
CARLETON SCHOOL for Young Men and Boys. College preparatory and general course of study. Individual teaching. Gymnasium bowling alley, etc. Circulars.
I. N. CARLETON, Ph. D.

MASSACHUSETTS, MONTVALE.
ASHLEY HALL HOME SCHOOL
For Young Ladies.
Ten miles from Boston. Music, Art and Languages. Thorough preparation for college.
Miss WHITTEMORE, Principal, Montvale, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, ASHBURNHAM.
CUSHING ACADEMY,
Ashburnham, Mass. Co-educational. Six courses of study. New buildings. Large Gymnasium. Fine Laboratories. $200 a year. Send for catalogue to
H. S. COWELL, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.
College of Physicians and Surgeons.
Men and women. Rules of Assoc. Am. Med. Colleges 17th year opens Sept 16. Part tuition for clinical service. 20,000 med. calls in '95. Near Boston City Hospital. AUGUSTUS P. CLARK, A.M., M.D., Dean. (Send for Catalogue.) 517 Shawmut Ave., Boston, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.
Boston Normal School of Gymnastics.
Established in 1889, by the late Mrs. Mary Hemenway. Eighth year will begin September 29th. Address
AMY MORRIS HOMANS, Director, 9 Appleton St., Boston.

MASSACHUSETTS, SOUTH HADLEY.
MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE
Offers three Collegiate courses. Music and Art. Library, Laboratories, Cabinets and Observatory. The sixtieth year opens Sept. 17, 1896. Board and tuition $256. Mrs. E. S. MEAD, President.

MASSACHUSETTS, DANVERS.
MAPLEBANK HOME SCHOOL
For Boys. Best of care and instruction guaranteed. Small boys a specialty. Send for catalogue containing full information. Address
HENRY N. DE NORMANDIE, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.
HIGHLAND MILITARY ACADEMY,
Worcester ("The Academic City"), Mass. 41st year. Best preparation for College, Professional or Business life. Healthful location. Careful selection and supervision of students. Small Classes.
JOSEPH ALDEN SHAW, A. M., Head Master.

MASSACHUSETTS, DANVERS.
WILLARD HALL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
Tenth Year begins Sept. 22.
College Preparatory and Elective Courses.
Principal, SARAH M. MERRILL.

MASSACHUSETTS, NORTON.
WHEATON SEMINARY
For Young Ladies. Regular and elective courses, literary, scientific, classical. Pupils also fitted for advanced courses in leading colleges. Excellent advantages in art and music. Fine library, laboratory, observatory, gymnasium, bowling alley; outdoor sports, careful physical training. Perfect sanitary arrangements. Best home influences. Beautifully situated, 28 miles from Boston.
62d year. Fall term, Sept. 10, 1896. For illustrated prospectus, address
Miss A. E. STANTON, Principal, Norton, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, SPRINGFIELD.
Attractive Life Calling.
An unequaled opportunity for some of our best men and women in the "new profession"—lay, Sunday school and missionary work. The School for Christian Workers, Springfield, Mass., should enter 100 leaders Sept. 24 in order to begin to fill the demand. New: Ladies' Home, recognized practical missionary instructor, decision by trustees to place institution on highest educational basis and secure as president a leader among college and seminary presidents. Arouse your friends and send for catalogue.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.
Chauncy-Hall and Berkeley SCHOOLS
Boylston, cor. Berkeley Sts., Back Bay, Boston,
Sixty-ninth year (Chauncy-Hall) opens Sept. 21st.
The consolidation of Chauncy-Hall, the oldest Boston Private School, with the Berkeley School is the union of two strong forces, forming an institution of the highest order, to be known hereafter by the older name.
In all classes Special Students are received. Particular attention to preparation for Mass. Institute of Technology. Send for 1896 Catalogues. Our certificate admits at various colleges for boys as well as at those for girls.
TAYLOR, DeMERITTE & HAGAR.

Educational.

RHODE ISLAND.

RHODE ISLAND, EAST GREENWICH.
EAST GREENWICH ACADEMY.
Founded 1802. Both sexes. On Narragansett Bay. Steam heat and electric light. Elegant new dining hall just completed. Endowed. Twelve courses. September 15. Write for illustrated catalogue.
F. D. BLAKESLEE, D. D., Principal.

CONNECTICUT.

CONNECTICUT, LAKEVILLE.
THE HOTCHKISS SCHOOL,
Lakeville, Conn. Prepares for the best Colleges and Scientific Schools. The next year will begin September 16, 1896.
EDWARD G. COY, Head Master.

CONNECTICUT, NORWALK.
MISS BAIRD'S INSTITUTE FOR GIRLS,
Norwalk, Conn. 25th year. Primary, Academic, and College Preparatory courses. Music, Art, and the Languages. Careful attention to morals and manners. New buildings, steam heat, gymnasium.

CONNECTICUT, STAMFORD.
"What we do, we do well."
Betts Academy,
Stamford, Conn.

On September 21st the old bell will ring in our 58th year.
Home life and the individual are the keynotes at this school. Each boy is taught how to study—how to think and reason for himself, and is trained in observation and research.
Preparation for any Technical School or University, and a liberal, practical training to those not intending to enter college.
New building, modern conveniences. Large, beautiful grounds adapted for athletics and out-door sports of all seasons. Illustrated catalogue on application. Personal inspection preferred. (One hour from New York.) WM. J. BETTS, M.A. (Yale), Principal.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, PEEKSKILL.
THE PEEKSKILL MILITARY ACADEMY
Peekskill, N. Y. 63d year. Send for illustrated catalogue. COL. LOUIS H. ORLEMAN, Prin.

NEW YORK, POUGHKEEPSIE.
LYNDON HALL SCHOOL.
For Young Ladies. 48th year. College preparation.
SAMUEL WELLS BUCK, A.M., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.
Miss S. D. Doremus
BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
RE-OPENS OCTOBER 1ST.
735 Madison Avenue, New York.

NEW YORK, CORNWALL-ON-HUDSON.
NEW YORK MILITARY ACADEMY,
Cornwall-on-Hudson, N. Y. For boarding cadets only. Completely equipped and beautifully located on Hudson River, near West Point. For catalogue, address S. C. JONES, C. E., Supt.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.
MRS. LESLIE MORGAN'S
Boarding and Day School for Girls, 15 West 86th Street, New York City. Thorough English from Kindergarten through College Preparatory. Miss Catherine Aiken's Method of Concentrated Attention in Mind Training a special feature; also conversational French and German. Home and Chaperonage for special students.

NEW YORK, KEUKA.
KEUKA COLLEGE,
Institute and School for Christian Workers. Institute prepares for college and business. College offers two courses, classical and Latin scientific. School for Christian Workers (interdenominational) aims to increase the efficiency of young people in our churches. $175 covers all expenses. Year begins Sept. 8. Apply to Rev. N. M. CALHOUN, President.

NEW JERSEY.

NEW JERSEY, MONTCLAIR.
Montclair Military Academy,
Montclair, N. J.
A thoroughly active boy must be doing something. If he is not employed, he is in mischief. We fill every hour of the day with study in school, or with play on the field and in the gymnasium.
Visit the Academy and see how closely related good play is to good work.
J. G. MACVICAR,
Head Master.

ILLINOIS.

ILLINOIS, CHICAGO, 151 Throop Street.
THE NATIONAL UNIVERSITY.
University Extension and Non-Resident Courses lead to the usual College degrees, including all post-graduate. Instruction by mail in any desired subject. Address F. W. HARKINS, Ph. D., Chancellor.

Educational.

MASSACHUSETTS.

THE

BRYANT & STRATTON COMMERCIAL SCHOOL

BOSTON.

RE-OPENS SEPT. 1st, 1896.

THE COURSE OF STUDY

is thorough, complete and practical. Pupils are fitted for the duties and work of every-day life.

THE FACULTY

embraces a list of more than twenty teachers and assistants, elected with special reference to proficiency in each department.

THE STUDENTS

are young people of both sexes, full of diligence and zeal.

THE DISCIPLINE

is of the highest order and includes valuable business lessons.

THE PATRONAGE

is the LARGEST of any similar institution in the world.

THE REPUTATION

of this school for originality and leadership and as being the Standard Institution of its kind is generally acknowledged.

SPECIAL COURSE.

Shorthand, Type Writing, Composition and Correspondence may be taken as a special course.

SITUATIONS

in business houses furnished pupils among the varied inducements to attend this school.

THE SCHOOL BUILDING,

608 Washington Street, Boston, is centrally located and purposely constructed. Office open daily, from 9 till 2 o'clock. Prospectus Post Free.

H. E. HIBBARD, Principal.

KANSAS.

KANSAS, WICHITA.

Fairmount College,

WICHITA, KANSAS.

The second year of this College will open in all departments, Music, Fine Arts, Academy, College proper, September 9, 1896.

Three parallel courses of study, Classical, Scientific and Literary. New England standards in requirements, and modern methods by New England instructors.

For information and catalogues, address

N. J. MORRISON, President.

NOVA SCOTIA.

NOVA SCOTIA, HALIFAX.

Halifax Ladies' College.

(In Affiliation with Dalhousie University.)

ART STUDIO

AND

CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.

Rev. ROBERT LAING, M. A., President.

Miss M. S. KER, Girton, Cambridge, Resident Principal.

Mr. C. H. PORTER, Leipsic, Director of Conservatory.

The courses of study include English, Mathematics, Science, Modern and Classical languages, Elocution, Calisthenics, Art and Music.

There is a staff of 23 teachers, selected from the best English and Canadian Universities and from the best German Conservatories of Music.

There is direct communication with the United States by rail and water. Calendars containing full information may be obtained from the president, Rev. ROBERT LAING, Halifax, Nova Scotia.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER.

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
- Paragraphs 353
- A Retrospect of Our Pilgrimage 354
- Gail Hamilton as Writer and Christian 354
- France and the French Canadians 355
- The Folly of not Believing 355
- Presenting Jesus to Others 355
- Current History 356
- In Brief 358

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE:
- The Interior 359

CURRENT THOUGHT 360

CONTRIBUTIONS:
- Boston Revisited. Franklin 361
- Charity Chance. Chaps. VIII., IX. Walter Raymond 362
- Miss Dodge's Personal Traits. Thomas Todd 366
- Her Pastor's Tribute. Rev. J. G. Nichols 366
- Pilgrimage Letters. No. XII. Looking Backward. F. J. D. 367
- The Catholic Summer School of America. Rev. T. J. Conaty, D. D. 380

THE HOME:
- Let Me Go Where'er I Will—a selected poem 372
- Paragraphs 372
- Faith—or Others' Works? Marion Harland 372
- The Child's Use of Money. Margaret Nourse 373
- The Boy without a Hobby. Martha Clark Rankin 374
- Health Hints 374
- Closet and Altar 374
- Tangles 375
- Massachusetts's Test of Good Citizenship—a selection 375
- Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 376
- Corner Scrap-Book 376

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for Sept. 20 377
- Notes 383

Y. P. S. C. E.—Topic for Sept. 20-26 360
- Notes 383

LITERATURE 378

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES:
- Ministerial Stage-Coach 381
- Summer Work and Rest in Iowa 381
- Weekly Register 386

MISCELLANEOUS:
- Gail Hamilton's Earliest Literary Work 365
- John Robinson and His Peers—a selection 371
- Gleanings 380
- Notices 381
- Business Outlook 384
- Definitions 384
- Pithy Sayings of an Old-Time Divine 384
- Biographical 385
- Obituaries 385
- A Bar Harbor Mission 387
- Wee Witticisms 387

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER.

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist', 1849.

Published every Thursday,

At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.

PER COPY, 6 CENTS. PER YEAR IN ADVANCE, $3.00.

TWO YEARS IN ADVANCE, $5.00; FIVE YEARS, $10.00.

IF PAYMENT IS DELAYED, $3.50 PER YEAR.

ONE OLD AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION, $5.00.

CLUB OF FIVE, ONE AT LEAST BEING NEW, $10.00.

On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 cents.

RECEIPTS for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.

DISCONTINUANCES.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

ADVERTISING RATES.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 112 lines to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.
READING NOTICES, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston.

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd.

Nothing

so Clean,
so Durable,
so Economical,
so Elegant as

S·H·&M·

REGISTERED TRADE MARK

BIAS
VELVETEEN
SKIRT BINDINGS.

You have to pay the same price for the "just as good." Why not insist on having what you want—S. H. & M.

If your dealer WILL NOT supply you we will.

Samples mailed free.

"Home Dressmaking Made Easy," a new 72 page book by Miss Emma M. Hooper, of the Ladies' Home Journal, tells in plain words how to make dresses at home without previous training; mailed for 25c.

S. H. & M. Co., P. O. Box 699, N. Y. City.

Jackets

AND Capes

We offer a special lot of stylish Capes and Jackets at prices much less than they would regularly sell for. The reason is that they were made early in the season, when work was dull with manufacturers and cost of production less than now.

200 Boucle Jackets, a remarkable value at only.....	2.98
100 Beaver Jackets, latest style, only.....	3.98
50 Beaver Jackets, latest style, fur trimmed, a special value at only.....	6.98
Fine Beaver Capes, trimmed, altogether a splendid bargain at.....	8.50

Wm. S. Butler & Co.,

TREMONT STREET, BOSTON.

Up to Dreamland they go
So cosily dressed
In the muslin well known
As the Pride of the West.

For sale by all leading retailers.

CHURCH ORGAN FOR SALE.

Our Make. Cost $2,400. Price $1,200.

HOOK & HASTINGS CO., Boston.

"Where Times are Prosperous"

IN THE

Rocky Mountains

TAKE THE...

ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

To Denver, Colorado Springs, or Pueblo.

ONLY DIRECT LINE TO COLORADO SPRINGS, MANITOU AND PIKES' PEAK

4 HOURS QUICKER TIME TO CRIPPLE CREEK

which should be included in your trip, and an investigation of the resources of this place may well repay your visit.

Tourist Dictionary ...Sent Free... Apply for it.

Address JOHN SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Pass. Agent, CHICAGO.

UNION PACIFIC

The Overland Route—World's Pictorial Line.

THE ONLY LINE WEST OF MISSOURI RIVER RUNNING BUFFET SMOKING AND LIBRARY CARS.

THE ORIGINAL OVERLAND ROUTE.

It was the Route in '49!
It is the Route Today, and
Will be for All Time to Come!

'49 '96

Fastest Train to the West,

"THE OVERLAND LIMITED,"

CHICAGO to SAN FRANCISCO daily in { 3 Days from Chicago. / 1-2 Days from Missouri River.

Pullman Palace Sleepers; Dining Cars; Free Reclining Chair Cars; Buffet Smoking and Library Cars.

For tickets and full information call or address any Union Pacific agent, or E. L. LOMAX, Gen. Pass. and Tkt. Agt., Omaha, Neb.

I'LL TRY GAZE'S TOURS GOOD IDEA.

52 YEARS OF SUCCESS

Escorted Parties leave as follows October 6:

ROUND THE WORLD	All Included	Choice of Routes	Programs Free By Post
Southern Europe and Italy	By American Line	By North German Lloyd	Sept. 30 and Oct. 3 & 31
Excursions to Rome	Sept. 19 and Oct. 10	Special Rates All Included

53 DAYS $280.00 UPWARD.
60 DAYS $450.00 UPWARD.

Write for Programs of Oriental Tours. Also First Class.

113 DAYS $860.00, All Included.

Independent Travel Tickets Everywhere. Good Steamer Berths by all Lines.

WRITE FOR TOURIST GAZETTE AND SAVE MONEY.

Post Free Upon Application.

H. GAZE & SONS, Ltd.,
113 Broadway, New York, or
W. H. EAVES, New England Agent,
201 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

PROGRAMS WILL BE FURNISHED NOW.

ESTABLISHED 1836.
ISAAC RILEY,
Successor to Baird & Riley,
PLUMBER AND SANITARY ENGINEER,
85 Joy St., Near Cambridge St., Boston.
Telephone, Haymarket 294.

Fall Issues.

COUNCIL MANUAL.
Prepared by a committee of the National Council of the Congregational churches of the United States. By mail 10 cents each; 100 copies or more $5 00, postage additional.

THE TEARLESS LAND.
Poems on Heaven Compiled by M C. Hazard, Ph D. $1 50

THE ROCKANOCK STAGE.
By Prof. GEORGE HUNTINGTON Price $1.50.

HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER.
By CHARLES M. SHELDON. Price $1 50

THE POOLE'S MILLIONS.
By JULIA MCNAIR WRIGHT Price $1 50.

THE RAINPROOF INVENTION.
By EMILY WEAVER Price $1 50

A SON OF LIBERTY.
By WILLIS BOYD ALLEN. Price $1 25

THE FAIRIES OF FERN DINGLE.
By HARRIETT A. CHEEVER. Price $1 00.

THE TWINS AND THEIR TROUBLES.
By L. AMELIA WILDER Pp. 225 Price 75 cents

THE YOUNG MANDARIN.
By Rev. J. D DAVIS. Pp. 396 Price $1 50.

MONDAY CLUB SERMONS,
On the International Sunday School Lessons for 1897. Price $1.25.

PILGRIM SUNDAY SCHOOL TREASURY.
Illuminated cover. Price 4 cents postpaid; 100 copies $2.00, postage additional.

Congregational S.S. & Publishing Society,
BOSTON AND CHICAGO.

ST. DENIS HOTEL

Broadway and Eleventh St.

Opposite Grace Church, NEW YORK

The most centrally located hotel in the city, conducted on the European plan, at moderate prices. Recently enlarged by a new and handsome addition that doubles its former capacity. The new DINING ROOM is one of the finest specimens of Colonial Decoration in this country.

WILLIAM TAYLOR.

ROUND THE WORLD and HOLY LAND.
Select Parties leave San Francisco Oct. 17 and Nov. 21 for tour Round the World; leave New York Jan. 30 and Feb. 20, 1897, for Palestine. "Clark's Tours," 306 Washington St., Boston.

MISS FULLER'S STORIES.

A Venetian June.

Second Edition. Illustrated, 16mo, $1.00.

"As delicate in form, color and texture as a vase from Salviati."—Buffalo Express.

"It will appeal to all lovers of alluring, illusive Venice, and it will win for Venice lovers through its poetical beauty. In addition to its own charm, the story is brought out in a most dainty, attractive manner, distinctly suggestive of Venice in June."—Cleveland Critic.

Pratt Portraits.

Sketched in a New England Suburb. Tenth Edition. 16mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00.

"The scant material of which many of them are composed, and the satisfactory manner of their treatment, cause wonder at the same time that they arouse admiration. It must be admitted that only a thorough artist can accomplish this."—Cleveland Leader.

A Literary Courtship

Under the auspices of Pike's Peak. Eighth Edition. 12mo, illustrated, $1 00.

"A delightful little love story. Like her other book, it is bright and breezy; its humor is crisp and the general idea decidedly original."—Boston Times.

Peak and Prairie

From a Colorado Sketch-Book. Third Edition. 16mo, with a frontispiece by Louis Loeb, $1 00.

"We may say that the jaded reader, fagged with the strenuous art of the passing hour, who chances to select this volume to cheer the hours, will throw up his hat for sheer joy at having hit upon a book in which morbidness and self-consciouness are conspicuous by their absence."—New York Times.

At Wellesley.

Legenda for '96 Stories and Studies by the Senior Class of Wellesley College. 12mo, $1 00

The Religion of Manhood.

By JOHN OWEN COIT, author of "Inspirations" and "One Man's Thesis." 12mo, 75 cents.

"A brilliant, speculative, intellectual grappling with the mission of oark things and the ministry of mystery and evil. Mr. Coit makes his address to the speculative reason. . . . He gives us some thrilling verses and thoughts of his own, and some taken from others, so heavily charged with meanings as to rank him securely among those who know the pure gold when they find it. The book is not systematic, but it is inspiring—a veritable treasury of thoughts and thrills.—New York Independent."

 Send for "Notes on New Books," containing list of autumn publications.*

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,
NEW YORK AND LONDON.

OLD BOOKS BOUGHT.
LIBRARIES AND SMALL PARCELS OF BOOKS PURCHASED.
Save the expense and delay of Auction Sales.
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston

GOSPEL HYMNS, 1 to 6.
Excel. Mus. Ed., $75 per 100; Words Ed., $10 upwards per 100. Christian Endeavor Hymns. $30 per 100.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.,
76 East 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

PASTOR'S

Vest Pocket Memorandum.

Prepared by GEO. M. BOYNTON, D.D.

Size, 3 x 5. 104 pages. Full leather. 50 cents net. Postpaid.

This little book will aid the pastor in keeping before him the residences of his people and the dates of his pastoral visits. The families are arranged by streets, as most convenient for reference, by the way.

It is also a reminder of things to be done, of engagements, of persons to be seen, etc. It has a place to jot down those sudden suggestions as to texts or topics which come often away from home, and which are apt to be most fruitful of all.

Congregational S.S. & Publishing Society,
BOSTON AND CHICAGO.

TRAINING OF ATTENDANTS.

The classes, under the care of the Massachusetts Emergency and Hygiene Association, Dr. John Homans, 2d, President, for the training of women in the care of the sick and aged will be resumed October 5th, 1896, and continue through the winter Tuition, $15.00 for nine weeks' instruction, including practical demonstration. Dr. ANNA G. RICHARDSON, Instructor. For further particulars apply to the secretary, 18 Exeter Street, Boston.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Volume LXXXI Boston Thursday 10 September 1896 Number 37

HANDBOOK No. 11 (July, 1896).

Anglo-American Comity. By Rev. WASHINGTON GLADDEN, D D

HANDBOOK No. 10 (April, 1896).

Eighty Years of Congregationalism. WALKER.
Eighty Years of Christian History. HURST.
Eighty Years of Political History. HART.

✠ TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS. ✠

6 Months for $1.00
3 Months for 25 cts. 4 Weeks Free.

THE question as to the consolidation of Shawmut and Union Churches in Boston has been agitated a good deal since the departure of Dr. Boynton for Detroit. Committees of both churches have conferred on the matter and have stated their respective positions to a third committee consisting of five representative laymen connected with other Boston churches. As yet nothing has resulted from these deliberations other than a brief report from this special committee stating that in its judgment, in view of the actual situation, the time was not ripe for consolidation, though expressing its opinion that one church would suffice for that section of the South End. Each church still feels that it has a distinctive and important field, and for the present, at least, there seems to be a prospect of sufficient funds to maintain both organizations. There has been so much talk about the consolidation that it is well that the subject has been carefully canvassed even though the respective committees were not authorized to make a definite decision. In the long run the desirable ends will always be served by such frank and free consultation of all parties interested.

Christian workers may gain valuable suggestions from the present unique political campaign. Their question has been twofold: how to arouse the popular mind to interest in their message, and how to put it before the people in forms which they can readily understand. The political worker has mainly the second of these questions to answer. He is doing it by adopting on a vast scale the methods of the preacher, the Sunday school and the tract society, and by improving on these methods. Pamphlets innumerable will be scattered broadcast and never read. But pictures, short articles in the "patent insides" of hundreds of country newspapers, blackboard sketches and speeches at picnics and country crossroads, with an immense amount of conversation between neighbors, will be among the most potent influences to decide the coming election and will do unmeasured service in informing the people concerning its issues. Christian workers must not fail to profit by the inventive genius which is putting into use such a variety of ways for making voters know what they ought to do with their votes. In the same ways we may bring the multitudes to see the wisdom of ordering their lives to walk in the footsteps of the Saviour and Lord of mankind.

The arrangements for the construction of the new Congregational House are not yet sufficiently advanced for definite promise of activity in building. The right of occupancy of the present Congregational House on the corner of Beacon and Somerset Streets extends for three years from last June, but it is not expected that it will be necessary to remain for more than two years from that time. The city's lease of the present building on the new site expires in October, but an application has been made by the authorities for the use of a part of it, and this may be granted for a few months, pushing the work of demolition and reconstruction over into the more favorable weather of the summer. Within two years, therefore, we may hope to welcome our friends in new quarters, but the trustees have yet another year in which to provide for unexpected delays.

The Jewish Messenger devotes much space to the decay of active religious life among its people as indicated by the falling off of synagogue membership and the summer neglect of worship. It says: "There are in greater New York at least 3,000 very well-to-do Hebrew citizens and heads of Hebrew families, thoroughly Americanized and liberally educated—hundreds among them actively engaged in the best professions—and yet one and all unaffiliated with any of the ten leading congregations of the city. These are true figures. There is not even a sign of concerted, well-devised activity visible among these ten congregations to win over this host of nonconformists. That is a true fact." It adds in another place in regard to summer carelessness: "In some large houses where the proprietor advertises Jewish food prepared according to the old custom, where there is no Gentile among the guests and the doorposts are decorated with the traditional sign of protection, the Sabbath is as disorderly as elsewhere. Service is unheeded, but gambling and smoking are not exceptional, just as if there was no outward suggestion of conservatism. Some vigorous protest on the part of respected guests would be effective in improving matters, but who cares to be an Isaiah when the observing and decent minority are so reduced in numbers and spirit?" This is a pity. We hope it may be only a passing phase of Jewish life in America, but it conveys a warning to Christian city residents and summer visitors which is worth considering. The Christian who does not connect himself with Christians does not count.

A recent incident in a New York village where a father and son defended their property against burglars, the father being killed and two of the burglars wounded in the exchange of shots, has driven some of our contemporaries to discussion of the right of self-defense for Christians. Our Lord said to the disciples, contrasting the witness they had borne with the witness they were about to bear, "But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise a wallet; and he that hath no sword let him sell his cloak and buy one." But he also said to Peter, "Put up again thy sword into its place, for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." The right of self-defense and the accountability for exercising it under the proper conditions seem to us to be involved in these two sayings. It is, like public war, a weapon of last resort, only to be employed when other means have failed, and with distinct acceptance of the possibilities involved for our own lives.

Michigan University is, after Princeton, the college having the largest number of Presbyterian students. No other institution, probably, except Lafayette, had more than half as many of strictly Presbyterian membership or affiliation. These facts were brought out by Professor Kelsey of the university in an address before the Synod of Michigan which has been reprinted as a supplement to the Michigan Presbyterian. Professor Kelsey asked the synod to provide an endowment which should secure competent oversight and teaching for these nearly 500 Presbyterian students, including courses of Bible study which are outside the scope of the university work. He insists that the State universities have come to stay and must to a great extent overshadow the financially weaker denominational colleges, and that it is suicidal for the church to neglect its children during their years of study. The argument is a forcible one and should be heeded by our Congregational people also. It is not necessary to think of withdrawing support from our indispensable schools and colleges to acknowledge that the boys and girls who prefer the opportunities of the larger institutions have claims upon our care and thought.

Dr. Bradford, who has been in London supplying the pulpit of Kensington Chapel, substituted a lecture on the Religious Problems of Japan for a sermon one Sunday evening. Many of the facts and conclusions reached by him seem to have been unfamiliar to his English hearers. His estimate of the Japanese national capacity quoted from a distinguished English resident in Japan is interesting, "I regard the Japanese as far superior, intellectually, to the average European," he said, upon which Dr. Bradford's own comment was, "They can grasp the profoundest problems of mathematics, science and philosophy, but when it comes to the application of them they are far inferior to the English." In speaking of methods he noticed, incidentally, that it requires three bishops to oversee less than 5,000 native Christians in communion with the English and American Episcopal churches. He denied that the time had come for the withdrawal of the missionaries, and suggested rather that their work should be supplemented by occasional visits from leaders of thought in the churches of the Occident. "The deputation and the missionaries and native pastors of Japan," he said, "were unanimous in their feeling that the one man who can do Japan more good than a hundred missionaries, if we can only get him to go out and spend a little time in Japan, is your own Principal Fairbairn." This is a high tribute to Dr. Fairbairn, as well as a token of the world-wide fraternity of church life and thought which is growing up.

The will to do is our Lord's appointed prerequisite for knowledge of his teaching. "If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know of the teaching, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." In the hour of doubt, therefore, the attitude of the will is all important. The first steps toward the peace of assurance are steps of action rather than of study. Is Jesus right in his opinions, justified in his claims, able to fulfill his promises? Test him and see, for he challenges the experiment of obedience. Determine to do God's will, and the teaching will not fail. In the flame of your devotion his purpose will appear, as the secret writing becomes plain when the paper upon which it is written is held for a little in the heat. The life for Christ is a life with Christ. It gains its sanction from a living person and not from a dead law. Its assurance is an assurance that grows out of faith and is confirmed in living and continually deepening experience.

A RETROSPECT OF OUR PILGRIMAGE.

This issue of The Congregationalist contains the final letter of the series describing a very remarkable journey. We have received abundant assurances that these letters have been widely read. They have given to our readers accurate and picturesque impressions of the reception in England of the American pilgrims, and have reflected, as this closing letter shows, the impressions made on the travelers by the institutions and the people of our mother country.

What is to be gained by this pilgrimage? First, we are impressed anew by the heroism of the men who, for the sake of their convictions, left behind them home and country and property, and thereby bequeathed to their descendants a hundredfold more than they lost by adherence to principle. The same thing has been recognized anew, through our visit, by the English people. Their newspapers everywhere called attention to it. It was and continues to be the theme of many a sermon, address and conversation. Only Englishmen would have done what our Pilgrim fathers did, or if men of other lands have done the same, their kinship with our fathers is even closer than that of the same nationality. Our best inheritance is that integrity, that loyalty to principle in the face of every necessity of self sacrifice, to which we look back with pride. Such an ancestry neither nation can dishonor without ruin.

We have learned afresh the essential unity between England and the United States. At heart the people of each country recognize their kinship with those of the other. In both countries political parties seem hostile to one another, and each sharply criticises the other, sometimes charging on its opponent the purpose to ruin the nation. Yet whenever a crisis arises which profoundly appeals to patriotism party lines fade before the brighter light of love of country. So there is an undefined party in England which is jealous of the United States; and in this country there is much talk of the encroachments of England on our commerce and of the danger that she will grow rich at our expense. But far above such meanness there live in both nations a noble friendship, a history which they generously share, a growing conviction that the missions and destinies of both are inextricably united, and a profound satisfaction in this conviction. Americans who talk of crippling the power of England are unconciously discussing how the civilization we ought most earnestly to promote may be destroyed.

We have felt anew the power of that vital union between Christians which the barriers of sects cannot sever. The Church of England is a mighty power to hold that great nation loyal to the Christian faith. It has in it a great number of hearts as true to our one Lord as beat anywhere in the world. It is not strange that that church should contain men of small minds who take advantage of its history and civil and social prestige to irritate Nonconformists, nor that these latter should chafe under such irritations and keenly feel their disadvantages. But above these differences there is a unity which was newly affirmed through our visit, which constitutes the only means by which the evils of them may be removed. It was surely a step in this direction for leading Churchmen to honor the purpose and praise the achievements and claim a part in the inheritance of the Pilgrims, whom their fathers despised and hated; and Nonconformists, we believe, are moved to assert more emphatically, while more kindly, their place beside English Churchmen in molding the religious and civil life of their country.

Especially we are moved to foster closer relations between American and English Congregationalists. They have something valuable to teach us about the spirit and method of conducting controversies which must arise concerning doctrine and government. We have something important to impart to them concerning unity in fellowship and action within the denomination. We are both discussing great questions in which one body is making more rapid advances than the other. Closer relations than can be maintained by reading one another's writings and occasional visits of leading men to one side or the other would result in great advantages to both. At our National Council and in our annual State meetings the utterances of English Congregationalists, appointed beforehand to speak on topics of current interest, would quicken the life of our churches; while we have messages other than mere greetings, which chosen men might bear, to the edification of our English brethren at their great assemblies. We believe that the obstacles to such closer relations between the two bodies might be overcome without great difficulty, and we are sure there are many on both sides of the Atlantic who are ready to cooperate to secure this result.

This pilgrimage, we believe, will appear more important as it recedes in time. It has already made for itself a place in the history of Congregationalism and in the life of the two nations who must inevitably bear together increasing responsibility for the peace of the world and the Christianizing of the human race. It has still a work to accomplish to which we shall devote ourselves heartily and with confidence increased by greatly prized friendships with brethren across the sea.

GAIL HAMILTON AS WRITER AND CHRISTIAN.

Before the mist of the ever receding past gathers about the striking personality of Mary Abigail Dodge The Congregationalist desires to pay her honored memory a tribute which it is particularly well qualified to offer. This paper was one of the very first to discover her literary ability and introduce her to the public, and for several years, beginning in 1858, she was one of the most frequent and valued of our contributors, articles from her pen appearing at intervals of a fortnight and usually occupying the place of honor on the first page. We have taken pains to examine our files of thirty-five years ago and more with a view to culling for our present readers some typical extracts from her writings. These appear on page 365.

It is, in many ways, a remarkable series of articles and if brought together in book form would assuredly add to her fame. Naturally, religious themes were most often treated, but she did not, by any means, confine herself to them. The versatility and breadth of her mind are indicated by her comments on the books and magazines of the day, by historical studies in English literature, by her charming studies of nature in both its summer and winter phases, by her discriminating criticisms on current art and by many articles in a lighter vein, such as is betokened by a title like this, To Stupid People. Her active mind moved quickly from theology to philosophy and thence to the problems of church life and the practical everyday affairs that make up the round of the ordinary humdrum life.

Gail Hamilton's well-known characteristics of style are as strongly marked in these her first writings as in her widely circulated books of later years. She wielded a nimble and often a caustic pen and was constantly brimming over with humor and gentle badinage, but perhaps the strongest impression left by the rapid perusal of most of these articles is of their deep though unconventional spirituality. She wrote with the thought of her needy fellow beings uppermost in her mind, and it seems to be her chief joy to bring to them words of comfort and inspiration.

Hardly second in value as betraying her qualities of mind and heart is the private correspondence which Miss Dodge had in those years with Mr. Dexter and Mr. Richardson, editor and managing editor, respectively, of the paper. It has been a rare pleasure to look over this budget of letters, in which the writer's irrepressible spirits are continually bubbling over in pointed personal allusions and in epigrammatic sentences hitting off this or that eccentricity of prominent personages of the day. We wish we had space to quote freely from these letters, for they were written at the outset of her literary career, when the young woman not long out of school was feeling her way to public favor, and all the life and buoyancy of her schooldays enters into her personal relations with the editors of this paper. Mr. Thomas Todd, the printer of this journal for so many years, has, at our request, jotted down some of the impressions which he received of Miss Dodge as she came and went. We are also glad to publish an article from Mr. Nichols, her Hamilton pastor, which testifies to the strength and beauty of her Christian life in these later years.

Miss Dodge in recent years had been so occupied with other work, particularly the preparation of the memoir of Mr. Blaine, her distinguished kinsman, that she wrote but little for any religious papers. It is gratifying, however, to see by comparing her earliest writings with her latest published and reported utterances that the hearty, though impulsive, faith of the schoolgirl and of the youthful author grew and broadened with her growth and flowered most abundantly as she drew near the dark valley. Her native gifts were great, her advantages unusual, but her richest bequest is a life in which culture and Christianity lived in ever deepening fellowship.

FRANCE AND THE FRENCH CANADIANS.

The Patrie of Montreal states that 300 Canadians are about to emigrate to Brazil, a fact not of great importance in itself, but significant of the restlessness which seems to be steadily growing among the French-speaking people of Canada. A prolific, hard-working, hitherto docile race, it has apparently come to self-consciousness through feeling the "growing pains" of youth. It has overflowed into New England, feels itself for the moment defeated and unwelcome in Manitoba and the great Northwest, and is shut in eastward and northward by the barren Arctic wilderness and the sea. It takes kindly to New England ways, but feels itself in danger of a transformation, which will involve the sacrifice of its individuality, and seeks a field where it may develop its own life according to its own laws. We cannot think the scheme of Brazilian settlement a hopeful one, but the growth of the race feeling and of national aspirations we have watched with the keenest interest not devoid of sympathy.

Singularly enough, the French of Canada are the one hopeful colonizing force of the French speaking peoples of the world. They are prolific and the population of France is nearly at a standstill. They have the fresh aspirations of a youthful people, while in the home land national pride too often takes the form of a senile jealousy of the success of others. It is a strange ordering of Providence which has put the one great fund of French speaking youthful vigor and aspiration under the control of that England which chauvinistic France so bitterly hates, and hedged it round with the wilderness and the Anglo-Saxon wall, while France itself is impotent to people and develop her great colonial possessions. With Algeria half occupied, French Congo undeveloped, Madagascar just subdued, it is strange that French-speaking people should go to Brazil. But the French Canadian is the child of the North, and France, among all her colonial possessions, has not one with climate and prospects which would be congenial to his habits and aspirations.

Hugh Price Hughes says of Cardinal Manning that "whoever was representative of any type of life, and whoever had, or was supposed to have, influence in any sphere of life," that man the cardinal desired to know. This legitimate curiosity, this catholic temper, strengthened the character, ability and reputation of the man who exhibited such admirable traits; and any one who imitates him will not suffer. The American people today are flocking to hear a presidential candidate. Why? Because they indorse his views? Yes—in some cases, but also because many of them deem it their duty to see and hear a man so typical of a portentous movement.

THE FOLLY OF NOT BELIEVING.

Christian assurance depends upon God's character, not our accomplishment. If we are wise we do not say, "I have attained," but rather, "God has promised." It is the assurance of faith, therefore, and not the assurance of experience, which supports us. And yet, in every wholesome Christian life, the assurance of faith gains a cumulative power from our recollection of the years which we have spent in God's service. We have been tried, but we have been sustained. We have backslidden, but we have been restored. We have passed through the valley of the shadow of death, but never without God's rod for correction and his staff for comfort. All experience is a prophecy, therefore, as well as a recollection.

Yet the maturest Christian, as surely as the latest prodigal returned from the far country to his father's house, must find the real and lasting confidence of his security in the pledged word of Christ. Assurance is of faith and not of sight or of experience. God will never let what he has done become the measure and the limit of what he intends. He uses a promise always as a magnet to draw us on. One victory clears the way for another. One call to self-sacrifice opens the road to further service, until we learn that victory through the sacrifice of self is the rule and joy of the Christian life on earth. And always we discover that the hope which makes our progress possible is a hope that is centered upon God himself.

Therefore it is a hope that cannot fail and a faith that is better than experience, better, also, for this training time of earth, than sight could ever be. Therefore our hearts in time of trouble pass all other encouragements to reach the presence of the father, as the homeing dove will not alight until it finds its own true nest at last. God's sure word of keeping is the answer to the soul's petition to be kept. We trust, therefore we are at rest. We use the present without worry because God has promised to provide. We are sure of the kingdom because it is God's good pleasure to give it to his children, and we are sure we are his children because "as many as received him, to them gave he the right to become children of God, even to them that believe on his name." Always, at the last, whatever experience may say or the feeling of the moment testify, it is to faith that we return. And we do not build our faith upon our faith, but upon the living and unchangeable word of God.

In the eighth chapter of the epistle to the Romans is a magnificent example of this faith that knows no middle point of resting, but flies home at once to God. Paul the persecuted, Paul whose homeless wanderings ended in a prison, is assured that all things work together for his good, and why? Simply because it is God's will and purpose. The climax should be read in the margin of the Revised Version, where it becomes a rising psalm of child-like and triumphant faith, such as even the apostle could seldom sing. Question answers question in magnificent antiphonal music, "What then shall we say to these things? If God be for us, who is against us? He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not also with him freely give us all things? Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? Shall God that justifieth? Who is he that shall condemn? Is it Christ Jesus that died, yea rather, that was raised from the dead, who is at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us? Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril or sword? . . . Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us."

In view of the prevailing and abiding love of him in whose hands all power in heaven and on earth is lodged what a folly seems our unbelief! And what a sin and shame our worry! We have but the duty of the present, the provision for the morrow is our Father's care. And because he cares and wills that we should have the help that never fails his trusting children in their hour of need we can put our whole strength into the moment's work, assured that the morrow's task will never be allowed to pass beyond the morrow's strength.

PRESENTING JESUS TO OTHERS.

This is what Christians are in the world to do. Watching us, others ought to be not only reminded of Jesus but enabled to form a fairly correct idea of what he would be and would do if he were here upon earth in circumstances such as ours. We are his representatives.

Whether others are our friends or are strangers, whether they are young or old, whether they are of upright life or more or less disreputable, in each case it is possible for us to exhibit so much of the spirit of our Lord that it may be recognized. If there be in our hearts a true sympathy and a genuine love they will manifest themselves naturally and unmistakably and will make their impression. No matter how intensely we may abhor sin, we are to try to feel kindly and fraternally towards the sinner.

Most of us need to study the character and policy of Jesus more carefully. Too often we convey to others an imperfect conception of him because we do not take proper pains to understand him. We reproduce an inadequate, partially mistaken and misleading idea of him because that is all which we have formed of him ourselves. But it is he as he truly was whom we are to present and represent to others, not he as we have allowed our own sinfulness to beguile us into assuming him to have been.

To present Jesus rightly and persuasively to others, therefore, the Christian personally must become reverently intimate with him. And he who thus knows Jesus cannot help loving him more intensely, and others, all others, for his sake. It is this tender personal union with him which has been the conspicuous feature of the lives of his earthly saints throughout the history of the church. They never parade it but it reveals itself in their lives inevitably and most attractively. It impels them to seek to win others to him. It teaches them tact and patience and versatility of resources, and it wins them great reward in the uplifting of their own hearts and many stars in their heavenly crown.

CURRENT HISTORY.

The Indianapolis Convention.

The most partisan Republican or Populist must see that the men who gathered at Indianapolis last week represented character, intelligence and patriotism. The delegates were all men who were willing to put aside for the time all hope of political preferment, if thereby they might compass the defeat of principles and men that they consider un-Democratic and hostile to the interests of the party and the nation. Tammany was unrepresented. Mere self-seeking politicians, like Senators Gorman of Maryland and Hill of New York, were absent. Veterans of the Civil War, Federal and Confederate, mingled like brethren. Sectional lines were obliterated and a platform was constructed and adopted which is as clean cut and honest a declaration of political belief as the present generation has seen. To some of its features we refer in another paragraph.

The candidate, selected on the first ballot, to lead the "National Democratic" party is Senator John M. Palmer of Illinois, who was born in Kentucky in 1817, adopted the profession of law, began his political career as a Douglass Democrat, but bolted to the Republican party. When the war broke out he enlisted, began a notable military career in which he rose to the rank of major general. From 1868 to 1872 he was governor of Illinois. In 1872 he bolted from the Republican party and supported Mr. Greeley, since which time he has been a stalwart Democrat, winning his seat in the United States Senate by a remarkable stumping campaign and a fierce contest in the Legislature. He is a comparatively poor man, honest, able, courageous and aggressive, and he believes thoroughly in the platform on which he stands. The candidate for vice president, nominated by acclamation, Gen. Simon Bolivar Buckner of Kentucky, was born in 1823, graduated from West Point in 1844, won the title of captain in the Mexican war and afterwards taught at West Point. He led the Confederate forces of Kentucky and was the commander at Fort Donelson, who surrendered to General Grant after the latter had sent his famous message, "No terms except unconditional and immediate surrender." He rose to the rank of lieutenant general in the Confederate army, and after the war practiced journalism. He has been governor of Kentucky. He has a large personal following throughout the State and his nomination will win for the party which nominated him thousands of votes throughout the South. Of the many significant and memorable acts of the convention perhaps none is more significant than the naming of men, both born in the border State of Kentucky, who fought on opposite sides in the great Civil War. Kentucky is almost sure to cast its vote for the Republican candidates, so large will be the number of Democrats who will vote for Palmer and Buckner, thus weakening the strength of the regular Democratic ticket; and that which is predicted for Kentucky is also prophesied for several other Southern States, and Illinois and Indiana. The Administration will cast all its influence in favor of the ticket nominated at Indianapolis and the machine which will be constructed to carry on the campaign; and from this time on a process of disintegration and realignment will go on that will be most interesting to watch and have far-reaching consequences.

A Constructive Platform.

The platform adopted by the 800 delegates at the Indianapolis convention not only denounced "protection and its ally the free coinage of silver as schemes for the personal profit of the few at the expense of the masses"; not only declared for the gold standard and a limited coinage of silver at a parity with gold, but it denounced the "further maintenance of the present costly patchwork system of national paper currency as a constant source of injury and peril, and the necessity of such intelligent currency reform as will confine the government to its legitimate function, a complete separation from the banking business, and will afford to all sections of our country a uniform, safe and elastic banking currency under governmental supervision, measured in volume by needs of business." Mr. Bryan has been asserting that there was no political party, no body of men in this country, that dared to take the position that the United States should adhere forever to a gold standard. He will have to change his opinion, for that is exactly what the Indianapolis delegates demand. Bimetallism, international or otherwise, they spurn and affirm that experience has shown that "by reason of their natural qualities gold is the necessary money for large affairs of commerce and business, while silver is conveniently adapted to minor transactions." In this respect the Indianapolis convention platform differs radically, not only with the Chicago platform but with the St. Louis Republican platform. And it proceeds a step farther in another important direction and asserts what so many individual Republicans have acknowledged but which no Republican platform or congressional caucus has yet had sense or courage enough to assert, namely, that much of our present unrest and distress are due to a currency and banking system, the outgrowth of exigencies of the Civil War, which needs most thorough reform. It is to be hoped that the result of the November election will be such that when Congress reassembles the legislators will feel that they have an imperative command from the people to set about legislating in such a way as to give us a safe, flexible, currency system, and relieve the national treasury from demands now made upon it unlike those imposed upon the treasury of any other nation of the first rank. The convention is also to be commended for its willingness to indorse the demand that international disputes shall be settled by arbitration, not war. Its declarations of hostility to those who attack "individual freedom, the rights of private contract, the independence of the judiciary and the authority of the president to enforce the Federal laws," are as unequivocal as could possibly be formulated. Because the Chicago convention did attack all these time honored, constitution guarded rights the "National Democrats" cannot support the candidates of that convention nor be guided by its acts.

The Vermont Election.

It has been said with truth that whatever political strength the demand for the free coinage of silver has arises from its pledge to the farmer that the price of that which he has to sell will increase, perhaps double. At bottom the great movement which has flourished, in the South and West especially, for several years now, is an agrarian uprising. Therefore the verdict of the Vermont election last week becomes all the more significant, for it is a State which has few manufacturing towns and still fewer centers of population dominated by those who may be fairly classed as of the creditor type. Most of its citizens are farmers who are intelligent, thrifty and their own masters, subject neither to the dictation of "bosses" nor "plutocrats." It was freely conceded that the Republican majority at the State election last week would be large. In 1892 the Republican plurality was 19,702 and in 1894 it was 28,521, but no one expected that this year the Republican plurality would jump to 38,491, as it did. Led by Hon. E. G. Phelps, thousands of gold standard Democrats voted for the Republican candidate for governor—Mr. Grout—and hundreds, if not thousands, of Republicans who have for various reasons failed to vote in recent elections recognized the vital issue at stake and their duty and went to the polls; while, on the other hand, it is difficult to detect the slightest evidence of the defection of any farmers hitherto Republican to the Democratic candidate—Mr. Jackson—who accepted the Chicago platform and its candidates. Inasmuch as the size of the Republican majority in Vermont in past years at the election held just prior to the presidential election has been found to foreshadow with much accuracy the result in November, it is not surprising to see that men of all walks in life and all parties are interpreting last Tuesday's election as decisive and a sure index of the future. Together with the convention at Indianapolis and its outcome, it certainly has given an upward impulse to business, and stimulated to renewed action those who are opposing the Chicago platform and its candidates.

The Working of the Raines Law.

A correspondent of the New York Evening Post has been studying in New York city the practical workings of the much debated Raines Law of State control of the liquor trade. Its effect as a political instrument is not yet clear, but from his point of view its practical working has been, on the whole, satisfactory. The law-breaking saloon of earlier times, he says, is practically extinct and the amount of excessive Sunday drinking has evidently fallen off, as is shown by the police court statistics, but there is no difficulty in getting liquor in the hotels, which abound everywhere in the city, and in the larger saloons which have blossomed out as hotels by the addition of a few beds and a hotel license. The supply of Sunday liquor is largely provided by clubs, which are exempt from police interference in supplying liquor to their members, whether they be the organizations of rich men on Fifth Avenue or of poor men on the East Side, and the effect of partnership in these clubs seems on the whole to be that of self restraint. Even the Germans, who were bitterly opposed to the enactment of the law, seem to be satisfied with its results. Within limits this is certainly an encouraging showing, though it leaves abundant room for instruction and moral suasion on the alcohol question. The recent New York State Republican Convention indorsed the workings of the law in the most unequivocal way.

American Social Science Association.

The annual meeting of this association, held last week in Saratoga, considered timely themes and was favored with the presence of some notable men. Mr. Sanborn, the secretary, in his prognostications as to the future and his survey of the past, revealed that wealth of information and acrid optimism for which he is famous. Dr. H. L. Wayland of Philadelphia attacked the theory of education for the Negro which makes Greek more essential than manual training, and Professor Wayland of the Yale Law School set forth some of the problems which the makers and interpreters of law face, now that the bicycle is a legally protected vehicle on the public highway. St. Clair McElway of the Brooklyn Eagle described the mutations of the struggle for non-partisan good government in Brooklyn, and Booker T. Washington, by telling the story of his life and describing social conditions in the South as he sees them, aroused enthusiasm for the work done at Tuskegee and similar institutions in the South. This association, though it fails to win a large attendance at its annual meetings and receives but scant attention from the press, does succeed in inducing able men to address it, and their papers as afterward printed are valuable to thoughtful men of all pursuits. President Angell of Michigan University is president elect of the association for the next term.

Li Hung Chang and the Missionaries.

Li Hung Chang has visited Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Washington and Niagara Falls during the past week, and continued to gain knowledge by dint of much questioning, some of it, to Occidental eyes, puerile and impudent. Nothing that he has seen or heard, however, is to be compared in its significance with the acts and words of a body of American citizens who waited on him Sept. 1 and made known to him their appreciation of the service which he has rendered to his nation by invariably casting the weight of his great personal and official influence in defense of Christian missions in China. The officials presented to Li Hung Chang were more than thirty in number. They represented officially six of the great denominations and the International Y. M. C. A., with constituents numbering nearly 8,000,000 souls, who are supporting 733 missionaries, 400 schools with about 12,000 pupils, and sixty hospitals and dispensaries in China. The American Board was represented by Rev. Drs. Judson Smith, A. C. Thompson, C. C. Creegan and H. A. Stimson. Hon. John W. Foster, former secretary of state and Li Hung Chang's intimate friend, introduced the deputation to the Chinese statesman, and to Dr. F. F. Ellinwood of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions fell the honor of reading the formal address, which, later, was handed to the viceroy in a handsomely bound volume and by him returned to the deputation for the signatures of those present. The address, after stating in generous terms the gratitude of the missionary societies for the measure of protection given to them by the Chinese Government, and after affirming the disinterested motives of Christian missionaries in entering and laboring in China, asserted frankly the belief that "whatever of truth the great Author of our being has made known to men of any nation is the rightful heritage of all mankind, and that as a matter of natural and imperative obligation those who believe that they have received the truth are bound to make it known to others," and therefore the truth as revealed by Christ had been taken to the Chinese. The viceroy replied informally and formally. Informally he asserted his conviction that all "American missionaries in China have disinterested motives. They only work for the good of mankind." Formally he tendered the thanks of the emperor of China for the tribute paid to China's justice in dealing with missionaries, and his pleasure that teachers of the Christian religion have been so circumspect and so conservative a force. Personally he tendered his thanks for the "effective prayers" of the missionaries in causing God to spare his life when he was smitten by the assassin's bullet, and his gratification that the missionaries invariably cast all their influence against China's curse, the habit of opium smoking. At a time when reports from the mission fields in China tell of unusual opportunity to win converts and extend influence, owing to the state of flux in which the nation and the people are just now, this meeting of our American missionary officials with China's greatest personality is most opportune. Words of commendation from such a statesman will, it is to be hoped, have weight with a portion of the American public prone to underestimate the value of Christian missions.

Prohibition in Canada.

A very weighty deputation of Canadian temperance advocates waited on Premier Laurier last week and had the satisfaction of hearing from him the statement that it is his intention, supported loyally by his cabinet and the Liberal party leaders, to submit and support such legislation at the next session of Parliament as will permit the electors of the Dominion to determine whether or not all traffic in liquor in the Dominion shall be prohibited. Mr. Laurier, Sir Oliver Morratt and Hon. Sidney Fisher, who also spoke, referred gratefully to the vast gains in temperance sentiment and habit during the past quarter of a century and their eager desire to contribute to bettering present conditions, but they also impressed upon the leaders of the Dominion Alliance present the seriousness of the step proposed and the necessity of a public sentiment strong enough to enforce and endure a prohibitory law as well as create it. The Dominion Alliance accepts Mr. Laurier's pledge as satisfactory and will immediately begin an active campaign. One half the present Liberal Cabinet are total abstainers, and already a new tone is perceptible in and around the Ottawa Parliament buildings. The bar in the House of Commons has just been ordered abolished.

The Irish National Convention.

The many Irish born delegates from abroad who met with hundreds of Irishmen in Dublin last week to perfect race unity and solidify factions so that an appeal of greatest force might be made to British lawmakers can scarcely be said to have succeeded. Neither the adherents of Timothy Healey nor John Redmond were present, and the best the convention could do was to formulate the doctrine that since John Dillon possesses the confidence of a majority of the Irish people he deserves the implicit obedience of all, a doctrine of majority rule which is not likely to obtain. Indeed, since the convention adjourned Dillon has been mobbed by a Dublin mob. The perpetuation of this factional spirit is lamentable, for just now there is a most unusual opportunity to secure a hearing for Irish claims, as a royal commission has recently reported that British taxation of Ireland for many years has been notoriously unfair. No leader of Parnell's astuteness or unifying power emerges to lead now, and if he did prayer would have to be offered night and day lest he make shipwreck of himself and followers as did Parnell.

Turkey and the Powers.

Sir Phillip Currie, British ambassador to Constantinople, is said to have returned there last week with an autograph letter from Queen Victoria to the sultan voicing her indignation at the misrule which he permits, and a letter to the Porte from the British foreign minister couched in terms which admit of no misinterpretation and call a halt in the Porte's policy of murder of and theft from its Christian subjects. Since the world knows of no reason why Great Britain should be more humane or courageous now than when Armenia called for aid and failed to get it, it is reasonable to suppose that Lord Salisbury is either determined to take advantage of the indecision at St. Petersburg, owing to Lobanoff's death, or that he has reason to believe that Russia and Germany no longer stand in the way of such action by European Christian powers as will make such horrors as have shocked us impossible in the future. The successful joint action of the Powers in saving Crete from war and rapine would indicate that a saner, more humane policy was about to win ascendency at Berlin and St. Petersburg, and the inspired comments of the German press, commenting on the meeting of the Russian czar and the German emperor last week, indicate a decided change of sentiment in Germany. Just what the new policy calls for is not clear, but already there seems to be a disposition to look upon the sultan as one who must be curbed in power and reduced to the position of a salaried official, whose tenure of office will depend upon the fidelity with which he lives up to the orders received from his masters. Partition of territory is not yet opportune, but establishment of law and order seems to be decreed. Lest the sultan fail to realize that he is impotent if his fellow rulers be united, the fleets of Russia, Great Britain and France have begun to converge toward Constantinople, and outbreaks along the Bulgarian frontier remind him of the fires that smolder there. Evidence accumulates to prove the responsibility of the Porte for the recent massacres in Constantinople, a contention that the representatives of the Powers continue to bring to the notice of the sultan at every opportunity. Armenian refugees are arriving in large numbers at many European ports and we shall see not a few of them ultimately. Russia excludes them.

NOTES.

The national debt increased $12,342,683 during August.

A son of U. S. Grant, residing in California, has become a Populist.

The State election in Arkansas Sept. 6 resulted in the election of the Democratic ticket by a majority of 45,000 or more, a decided gain if it represents an honest count.

The maiden ship of the Japan Mail Steamship Company's new service to Seattle, operated in conjunction with the great Northern Railway, arrived in Seattle's superb harbor the last day of August.

A cargo of excellent anthracite coal, mined in Tonquin by Chinese labor employed by French capitalists, has just been landed in San Francisco, where it will be sold for less than Pennsylvania coal and at a profit to its shippers.

Ten thousand employés in the War Department were classified in the civil service last week, and now only the confidential clerks of the secretary and assistant secretary are exempt from the "merit system." Quietly and surely this great reform goes on.

The death of Rev. Dr. L. R. Paige of Cambridge, who was born in March, 1802, removes from the Universalist denomination one of its ablest men, and from Cambridge an honest citizen and chronicler of local history. He had in him the blood of Elder Brewster, Thomas Prince and Governor Dudley.

The death of Commander John Stark Newell, commander of the United States armored cruiser Detroit, is a loss to the navy and to society. As chief representative of the United States on the committee to investigate the Kucheng massacres in China he served his country and the missionary interests admirably.

IN BRIEF.

Our issue next week will have special bearing on the interests of Sunday schools, with particular reference to our own Sunday School Society.

They polled 300 Methodist preachers of the Cincinnati (Ohio) Conference last week, and not one favored the Chicago platform or candidates.

The Christians (or Disciples of Christ) of Minnesota gave more than $10 per member to benevolent purposes last year, a record worthy of emulation by all disciples of Christ.

The Christian Advocate's contribution to the political campaign is a reprint of Robert South's famous sermon on The Fatal Imposture and Force of Words, preached first in May, 1686.

Dublin Presbyterians, notwithstanding midsummer heat, packed Metropolitan Hall recently to hear Rev. Dr. John Hall of New York city, who for nine years was a pastor in the Irish capital.

The leading New York city specialist in pulmonary diseases died last week, having contracted from his patients the disease which he had spent his life in fighting. Sacrifice for others, surely.

The British Weekly, which knows Ian Maclaren's mind as well as any one, says that Dr. Watson "will by and by take an opportunity to show that he holds and expounds the theology of grace." At Yale, perhaps, in his forthcoming Lyman Beecher lectures.

"Exact, constant, correct and accepted definitions," says The Northwestern Christian Advocate, "would end three-quarters of the debate which is now in almost hopeless progress in the absence of such definitions." And this is true of more than the political debate which is now in progress.

To the funeral of a child in the family of an Albany (N. Y.) Congregational layman a Jewish rabbi came as a friend of the parents. Invited to offer prayer by the Christian clergyman officiating, the rabbi did so with a depth of feeling and unction that blessed and cheered all who listened.

Here is an acute observation from a missionary in the Orient in regard to the people with whom he is laboring: "It's a weakness of theirs to care more to seem to be right than for the being right itself." This suggests the jocose remark of the late John Boyle O'Reilly: "I would rather be Irish than right."

Louis Rhead, the best of American designers of posters, is reported as saying: "You will never do good art of any sort if you do not believe in a divine Creator who made this world. . . . Artists who think they can lead immoral lives destroy their early promise. They go to the dogs, somehow, and serve them right."

"Reading maketh a full man." A generation ago at Williams College seven students met regularly to read and discuss great books —classic and modern. Today one of them is president of the Hawaiian Republic, another president of Clark University, another a noted New York lawyer, two are eminent judges and two others are editors, one of the Outlook and the other of Harper's Weekly.

President Andrews of Brown University, in his last annual report to the trustees of that institution, discussing college morals, says that "personal admonition on the part of college officers is useful, often availing alone," in stopping immorality, but, he adds, and it is a sad statement, "It is unfortunate that fewer college officers than formerly feel responsibility for kindly services like this." Why?

A company of people calling themselves the Christian Apostolic Congregation were disappointed one day last week in their expectation that the world would come to an end on that day. Probably such disappointments have come to some earnest believers in every generation since Christ ascended. Yet the lesson that he taught his disciples is not yet wholly learned—to watch, not to predict.

Some of the daily papers during the last few days have announced that the American Board closes the year without debt. It is hoped that this may be true, but we are assured by the secretaries and the treasurer of the Board that it is not yet possible to say what the figures will show, and that the statements which have been published anticipatory of their annual reports are without their authority.

An interesting instance of church union is the bringing together of the Methodist missions in Germany, where the conferences representing the English Wesleyans and the American Methodist Episcopal Church have agreed to unite under the latter name and association. This will add to the forces of American Methodism twenty-nine churches with 2,300 members, and require an additional annual appropriation of $12,500.

Baggage rooms at railway stations crowded with trunks and parcels at this season witness to the high degree of civilization which requires an amount of furnishings in travel far beyond what our fathers thought necessary for their comfort when at home. But Li Hung Chang, going through our country with his 360 pieces of luggage, must convince the baggage handlers that in this respect Chinese civilization is far in advance of ours.

Dr. Hitchcock of Amherst, the presiding genius of the gymnasium for thirty-five years and the one man in the faculty who has touched at close range the daily life of all the students, is to be relieved of the brunt of his work by Dr. Paul C. Phillips of the class of 1888. But "old Doc" will still keep a keen eye upon the students, will marshall the returning graduates for the alumni dinner and command, as of yore, the love of every son of Amherst in whose ears "old Doc's" "God bless you" makes sweeter music than cathedral bells.

There is a manly ring presaging good government for Canada in a recent utterance of Mr. Wilfred Laurier, the Liberal premier: "I am a Frenchman," he said, "and I am proud of my race; I am a Roman Catholic, and I love the religion in which I was born; but I am also a Liberal of the English school, and on the day I took office as leader of the Liberal party, nay, long before, I determined that I would never let religious creed or nationality enter into my consideration of any public question, and would devote my energies to the advancement of Canada, my Canada, our Canada."

The unfailing supply of pure cold water which Berkeley Temple Church in Boston has kept on tap all summer by the side of its church building has been much used and appreciated. It is a continual reminder of the water of life to see all classes coming—teamsters stopping their horses, pedestrians turning aside in their rapid walk—to enjoy what stands always ready for them without money and without price. This is a very simple and beautiful form of ministry which other churches in crowded city neighborhoods might well imitate.

American citizens often overestimate the value of what is foreign as much as they underestimate what can be had in their own country. A young lady who has just gone abroad for musical study asked our advice as to what city in Germany would afford her the best advantages. We consulted a public singer, now in Europe, widely known on both sides of the Atlantic, who has studied for years in Germany, France and Italy. In reply she sent several addresses of teachers in Berlin, Dresden, Leipsic and Paris, but she added that the best advantages for musical training, either vocal or instrumental, are to be found in Boston.

A young woman from Jerusalem, soliciting funds for an independent missionary enterprise in that city, is reported in Boston papers as having said at a recent meeting in the Bromfield Street Church that there are now 123,000 Jews in and around Jerusalem. That statement needs to be verified. Five years ago the British and American consuls in that city, after careful investigation, reported that in the whole of Palestine proper there were 45,031 Jews. If missions to that race are to be encouraged, New York city affords a far more favorable opportunity than Jerusalem, for it contains more than 200,000 Jews.

Apropos of Gail Hamilton's relations to this paper, it is interesting to learn that the first money she received from The Congregationalist reached her just before the Fourth of July and was devoted to the purchase of firecrackers! She was accustomed in her correspondence with the editors to express her mind freely, and here is one characteristic sentence which some of our later day contributors will doubtless echo: "I tell you what it is—I'm not going to put myself out to write any more 'timely' things. It doesn't pay. I have to hurry my life out to get them there, and then you take all their life out before you print 'em."

The New York Sun of Sept. 1 contained a report of an interview with Rev. Peter MacQueen of Somerville, Mass., in which he was represented as charging the missionaries of the American Board in Turkey with incompetence, bigotry and lewdness. We are glad to announce that Mr. MacQueen says in reply that "the part of that interview relating to the Congregational missionaries is a misstatement and utterly unwarranted by any words I used to the reporter." The injustice done to a Christian minister by representing him as making such charges against his brethren ought to make even the New York Sun blush to print them.

One of Europe's greatest scholars in Old Testament literature saw Mr. Bryan nominated at the Chicago convention. In a personal note just received from him he says:

Not all that was said or done can efface my first impression of that vast gathering, conceived before the proceedings opened. When I looked across the body of delegates under the standards of all your States and Territories,

I received then a vision of the greatness of the United States that will never fade, for though I had seen so much of you in detail before I had not been privileged to obtain so comprehensive an idea of your great nation. You are great enough to live through and down any number of problems and troubles.

Phillips Brooks made a point of answering every letter he received, and he is dead, alas! The late Dr. A. J. Gordon, as his biography shows, was "the patron general of all poor devils," the man whose life was nibbled away by the demands of those who had no just claim upon his time. With some, if not entire, truth does Dr. Wayland in The Examiner say:

Men of large wealth, men in high position, men whose time is worth much to the nation and to the public, guard themselves and their time. They do not allow themselves to be at the mercy of every wayfarer. Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. Vanderbilt, Mr. Cleveland, Mr. Gladstone are not accessible to everybody who chooses to ask for them. Why should the minister wear his time upon his sleeve for every daw to peck at?

Section 31 of the New York State Raines Liquor Law reads:

It shall not be lawful for any corporation, association, co-partnership or person, whether having paid such tax or not, to sell, offer or expose for sale or give away any liquor on Sunday.

An Elmira wine merchant has called to the attention of the Grand Jury of that county the fact that two churches of Elmira give away fermented wine to communicants, and he holds that by so doing they disobey the Raines Law. It is his way, characteristic to be sure, of beginning a test of the constitutionality of the law. To anticipate the verdict is useless, to attempt to shape it would be blameworthy, but it is open to say that if it be unlawful for fermented wine to be given away unfermented wine can be.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM THE INTERIOR.

Party Journals.

It is somewhat surprising that as yet the silver Democrats have no first-class newspaper in Chicago. The Record has been doing good service by giving in its columns the arguments, both those who advocate and those who oppose free silver. This it has so far done impartially. Rumors prevail of new papers to be started and of purchases of some already well established, but nothing has come of them.

The Volunteers and the Salvationists.

The success of Colonel Fielding, as the Western head of the Volunteers, has been well-nigh phenomenal. The body now numbers about 2,000 soldiers. Beginning in a single room, containing a table and a chair, it now has large and convenient eadquarters, and has just received egacy of $10,000, which will put it in possession of a building with twenty-six rooms and in every respect adapted to its work. Some of these rooms will be used as lodging rooms for the poor and homeless. It is rumored that Chicago may become the headquarters of the Volunteer movement, although it would hardly seem wise to leave the seaboard for a city so far inland. But the success of the Volunteers has in no way diminished the efficiency of the Salvation Army. This is due in part to the policy pursued by the Volunteers. They have believed that there is demand for all both divisions of the army can do, and in this belief results show that they are justified. Commander Booth-Tucker in his visit here awakened the enthusiasm of the Salvationists to the highest pitch, not only by his promise that General Booth would visit the city next spring, but by himself, with a companion, lodging a night in one of the cheapest of our slum taverns, in order to ascertain by actual experience the needs of those for whom he proposes to provide a shelter house after the plan of the shelter houses in London. In spite of the heats of August the Salvation Army, and its kindred association the Volunteers, have shown the enthusiasm, energy and tact which characterize their efforts in the more delightful months of the year.

The Yerkes Observatory.

A recent visit to Lake Geneva may furnish an excuse for a few words concerning the building in which the work of the observatory is to be carried on, as well as of the character of the work itself. The location, eighty miles from Chicago, in Wisconsin, has been chosen to avoid dust and the vibrations which are inseparable from the railways and machinery of a great city and to secure as pure an atmosphere as possible. The generous offer of the owner of the land had its influence in leading the authorities of the university to locate this department of the institution here. It would be difficult, anywhere within a reasonable distance of Chicago, to find a more delightful spot. The building with its two fronts commands a view of the lake and of the rich surrounding country. There is sufficient land for the observatory building, for the power-house, for homes for professors and, in case of need, for dormitories. Were it not for the fact that it will be the center of intense activity one might fear loneliness. There will be but little society during the winter outside the professorial circle. Arrangements for practically two great departments of study have been made—that of astronomy and that of physics. The physical laboratories are on a generous scale. Astro-physics will here for the first time have adequate opportunity for development.

The building, which is of two stories with a basement where are the rooms for heavy work, is about six hundred feet in length and from sixty to eighty in width. It has three domes. The main dome at one end of the building, ninety feet in diameter, resting on a foundation which reminds one of an old Roman amphitheater, is, from almost every part of the lake and its shores, a conspicuous and impressive object. Here will be set up the immense telescope which so many saw at the World's Fair. At the other end of the building, which has been specially arranged for the purpose, are two domes, one for a meridian circle and one for the twelve-inch telescope with which the director, Professor Hale, has made such remarkable discoveries in his study of the sun. Connected with this dome is a long, gallery-like room for helioscopic experiments.

Associated with Professor Hale are such men as Professor Barnard, lately of the Lick Observatory, and Professor Wadsworth, whose world-wide reputation will attract students hither from all over the country, and even from Europe. Certainly no existing observatory has the equipment this will have. In some of the rooms set apart for the professors and instructors there are benches of slate or marble, on firm supports, for delicate instruments. The room for the library, looking out on the lake and furnished with abundant light, is one of the most attractive in the building. Large as the edifice is every part of it will be devoted to some important use. Only those familiar with experimental study can imagine what a center of industry it will be. It is, as it should be, fireproof, being of brick and iron. The brick are of a light gray color, and are relieved by ornaments in terra cotta of appropriate designs, which add much to the beauty of the structure.

The professors will move to Lake Geneva as soon as their houses, now in process of erection, are completed. Work for years has been planned, and on a scale which has called already for the expenditure of a princely fortune. If from previous results one is inclined to foresee great things from this opportunity for research, one is held back by the director, who is careful about predicting what may be expected. Unwilling to stand sponsor for crude speculations, he is determined that any claims he may put forth shall have the support of facts. But with such opportunities for study and original work as the world has not yet seen, it will be strange if surprising results are not reached.

At Chicago University.

The summer attendance has been large. Fully a thousand persons have been present at the lectures given by the different professors. As in previous years many teachers and not a few young ministers have taken advantage of the opportunity to employ their vacation in special studies. Divinity classes have been large. Much interest has been manifest in semi-philosophical lectures. Prof. George Adam Smith received a warm welcome and was gladly heard by many who had become familiar with him through his writings. Professor Ladd made a good impression. So did Prof. Agar Beet of Great Britain. But of all the lecturers this year none seems to have been more deservedly popular than President Hyde of Bowdoin. This is in part due to his mastery of the subjects on which he has spoken, partly to his perfect fairness, partly to his attractive personality. He impresses one in his favor the moment he rises to speak. His main topic of discussion has been World Building. He has treated of the world of facts, of fancy or imagination, of art, of science, of man, of institutions, of society and of religion. While in the front line of advanced thinkers he has shown the conservatism of a genuine believer in Christianity, and the fearlessness of one who is confident that without it no true progress for man is possible. President Harper, who has been suffering from chills and fever, is rapidly recovering his health, and is now meeting his classes day by day.

Popular Education in the City.

The Y. M. C. A. has made more extensive provision than ever for instruction in its evening classes. With its thirty or forty courses last year, its secretary claimed that he was conducting the largest people's college in the State. This year, with the classes at the central establishment and that on the West Side, its attractions as a center of educational life will be considerably increased. Rooms will be thrown open for classes during the day as well as in the evening. In this way it is believed some will be reached not previously interested in the work of the association. The Lewis Institute, from which we anticipate a great deal, will open its doors soon with a large number of students. Here regular and thorough courses of study will be mapped out as in Armour Institute. Indeed, it is believed that this institute will do for the West Side a work similar to that wrought on the South Side by Armour Institute, whose rooms hitherto have been crowded beyond all expectation, and whose influence on the classes its founder desired to reach has been incalculable. During this week Teachers' Institutes have been held on different sides of the city. While attendance is voluntary it is expected that teachers will generally be present and profit from the suggestions which in such gatherings as these are constantly thrown out. Most of the week has been given up to this preparation of teachers for their year's service.

End of Vacations.

Next Sunday most of the ministers will be in their places and congregations will assume their normal size. Although in general the churches are in fairly good spiritual condition, it cannot be affirmed that it is as satisfactory as it often is in years when the excitements of a presidential campaign are wanting. At present nearly all the members of our churches feel themselves compelled to do what they can to assert their patriotism and labor for its triumph. Still Sunday schools have been large, and, considering the extreme heat of a good portion of the summer, ordinary church work has not suffered more than its customary drawbacks.

State of Political Opinion.

While the campaign has only just opened feeling runs high. It has become well-nigh impossible at the Republican headquarters to keep up with the demand for literature. The people all over the West seem to be reading for themselves. They are making up their minds for themselves. From what one can hear on the streets and in listening to laboring men, it would seem as if the advocates of free silver were rapidly losing ground, as if the people were becoming convinced that to support the Chicago platform is, in some measure at least, to support anarchy and dishonesty. The charges brought against Governor Altgeld by Mr. Forman, a very prominent member of his own party and one of his former hearty supporters, with the lame answer the governor has given, and followed by a repetition of those charges and a demand that they be met, have diminished the governor's chances for re-election. A good many Republicans would be glad if some arrangement could be made by which the Republican candidate might be persuaded to withdraw in favor of the nominee of the sound money Democrats, John C. Black, who is admitted on all sides to be a man of great ability and sterling integrity. But they are unwilling to hazard the success of their own candidate by voting in favor of another, and thus rendering possible another four years of the present State rule. By multitudes the disgrace of it has been keenly felt.

Chicago, Sept. 5. FRANKLIN.

CURRENT THOUGHT.

AT HOME.

Why? asks Prof. Josiah Royce in his article on Browning's Theism in the September New World, the intense concern of Browning, "an essentially independent intellect" and "no orthodox believer," in the doctrine of the incarnation. "The answer is plain. The truth of the doctrine of the incarnation, if ever it became or becomes true, must lie in its revelation of a universal and transcendently significant aspect of God's nature—namely, the human aspect. God, the All Great, if he is or can become human, is thereby shown to be the All Loving too. Then one can see that he really does and so can contain an attribute that qualifies him to see the meaning of our every imperfection, and to respond to our blindest love with love of his own."

Taking up those who criticise pastors for supplying pulpits during their vacations, the Presbyterian Messenger rejoins: "We doubt whether it would be safe to make an inflexible rule on this subject. We heard recently of a minister who had been granted a vacation by his church, and who promised the session of the church that he would not take part in any religious services during his vacation, who found himself considerably embarrassed by the contract. When he attended a prayer meeting and was called upon to lead in prayer he found it necessary to excuse himself on account of his promise, and, when he was dining with Christian friends and was called on to ask a blessing, he was again compelled to say that he had entered into a contract that he would not take active part in any religious services during his vacation. Jesting aside, we believe that the question as to whether a minister should spend his vacation in supplying other pulpits than his own depends entirely on the understanding he has with his own people with reference to this matter."

The Louisville Christian Guide indulges in this astonishing remark: "The use of the title 'Reverend' for the preacher is absolutely un-Scriptural, and not only un-Scriptural but anti-Scriptural. This practice was an abomination to our fathers, and should be so to any right-minded preacher of the gospel today. How any sound-hearted Christian preacher can let the woolly, sanctimonious, pharisaical thing be slipped over his shoulders and wear it round the streets we confess is beyond our understanding."

ABROAD.

John Morley, in an article on Arbitration with America, in the Nineteenth Century for August, says: "The truth is that the creation of a permanent tribunal would be the best way of improving the rules of what is called international law. Sir Henry Maine has some weighty remarks on the advantages of a permanent court or board of arbitrators over occasional adjudicators appointed ad hoc. He is arguing from the memorable Geneva arbitration upon what are known as the Alabama claims. He does not deny that this famous proceeding conferred great benefit for the moment both on Great Britain and the United States, but he insists that the tribunal did not look at the subject in all its bearings, and forgot the future effect of their award in the particular case upon the rights of neutrals—the neglect of which does more than anything else to enlarge the area of maritime wars. . . . In short, a permanent board is the only hope of building up coherently that fabric of international rules about territorial claims, the non-existence of which is one of Lord Salisbury's main arguments against the proposals before him."

Dr. Chowry Muthu, honorary secretary of the Indian Christian Association of England, was recently asked by the New Age interviewer about the future of India. "I look forward to the spread of the Nonconformist conscience (in which I include devout men of all churches and denominations), which shall be the salvation of the world and India. I look forward to the abolishing of the color line, the root of many evils, when a spirit of greed, of jingoism, of selfishness will be replaced by a spirit of justice, of love and sympathy, when nations shall no longer be oppressed because they are weak or black. I look forward to the coming glorious Christian democracy, the final triumph of applied Christianity, and of the ushering in of a reign of peace and righteousness, to which India, once politically, religiously and socially emancipated, will contribute an important part."

Prof. Otto Pfleiderer of the University of Berlin contributes to the September Philosophical Review a masterly discussion of the question, Is Morality without Religion Possible and Desirable? He holds that it is not, and that "when religious faith is lost and skepticism and unbelief prevail the moral consciousness of the masses declines or is totally subverted." He holds that the only hope of society is in the church, developing historically and naturally and purging itself of dross. "Societies of Ethical Culture are as a band of robbers before a strongly defended fortress, and impotent against the church."

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Sept. 20-26. The Need of Home Missionary Work. Isa. 62: 1-12.

This subject falls at an opportune time. We are in the midst of an exciting political campaign, when every upright man is bound to take thought for the welfare of the entire country. We are made aware of great differences in opinion regarding important questions. One danger is that persons who have lacked educational and Christian advantages will, despite their good intentions, be led to vote for measures that will impair the nation's honor and prosperity. Another peril arises from the lack of sympathy between class and class, between section and section. The object of home missionary work is not merely to save people from a future hell but to nourish right ideas concerning what makes for the social weal. Our missionaries go to the frontier to try to build up there a Christian civilization and Christian institutions based on the principles that older communities have proved and found essential to growth and permanence. We shall never have the right sort of a nation in all its parts, or that degree of brotherly love which is needed to knit diverse elements together, until we realize the absolute need of home missions.

Then, again, some of us are just back from our vacations. If we have used our eyes as Christians should we must have seen many a country district not sufficiently supplied with Christian privileges. We need not go to the far West in order to discover them. They are scattered up and down our New England hillsides and valleys and along our seacoast. Perhaps we have had the joy this summer of sharing in some definite effort to bring the knowledge of Christ to these out of the way districts. At any rate, we must have realized how great the need is of more thorough and persistent endeavor to reclaim the territory that has been lost, and to hold, as well, what has been gained.

In my own short travels this summer I have happened upon two representative New England rural communities. In one the leading men are outspoken unbelievers. They indulge in Sunday ball playing and boat racing, they scoff at the few Christian believers who are bravely trying to sustain the local churches. Their influence is felt far and wide as a blight upon the town and especially upon the lives of the young. In the other town the character of the first settlers was so distinctively moral and Christian that the impress of their lives has never ceased to be felt. Soon after the Revolutionary War one of the two brothers who were the pioneer settlers sent to Harvard College for a young man to come and teach his children and grandchildren. He coveted an education for those dear to him, and no less than forty of his descendants have been enrolled as graduates of colleges and technical schools. If one plants the right seed in the springtime and watches over the blade that springs from it the harvest is sure to come. But if planting is delayed until summer and autumn, no fair blossom or golden fruit can be expected. It is not too late to save the new sections of our country and to redeem the older portions that have been allowed to run to waste. The need is clear; what can we do to meet it?

BOSTON REVISITED.

BY FRANKLIN.

A New Boston.

To one who has not seen the city with which in past years one has been more or less familiar its present greatness and prosperity are something of a surprise. That Boston has grown almost as rapidly as any Western town, and far more solidly and satisfactorily, during the last decade is apparent at even a superficial glance. Miles upon miles of new and beautiful streets have been laid out. They are lined with costly dwelling houses. They are wide and straight and clean. Cities which once were suburbs have now become a part of Boston. Far beyond them the man who spends the day in the city in business is carried to his home for the night. In fact, it seems as if at least a third of the population of the State were already within easy reach of the city. A look at the business of the town makes its metropolitan character apparent. It is no longer a provincial Boston which we see, but a Boston which is the capital of New England, and in a certain well understood sense of Canada also. Railway and steamboat connections bring the city into relation with a vast extent of country and through trunk lines into as close relations with the West as New York.

Rebuilding.

The changes introduced into New York and Chicago by tearing down and building up again have been taking place here in Boston. The high buildings for which the city by the lakes has so often been condemned are springing up in the business section of Boston. Perhaps they seem a little more substantial than those in Chicago, yet it may be doubted if they are. But they indicate an appreciation of values in land in the central districts of great cities to which men living in New York have long been accustomed. They suggest, too, that the time may not be so very distant when a much larger portion of the city proper may be used for business, and all residences be arranged around it in steadily increasing circles.

Passing over all mention of such structures as the new Tremont Building, the Exchange Building, the State House extension, the Court House, one can but stand in admiration before such edifices as are seen at Copley Square. Here are Trinity Church, the New Old South, the Art Museum and the new library. Of the Art Museum it is enough to say that the addition to the old building its ever growing treasures have rendered necessary is in harmony with its original design and increases rather than diminishes its architectural beauty. As one enters the familiar rooms, looks again on antiquities of Egypt, Assyria, Greece, Rome, the Middle Ages, on representations of the best work of man's genius, on paintings which the critical judgment of the world has made famous, on examples of the skill and genius of such countries as China and Japan, one can but feel what opportunities for the study of art in nearly all its forms are here provided, and how unnecessary it is, where means and time do not permit, to go abroad in order to be trained in the principles of art. It would seem, too, as if intending travelers would find it for their interest to make themselves acquainted with the treasures which wealth and taste and true benevolence have here rendered accessible to all before visiting the originals in foreign lands.

But the great ornament of the square is the library building of Milford granite. It is massive and harmonious at the same time. Of the size of the structure one does not at first receive a correct impression. It is only as one enters it, stands under its great archways, roams through its corridors, attempts to take the measure of its various reading rooms, that its immensity appears. Every room is large. There is no sense of narrowness in any of the hallways. Great as is the number of volumes in sight in the general reading room, in the room for the consultation of patents, in the Barton-Ticknor Library, one yet feels as if in literary treasures the library were in need. It is because of the new methods employed in the keeping of books. They are now stacked together closely, instead of occupying a great deal of space in alcoves visible to every visitor. Of the decorations by Sargent and Abbey others have spoken. In conception, in originality of treatment, in color, it would seem as if these efforts to produce works with the brush worthy of comparison with the best of those to be seen in Europe were likely to be successful. Magnificent as is this structure in which the literary wealth of the age is stored, several visits to the different reading rooms and to the rooms for consulting the catalogue seemed to indicate that less use is made of this library than is made of the public library in Chicago, which as yet is only in its era of beginnings. Possibly the raw West is as hungry for learning as the more cultivated East.

What Is To Be.

A Congregationalist naturally turns his steps to the Congregational House on Somerset Street. There he learns to his sorrow that Mr. George P. Smith, who for so many years has been the agent in charge of the business of the S. S. and Publishing Society, has passed away at the ripe age of threescore and two years. No one will be more missed than he. From no one were more hearty greetings to strangers extended and no one seemed better able than he to make the visitor from a distance feel at home. No changes can take away the sense of personal loss which comes over one at the thought that those who were once here have left their places vacant forever. Yet, although men pass away, their work abides. The new Congregational House will be only a stone's throw from the present house, just opposite the Unitarian House, by the side of the Athenæum, on a lot which will furnish room for a modern structure with all known conveniences for the carrying on of business in accordance with the complicated methods of today. One cannot keep back the thought of the great step which was taken when the present building was obtained and what it meant for Congregationalism, and one hopes for even greater pregress through occupation of a building better fitted for the purposes of the denomination.

Religious Life in Boston.

A summer visit furnishes no means for forming a judgment as to its character. Still, if reports are to be trusted, there is of this no lack. The churches, many of them closed during the heated season, are earnest, aggressive, liberal in their gifts to all Christian enterprises, and increasingly awake to the problem of establishing new churches just as fast as the need of them shall be apparent. However powerful the influence of Unitarianism, it would seem as if the multiplication and strength of Baptist, Methodist and Episcopalian churches were evidence of the still greater influence of evangelical religion.

Transportation.

The streets of Boston are far more crowded than they were even five years ago. A long line of electric cars seems to be in waiting whenever one cares to cross a street. It is necessary to be on guard if one would cross in safety. Signs on these cars indicate that railways entering the city have brought their stations together, that the Boston & Maine Railroad, the Eastern, the Fitchburg have now a station in common, and one learns very soon that a new station is contemplated for the New England Railroad, the Boston & Albany, the Old Colony, or New York & New Haven system. One sees immediately on reaching Tremont Street signs of another change which will be more marked in its influence upon the city than any yet mentioned, viz., preparation for the running of all street cars underground. It is a wonder how this can be done, and whether people will enjoy subterranean travel as well as they do travel above ground. But the need of something to lessen the pressure on the streets is evident, and the wisdom of the attempt to do this by putting the street cars out of the way. What a pleasure it will be to visit Boston when its streets are no longer thronged with cars on which are the names of nearly every prosperous suburb within ten miles of the State House!

Water Supply.

Not content with a provision which has seemed ample, the authorities of the city are now enlarging the present system of water works to such an extent that the inhabitants of whole towns like West Boylston will be compelled to move. Careful attention is also given to the drainage system of the city, and to the sanitary character of the houses occupied by the poorer classes. So far as foresight can accomplish it, Boston will be as healthy a city in which to live as can be found on the continent.

Parks.

Till recently it was supposed that abundance of land made it possible for the larger Western cities to surpass Boston in the extent of their park system. But even here Boston has proved herself no mean rival. She has a system of parks almost unsurpassed for beauty and within easy reach of all her people. Variety of surface, majestic trees, rocks covered with vines, combine with skill in landscape gardening to render these breathing places for the city population inviting and attractive. On the whole, one comes and goes in Boston thankful for what the city is, for what she has been and surely will be.

Ex-President Cameron of the Chicago Board of Education, in laying down his office, makes some radical recommendations to his successors. He proposes that the entire responsibility of the selection and appointment of teachers be left to the superintendent of schools, and that the business connected with them be put into the hands of a man to be chosen for his business ability. In this way he would reduce the duty and responsibility of the members of the Board to a minimum. Some of these members favor his proposals, but the majority regard them as neither wise nor feasible. Mr. Cameron thinks the school year should be reduced to nine months, and that "vacation schools" should be held for three months.

Charity Chance.*

A Serial Story by Walter Raymond.

Summary of the Previous Seven Chapters.—The scene of this story is Somerset, in the west of England. Miss Graham, a maiden lady of means and a cripple, has adopted Charity Chance, who calls her aunt. Miss Graham's nephew, Graham Poltimore, the son of her dead sister, seeks the hand of Charity Chance in marriage and is accepted, though the girl has some misgivings in relation to the depth of her affection for him. Miss Graham is delighted to have her heart's desire thus gratified, and Charity, who cherishes her fondly, finds a satisfaction in having acceded to her patron's wishes for her. Miss Graham visits her brother-in-law, Mr. Poltimore-Briggs, the sole surviving trustee of her property, to inform him that she has but a brief time to live and to arrange to settle some money upon Charity, but he advises postponement, and the interview is interrupted, to his evident relief. A somewhat lackadaisical poet, Alfred Prentice, a friend of Graham Poltimore, appears on the scene and mingles socially with the other characters. Mr. Prentice talks with Charity in the woods, is impressed with her sympathetic nature, and urges her to meet him again that he may read to her some of his poems.

VIII. EVERMORE TATTLING.

FROM that moment of reticence a new and growing unrest began to trouble the soul of Charity Chance. The finer instinct, which stirred her indignation against the Babblemouth folk and made her writhe under their littleness, turned upon itself. Hitherto no stain of conscious meanness had ever sullied her self-respect. Slights, like pruning, only forced her pride into stronger growth. She had never known anything to hide, nor to fear, nor to reproach herself with. But on the following day she waited until Miss Graham was busy with her letters, and watched Jan Sprake into the stable, before going to the wood. To avoid the open path she climbed the hill under cover of the trees. The book, which was quite small, she brought home in her pocket, and read throughout the night in the little chamber above the porch.

Some of the verses were love songs, and they had a deeper reality because she knew the man who wrote them. Line after line she read and reread aloud and in the stillness every word spoke to her. They filled her brain with excitement, they set her heart on fire.

In the glow of it her imagination shaped fantastic stories of the hopeless love of Alfred Prentice. He was so sad and melancholy—and again today he had talked of loneliness and sympathy. He had loved—and lost. Not dead, but faithless, the maiden who had wrecked his life. Fallen away because she could not understand. This dream was so vivid that it imprinted itself upon Charity's mind like fact. She pitied him from the bottom of her heart.

One poem she could not comprehend. The words were magnificent and the sound almost sublime, but the sense was illusive and escaped her again and again. If she might only hear it read, she thought, she could catch the meaning. And he had begged her to meet him again. To give him frankly her opinion upon his poor trifles, he said.

She had not promised, but the desire to go became irresistible. After all she was but following the habit of her leisure in going into the wood. There was no harm in talking to a friend of the man to whom she was engaged. Yet she felt with disgust that these unsuspected interviews more and more engrossed her thoughts. And to Graham she had not mentioned Alfred Prentice's name. "You have chosen the one to me the most precious," sighed the poet, and read, as he assured her, with the greatest pleasure. She was too shy to ask him what it meant.

So the days passed on. Prentice still remained in Babblemouth, lodging in one of the little houses looking down upon the quay. But when the first glory of the rising celebrity faded in the commonplace light of familiar day there was no end to the criticisms of the Babblemouth folk. They sneered at his loitering ways and laughed at the length of his hair. "But then, there is always something odd," said Theodosia, "about people who are supposed to be clever." Such little disparagements stung Charity to the quick. Retorts came upon the tip of her tongue, but she could not trust herself to utter them. Within her heart smoldered an anger she dared not disclose. A breath must blow it into flame. Yet how ungenerous to remain silent and hear a higher intelligence attacked by fools! It was hard to contain herself, yet harder still to contemplate her own cowardice. There comes at last a moment when the bow snaps.

CHARITY, CONTEMPTUOUS AND DEFIANT.

They had come over to Babblecombe one afternoon, these Babblemouth people. There was tea by the corner of the lawn, and Graham was handing round the bread and butter. The unwillingness of Mr. Poltimore-Briggs to stand for Parliament had been fully discussed. His reluctant yielding to overwhelming persuasion in spite of her entreaties Mrs. Poltimore-Briggs had dramatically described.

"It was no good for me to say anything, my dear," she assured Miss Graham; "none whatever. His Lordship met him and said, 'You'd better stand, Poltimore.' His Lordship always forgets and calls him Poltimore, you know. 'You'd better stand, and do your best to push out the Radical.' So he consented." Then she threw up her hands in despair.

"Talking of Radicals," cried Mrs. Mortimer, stopping at every few words to dip her beak into the teacup, "the rector says—though of course he would not have it repeated for the world as coming from him—that Mr. Prentice is an awful Radical. Doesn't believe in God—nor in Queen Victoria—nor tithes. Well! I think any man who would rob a church doesn't deserve to live. But I never thought he looked quite a gentleman."

"What is he doing here?" asked Miss Graham, carelessly. "Charity fell across him the other day in the wood. Didn't you say so, Charity?"

But before the girl could answer, Mrs. Poltimore-Briggs had started again.

"My dear, that is just the way he wanders about. No doubt he thinks the wood is his. The poetic imagination knows no bounds, you know. O, I don't know what he is doing here. We asked him to come to us, but he told Graham he would rather be free. We didn't want him, of course. We thought it would be only civil, as he used to be a friend of Graham. But since he prefers the freedom of old mother Dibbin's two stuffy little rooms—well, so much the better. What was that she said to you, Theodosia? You told me the other day."

Theodosia shone with the pride of proprietary information.

"O, that was nothing! I believe she was in doubt about her rent. She only said she supposed it was all right as he was a friend of Mr. Poltimore-Briggs, but she never took in anybody before with such a few things. No more cloth clothes than what he stood upright in, and only three shirts to his back."

"Then, no doubt, you pointed out to her the impertinence of talking about the private affairs of other people."

The shaft was sudden and unexpected. The hot blood rushed to the cheek of the wounded Theodosia, and Mrs. Poltimore-Briggs was reduced to silence and astonishment. Beside the small, round table, brought from the drawing-room for the occasion, stood Charity, contemptuous and defiant, clutching a china teapot in her hand.

"Charity! Charity, dear!" murmured in remonstrance little Miss Graham, but her lips were twitching with suppressed amusement.

Copyrighted, 1896, by Walter Raymond.

"I think three sufficient for Prentice," cried Graham, with an air of grave deliberation. He had thrown himself upon the grass and was enjoying well-merited rest after overwhelming exertions. "You see he doesn't ride 'em so very hard. He lies in bed by day and sits up at night in a red damask dressing gown awaiting the rosy-footed dawn. The early morning chills the imagination. The best inspiration comes with a smell of paraffine. It is all tommy-rot about nature. These chaps only know the names of things. Prentice can't tell an ash from an Arbele poplar. I'd bet two to one whenever the leaves turn up white in the wind he thinks it's a willow. He makes up a nature of his own in bed with the blind drawn down. I went to look him up the other afternoon. They said he wasn't down yet, and I ran up and rapped at his bedroom door. 'Who's there, what do you want?' responded a voice muffled with counterpane. 'Are you ill, Prentice?' I said. 'Shall I come in?' There was a brief pause whilst he struggled free of the counterpane. 'Go 'way. Go 'way,' he yelled; 'I'm busy.'"

Charity did not join in the laughter which followed. She did not take the tale for truth, but only as one of Graham's irresponsible stories, and she was vexed that he had not sided with her.

"But I thought you liked him," she cried with eagerness.

"So I did," he admitted, "but I can't stand him now."

"Or understand," she retorted, quick as thought.

No wonder that Charity Chance was not universally beloved. But Graham loved her with all his heart, and it was in admiration that he whispered as he rose to his feet: "I believe you see the frivolities of everybody you know, and believe in the virtues of everybody you don't know." His tenderness touched her.

"But you are not going yet, Graham?"

"The governor has an open air meeting on the down, and I must walk over to it. Come to the top of the hill, Charity," he begged.

So they presently went together, side by side, up the white, dusty road. "She is so high-minded, and he has such a good heart," thought the little cripple, as her eyes followed them every step of the way. "They were made for each other," she said to herself. And indeed it looked so as they slowly passed out of sight on the hilltop.

IX. IN THE WOOD.

No matter if she were late. Aunt Helen would not mind in the least. And the Babblemouth people would stay. O, yes, the Babblemouth people would be pleased to stay. So Charity walked some distance with Graham, being willing to make amends. When at last she got back to the hilltop the sun was glowing red through a belt of gray mist over the sea; a hawk was hovering high above the cliff.

She stood upon the ridge a while to rest, a solitary figure in bold relief against the sky. The people on the lawn saw and discussed as to whether it were she. Theodosia thought the person far too tall.

The embers of resentment were still burning within her heart. What a little world, where people were so ready to belittle everybody! And she had promised to spend her life in this coombe—this teacup. Ever the same dreary little round, with no true sympathy, no understanding. She thought a great deal about true sympathy since Alfred Prentice once used the words.

Of late, also, a question kept arising in her mind to which no answer could possibly be found. It lived with her by day; it haunted her by night. It tormented her like a lost word. Whence had she been brought here? To whom had she belonged in nature and in love, who nevertheless parted with her without a pang? For surely they might at least have longed to watch over her welfare. It flashed across her mind that out of jealousy of possession Miss Graham had prevented all communication. "You were mine," she had told her, "after I took you." In a moment of passionate yearning the girl cried out that she had been robbed, that nothing could recompense for the love implanted by nature which must have filled her life. Then she burst into tears of contrition at her own ingratitude.

These moods of vague restlessness had become very common with her of late.

In the courtyard below still remained the carriage of Mrs. Poltimore Briggs. The presence of that exemplary woman relieved Charity from haste. A footpath, little used, ran along the hill around the brim of the coombe. After the dry road the grass was soft and cool, and the girl walked on toward the wood.

She came upon two rustic lovers loitering by a stile, too absorbed in themselves and each other to hear her coming footsteps on the turf. In uncouth fashion the youth's arm encircled the girl's waist. To let Charity pass they started back, happy, blushing, conscious, but complete. "Yes, these are the happy people," she said to herself; "they understand each other and are understood."

But Graham would never understand her. Already the engagement began to oppress her soul. Why should she marry? She did not want to marry. She would rather go into the world, and fight, and earn her living and be free. Those people who gave her up must have been poor and afraid. Fools! She would have worked for them. No, no! They were good, and out of tenderness desired for her more than they had to give.

No sunshine fell upon the trees tonight. The distant haze drank up the glory of the light, and the leaden sea melted and was lost in violet cloud. By the time Charity reached the wood beneath the heavy branches it was growing dusk. It must be later than she had thought. Something moved, and a pigeon flew from the ivy close beside her. She quickened her pace for fear of being overtaken by the darkness.

"Miss Chance!"

The voice startled her. She knew it well, and it made her heart beat fast. She had not thought of meeting him tonight, and a strange fear fell upon her—of what she knew not. She must not stay. Yet at the sound of her name she stopped.

She heard him hurrying down the hillside. A loose stone came rolling amongst the briers by her feet, and in his haste he stumbled over an uncovered twisted root.

"I was sure I should meet you," he stammered, still breathless from his effort to recover himself. "The idea got hold of me so that I was compelled to come. It was an inspiration."

"I am just going in," she replied, quickly, for his eager manner hightened her agitation; then she turned to continue on her way.

"Not for a few minutes, pray. And I will walk down with you to the fir copse. Let me help you, Charity. I may say Charity here in the twilight, may I not? Give me your hand; the gloom of the trees makes it so dark."

She could not refuse, and he helped her over the broken stones and outcropping rock.

"We have had so many talks here in the wood, and my mind was full of you. I could think of nothing else. You became a necessity to me. Then I came out here where the very leaves whisper of you. Besides, I knew you would come. It was inevitable."

She was not superstitious, but his words were full of passion and so deep with conviction that they overawed her, like the utterances of an oracle unfolding unalterable destiny. They had reached an open space where sticks of felled timber were lying on the ground. She tried to withdraw her hand, but he held it fast.

"I must go. I must go at once. I cannot stay," she implored.

"For one moment you must listen to me, Charity"—

"I cannot listen. I am not free to listen."

In her anxiety and helplessness the words sounded like a lament.

"I cannot help it," he whispered. "No power on earth shall prevent my saying I love you. From the first moment I was certain of your sympathy. I could see in every movement the quickness of your sensibilities. And the world is so dead and dull. They had been making me read, but what did they care for my verses? What does anybody care? I had ceased to care myself. But you quickened me into new hope—new aspiration. Every syllable you spoke was like the touch of a human hand."

He was so moved at this, his own picture of sympathy, that his voice faltered, and he stopped.

Each word went red-hot to the girl's heart. It had come, the thing she thought impossible—the love they spoke of as irresistible, which she had never felt. Every element that in imagination went to the making of an ideal passion was present. He was exceptional. He had heart, intellect, soul. And he had need of her—deep, spiritual need.

A flame of sudden joy leapt up within her bosom. Then again she was afraid, and her reply was angry in self-defense.

"I—I am sorry to hear you speak like this, Mr. Prentice. You—you hurt me. I have liked, yes, really liked talking to you—and in future—I—you have made it impossible"—

"I know. That is the tale they always teach," he cried, bitterly. "If your heart has an impulse, hide it. If it cherish an emotion, crush it. They are afraid of their lives to live, and that is the gospel in which they bring you up. Because I love you, you must refuse even to speak to me, even though you be necessary to me. And that is the wisdom of the world."

As he finished his voice sank into its habitual melancholy, and he released her hand. Her brain was whirling in its effort to seize his deepest meaning, for he seemed to say so much whilst she could grasp so little. And all that stood clear out of the chaos was himself, a lonely figure with the world arrayed against him, craving for sympathy and help.

"I should have to think whether it was right," she said, very softly, as if speaking to herself.

His manner changed. He spoke with a subdued tenderness, a really touching self-restraint—

"Yes. I recognize that as an inevitable necessity of your nature. To me, everything that is real is right."

"I meant really right. Not what people think," she hastily explained.

Something rustled past them amongst the ferns and undergrowth, and she involuntarily started aside.

"It was nothing," he assured her. "I fancy a rabbit flitted across by the felled tree."

"I must go."

"One moment, Charity."

But the movement had disturbed her, and regardless of his entreaty she walked quickly on. In places the rough pathway was too narrow for two to pass, and he followed until they came to the open ride between the larches. By this time it was nearly dark. She stopped abruptly and held out her hand.

"Good-by, Mr. Prentice."

"I have only one thing to ask," he pleaded wildly. "My love has startled you. How could I help it? You have come into my life. You have become part of me. Could I stifle a generous passion at its birth, and bury it out of sight like a crime? Believe me, life knows too little love to lightly cast it aside. I cannot do so. You cannot. And you tell me the hours when we have met were precious to you. Come once more tomorrow. Come with this knowledge in your heart and talk to me again. That is all I ask. Just once." She did not promise him. Before she could make up her mind, a tall figure came into the ride, striding rapidly towards them. It was quite dark.

"Some one is here," she whispered in alarm. "Good-night."

"Morning, noon or evening, I shall wait until you come."

And so they parted. He disappeared amongst the larches, and she turned quietly towards the house. By the wicket gate she was overtaken by Theodosia.

"Why, Charity, is that you?" cried she, in great surprise. "I went up to look for foxgloves, and found a few. Come along, you shall shield me from a row. Look!" and she held out the bunch of flowers in the dusk.

They hurried to the house in silence, for Charity's tongue clove to the roof of her mouth and her brain kept throbbing with the thought, It has come—it has come!

"It has come. I love him!" she cried. "I love him with all my heart." Then she stood silent, startled at the vehemence of her own utterances.

She must never speak to him again; that was the only way. But this resolution brought a burden of despair, beneath which her spirit was well-nigh broken.

So the days passed on. A doubt whether Theodosia had seen them together that night, which at first troubled her, was dismissed. She had not spoken of it. But a rumor of impending dissolution had given a keener interest to the candidature of Mr. Poltimore Briggs, and the Babblemouth people could talk of nothing else. There were meetings all over the country. Tomorrow there was to be a mass meeting on the quay. And Graham had thrown himself into the contest heart and soul—not from any deep conviction, but with the careless gayety of the sportsman. Therefore, of him, for the time, she saw but little. Miss Graham, noticing the girl's unhappiness but mistaking its cause, became more than ever tender and sympathetic.

"Lay aside the book and talk to me," she said, softly, one evening, and gently drew the girl down to kiss her bright hair. "You must not mind, dear, if he seems to neglect you, just for a while. There is nowhere a more loyal heart than Graham. Why, I would not care for him one straw if he were not eager for his father to win. He would not be worth his salt. And no one could love you better, Charity dear, in all the world."

The little lady stopped. There were tears in her eyes, but they were tears of happiness, for the girl's melancholy was a source of joy, since it proved the depth of her affection.

"I know that Graham loves me," replied Charity in a low voice.

"He worships you," cried Miss Graham, her face bright with enthusiasm. "Wait one moment, child. I will be back. No, do not move. I can go alone."

She waved away the proffered assistance, and with only her ebony stick toiled upstairs. She was gone some time. Charity could hear her mysteriously moving overhead, and that she dragged a box upon the floor. At last she returned, bringing with great care a small, flat parcel wrapped in blue paper.

Fatigued and out of breath, without a word she took her seat. Overcome with emotion, for a while she held the precious burden on her lap, then with a quick gesture beckoned Charity to unfasten the string. The knot, tied long ago, was very firm, and the girl knelt down to pick it out.

With trembling hands, herself, she opened the paper, and drew forth a wealth of Honiton lace and amongst it a bridal veil.

"Stay, child, stay!" she interposed quickly, for Charity was about to rise.

She rapidly unfolded the veil, yellow with age and very beautiful, and cast it over the girl's head.

"There, Charity," she began in a broken voice. "My mother wore it at the altar, and so shall you. It was made for her. And the flounce, too. For more than a score of years it has not seen the light. Poor Irene put it on once and laughed to look at herself. She should have worn it, but that was not to be. Stand over there, dear, and let me look at it again."

The girl hesitated, then obeyed. In her effort to control her feelings she held her head erect as if in pride.

"Yes, yes. You shall wear it," cried the little cripple, nodding approval. She paused, and then went on with growing excitement: "Charity! You will be a bride for a king. And you shall keep it, dear, as I have done, until some day you put it on a child of your own. For you are mine, dear—and Graham's—and there is no one else. It shall be an heirloom forever to the first daughter who marries. No. That will be always a fresh name. For the bride of the eldest son."

Suddenly she stopped.

"Come here, child! Quick! Let me take it off."

Her manner had changed, and she spoke now in a frightened whisper.

"They used to call it unlucky to try on a bride's things. They said so when Irene put it on. And she, poor girl— Quick, kneel down again!"

She quickly removed and was tenderly refolding her precious relic to put it by, when her eye caught sight of the misery upon the girl's face.

"Of course there is nothing in that," she said, soothingly. "How foolish of me to have said it, dear!"

Then the little lady laughed uneasily, and again drew the girl towards her to be kissed.

"There. Quick, pick me up the string," she said.

But both the exultation and the passing presentiment had pressed with crushing weight upon Charity's spirit. The one proved the marriage, and the other the unhappiness so inevitable. To hide her emotion she turned away and crossed the room to the piano. She stood turning over the leaves of a volume of Beethoven's sonatas but did not touch the keys.

There followed a brief moment of silence and disquietude.

How sensitive she is, thought the little cripple, and loved her the more for it. Then out of kindness she began to prattle quite lightly upon an unimportant matter.

"Your friend the poet, Charity, seems to have betaken himself to the woods. He is there all the day through, so John Sprake tells me, and sometimes after dark. John was greatly concerned as to what he could want there and thought he could never be quite right. But I told him to leave the poor man in peace. I suppose it is a sort of browsing on Parnassus. I would not rob a poor soul of an inspiration for the world. Play something, dear."

The girl gladly turned to the piano for relief, and for that evening there was no further conversation. She placed the book upon the music rack and began to play. But through the solemn adagio and the fiercer passion of the presto movement a vision of Alfred Prentice, desolate and alone, wandering in the gloom of a hopeless love, haunted her imagination. He had implored her to see him again. Since he loved her so deeply, did she not owe him as much as this? To own the happiness of his love, and then to bravely bow to the inevitable, and say farewell. Only of him she thought now; not of herself. It was the essential quality of all her dreams that they were noble. They pictured everybody heroic, never yielding to selfishness or fear. Except the Babblemouth people, whom, when they were not present, she dismissed from her mind. It was cruel to be so abrupt. If not tomorrow, when the political meeting might interfere, then on the day following, she must meet him once more and make an end of it.

(To be continued.)

Rabbi Charles Fleischer of Boston, writing in the Jewish Messenger on The Jews in New England, makes the interesting confession that "there is some flaw in the manhood that will not grow to fullest stature under New England influences." He feels that the Jews have not lived in New England long enough to become New Englanders of the finest type. The future of Judaism in New England, he thinks, rests with the Russians and Poles, and he, for one, does not fear for the outcome.

Gail Hamilton's Earliest Literary Work.

Excerpts from Articles Published in The Congregationalist, 1860-1863.

From the numerous articles written for this journal by Miss Mary Abigail Dodge (Gail Hamilton), who has recently died, we select certain passages which illustrate her vigorous thought and trenchant style. Further comment will be found on the editorial page.

PRAYER.

The fact is—though we talk very often as if we did not know it, or at any rate did not understand it—God loves us, and he behaves toward us as if he loved us. He not only once sent his Son to die for us because he loved us, but he keeps doing things all the time for the same reason. He wants us to pray to him because he loves us. He does not drag us by violence into his presence, thrust us down upon our knees, command us to pray, to feel, to adore, to have such and such emotions on peril of his wrath. He opens his arms to us. "Come, my children, you are weak and weary. The way before you is long. Come, rest with me a while and get strength. Come for a little peace and patience and joy. I have enough of everything you need. I can give you all you want. Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." And suppose we do come after a hard day's work, exhausted, void of emotion, almost of desire, will God be angry with us if we only whisper a good night prayer? Is a mother angry with her baby who falls asleep in her arms in the middle of her lullaby? And does not God who made us know our frame and remember that we are dust? And if he is not strict to mark our iniquities will he be strict to mark our weaknesses? O! let us be simple and sincere. Let us not make prayer a complicated, uncertain and difficult and elaborate thing. It is too precious, too delightful, too heart-healing to be turned into a bugbear. If we continue all night in prayer to God his ear does not wax heavy. If our burdened hearts can only send up the passionate cry, "Lord, have mercy on me a sinner," we shall go down to our house just as truly justified—nay, if we do but touch the hem of his garment we shall be made whole.

SPECIAL PROVIDENCES.

On a certain Sabbath morning several years ago an earthquake set one of our New England cities atrembling for a few minutes and then went on its way, but throughout the day, and I don't know how long after, the religious services were saturated with earthquake. It was served up in the pulpit, and the Sabbath school, and the prayer meeting by clergy and laity, till one could not help feeling that the good people handled the poor earthquake a great deal more severely than the earthquake handled them. Do not misunderstand me. Do not suppose that I object to drawing moral lessons from physical or other occurrences. Object? It is the very thing which I think we ought to do—only we ought to do a great deal more of it, and a great deal less; more in some directions, less relatively in others; more on ordinary, less relatively on extraordinary occasions. From every such occurrence it is meet, right and our bounden duty to draw all the good it has to give, but having pumped it dry till the pump wheezes what is the use of jerking the handle up and down, especially when thousands of living springs are welling through the verdure under our feet and all around us?

SMOOTH DOCTRINE.

In all lives there is an undercurrent of sadness. In many lives there is more of shadow than of sun. The burden presses heavily. There are few homes in which disease and death have not made sad inroads. There are few hearts which do not bear the footprints of disappointment—none which do not need the glad tidings of great joy, the "Be of good cheer" with which Christ so often saluted the suffering believer when he was on earth. It is not that the Bible should be expurgated—that milk and water should be substituted for meat—but that the people should be comforted in sorrow and calmed in trouble; that Christ should be shown Saviour, Deliverer, Redeemer from sin and suffering; that faint emotions should be recognized, feeble efforts encouraged, little leanings to good made the most of, knottiest points reserved for dextrous fingers; that it should not be so continually dinged into men's ears that they are corrupt as it should be whispered that Christ is holy. Is this preaching "smooth doctrine"? Well, what of it? Did not Christ come on purpose to make things smooth for us? The world is surely rough enough. It bristles with thorns; its brambles are continually rasping us. All along these 4,000 years the way is tracked with bloody feet. Let us have the smooth, sweet doctrines of the gospel—oil of joy and balm of consolation, grapes of Beulah and honey of Canaan; for it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish. Smooth doctrine! Is it not Christ's own doctrine? And if it was not too smooth for the Jews is it too smooth for us? Is the American populace any viler than the Hebrew populace? Yet for one word of rebuke to them the Master spoke a hundred of council and comfort. It was not, "Shame upon your pride!" but, "Blessed are the poor in spirit;" not, "Your cruelty is odious," but, "Blessed are the merciful," and who does not know that people are a thousand times more likely to be lured to virtue than shamed from vice.

UNSUCCESSFUL PEOPLE.

When I see, as I sometimes do see, those whom the world calls unsuccessful furnished with every virtue and adorned with every grace, made considerate through suffering, sympathetic by isolation, spiritedly patient, meek, yet defiant, calm and contemptuous, tender even of the sorrows and tolerant of the joys which they despise, enduring the sympathy and accepting the companionship of weakness because it is kindly offered, though it be a burden to be dropped just inside the door, and not a treasure to be taken into the heart's chamber, I am ready to say, Blessed are the unsuccessful.

Blessed are the unsuccessful, the men who have nobly striven and nobly failed. He alone is in an evil case who has set his heart on false, or selfish, or trivial ends. Whether he secure them or not, he is alike unsuccessful. But he who "loves high," is king in his own right, though he "live low." His plans may be abortive, but himself is sure. God may overrule his desires and thwart his hopes and baffle his purposes, but all things shall work together for his good. Though he fall he shall rise again. Every defeat shall be a victory. Every calamity shall drop down blessing. Inward disappointment shall minister to enduring joy. From the grapes of sorrow, he shall press the wine of life.

O, men and women everywhere who are following on to know the Lord, faint yet pursuing; men and women who are troubled, toiling, doubting, hoping, watching, struggling; whose attainments "through the long green days, worn bare of grass and sunshine," lay hopelessly behind your aspirations; who are haunted evermore by the ghosts of your possibilities; who see far off the shining hills your feet are fain to tread, who work your work with dumb, assiduous energy, but with perpetual protest, I bid you good luck in the name of the Lord.

FREEDOM WILL TRIUMPH.

Wherever freedom aims a musket, or plants a standard, or nerves an arm, or sings a song, or files a protest, or murmurs a prayer, there is Plymouth Rock. Cows may meander as of old along Washington Street, but the hands shall not go back on the dial plate of God. Boston may be grass-grown and New England forgotten, but love of life and love of liberty shall never die out of the hearts of men. Let Southern traitors and their Northern abettors arrange things as they will. Let them eject New England, and sheathe the sword, and stifle discussion, and inaugurate Jefferson Davis, and ignore the negro, and perpetuate the slave. Is that the end? Will they so find rest? Will cotton once more resume sway, and right be forever held in abeyance? Never, so long as there is a conscience in man, or a God in heaven! They may make themselves a new Pandora's box, filled with commerce, and peace, and wealth, and every blessing, but this evil at the bottom shall poison every good. They cannot bind it to quietude. They may resolve and legislate and menace; Jefferson Davis and all his kind may bear down upon the lid with their whole force; but the divinely appointed unrest of iniquity will heave and surge and throb with unceasing tumult till the vexed lid fly up with a rebound that shall hurl them to irrevocable doom.

THE IRISH.

God bless the Irish! Their strong arms are lifted, their warm hearts are beating side by side with ours for the honor and life of their adopted country. Does famine impend over their island home? We have enough and to spare. From our bursting granaries, from our larders over full, let their tables be spread with plenty. Surely the bread, the few crumbs which we cast upon the waters many days ago, are already returned to us in Irish truth and loyalty, and when their civilization and Christianity is brought abreast with their unborn poetry, Ireland shall come forth fair as the sun, clear as the moon and terrible as an army with banners.

BOSTON.

No city has any moral right to be as crooked as Boston. It is a crookedness without excuse and without palliation. It is crooked in cold blood and with malice aforethought. It goes askew when it might just as easily go straight. It is illogical, inconsequent and incoherent. Nowhere leads to anywhere in particular. You start from any given point, and you are just as likely to come out at one place as another. Of course, all this can but have an effect on the inhabitants. Straightforwardness becomes impossible where you are continually pitching up against sharp points. People born and bred in angles and blind alleys and crossways cannot fail to have a knack at tergiversation and intrigue. Diplomatists should be chosen from Boston, or should at least take a preparatory course of five years there, as soldiers do at West Point.

The number of the streets is amazing. The Bostonians seem to have a perfect frenzy for them. If they can squeeze in a six-foot passage between two houses they are happy. Half a dozen stairs and a brick platform is an avenue and an elysium. They build their houses in the shape of the letter V, with the point sticking out in front, apparently for no other reason than the exquisite satisfaction of having a street pass up each side; and they make their streets crooked to look at, and then make alleys to get there. Washington Street, the principal thoroughfare,

Like a wounded snake drags its slow length along.

I have heard that it was originated by cows, meandering down to drink. This hypothesis may answer in the one case, but it won't apply to the smaller streets, for a cow could not make so acute angles if she tried. Owing to this vaccine inability, Washington Street rolls on with considerable dignity for a while, but it goes off into a delirium tremens down by Cornhill and Dock Square. Everything is as shifting as a kaleidoscope. . . . Boston, you are more beautiful than this. When, after long absence and wandering, I come over the marshes to meet you, you are lovely as the day. I wait for you as they that watch for the morning, and when your stately dome curves its clear contour against the blue sky, "my heart swells and my eyes are dim." Beloved Queen of my beloved State, the archers have sorely grieved you, and shot at you, and hated you, but your bow abides in strength. When envious rivals traduce you, I make no defense. "She needs none. There she is. Behold her and judge for yourselves." When I am asked, "What is thy beloved more than another beloved?" I only say, "My beloved is mine," but I think of all the grandeur garnered there, of all your inheritance, all your possession, and all the promise of your future.

DEATH.

Christ, laid hold of in faith today, will sustain us in the overflowing of the waters tomorrow. Though now, in the full flush of youth and health and strength, every nerve instinct with intense vitality, we cannot look at death without pain and shuddering, let us not fear. Dying grace will come with dying. God, who hath so loved us, will not leave us then. A father does not caress his child through the long summer day to abandon him at nightfall. Darkness may veil him from the little one's sight, or slumber lull him to temporary forgetfulness, but his loving-kindness wraps his child about, in the still hours, and a fatherly presence is in the house for good.

MISS DODGE'S PERSONAL TRAITS.

BY THOMAS TODD.

My first recollections of Gail Hamilton were when we began to have contributions in a schoolgirl's handwriting upon a great range of topics, and my attention was fixed upon this particular contributor because, although she was reported as just graduated from school, she could so readily handle such a variety of subjects, and all apparently equally well. She at that time had the readiest pen that it was my little lot to be acquainted with, and I am sure that all our readers enjoyed her contributions exceedingly. As I recall her she had quite light hair, curling around her face, and light blue eyes, one of which had a delightful "cast" in it, not enough to make it unpleasantly noticeable, but just enough to give a piquancy to her features.

She used to come in, and not exactly "come" in but "drop" in, and when she dropped in, no matter what the managing editor had in hand, it must be laid aside until her little majesty chose to "drop" out again. She had a charming personality. Fun and mischief were in all her ways. She would whistle up the tube to my department, not that she had any message, but simply for the fun of making an April fool of myself. She would make mischief with the editor's pen and scissors, or whatever her fingers could lay hold of that was upon his desk. She would interpolate into her most serious articles some jocose sentence, just as the mood took her, and it required considerable vigilance to keep such interpolations out of the paper. I remember one time, when the editor was caught napping, not noticing one such sentence, and through the stupidity of the proof-reader (I was the proof-reader) the rebellious sentence went into print in the midst of a serious article. Of course I will draw a veil over what followed when the blunder was discovered by the editor after the paper was printed.

Miss Dodge was always sending and receiving messages from and to the office, and I recall one time when Mr. Richardson asked me if I had any word to send to Miss Dodge. I have forgotten just what the word was, but it was something about her hieroglyphs. A note before me, which I have preserved all through these years, I will quote from, to show her sunny nature: "Tell Mr. Todd to come on and bring all his brothers, as the fellow said in Dickens's American Notes. I don't pretend to be a proof-reader—but if I did, I think I should endeavor to do it better than some people do! Strange to say, however, notwithstanding his inability to decipher my hieroglyphs, he was managed by some marvelous instinct to get the wrong things righted. If he couldn't find out my marks how came he to hit on the right renderings—that's all! Please say to Mr. Todd from me:

> "If thou sayest I am not peer
> To any girl in Cornhill here,
> Dock Square or State Street, far or near,
> There, Toddy, thou hast ——."

Again, in 1881, a contribution was sent by her to the Literary World, criticising some book. As I had had no communication with her for many years, I wondered whether she remembered me. So I appended some little remark to the proof I sent her, and waited for a reply. It came in these words, which show how strong her memory was: "Private note.—The beauty of this proof is that its punctuation has not been tampered with even by the amiable and accomplished compositor-in-chief, Mr. Thomas Todd."

HER PASTOR'S TRIBUTE.

BY REV. JAMES G. NICHOLS.

Gail Hamilton's career as a public writer is known to all, but those who knew her simply as the bold champion of the weak and oppressed, or the caustic critic of the erring, knew but half her life. Her presence was sweetness and light to those who came into daily contact with her and to them it is very comforting to know that she regarded the last year of her life as one of the richest. She writes: "A new page in the book of life was opened up to me." Although confined by illness to her quiet home, her mind has not been restrained by narrow bounds. As always, her interest has been in the whole world.

A little over a year ago, while at the home of the late James G. Blaine in Washington, preparing to write the closing chapters of Mr. Blaine's biography, she was stricken by paralysis and remained in a semi-unconscious state for several weeks. During part of that period she was distinctly conscious of many of the acts, and much of the conversation, going on around her. At other times she was just as distinctly conscious that she was passing away from earth. She said of this experience: "I believe I have been as near the other shore as one could go and return." Brothers and other dear ones, some of whom had passed over years, others only a few months, before seemed to be with her. Everything was beautiful. She experienced no pain. Dying became a blissful experience. There was no regret at leaving earth, only of the thought that she must return.

Previous to this severe illness she had given much attention to the experiences of several friends, in which the sting of death was removed. This great joy confirming her faith, she felt that she must tell it to others. Many of her friends and neighbors were suffering from the loss of those near and dear. There was not a neighborhood in the town where there were not several groups of mourners. In gratitude that her life had been spared, and with sympathy and love for those who mourned, she added her experiences to those she had written already and addressed them with many comforting messages to the church which it was her great joy to serve.

It was a loving message, lovingly given and lovingly received; and in many homes where it has gone "it soothed the dying and comforted the sorrowing. To that end it was written." Here are the closing words:

Beloved, you, if any such there be, who through fear of death have been all your lifetime subject to bondage, be of good cheer! For seven weeks I lay encamped on the further, if not the furthest, side of the valley of the shadow of death, and it was a pleasant valley. Its tranquillity was as gentle, as natural, as deep as sleep. Its activities were as simple as going into the next room. Its atmosphere was peace. Its only gloom was my keenest pity for those who must remain behind. I hope and think that its shadows mark the foregleams of life. We are born into the valley of the shadow of death, and we die out of it into life eternal, which is to know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent.

The preparation of this letter was a characteristic act of Miss Dodge. She believed God had given her a message to the world. Many a troubled, perplexed soul will testify to her comforting word of counsel and cheer. Her hatred for sham sometimes made her seem severe and unsparing of those she attacked, but her heart was always warm toward any one who was making a genuine and honorable struggle to rise.

However strong and rugged her faith may have been in early life, since her remarkable experience in Washington many of the things she had known only by faith became realities. She went on from joy to joy. To be with her was an inspiration. Her supreme faith and hope were contagious. Everything seemed so real to her that others were strengthened thereby. Immortality was her constant theme. Her spirit almost refused to be held on earth, so eager was she to know all of heaven. Always a devout student of the Bible, during the past few months the Word of God was her constant joy. By her own glad confession the Word seemed more wonderful each time she turned the sacred pages, the love of Christ more precious.

Whether or no she will be remembered in after years for what she has contributed to the world during the last months of her life, to her sister, who has been her constant companion, and to others who were with her during this short period, the memory of her will remain as a sweet benediction. Faith is stronger, hope is brighter, love is purer, heaven is nearer, Christ is dearer because of Gail Hamilton's sweet presence and life.

Rev. S. G. Buckingham, D. D, of Springfield, one of our most vigilant readers, sends us another characteristic story of Samuel Hanson Cox, father of the late Bishop Coxe. It fitly supplements the incidents about the great Presbyterian divine which we printed in our issue of Aug. 13. Dr. Buckingham says that Dr. Cox was sent to London as a delegate to a meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and on his arrival hastened to Exeter Hall where the meeting was already in session, and where he found an Englishman berating the United States for complicity in slavery. Being well known and held in high esteem, Dr. Cox was soon summoned to the platform, and when his turn came to speak said: "I heard as I entered what was said in regard to our connection with slavery, which has been a greater grief and mortification to us than it could possibly be to you. And I suppose you know that one reason why we sought separation from the mother country was because she insisted upon imposing upon us the African slave trade. But, to say no more of this matter, if my brother will take one corner of the mantle I will take the other, and going backward we will hide the shame of our common ancestry."

When Christ had borrowed Peter's boat to preach a sermon out of it, he presently repaid him for the loan with a "great draught of fishes."—Philip Henry

Pilgrimage Letters. XII.

Looking Backward.

One day towards the last of our journeying together it was suggested that each pilgrim should mention two events or experiences which, in the retrospect, stood forth as having afforded peculiar pleasure. Naturally a large majority singled out some such exceptional privilege as being entertained at Farnham Castle by Bishop and Mrs. Davidson, or participating in the splendid celebration at Norwich. But in nearly all the testimonies it was noticeable that the chief element of joy lay in the fellowship with English people rather than in the beauties of nature or the glories of art, thus verifying what Lowell once said: "Books are good dry forage, but, after all, men are the only fresh pasture." As an illustration of some of the impressions received through this medium witness the verdict of a Connecticut pastor:

An evening in the study of Dr. Forsyth, pastor of one of the Congregational churches in Cambridge, and the personality of the "Congregational bishop" of Wells are noted because of a peculiar charm which belongs to a trip abroad. A century of America could not furnish two such evenings of Europe. Both men are the product of the characteristic civilization of England, yet are totally different as representing the contrasting results of differing types of conformity to the same environment. Two of the editorial staff of The Congregationalist furnished the open sesame to poor mortal me to the delightful suburban home of Dr. Forsyth. Mr. Dale, illustrious son of an illustrious father, completed the company. To describe what was said and done and thought is impossible. Dr. Forsyth is a Christian Chesterfield with a keenness of intellect that is perfectly delicious.

In the old, sleepy, ecclesiastical city of Wells we found dear Dr. Keightley, whose appearance is as fascinating as the cathedral and he looks nearly as old. His very make-up of body and mind is ecclesiastical. Overshadowed in the place of worship by the great cathedral and overshadowed in position by deans and canons yet this true bishop of the church feeds his flock and I doubt not rules his house. To him the visit of the pilgrims was an epoch and from his joy he seemed to say, Simeon-like, Now let thy servant depart in peace for mine eyes have beheld the glory of Congregationalism. Bishop Ken's hymnology will hereafter have a charm before unknown and the Doxology will have a larger, fuller, broader and deeper meaning, due to the earnest interpretation and unique personality of this venerable servant of God.

Of our intercourse at Wells with Bishop Kennion and the simple, spontaneous service in his palace another pilgrim said:

One deep impression was the vitality of spiritual life really uniting Established Churchman and stanchest Dissenter, emphasizing Paul's statement concerning many members, yet one body, and making sure the fulfillment of the day when without uniformity there shall yet be unity in the church.

In a similar vein some one else spoke of the entertainment of a part of our company in the beautiful home of Dean Farrar in Canterbury:

After the impression of the magnificent cathedral, with the glimpse at its history and associations given by the dean, to be welcomed with sweet English courtesy to a typical English home and enjoy moments of delightful fellowship in which the oneness of those loyal to the same Master remands to fit remoteness minor differences of forms and hereditary associations, made up an hour of golden opportunity and satisfaction.

Of this same day at Canterbury and of the personality of the dean still another remarked:

It was to me the most impressive and delightful of the whole pilgrimage because, first, the old St. Martin's Church together with the magnificent cathedral brought us into direct touch with early Christian history, linking the religious efforts of the present with the distant past. At no other point did ancient deeds move me as they did here. Secondly, because the bearing as well as the words of Dean Farrar charmed me. He seemed in reality the wonderful man I had thought him to be. Before I left home I had anticipated the day here as the climax of the pilgrimage and the privilege it would afford of seeing and talking with a man whose written words have greatly molded my thought.

The object of our pilgrimage and the extraordinary welcome accorded us on account of it were repeatedly emphasized in this retrospective analysis. The formal addresses of welcome were sometimes beautifully engrossed on vellum or parchment. Some idea of them may be formed from the illustration on our cover, a reproduction about one-quarter size of the one presented at Norwich, but the embellishments in gold and the tasteful coloring of the initial letters are necessarily lost in the reproduction. The mild sensation which our coming sometimes produced is reflected in a humorous little episode told by one of the ladies. She begins, however, by saying:

I saw nothing anywhere more affecting and impressive than this universal welcome, from Mr. Maxwell, the first to board the Columbia from the tender at Plymouth, to the mayor of Norwich, who bade us good-by outside the castle gates. We could never forget that we were not common sight-seers. Our purpose to honor those who suffered for our sakes was an open sesame to doors and hearts at every step along the way. It is in that character that sweet and gracious courtesies were extended to us, who else, many of us, must have been totally unrecognized. Even the poor folk paid unconscious tribute to the motive which actuated our visit. Streaming down Pin Lane in Old Plymouth little children peeped at us with wondering finger in the mouth. At last, in a quaint old doorway, a decrepit grandam spoke the thought we afterward heard expressed in so many varying tones of kindness: "Eh, child, look well on 'em. They're dear folk, Lord bless 'em! They're the American Congregationalists!"

Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughtered saints!

cried Milton, in his immortal sonnet. Was not this a most sweet avenging?

The warmth of greetings at the other extreme of the social scale is well typified in our reception by the master of Trinity College, Cambridge, which a lay member of the party thus describes:

This visit to the master's lodge was one of the pleasantest, because, first, it was so unusual a favor, granted seldom to Englishmen, still less to the average tourist. But the greatest charm was that Dr. Butler received us with such hearty, unaffected cordiality that we forgot we were strangers and pilgrims, and had for an hour or two the sensation of feeling ourselves distinguished guests. Along with his entertaining and instructive explanation of portraits and historical souvenirs, he made such frank and affectionate allusions to his own home life and friends that we felt we had received a double honor in being let into the heart of both the lodge and its master.

This serene and loving atmosphere, which is characteristic of English home life, and of which we had many inspiring glimpses during the summer, is one of the most charming pictures that many of us will have to hang on memory's wall. Speaking of the afternoon at Bemerton, a New England lady said:

To pass from that tender service in George Herbert's church into the quiet rectory a nest of contentment, then through the drawing-room windows to the lovely garden with its outlook on trees, river, lawn and fields, was the blissful hour of my pilgrimage.

Two others particularly enjoyed the Sunday afternoon which a few of us spent with Mr. Henry Tolson and his wife on their fine estate, Park House, in the suburbs of Exeter.

Shall I ever forget, asked one, the picture of sweet domesticity which was unfolded to our view as we drove through the gates and saw that family group on the lawn? Our gracious host and hostess met us, not afar off, but on the very doorstep, and took us at once into the household circle gathered on that stretch of velvety greensward. A high wall, over which a wealth of roses clambered, screened them from the street, and in this bower of beauty and fragrance we sat and talked on themes suited to the day, while the children amused themselves quietly about us. There were nine of them, all under fourteen. What pretty names they had and with what childish grace they told them to the American strangers! We wrote them down in memory's book — Ruth, Margery, Phillis, Jack, "Sunny," otherwise Joseph, Roger, Barbara, Ronald and Hugh. A well worn copy of Waugh's Sunday Afternoon Readings for Children, with which the mother had been entertaining the older children, lay upon the table. Tea with clotted cream, from vessels of rare old silver and china, was served out of doors, together with thin slices of buttered bread, buns and simple cakes which the children passed around with the help of only one maid, for in this Christian home as little service as possible is required of the servants on the Lord's Day. The afternoon sunlight flickered through the trees and lay in golden beams athwart the meadow stretching beyond the gardens. It was all so quiet and peaceful, so sincere and unpretentious, that I could not repress a desire that more of this sort of restful Sunday afternoons at home, with all the family together, might characterize our American life. For in genuine domestic enjoyment the English seem to me far ahead of ourselves.

Somewhat of the same impression was received at Lady Henry Somerset's, for one of the clerical members of the party said:

The elegant yet homelike rooms and the little chapel in which service is daily conducted by herself will ever bring to my memory what is most beautiful in home surroundings, truest in home devotion and highest in personal consecration.

One of the youngest male pilgrims expressed a similar sentiment in this graceful tribute to her Ladyship:

The great things in life are not all in outward experiences: many of them are in inward impressions which prove vastly more inspiring. Our visit to Reigate was of this class. There is no need to eulogize upon the exceptional advantages of lineage, position

Photographed by Blake & Edgar, Bedford.

The New World Pilgrims, with Dr. John Brown, at the old Moot Hall. Elstow, 19 June, 1896.

Photographed by Elliott & Fry, London.

The New World Pilgrims at The Firs, Clapham Park, London, 20 June, 1896, with their Hosts, Mr. and Mrs. Halley Stewart, and Dr. Guinness Rogers.

and wealth which place the things of this world within the grasp of Lady Henry. It is a great thing for a woman so situated to live above worldly things. It is a greater to dare the abuse, contumely and misrepresentation in which her choice of a life work will inevitably involve her. It is greatest to do these things with a sweet, strong courage. Those of us who spent a few happy hours in that beautiful, historic mansion will remember less of the house than of the gracious and magnetic personality of our hostess. We recognize in consecration, courage and faith the great things of life. There is no inspiration so potent as that of a lofty character.

The occasions which contributed directly to the quickening of our Christian faith were frequently mentioned, especially the hallowed service in that little cellar of Bradford's house at Austerfield. An Englishman who accompanied us to Holland was struck with the Christian Endeavor meeting held in the dining-room of the hotel in Leiden, led by one of the youngest of the American laymen, and said of it:

It was a unique gathering of all ages from all parts of America and England, but all inspired by the same spirit. Speeches from men and women, laymen and ministers, short and to the point, no waiting—a verse, a hymn, a sentence—truly we are one family, one people, one nation. My week's journeying with our cousins from over the sea has helped me to understand them better and has made me love them with all my heart.

The same person voiced the general sentiment in saying:

My chief interest was not in the places we visited, but in the people who composed the party and their doings. There was a peculiar friendliness, a common bond of loving sympathy, which seemed to permeate every individual as though all interests were one. There was not a jarring note, for all were inspired by the thought, "By love serve one another." As an English stranger I was charmed by the frank heartiness with which I was received and the evident desire to make me feel quite at home with every one.

Another place which appealed deeply to the religious nature was Stonehenge, whither some of the party went from Salisbury, and is thus described by a ministerial pilgrim:

Standing amid those circles of great gray stones, some fallen, some toppling, a few erect, the silent witness of a bygone faith, the England of today—its cities, its navies, its colleges, its cathedrals—seemed to vanish. So likewise appeared and vanished the England of Alfred, of the Roman and the Briton, bowing at the feet of Wodin and Thor. A dim, shadowy land appeared wherein man and his works were as nothing, and nature, wild and savage, oppressed and terrified his spirit. But groping after a knowledge of the unseen Power which he felt lay behind the forces of nature he set up his altar and raised these pillars of his rude and mighty temple. So, for a moment, I was with the silent throng who once worshiped there and felt with them the awful problems of life unenlightened by the Sun of Righteousness.

The influence of the scenes at Bedford and Elstow are feelingly portrayed by another clerical brother in these words:

Somehow while there, looking upon the village green, or listening to the words of Dr. Brown, or going into the quaint little cottage, or standing before the beautiful statue, or all combined, I was lifted into a kind of ecstasy. I saw John Bunyan as I had never seen him before and felt the strange spell of enchantment which will, I trust, abide until the day of death, making me always and everywhere devoted to the humble and yet immortal work to which every minister of Christ is called.

English views of our Dutch trip are reflected in these clever comments by that prince of traveling companions, Dr. Mackennal:

One of my earliest and most abiding impressions has been wonder that buildings, public and private, whose age is indubitable, should have so little of the aspect and charm of antiquity. The reason lies in the incorrigible cleanliness of the Dutch people. The dust of centuries cannot gather where the mop is being constantly used. Mystery dwells with cobwebs and the fretting mouse. The buildings too are kept in so ostentatiously good repair. Sentiment lingers where men take pleasure in the old stones of Zion and favor the dust thereof.

His emotions on visiting the scenes connected with Pilgrim and Puritan history are graphically set forth in this testimony:

In Brownists' Alley, an unsavory lane opening on a dirty little court, we were shown a house which quite possibly was the meeting place of the church which came from London in 1593, and the home of many of its members. It is a tenement house, with closely packed, ill favored rooms, now occupied by ill-fed, hard-featured, uncleanly men and women. I was strongly impressed that so my spiritual ancestors, many of them, must have looked while they were in Amsterdam. They came here from Naardam, a tidy, self-contained, self-sufficient little town, whose people were kind to the strangers but had no need of them. I felt the humiliation, as well as the suffering, which drove the broken-hearted church back to England again. Under the next reign what did Independency become?

Professional interests naturally colored certain experiences. For instance, our "beloved physician" greatly prized the opportunity of visiting the hospitals in Plymouth, Lincoln and London, while a minister recorded as among his most agreeable recollections his preaching for the first time in an English Congregational church, and his enjoyment of the charming and delicate hospitality of the elegant home in which he was entertained.

Of exceptional courtesies extended while in London, and not previously mentioned in these letters, was the permission, for gentlemen only, to attend sessions of the House of Commons and House of Lords secured by The Congregationalist through the courtesy of the Speaker of the House and Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. It was a rare privilege to see the faces of party leaders whose names are as familiar as those of our own Congressmen. Another favor was the invitation, accompanied by complimentary tickets for the best seats in the house, from Wilson Barrett to see his remarkable play, The Sign of the Cross, a full description of which appeared in The Congregationalist for May 28. All that was there said in praise of this religious drama found a response in the hearts of the pilgrims, who felt as if Farrar's realistic description in his recent novel, Darkness and Dawn, of the persecutions of the Christians under Nero, were being enacted before our very eyes. It was really a sermon on the stage. In this connection might be mentioned the novelty of having an actual sermon addressed specially to ourselves by one of London's most famous preachers. This was the case at the Sunday evening service in the City Temple, where Dr. Joseph Parker's eloquence and originality continue to attract immense crowds as of yore.

Although, as has been said, our chief enjoyment came from meeting people, yet impressions from scenery and other impersonal sources were by no means lacking. One lady expressed herself as fortunate in having had my first glimpse of England by way of Plymouth, where I saw not only historic England but a beautiful England under the early morning sun and vivid coloring of sea and sky, and the picture was far beyond my expectation. Another, a gentleman, said: The drive out from Plymouth upon the Devonshire moors, by the gracious invitation of Mayor Bond, on a perfect June day, with the charm of English landscape, seen after a week on shipboard, made up an afternoon not soon to fade from memory.

Others noted the skylark, Shelley's own, "that singing still dost soar and soaring ever singest," the shimmer of poppies among the growing grain, the ivy-colored, picturesque ruins, and the sunset shadows cast by century-old trees on the ancient moat at Wells. The phenomenally fine weather, with only two partially rainy days in six weeks, and the profusion of flowers everywhere in evidence, were also spoken of. The flowers were never lavishly, but as it were lovingly, displayed and their refining presence gladdened every meal whether served in lowly inn or lordly hall. At every hotel, even in wayside places like Bawtry where we tarried for only a forenoon luncheon, mine host never failed to add this æsthetic touch to his table. In some places, notably at Farnham Castle, where Mrs. Davidson, wife of the bishop, herself arranged the flowers, and at the Priory, Reigate, the floral decorations were delicately artistic, the scheme of color being in perfect harmony with all the surroundings. Whether it were a single rose in a slender crystal vase or a mass of blossoms in a jar of costly faïence the taste in each case was exquisite.

One pilgrim, not afraid to express his gratification at creature comforts, emphasizes the joy he experienced in making the intimate acquaintance of the English strawberry, most glorious of all fruits of the earth. We found it at Plymouth when we landed and said good-by to it at Norwich where it ministered to our pleasure in worthy company of the thick yellow cream from Mr. Colman's dairy. Three weeks of English strawberries, selected for us by hospitable English hosts from choicest English gardens and heaped upon our plates with characteristic English liberality! No wonder that at least one pilgrim for the moment forgot his enthusiasm for Old World Shrines in his satisfaction with Old World Strawberries.

At first we were puzzled to understand how the people everywhere seemed to know of our advent, for Britain's "tight little island" is invaded by thousands of Americans every summer without attracting the least attention. When we bought the newspapers, however, the mystery was explained. We found that the local press was devoting from one column to an entire page to our movements and the history around which they centered, and as these were usually chronicled a day or two before our arrival no wonder that the hearts of the people were in expectation. These accounts were often quite scholarly and the work, as a whole, far superior to what would be found in the ordinary provincial journal here at home when reporting such an event. The printed poster and the bulletin were frequently pressed into the service of The Pilgrimage, as the facsimile on the next page of The Lincolnshire Echo's bulletin witnesses. An enterprising newsboy met our carriages a mile from town, whetting our vanity and exciting our curiosity with this bold announcement. The Lincolnshire papers, particularly the Yorkshire Daily Post, a Conservative organ and therefore less likely to be in sympathy with representatives of democracy, showed a most cordial spirit. Several of the illustrated papers, as the Sketch, the Queen, gave large space to scenes of Pilgrim interest. The leading London papers, too, like the Times, Chronicle, and Pall Mall Gazette, gave generous recognition, often editorially, of the pilgrimage. Even Punch waxed eloquent over us in this kindly quatrain:

> Good luck to the new Pilgrim's Progress!
> Hate is a monster, strife an ogress.
> The Mayflower's gone but, with good will,
> Our mutual love may flower still.

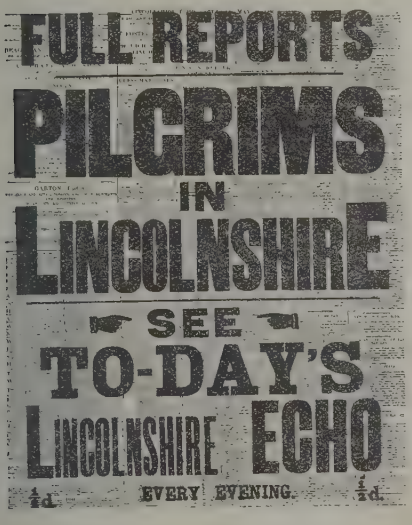
The only discordant note from the press came from the Church Times, the oracle of a section of the High Church party, but the venom of its ill natured utterances were turned into sweetness by the living words of brotherly love from the lips of some of the highest ecclesiastics within the Establishment.



Facsimile of poster; size of original 19 x 24 inches.

In closing it may be pertinent to ask what advantages accrue from a journey of this character? Wherein does it differ from the ordinary trip to Europe undertaken by multitudes of our countrymen every season? Most of all in the enrichment it must inevitably bring to one's Christian life and in the deepening of denominational loyalty. He must be a lukewarm Congregationalist indeed who, after visiting these sacred shrines, remains indifferent to a denomination which has such a priceless history. Patriotism, too, is kindled by a fresh study of the Puritan movement out of which, to a large extent, emerged our own glorious nation. Other advantages are well summed up by a Boston merchant, who had made extended tours in Europe and Asia before, but who frankly acknowledged this to be the superlative pleasure of his life in respect to travel.

In a measure, he says, the blessed benefits we have experienced will be distributed to those who remained at home, for these weeks will serve to give to life a new charm, to home new attractions and to society new themes of conversation, as well as new sources of instruction and profit. More than all else will come the enlargement of our own natures from contact with our fellowmen in other lands, especially the land which only seven generations ago our ancestors left for New England's shore. We learn better to know that we are all akin, and that the human family is God's household in which we are only a part, with no more or better claims upon his universal goodness than the rest.

Whatever shadows may lie athwart the future pathway of the New World Pilgrims to Old World Shrines, the yesterdays of the summer of 1896 will ever "look backwards with a smile." For the space of a few brief weeks we realized, in the words of "rare Ben Jonson," that "in short measures life may perfect be."

F. J. D.

A Word About the Closing Days.

The chronicles of The Congregationalist's Pilgrimage written by Miss Frances J. Dyer of our editorial staff, with a rare sensitiveness to impressions of historical associations, architectural grandeur and beauty, social life and natural scenery, have been mainly confined to England, since there the Pilgrims received attentions which make that part of their journey most memorable. The single letter in last week's issue, giving an account of the stay in Holland, well illustrates our experiences on the Continent. The week in Amsterdam, with excursions through the country districts on the canals, the Sunday in Cologne with the Cathedral service and the Christian Endeavor meeting at our hotel, the day on the Rhine, the visit to picturesque old Heidelberg, the journey through the Black Forest and the festal splendors of Baden Baden linger in our memories as a succession of wonderful dreams.

At last we found ourselves at the excellent hotel on the Rigi Kulm, with snowy Alps piled one above the other in majestic masses resting against the evening sky, while around the lakes of Lucerne and Zug, far beneath our feet, electric lights shone like reflections of the stars. Dinner over, we gathered in the Red Room to spend our last evening as a party together. There a number of pleasant things happened of themselves. Dr. William E. Park proposed thanks, which were voted unanimously, to Messrs. Henry Gaze & Sons, for the admirable provision made for our comfort as travelers through the whole of our journey. Through their excellent business arrangements special trains and carriages on railways, comfortable suites of rooms at hotels, with meals at hours most suited to our convenience, had been placed at our disposal. They had not only made good their promises, but had exceeded them in thoughtful foresight, making it easy for us to do what we came to do with the least possible fatigue and expenditure of time. Next, a hearty tribute was paid to our conductor, Mr. F. E. Murrell, the agent of Messrs. H. Gaze & Sons. Beyond question, he had won the friendship of every member of the party, not only by his quiet and assiduous attention to their wants, but by his experience of travel, the culture and the courtesy which made him always a welcome companion. Mr. Murrell is an ideal conductor for a pilgrimage in Europe. Nor was the enthusiasm in the least lessened when a pretty gift was presented to the fair young Greek wife, to whom English, French and German languages were as familiar as her own, and who accompanied him on this journey that they might spend their honeymoon together.

At this point it seemed as though the meeting ought to be brought to a close, but Rev. W. W. Leete claimed the privilege of expressing his gratitude to The Congregationalist for arranging so valuable and delightful a pilgrimage; and this he did so felicitously that every one else was moved to emulate him. The person who had presided up to that time found himself in the background, and this paper would turn rosy red if the kind words of appreciation there uttered were to be printed here. At a late hour Dr. Robie led us in a tender prayer of thanksgiving for the care of our heavenly Father which had so lovingly manifested itself in all our journey, and after making arrangements for a reunion next year the company gradually vanished with strains of gay music ringing in their ears. Next morning we were let down the steep mountain side to the tender mercies of the blue Lake of the Four Cantons, on whose bosom we were borne to Lucerne. A few hours later some of us were speeding toward Paris, others to the musical festival at Bayreuth, others to Italy, North Germany and Scandinavia, while half of our number still clung together and, with Mr. Murrell, turned toward the Alps and buried themselves in the heart of the snowy hills. Some are still wandering beyond the sea. But the New World Pilgrims to Old World Shrines remain one company in spirit, and will revive their experiences together in coming days.

Boston, Sept. 1. A. E. DUNNING.

JOHN ROBINSON AND HIS PEERS.

When John Robinson addressed his farewell discourse to the little band of Pilgrims on that day of solemn humiliation, in July, 1620, Kepler, Galileo, Bacon, Harvey, Milton, Descartes, were either still doing their work or as yet unheard of in the world; the house of Stuart was freshly seated on the English throne; Oliver Cromwell, a youth of twenty one, had not yet undergone his change of heart; Gustavus Adolphus had won no name in arms; Richelieu was not a cardinal, nor, a very potter at his wheel, had he begun his momentous work on plastic France; Poland was still a power and the barrier of civilization against the Turk. We regard that famous victory won by Sobieski under the walls of Vienna, which marked the culmination and decline of the Ottoman Empire, as so remote that it seems of another world than ours. Yet it happened more than sixty years after the unnoticed Speedwell weighed its anchor at Delfthaven, and John Robinson had already been four years in his grave when John Sobieski was born. Thus, as I have said, this church has seen dynasties, philosophies, theologies and nations decay and disappear, and yet others rise to take their place. "The drift of the Maker is dark, an Isis hid by the veil; who knows the ways of the world, how God will bring them about?"

The names I have mentioned are names great in the world's annals; the events I have referred to are indisputably memorable. It seems strange to weigh this society —a simple church in a provincial Massachusetts town—in the scale of human events against such names and such events as I have recalled. And yet, in truth, as a factor in human events it outweighs that among them which is to be reckoned most and greatest. When the society which is met here today first gathered on the Speedwell's narrow deck its great mission was to bear to a new continent and there implant the germs of civil and religious liberty. In all seriousness I ask, Was the passage of the Red Sea by the children of Israel, was the founding of Rome by Romulus and Remus, was the crossing of the Atlantic by Columbus, was any one of these a human event more pregnant with great consequence?—Charles Francis Adams.

I am sorry for the preacher who never says anything in his preaching for which he is sorry for afterwards. He must be a man incapable of burning with intense earnestness.—Dr. John A. Broadus

The Home

LET ME GO WHERE'ER I WILL.

Let me go where'er I will,
I hear a sky-born music still;
It sounds from all things old,
It sounds from all things young,
From all that's fair, from all that's foul,
Peals out a cheerful song.
It is not only in the rose,
It is not only in the bird,
Not only where the rainbow glows,
Nor in the song of woman heard,
But in the darkest, meanest things
There alway, alway something sings.
'Tis not in the high stars alone,
Nor in the cups of budding flowers,
Nor in the redbreast's mellow tone,
Nor in the bow that smiles in showers,
But in the mud and scum of things
There alway, alway something sings.

—Emerson.

Now that the régime of our households is settling itself after the vacation chaos it is well to consider our family customs and see where they can be bettered. One opportunity is offered in respect to the practice of ordering groceries and market supplies late on Saturday. This is done in many a Christian household where disregard for the Lord's Day is abhorrent. But the necessary result in cities and large towns is labor for the clerks till the "wee, sma' hours" and a consequent state of body and mind too nervously exhausted to admit any real appreciation of Sunday. This is one reason why a large body of our young men are not found at church. The unfortunate custom of paying wage-earners Saturday night is responsible for much of this late marketing, and the influence of well-to-do citizens might profitably be used to change the time of payment so that the tired housewife need not wait till Saturday evening for her husband's or her own weekly wage.

The importance of good manners in the schoolroom is a topic that is wisely attracting a good deal of attention just at present. W. D. Howells, in Harper's Bazar, goes to the extent of advocating an examination of a teacher's manners, and would reject one for being rude or uncouth quite as soon as for failure to reach a required intellectual standard. Another writer in the Atlantic complains of the lack of politeness in children of all school grades above the kindergarten, and both agree that the school, even more than the home, is the proper place for training young people in social amenities. One reason for this opinion is that, in too many cases, parents themselves are uncultivated and also wholly unconscious of the fact. The home can best furnish the ideal of all good breeding, namely, unselfishness, but specific instruction in civility, which is the beginning of civilization and the very root of civism, should emanate from the schoolroom. The best teaching, however, whether of manners or morals, loses it potency unless enforced by example, and therefore it seems only reasonable to insist that an instructor of boys and girls should possess, not necessarily the graces of a Chesterfield, but a bearing of unvarying politeness.

At a recent "hallelujah" wedding at Old Orchard the contracting "captains," who appeared in the regulation uniform varied only by the addition of a white sash over the bride's right shoulder, pledged themselves to love and cherish the cause of God as well as each other, and after the ceremony narrated their religious experiences to the audience of 5,000. While we would be willing to dispense with the last number on the program, we are glad the Salvation Army emphasizes the importance of union for Christian service. If this purpose entered more largely into the plans of young people, there would be fewer brief and unhappy marriages.

FAITH—OR OTHERS' WORKS?

BY MARION HARLAND.

"He lives a life of faith, you know."

"Is not that what we are all trying to do?"

It was not said flippantly, yet the mild eyes that met mine had a shadow of reproachful surprise.

"That is not what I mean. Dr. Blankenship makes absolutely no provision for his temporal needs. He trusts the Lord to feed and to clothe him. His favorite text is, 'They that wait on the Lord shall not want any good thing.'"

"Does that always mean temporal good?"

"He takes it literally. He prays for what he wants—and it comes. The story of his life is a Christian romance. It really seems as if he had only to knock at the door of heaven, then to ask and to receive. His face is a sermon of peace and rest. He looks fifteen years younger than other men of his age."

A thought pierced, rather than struck, me.

"How many years older does Mrs. Blankenship look than most women of her age?"

The mild eyes were mournful.

"Ah! you may well ask it. Her life is a continual worry. Dr. Blankenship has no regular pastorate, you know, and no stated salary. He prefers, he says, 'to give his services to the church, and look to the Head of the church for payment.' He 'doesn't believe in the middlemen system.' His wife cannot bring herself up to his spiritual level. Morning, noon and night her mind is on the stretch, planning how to pay this bill, or to get money for that household need. It is pitiable!"

"Yet, somebody must pay bills and supply money for marketing," I slipped in between parts first and second of the elect lady's speech.

It rippled smoothly over the interpolation. "To give you an example: Dr. Blankenship went abroad last summer as the guest of a friend. Such friends are raised up for him in every time of need. He was overworked and, the doctors said, on the verge of nervous prostration. He was extremely anxious to have his wife go with him, and made it a subject of prayer. Our Church Sewing Society heard of it and easily raised $200, which we sent to him with the request that it should be used for Mrs. Blankenship's foreign tour. It was said that but for her husband she would have sent it back to us. She 'could not see that it was an answer to prayer, for it would only pay her way over the ocean and for a month's travel. How was she to get back?' The blessed man came to see me and to talk the matter over. He was not grieved or vexed, or even perplexed. You never saw such serenity or heard such gentle charity of speech.

"'It may be that this disinclination on my dear wife's part is a divine leading,' he said. 'Before daring to make any other disposition of the money, I shall wait three days for further light.'

"'Do you always get light when you ask for it?' said I.

"His face was as that of an angel. 'My dear lady,' he said, 'the promise is sure. Ask, and ye shall receive.'

"As soon as he had gone I put on my bonnet and called upon half a dozen of the richest men I know. Before night I had collected seven hundred dollars, which I sent to him, and the two sailed next week for England. He wrote to me in the letter that thanked me 'as the Lord's almoner' that his 'life was starred with such direct answers to prayer—sown thick as the galaxy with loving-kindnesses and tender mercies.'"

The above dialogue is reported almost verbatim and with intention that strengthens into almost savage purpose as I recognize the case before us as representative. It is not a month since a young woman, whose father has seen fit to organize upon his own responsibility, and to conduct without other help than his own family, a mission upon ground which the church has decided is already covered by established agencies, used the very words to me that stand at the head of this protest.

She is speaking three and four times a week before Sunday schools and other religious societies, calling from house to house, and writing numerous letters to secure funds for the support of her father's "work"; trying to reason down prejudice, enlighten ignorance and to ingratiate herself with all sorts and conditions of men and women, and in the undertaking fairly wearing her life out.

"This is not fit work for a young, delicate girl," I said, pityingly. "Has your father no means of support except what you are able to send him?"

Her face was less haggard for the proud smile that came into her eyes.

"None. He lives a life of faith."

Watching her from the window as she fought her way through a pelting storm back to her lodgings—a homeless, overwrought, hysterical exile—I wondered aloud to myself how many other lives of faith are wicks that owe their shining to the generous oil of others' works.

Let me make one thing plain before I go on. As firmly as I hold my faith in the being and power of him whose promises stand as fast as his throne I believe in the daily, hourly trust in his love for the meanest of his creatures. Our Lord's declaration of the Father's care of the grass of the field and the sparrows was not simply talk. When he admonished his hearers to take no anxious thought for the morrow he meant just what he said, and as emphatically as when he urged them to work while the day lasts.

Nevertheless, the serene saint who twitters songs of praise in a nest of ease, while his mate forages for two, finds no exemplar in the gospel, no warrant in common sense, no apology in common justice.

To be thoroughly consistent, such an one should conceal his needs as tactfully as he usually makes them known. Having told the Master that he is a-hungered and penniless, he should bear himself bravely in the sight of his fellowmen as one who is full and in need of nothing. This would be the true test of faith and the promises.

I appeal to other readers with me of certain lives of the saints who have done wondrously in building up religious and charitable enterprises, yet make their boast of

"never having asked a dollar of any human being." Do not taste and reason revolt in company in comparing the tale of miracles wrought in the time of need with the ways and means by which the fact of the need was suffered to reach the ears of active sympathizers? Would it not be more honest for the Christian philanthropist to call frankly upon his brethren to give as the Lord has prospered them than to noise abroad through others' tongues that he has made the matter "a subject of special prayer and looks past middlemen to the Giver of all good?"

Whatever else may be the favorite text of these livers-by-faith-alone, it is not, "And when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which seeth in secret," if we are to judge belief by practice.

A disciple of this school boasts in a modestly devout fashion that she has not had one anxious moment in fourteen years. She rolls every care at arm's length, she affirms, upon him who careth for her. Servants and sickness come and go without ruffling her equanimity or losing for her one hour of sleep. Bills of fare are no more to her than to the young ravens; she bestows upon her clothing no more thought than the flowers give to theirs.

"We are told to grow like the lilies and not to grovel," I heard her say. "Toiling and moiling are not for the children of light."

One such apostle usually suffices for a household. This particular specimen has made no converts in her family, although many outside take knowledge and learn of her—talk. The daily experience of her daughters bears out the belief freely expressed by practical people that he or she who "takes life easily" makes life the harder for somebody else. Burden bearing is a Christian duty. Judicious provision for temporal needs is cited as a test of discipleship by the chief apostle in language that reminds us of his labor and travail night and day at his trade of tent-making, eating no man's bread lest he should be chargeable to the infant church.

Another trenchant deliverance recurs to us in this connection—"And having done all, to stand." Fatalism, not faith, calls a halt before the "all" is done. God's opportunity meets man's extremity. The sturdy old patriot's command, "Trust in God and keep your powder dry," has been twisted on the way to us, or he did not word it well. First, keep the powder dry. Then, having done your "all," trust in the Helper of those who help themselves to prosper the work of your hands. A pious epicure is a solecism. The preaching and practice of some saintly shirkers sends us for relief and expression to the stern, plain-speaking of St. James. His "faith without works is dead" leaves a wholesome, tonic bitter in the mouth. The life of love must outrank the life of faith while our brother's need calls to us for help. And call it must, when the load appointed unto each of us to bear, or any part of it, is shifted to another's heart and shoulders.

A writer in the St. Louis annual Health Report stoutly maintains that consumption is neither a contagious nor a germ disease but the result of generations of bad living. In order to counteract this he prescribes first of all an intelligent understanding of one's own condition, and adds:

Better living, more knowledge is what we want. Tell your tuberculous patients what to eat, when and how much. Do everything you can to improve digestion. Remember that consumption always begins in the alimentary canal. Find out what kind of indigestion they have. Is it due to absence, perversion or too great activity of the secretory function? Is there a lack of motive power or peristalsis? Do not let them be constipated. Experiment with foods until you find a dietary which is well borne. Secure the co-operation of your patients. Teach them to recognize the true significance of their symptoms. Do not let consumptives over-exercise. Employ massage and electricity to promote the circulation of the blood.

Except in emergencies, prescribe no medicines save those intended to improve digestion. Use soothing inhalations to check cough and lessen pulmonary soreness. Never forget the prime importance of climatic influence. Long, bright, balmy, sunny days, free from care and irksome restrictions. These are what you want.

THE CHILD'S USE OF MONEY.

BY MARGARET NOURSE.

The virtues of a child may be his own inherent possessions but his vices and faults pretty generally result from the neglect, indifference, positive bad example or positive bad management of parents. The careless use of money is, clearly enough, a fault for which the child is not responsible. He brought nothing into this world; his ideas of the use of money, his very conceptions of the meaning and value of money, must come to him from those who are educating him. True, the habit of acquisitiveness is more or less natural to all children, but I think it hardly probable that young children hoard money for money's sake.

A little child is such a delightfully entertaining creature, at least to most of us, it is so easy and natural to pet and flatter him, to win a smile by a gift, more or less well considered, that the marvel is that children should attain maturity with any sound ideas of the value of money. If the lowest coin of the realm were a nickel, a dime or a quarter the child would doubtless be much better off. A penny is such a trifle, we say, when a little hand is outstretched for that which represents to him sweets at the corner store. If the little one begged for a quarter most of us would be forced to consider whether it was wise or not to grant the request. Constant giving of favors of this sort induces boldness. Presently the child begins to ask for pennies indiscriminately of friends and of strangers. There are children who, unless restrained, jingle their banks or open tiny pocket-books in one's presence and, urged by their craving for sweets and toys, boldly hint their wishes. Then the child becomes unlovely, but it is not a fault of his own creating.

Innocent as may appear the habit of spending small sums without thought, it is a habit which, when allowed to continue unchecked, may induce extravagance, wastefulness, intemperance and other vices. Early impressions and practices are proverbially potent. The child who is allowed to spend pennies without advice or consultation with his mother, and on whatever pleases his fancy, is not likely to be careful with larger sums and so soon acquires habits of extravagance. He who is careless with money, which represents so much, will probably be careless and wasteful with other possessions besides money, as time and opportunities. The child who is permitted to indulge his innocent appetite for sweets, toys and novelties, who grows to boyhood and young manhood with the understanding that whenever he has a craving for novelty that craving must be gratified, is certainly in the way of the man who gratifies his baser appetites without restraint, even if he is held back, by his instincts, from actual wrongdoing; while the child who is taught to deny his own small wishes in favor of others, to be prudent and not wasteful, because there are those who have need of the necessities of life, easily acquires habits which may make a vast difference with his future life.

To counteract the extravagant tendency in a child it is not necessary to repeat the error by going to the opposite extreme. Of the two, an extravagant man is a better citizen than the miser. It is a good plan to keep a child free from any ideas whatever about money so long as possible. Teach him how to make his own playthings and he will enjoy them twice over, besides developing a taste for industry and exercising his ingenuity and mechanical skill. Simple homemade candies, to be eaten at the table, are much better for him in every way than the rich, impure sweets which a child is likely to buy over the counter. He can easily be instructed to find his happiness in something that is not suggested by money. Having should not always mean spending. Even a very busy mother who will take time and spend thought in devising or suggesting occupations for the child will lose nothing in the end, even though her mending basket should be neglected. The country would be the better by one good citizen if all mothers realized what individual care of a child, in this one particular, might mean.

When money must come into the child's life consider and suggest various good ways of spending it. In a home where birthday and Christmas gifts are made much of love generally reigns and continues until the later years of life. A gift, however tiny, warms the heart of both giver and receiver. The little child has been a recipient from his infancy; make him happy by showing him how he can earn money and buy gifts for others. A rose tree for grandmamma's birthday, some desired trifle for father or sister or mother, purchased by his own forethought, mark a new era in the child's life and distinctly influence him for good. Teach him how to divide his small hoard of money so that each member of the family, his playmates, the poor children in the neighborhood and in the orphans' home, may receive a gift on Christmas morning.

A bank account should be started for the child and he should be encouraged to add to it so long as the spirit of avarice can be kept in abeyance. But we must not look for sound views about the needs of the coming years in a little child. Saving up money for some future good scarcely appeals to the small man or woman. Past and future have no existence for them; the present is their golden age.

Discussions about money should be avoided in the hearing of a child. Teach him by your own conversation and example that money is not a thing to which important thought should be given. Keep him out of the financial atmosphere, the atmosphere of the glittering shop and the eager discussion of ways and means. Children are so much more susceptible to the atmosphere by which they are surrounded than most of us suspect. If the gaining and the spending of money are frequently discussed in the home circle the child is certain to gain the impression that money is a principal good. A community in which many homes based on moderate incomes are found, in which there is neither great poverty nor great wealth, in which men and women value money for what it may represent of education, refinement, culture, in which habits of reserve and prudence in getting and spending are the rule, is a good community for a child to be born into; and such a community furnishes the best sort of citizens for a republic.

THE BOY WITHOUT A HOBBY.

BY MARTHA CLARK RANKIN.

"I feel anxious about George," said a mother, not long ago, to an intimate friend.

"Anxious about George!" was the surprised response. "Why should you be? Of all your four boys George has always seemed to me the most promising. He's bright, energetic, good-natured and kind. What more can you expect of a boy? And when your older sons are developing so finely, surely you ought to have faith that the younger ones will follow in their footsteps."

"Yes; I feel pretty sure of Arthur, but I can't of George, and I'll tell you why. He's a boy without a hobby."

"Well, is that a crime?" said the friend. "You seem to expect me to be shocked, but I confess that I have never thought a 'hobby' especially desirable for anybody. I'm sure people often waste a great deal of time and money over them and then drop them altogether. Won't you please explain to me wherein the saving merit of a hobby consists?"

"Perhaps you think of it as, 'That which occupies one's attention unduly or to the weariness of others.' I prefer Webster's other definition, 'A favorite and ever-recurring theme of discourse, thought or effort.' The merit of such a hobby is just this—it keeps a boy out of mischief.

"Half the boys who go to ruin begin their downward career because they don't know what to do with themselves. Growing boys are naturally restless. When their tasks are done, they look around for some kind of amusement, and then the temptations come. Now a boy with a hobby is never at a loss to know what to do; he always has something in which he is intensely interested, and his only trouble usually is to get time enough for it. And, though his leisure and pocket money may seem to be wasted, aren't they better spent than in most ways in which boys indulge themselves?

"You were speaking of my older sons, whose record is certainly a great comfort to me. Albert, you know, began collecting stones almost as soon as he could toddle about, and the love of geology into which it has developed has always given him incentives to outdoor exercise as well as occupation for rainy days.

"Just the same thing is true of Everett. He has always been interested in engines and trains and everything connected with railroading. To be sure, that was a hobby that I didn't enjoy, as it led him to hang around engine houses and railway stations. Fortunately, however, he was cautious and came through without accident, and now he knows so much about railroad matters that his father laughingly says he'll end by being president of a railroad.

"But whether the boys ever make any more of their specialties or not, I feel thankful for the interests which have kept them healthy, happy and well balanced.

"Arthur's hobby has been stamps; and, although I have little patience with the lengths to which the modern stamp mania has gone, with its temptations to speculate, still it has been an excellent thing for Arthur, and I am sure he has got out of it more than he has put into it.

"But poor George! For some inexplicable reason he can't seem to find any one thing in which he is more interested than another, and, consequently, I can't help feeling worried and anxious about him. When a holiday comes he never feels quite certain how he wishes to spend it, and often wastes a good deal of time deciding, whereas the other boys, enthusiastic over their hobbies, seem to make every minute count. Now, if I haven't tired you all out, don't you begin to understand my feeling?"

"A little better than I did, certainly. It's the old adage, 'Satan finds some mischief still, for idle hands to do.'"

"Exactly. The man, woman, boy or girl who always has something congenial waiting to be done is pretty safe. The change of work is rest and recreation; and I believe the business men who can throw off their cares and anxieties for a time daily, and interest themselves in some hobby (especially something that takes them out doors), are the healthiest, happiest and most successful of men. In short, as some one has said: 'Every one needs not only a vocation, but an avocation.'"

HEALTH HINTS.

Emerson says that health is the first wealth; and Channing that the last triumph of Christianity may be a perfect hygiene.

It is said that an invalid can relish a thin slice of delicately browned bacon placed between thin slices of bread in the form of a sandwich when no other form of fat can be tolerated.

A new magazine called What to Eat gives this recipe for a cooling drink for a convalescent: "Fill a tumbler half full of cracked ice, add the juice of half a lemon, three heaping teaspoonfuls of sugar and a quarter of a glass of creamy milk. Then fill the glass with seltzer and stir well."

A household exchange recommends lettuce as a vegetable that purifies the blood, tones the color, steadies the nerves and induces sleep. It should never be dressed till just before eating, as it soon wilts. The best plain dressing is "a combination of oil, very little vinegar and a generous amount of salt," and also a dash of pepper.

Prof. William James of Harvard says that in Norway the life of the women has been entirely revolutionized by the use of the ski, or snowshoe, as a sport for both sexes. As a result they are "not only saying good-by to the traditional feminine pallor and delicacy of constitution, but are actually taking the lead in every educational and social reform." He believes that tennis, skating and even the bicycle craze among our own girls will lead to a sounder and heartier moral tone in American society.

Excessive fatigue, either of mind or body, generates an active poison, for which there is no known remedy. So long as the system has sufficient recuperative power to resist its inroads no special harm results. But there is deadly peril the moment when the poison is created faster than nature can eliminate it through her ordinary channels, and some one organ is sure to break down under the strain. A medical writer in The Youth's Companion cites the case of a bicyclist, who rode to an extreme, and whose heart became poisoned in this way, and brain workers are quite liable to suffer injury from the same source.

Closet and Altar

Thy large bestowing makes us ask for more.

There is a vast difference between prayer in faith and faith in prayer. Having faith in prayer is believing that because certain prayers are offered certain results will follow—that the praying will secure the thing prayed for. Praying in faith comes of an abiding confidence in the Person prayed to; the confidence is in him; it is based on a knowledge of what he is and on a conviction that he is every way worthy to be trusted. Praying in faith is the act of a simple-hearted child of God.—H. Clay Trumbull.

The prayers I make will then be sweet indeed,
If thou the spirit give by which I pray;
My unassisted heart is barren clay,
That of its native self can nothing feed.
Of good and pious work thou art the seed
That quickens only where thou say'st it may.
Unless thou show to us thine own true way
No man can find it. Father, thou must lead!
Do thou, then, breathe those thoughts into my mind
By which such virtue may in me be bred
That in thy holy footsteps I may tread.
The fetters of my tongue do thou unbind,
That I may have the power to sing of thee,
And sound thy praises everlastingly.

—Michael Angelo.

When we think of Christ as a being at a distance from us who has merely done a mighty work, when we eat the bread and drink the wine in remembrance of an absent Friend, not as pledges of a near and present one, the pressure of evil that crushes down our faith and hope and love seems to make the past redemption wholly unavailing for our great necessity. But Christ in us, as St. Paul told the Colossians, is the hope of glory. What we want is not that we should attain some separate and selfish bliss, but that he who has been striving with us all our lives through, to deliver us from the separation and selfishness which have been our torment and curse, should effect his own purpose—that we should be his willing servants, free children of his Father, formed into one family and body by his blessed Spirit forever.—F. D. Maurice.

If you have any trial that seems intolerable pray. One disabled from duty by sickness may pray for health that he may do his work; or one hemmed in by internal impediments may pray for utterance; but the answer to the prayer may be, as it was with Paul, not the removal of the thorn, but instead a growing insight into its meaning and value.—J. F. Clarke.

O thou who neither slumberest nor sleepest, but keepest constant guard and watch over all thy people, grant unto us the divine comfort and the heavenly joys that come from the remembrance of thy mindfulness; and so being upheld, in the time of our gladness may we give thee thanksgiving, and in the time of our sadness may we turn, though it be with a dumb tongue, a longing face toward thee. Be to us all in all, our Friend when friends are faithless, our Lover when love grows cold; when life is faint and feeble within us be thou our soul's life. Come what will may we abide in deep peace of mind and soul, ever striving to be sheep of the true fold and dwelling in the hope of hearing the good Shepherd call us by name. Amen.

Tangles.

[For the leisure hour recreation of old and young. Any reader who can contribute odd and curious enigmas, etc., of a novel and interesting kind is invited to do so, addressing the Puzzle Editor of The Congregationalist.]

77. CURIOUS ADDITION.

Side by side, a dozen brothers,
Each one just like all the others,
Indian file they go a-foot—
Unless it should their measure suit
That other ones should added be,
Their counterparts, say thirty-three;
Then that would be another matter,
And the result—an English letter!

D. M. H.

78. RIDDLE.

In myself I am worthless, yet potent with might,
Give myself to the wrong and contend for the right;
Great nations have bowed to the power I wield,
I've promoted dissensions, contentions I've healed.

I'm employed to do many beneficent things,
I'm an agent that scorns and scorches with stings.
I have caused many faces to whiten with pain,
And have given the sorrowful glad hearts again.

I am used by the many, rejected by few;
Sometimes I am animal, mineral too;
I am oft plunged in darkness, I'm shining and bright,
And my work often lingers all through the long night.

I am rapid or slow as occasion may make,
And virtuous or vicious my service may take.
I am wielded by kings, by my work has been given
A descent into Hades, or entrance to heaven.

E. M. M.

79. SUBSTITUTIONS.

The words are of equal length; and the second word of each pair is formed by substituting a different letter for the middle one of the first. Example: feelers, feeders. When all are guessed, the misplaced letters, taken in order, and those substituted, rearranged, will give two names familiar in politics.

1. Prices for passage; visages. 2. Encounters; kinds of flesh. 3. Anticipations; residences. 4. Veracity; fidelity. 5. Currants; travels. 6. A colt; appropriately. 7. Money; grains. 8. Takes knowledge of; oozes; 9. Fellows; fragments. 10. Places of deposit; rear elevations.

DOROTHEA.

80. SOME MEN.

Here are men with various things to do,
Now see if you can guess a few.

1. This one transports us from place to place,
2. And this has always a dirty face.
3. A mighty weapon one wields at will,
4. One, a tiny thing which is mightier still.
5. If going too fast, this one helps us to stop;
6. And naughty boys call this a "cop."
7. This one goes far for bone and blubber,
8. The sailor dubs this one a "lubber."
9. One works with this, without which we'd freeze;
10. The business of this, to amuse and please.
11. One gayly rides betwixt water and air;
12. His companion offers a tempting snare.
13. When this one travels, six legs uses he;
14. And we want the last when we take our tea.

J. S.

81. SKELETON FLOWERS.

1. Pn*y. 2. N, m. 3. Aer. 4. Wt* *o*e. 5. M,*o. 6. G*i*nm. 7. H*n*y*u*k*. 8. Jme. 9. Rh*d*d*ndi*n. 10. T*l*r*s*. 11. Zl. 12. T*l*p. 13. Pk.

S. B. L.

82. TRANSPOSITION.

(Supply the first blank with a word of four letters, and each of the other blanks with the same four letters transposed.)

A —— old woman, with —— intent,
Put on her ——, and away she went.
"——," said she, "give me, I pray,
The wherewithal to —— today."

H. B. P.

ANSWERS.

74. Sop-his-try.

75. 1, Bar; 2, Barb; 3, Ado; 4, Does (Barbadoes); 5, Pen; 6, Ape; 7, Nines (Apennines). 8, Camp; 9, Bell (Campbell). 10, Wig (Twiggs). 11, Ark; 12, Kansas (Arkansas). 13, Afghan (Afghanistan). 14, Abyss; 15, Sin (Abyssinia). 16, Cub (Cuba). 17, Guinea (Guinea). 18, Indian; 19, Diana (Indiana). 20, Massa; 21, Mississ; 22, Miss; 23, Ass (Massachusetts, Mississippi). 24, Philip; 25, Lip; 26, Pin; 27, Pine (Philippine). 28, Saddle; 29, Back (Saddleback). 30, Den; 31, Mark (Denmark). 32, Law; 33, Ware (Delaware). 34, Chin; 35, China (China); 36, Cay; 37, Yen; 38, Cayenne (Cayenne). 39, Tip; 40, Pecan; 41, Can; 42, Canoe (Tippecanoe).

76. 1. Paper, caper, capes, copes, Copts, coots, clots, cloth. 2. Read, road, toad, told, toll, tall, talk. 3. Bird, bard, ward, word, wold, wolf. 4. Book, rook, rood, road, read.

Among solvers of Tangles of Aug. 13 were: H. H. R, Tinmouth, Vt., 70, 73; Helen B. Pettingill, Saxton's River, Vt., 69, 70, 72, 73; M. E. B., Cottage City, Mass., 69, 70, 72, 73; H. H. Sherbrook, Que., 69, 70, 73; M J. L., Malden, Mass., 69, 70; M. B. H. Hazen, Middletown, Ct, 69, 70, 72, 73; E. LaMira Hayward, Fitchburg, Mass., 69, 72, 73; M. E. H., Westfield, Mass, 69, 72; Nillor, Middletown Springs, Vt., 69, 70, 71, 72, 73; J. S. Richards, Deer Isle, Mass., 70; L A. F., Easthampton, Mass., 69, 71, 72, 73; C., Harvard, Mass., 70, 72; Mrs. M. A. Harrington, Webster, Mass., 69, 70, 72, 73; Mrs. H. G. Day, Providence, R. I, 69, 70, 72, 73; W. W. O., Malden, Mass., 69, 70, 72, 73; Mrs. L. W. Watriss, Windsor, Vt., 72, 73; Mamil B., Worcester, Mass., 69, 70, 73; R. F. H., Dover, N. H., 70. Several solvers gave the answer to 70 as 53, and one obtained 43.

MASSACHUSETTS'S TEST OF GOOD CITIZENSHIP.

In a recent address at Holy Cross College, Worcester, a Roman Catholic institution, Acting-Governor Wolcott of Massachusetts uttered these noble sentiments:

The State has men of many faiths, creeds and races, and extends over them all equal protection. She holds out to all alike the equal book of opportunity. She speaks to all alike of good citizenship. Our people are made up of many peoples. They are composed of Irish, Germans, Scandinavians, Italians and of every race and they bring to our citizenship an ardor, a spirit of research, a thirst for fame, and all these other qualities that, blended together in fitting proportions, make up the citizenship of the State. We owe much to the devotion of the founders for this public spirit. Recognizing what we owe to the past, we should remember that the past calls on us to give like examples so that our successors may say they received from the past a priceless heritage, splendid with the glory of citizenship of the men behind. The men must depend not on the past so much as on what they transmit to the future.

The name American is the greatest on earth. Next to loyalty to God, the highest service is loyalty to the flag of the Republic, and you will all agree with me when I say that America gains nothing by any word connected with it by a hyphen. We need not call ourselves British Americans or Irish-Americans. I say the word American is enough to rally to the flag all loyal and generous spirits. It needs no study of political affairs to teach us that men must differ in opinion. It may be due to intellectual reasons, to difference of character or temperament. All men gravitate to that party looking to change and willing to venture on the sea of new achievements, or else to that other division which leans on the past and holds to the good, not unwilling to take new good, but lacking the initiative of the pioneer spirits. That state will be strongest where earnest differences cease to exist.

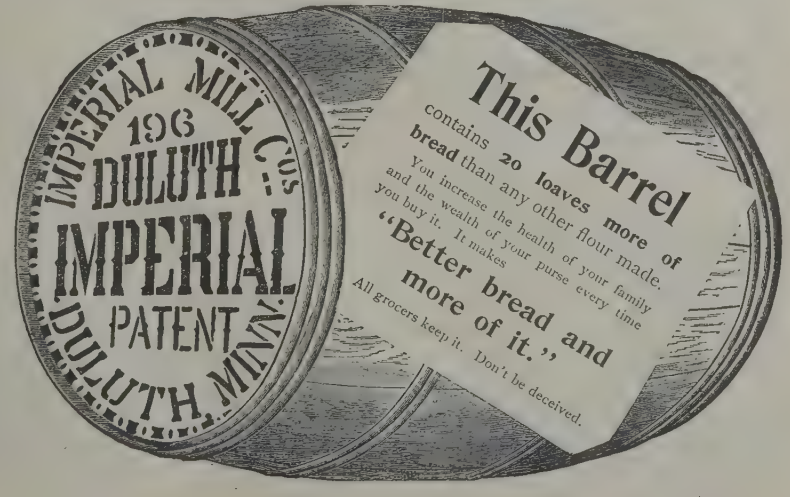
But it is unfortunate to have these differences on geographical, race or creed lines. God grant that never shall a line divide, east or west or north or south, this nation into two hostile camps. There should be these honest differences, but not on these lines. Neither should they be on the lines of religious belief. If it could be said the German vote, the Irish vote or any other class vote was all on one side, it would be unfortunate. I dislike to hear a vote referred to by racial terms. I want to hear of the American vote. That is the vote this commonwealth asks for and will receive from you, and may God bless her in the centuries to come as he has blessed her in the past.

Doctrines which rest on the gospels are reasonable and are living, and doctrines which have no support in the gospels are less than reasonable and are dying.—Ian Maclaren.

The Housewife

who has once used Cleveland's baking powder gladly recommends it to her friends. It makes such fine bread and cake, and is so sure to do the work just right, that she is always glad to have them know about it.

Cleveland's, Pure and Sure.



IMPERIAL MILL CO'S
196
DULUTH
IMPERIAL PATENT
DULUTH, MINN.
This Barrel
contains 20 loaves more of bread than any other flour made.
You increase the health of your family and the wealth of your purse every time you buy it. It makes "Better bread and more of it."
All grocers keep it. Don't be deceived.

The Conversation Corner.

This is the way we wash our clothes,
Wash our clothes, wash our clothes,
All on a Monday morning!

Perhaps the Japanese children do not sing that time-honored song, but the picture shows the process, all the same. Our missionary Cornerer, who described the jinrikisha three weeks ago, writes also about this:

This picture represents some women washing, and as they always wash with cold water they take their low tubs to the well where they can get a plenty. There they kneel down on the cement that is about the well and wash, rubbing them a little in their hands and slashing them back and forth in the water. If very dirty they soak them in a little lye water, as they never had soap until within a few years. The summer clothes are washed and hung out to dry on a bamboo pole which is put through the sleeves, but their winter ones are ripped, washed, starched and spread out smoothly on a board, as you see in the picture. HELEN B.

Another Japanese missionary told me that they had no "washing days" in Japan, but attended to that department of household industry twice a year, spring and fall, the clothing being always cut or unstitched for the purpose. A returned missionary from China, who saw the picture, has sent me the following additional notes about it:

I have seen many Japanese and Chinese women like these, sitting on the ground, or on low stools, or out on the verandas, rubbing and washing their garments, one or two at a time, in a small, shallow wooden tub or earthen bowl. In place of soap they often used a bit of crude soda in the water. The clothes are wrung out by hand and hung up to dry, either on a rope, or over a board, or with a stick run through from arm to arm, resembling a scarecrow in the corn field! Instead of ironing, these women of primitive ways usually fold the dried garment when still damp and lay it on a smooth, flat stone and beat it with two round sticks, much like rolling pins, till all the wrinkles are well beaten out. It is surprising how smooth and nice they are able to make their clothes look when thus treated. L. B. P.

Curiously enough, while I have been copying the above, the coach driver has whistled his whistle and flung off our little red calico mail-bag at the door of the cottage on the beach where I am writing this, and one letter was from another Japanese correspondent in regard to the jinrikisha, but a picture accompanying will delay its publication with this, and I will give the space to such letters as I have here.

DANVERS CENTER, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am eleven years old and would like to be a Cornerer. Last summer we had three pigs whose mother died when they were two days old, and we brought them up on a bottle. When they were killed, one weighed 201 pounds, another 182 pounds and the other 177 pounds. I am collecting stamps.
NETTIE P.

If you had used "Mellin's Food" what an advertisement that would have been for the manufacturers!

ALLSTON, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: Do your Cornerers know what a power to attract birds lies in a little fresh water? Separated by a narrow walk from our piazza is a small grove of oak and cedar trees. On a flat rock, not more than six feet from the steps, water has always settled in little pools, and here, on sunny days, come the birds to drink and bathe. My little son conceived the idea of cleaning this out and keeping it always full of fresh water. Finding how much the birds enjoyed it, he has enlarged the "bird's bath tub" this year by building a clay wall around it on three sides, the fourth being formed by the rock, which rises like a step above. From the few robins and sparrows, with an occasional oriole, of the first year, the news has spread, until now more than a dozen varieties come daily—some many times daily, to drink and bathe. Last year a splendid pair of blue jays built their nest in the cedars, and this year we have six or eight of these magnificent (but noisy) neighbors. Besides the birds already mentioned, both common and golden-winged woodpeckers, swallows, cedar birds, goldfinches and a splendid specimen of kingbird have also partaken of our hospitality. The catbird has been heard, and the brown thrush seen once. The active gray squirrel comes also to the water for refreshment. It is all within the city limits and but two or three minutes from the electric car, which makes the number of birds the more remarkable. Perhaps some other boy or girl may offer a similar attraction for the birds to come and live near them.
MRS. N.

By so doing you will "be the children of your Father which is in heaven," for he feeds the fowls of the air and provides for them water to drink. (See Matt. 5: 45; 6: 26; Ps. 104: 10–12.)

ATHOL, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I have read so many things about cats that I thought you would like to know about our Teddy. Though not two years old he is so large that when he plays in the house it sounds more like a dog than a cat. He never cries; if he wants to go out or come in he stands on his hind feet and rattles the knob or latch. When we want to call him we ring a bell and he will come scampering home. He never comes to any one who calls him anything but Teddy; "kitty" he does not know at all. This spring I went to Philadelphia and saw the Liberty Bell. I went into the Mint and the Zoo.
RUTH C.

If a "free silver" president should be elected this fall, will not the mints be busy? For of course the owners of silver mines will all be eager to have fifty-three cents worth of their silver made into coins and marked one dollar! [But they won't be really worth but fifty-three cents, Mr. Martin, no matter what the mark is!—D. F.] A little girl, close to us on the beach, brings along her kitten this morning; she says its name is Catharine, but they call her Cat for short!

CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA.

Dear Mr. Martin: We have a lot of pets—a dog named Floss, two kittens named Pet and Toy and a tame crow that we call Jim. We got him in the blizzard of 1894. Then we have two cows, named Blanche (because she is white) and Spotty, and a little calf called Baby, and a pony named Winnie. I have three sisters, Catharine, Constance and Clara, and two brothers, Percy and Paul. You can almost read my address in my name.
Your little friend, CHARLOTTE VIRGINIA G.

I think fine discernment is used in your family in the selection of names, both for pets and for children. We see four C's for girls, and no doubt the boys look as much alike as two P's!

Mr. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

Names of Cars. A recent correspondent of the Corner from a seaside resort reported his interest in noting the names of all the ships and other vessels he saw. The collection of names of locomotives is an older "fad" of wide-awake boys. I wonder that none of them has started a list of the names of drawing-room cars. I have a clipping about the variety of labels elegantly painted on the Pullman cars. There is one class of Spanish names, i. e., for Central and South American States, another of our own States, and still another of foreign countries. Many have floral names, as Geranium, Narcissus, Sweet Brier. Observation cars are appropriately named for some noted place of natural scenery, as Niagara, Yellowstone, Yosemite. Dining cars are named for famous cooks, the chefs of crowned heads and other great folk. Smoking cars belonging to the limited express bear the names of Oriental smokers—Sultan, Khedive, Mussulman. (Why do they not add the names of popular kinds of the miserable weed, like Battle Ax Plug, or the Best on Earth?) The story that a daughter of Mr. Pullman gave all these names and received a salary of $10,000 for it has been pronounced false.

Names of Bicycles. Why should not wheels have names as well as ships or sleds or cars? The fashion has begun, and a New York paper reports some of the names selected by ladies for their pet "bikes." Fleetwing is one, Ladybird is another, and one lady high in the social world engraves upon hers the Italian phrase, Dolce far niente. But why "sweet doing-nothing" should be selected by any bicyclist who has pushed a wheel up a long hill or over muddy roads, is not apparent. If a foreign phrase must be had, Labor ipse voluptas would certainly be more suitable. I suggest Somerset as a good old English name for your wheel—or, as bird-names are in style, call it Wabbler! A still funnier fad is the offer of an English magazine for the most appropriate mottoes for bicycles. Shakespeare and all the poets, as well as books of quotations, are being ransacked for suitable lines.

What the Children Say. One little Corner girl likes to use very large words. One day she was trying to build some stairs with small boxes, but they did not go to suit her. At last she got them done, exclaiming, "There, I exceeded when I did it in the right way."

Another little girl had the habit of saying ha? when she did not understand what was said to her. Her aunt told her that instead she ought to say, beg pardon. The next day a little playmate said ha, and little girl No 1 corrected her, "for auntie says it is not proper to say ha—you must say baking powder!"

Another still—whose name I could give if necessary—having been taught the correct pronunciation of a certain word, insisted on bringing up her brothers to the same standard when they came home, after this fashion: "Mamma won't let you say ain't in her house; it ain't pwoper to say ain't!"

That reminds me of another family where a little book was kept for recording all mispronunciations of that same word—the children called it "the ain't book!"

L. M. M.

The Sunday School

LESSON FOR SEPT. 20. Prov. 16: 22-33.

DESTRUCTIVE VICES.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D.D.

The book of Proverbs contains the wise sayings of many wise men. They were composed, probably, during a period of several hundred years and by many different minds. But they represent one great truth applied to the varied circumstances of human life—the truth that wisdom is blessedness. The greatest wisdom is to obey God. The greatest folly is to disobey him. This is the one conclusion from long and diverse experiences. It is presented in short, current phrases, evidently intended to be committed to memory, and one cannot store his mind with more valuable, practical wisdom than is found in this book. It is, however, difficult to take a collection of these sayings and make of them a connected lesson, since each sentence stands independently of the others, and its meaning, usually, is obvious without explanation. This difficulty we meet with at the outset in this lesson. Its title only partly fits it, since it treats as conspicuously of virtues as of vices. However, we may find in it these three related topics:

I. The wise man [vs. 22-24]. He is not fully described here, but these two qualities are made prominent:

1. He is wise in heart. In the Bible the heart represents not alone the affections, but the whole character. A wise heart means an instructed mind, a righteous will in full control and a pure love for all that is pure. This is a personality so simple that every one can understand it and so winsome that every well-disposed person must desire it. To know God and be at peace with him, to know men and to see habitually what is best in them, is to be wise in heart.

2. He is wise in speech. "The heart of the wise instructeth his mouth." Such a man finds the best society and is welcomed in it. It is not necessary that any one should be rich or a genius in learning to be beloved by those who are most worthy of esteem. "He that loveth pureness of heart, for the grace of his lips the king shall be his friend." Real worth in any man recognizes worth in every other and values it. Joseph was pure hearted. No character in the Old Testament excels him in this, and in consequence, wherever he was, he made friends. When he was taken from the pit into which his brothers had cast him to die, and found himself a slave among strangers, he soon won an honorable position. When again he was thrown into prison friendless, he gained the esteem both of the prisoners and their keepers. He had that in his character which men wanted, and they were as eager to possess it as to gain gold. Every wise-hearted youth is on the way to success. Only let him keep his heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life.

II. The evil man [vs. 25-30]. He is placed here in contrast to the wise man, and the traits are emphasized which mark the contrast.

1. His aim is selfish. He thinks success is to be found in pushing himself forward and pulling back others. That way seems right to him because all his ideas of life are perverted by his selfishness [v. 25]. "But the end thereof are the ways of death." His selfishness is his motive to work. His appetite spurs him [v. 26]. Sometimes it is hunger for food, sometimes for pleasures of the body and sometimes of the mind. But it always is his own satisfaction that he seeks, and he is indifferent to the welfare of the rest of the world.

2. His mind dwells on wickedness [v. 27], and what is in his mind finds its way to his lips. Misfortunes of others are a satisfaction to him when he can set them in contrast to his own good fortune. He enjoys his neighbor's suffering and is eager to discover it. He "diggeth up evil."

3. He is mischievous in his speech. He delights to report to any one any unkind words he has heard of him [v. 28]. Especially he enjoys cultivating suspicion between friends. He is a "whisperer." That is, he tells one what he would not on any account have him repeat to his friend, and it is sure to be something which will make him think ill of his friend. I have known a few "whisperers" to set a whole community by the ears, and if this lesson avails to show what mean business that is it will do a great service. The evil man, too, is often violent in his denunciation of others. He stirs up his neighbor to think he is abused and to do rash things to avenge himself [v. 29]. The evil man's advice is always damaging. He leads, when he is able to lead at all, "in a way that is not good." His secret meditations are about making trouble for others [v. 30], and these meditations are sure to find utterance in ways which bode ill to those who have anything to do with him. "Moving his lips he bringeth evil to pass."

III. The fruit of wisdom [vs. 31, 32]. The surest way to inspire men to goodness is to place before them good examples. The picture of the good man ought to be shown far oftener than that of the evil man. It is therefore a relief to find that our lesson in its closing turns again to the man who by righteous living has made the sign of old age the crown of glory. The best way to teach the young to shun intemperance is to show them the noble life which results from being temperate in all things. Too much of our Sunday school literature is devoted to descriptions of evil men. One story like John Halifax, Gentleman, attractively presenting a pure and beautiful home life, is of more value to the cause of righteousness than a whole library of books describing blear-eyed and bloated drunkards walking in the path that leads to destruction.

These closing verses show white-haired age crowned with the glory which results from a temperate life. The man who has controlled his appetites and passions till righteousness is the habit of his life grows into greater strength and honor with every added year. "The path of the righteous is as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." The temperance application of the lesson lies here, and it is far broader than the mere inculcation of abstinence from strong drink. It is the supreme lesson of the Bible which most of all evidences it as the Word of God. It is the lesson that each one is called to live the clean, pure, noble life which imitates Jesus Christ and therefore is well pleasing to God.

Many men seem to have no ambition for such a life, and it seems to some as though all their choices and deeds were by chance like tossing dice in a garment [v. 33]. But God rules and the eye of faith will some day be illumined with the vision of the Father of mankind, who has put it in the way of every human being to choose, if he will, the life that is divine.

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING

Topic Sept. 13-19. Presenting Jesus to Others. John 1: 35-51.

To our friends; to the young; to different classes in society; to doubters; to men of honorable character; to the degraded.

(See prayer meeting editorial.)

The result of the Vermont election, from the free silver point of view, reminds us of the story of a Negro jury in Texas who were told by the judge to retire and find a verdict. They went into the jury room whence there presently proceeded a noise of shutting and opening of doors. At last they returned and the foreman announced: "We hab looked everywhar, judge, for dat verdic'—in de drawers and behin' de doahs; but it ain't nowhar in dat blessed room."

Begin Work Early

if you want to, but you won't have to work late anyway, if you use because it washes clothes quickly. Try Sunlight Soap next wash day and you will know what easy washing means.

Sunlight Soap

Less Labor Greater Comfort.

Lever Bros., Ltd., Hudson & Harrison Sts., New York.

Van Camp's Boston Baked Pork and Beans

Prepared with tomato sauce. Ever ready, palatable hot or cold. Choicest beans, juicy meat. Three sizes. Send 6c for sample can.

VAN CAMP PACKING CO., Indianapolis, Ind.

Send for booklet; postal card will do.

A GOOD WATER SUPPLY

For GENERAL FARM USE, COUNTRY RESIDENCES, IRRIGATION, Etc.

IS INSURED BY A PROPERLY ERECTED

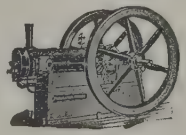
ECLIPSE WINDMILL —OR— GASOLENE ENGINE.

Eclipse Wooden AND Fairbanks Steel Windmills & Towers.

TANKS.

Send for Catalogues.

FAIRBANKS-MORSE GASOLENE ENGINES.



2 TO 75 H. P.

For Pumping or Power. Send for Catalogues.

We have every facility for putting in complete WATER SUPPLY AND POWER OUTFITS, and will submit estimates upon application.

CHARLES J. JAGER COMPANY,

174 HIGH ST., BOSTON, MASS.

Literature

BOOK REVIEWS.

The Ecumenical Councils, by Prof. William P. Du Bose, S. T. D., of the University of the South, belongs to the series known as Ten Epochs of Church History. Professor Du Bose is well equipped for the studies involved in writing this book by a keen sense of the continuities and relations of thought. The heresies which made the holding of the great councils necessary are not to him mere dead phases of opinion, but expressions of tendencies which are active always and in evidence, with changed starting point and different names, in the thinking of today. This is a refreshing and not too common breadth of view, and it gives much interest to the pages of the book. For example, in telling his readers why he gives so much introductory space to Ebionism he says, . . . "that Christianity is not a divine incarnation, atonement, redemption and eternal salvation and life for all men, but only a stupendous human creation of the imagination erected upon the slender foundation of the natural goodness and piety of a mere man—this is the modern form in which the earliest Christian heresy has been resuscitated and flourishes in our own day. If what is thus claimed had been indeed the whole of primitive Christianity the world would never have become Christian; if it be proved now to be all of it the world will soon cease to be Christian." It is on this side, indeed, that the strength of the book lies. It does not lack passages of fine description, but it is a history of doctrines rather than a history of events and must be judged accordingly. Its power of distinct and antithetic statement is admirable. "We shall not understand all the meaning of salvation in Christ," he says, "until we have learned the whole of two truths, each of which has opposite sides which must equally and wholly be held. The first is that Jesus Christ is equally God who, by a divine incarnation, fulfills himself in man, and man who, by a human faith and obedience, realizes himself in God."

Professor Du Bose has made a valuable contribution to the thought of a time which seems to be disposed to reopen and discuss the fundamentals of doctrine, which can never be rightly done without careful study of the times and conditions under which the teachings of the church were first formulated. [Christian Literature Co. $1 50.]

BIBLE STUDY.

Biblical Idyls, in The Modern Reader's Bible, includes Solomon's Song, Ruth, Esther, and the apocryphal story of Tobit. The noteworthy feature of the volume is the arrangement and interpretation of the Song of Solomon, which is the most sensible and satisfactory we have yet seen. Instead of considering it a drama, as has been so generally done, Professor Moulton pronounces it "a poem of pure conjugal love," brought out in seven idyls. Instead of the two lovers of the drama, he sees, in the humble shepherd, King Solomon himself in disguise, and par s of the story he finds wholly reminiscent. He does not interfere with the accepted symbolism of the relationship between Christ and his church, though laying down the principle that the natural sense should always be considered first, and afterward that which is spiritual. The introduction is clear and forcible, beginning with a discussion of the term "idyl." [The Macmillan Co. 50 cents.]

An Introduction to the Life of Jesus, an Investigation of the Historical Sources, by Alfred Williams Anthony. In this admirable handbook Professor Anthony gives in short compass and popular style a survey of the sources of the study of the life of our Lord. With this end in view he necessarily states results rather than processes, but his effort to be fair is evident throughout the work, and the result is an interesting and useful book for which we bespeak wide reading. [Silver, Burdett & Co. $1 00]

Studies in the Acts of the Apostles is a text-book for home or Bible class work, with a view especially to normal teaching. It is a good type of the manuals for the systematic study of the English Bible which are playing an increasingly large part in our plans of education. [Hunt & Eaton. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 40 cents, net.]

Biblical Epochs, by Rev. Burdett Hart, D. D. In writing this book Dr. Hart seems to have had in view the people who like everything taken for granted. It divides the ages of the world, past, present and future, into nine epochs from the Paradisean to the millennial, and devotes to each a chapter descriptive and improving. The first chapter is more Miltonic than Milton, the last is highly optimistic, but, in our opinion, upon his own principles of Biblical criticism, quite indefensible. How so absolute a literalist can ever be anything but a believer in the pre-millennial coming of Christ we have never been able to see. The book is pleasant reading, but without fresh thought or special suggestiveness. [Presbyterian Board of Publication. $1.00.]

STORIES OF AMERICAN HISTORY.

King Noanett. A story of old Virginia and the Massachusetts Bay, by F. J. Stimson (J. S. of Dale). It will clear the way for the enjoyment of a strong and well-sustained romance if we begin by saying that colonial Virginia and Massachusetts suffer in this book from entire lack of perspective and proportion in the picturing. If Massachusetts suffers less, and appears by comparison to have had some decent hope of better days, yet the utter lack of sympathy with the higher aims of the Puritan spirit makes the whole picture a caricature. Dismissing therefore the historical background, which is, after all, only a framework for the adventures of an Irish gentleman and his English friend, we may give ourselves to the enjoyment of their experiences. Arrested for complicity in a Royalist plot against the commonwealth, they were deported to Virginia for a term of servitude, from which they break away to mingle in Indian wars and to escape to the North. Jennifer, the "little maid" they rescue from insult on the slave ship, is much the freshest and best drawn character in the book. The other heroine is vague enough, and the circumstances of her long concealment make a serious drain on the imagination and patience of the reader. Miles Courtenay, the hero, may well have been studied from John Boyle O'Reilly, to whom the book is dedicated. He is the typical warm-hearted Irishman, quick and free in speech, but true in love and friendship and in faithful obedience to his convictions, and equal to the test of a great renunciation, and he is well set off by the foil of his English companion's sobriety and direct common sense. The title character of the book is exceedingly shadowy and it was a mistake to call the book after him. The imagined torture and murder of Whalley, the regicide, is a moral and artistic blot. When all this is said, the book is nevertheless a stirring and delightful romance, but since all the characters for whom the author in the least seems to care, or wishes to make us care, are only accidentally in the Massachusetts Bay colony, and are entirely out of sympathy with its dominant thought and life, it can have no claim to the place of the long talked of "American historical romance." [Lamson, Wolffe & Co. $2.00.]

The social and political upheavals which accompanied the times of the Puritans are well delineated in a romance called Saxenhurst, by Daniel C. Eddy, D. D. The central figure is Roger Williams and the story of his persecution is told with remarkable fidelity to truth. Several other characters, Anne Hutchinson and Sir Harry Vane, for instance, are carefully estimated by the light of that troublous period and the author has been more than commonly successful in not sacrificing historical accuracy to the play of the imagination. The strained relations which exist in England today between Nonconformity and the Establishment are better understood by going back to the roots of the Separatist movement, and Dr. Eddy, who died last month just after the publication of his book, has set forth in clear and admirable style the essential facts which led to that movement out of which came the colonization of New England. Such volumes are good inspirers of patriotism for the young. [American Baptist Publication Society. $1 50.]

Maud Wilder Goodwin is one of the younger American writers whose careful work is giving her a high literary rank. White Aprons, her latest novel, is a story of the time of Bacon's Rebellion in 1676, when some of the best Virginians revolted from the tyranny of Governor Berkeley. Thus Mrs. Goodwin contrives an opportunity to send her heroine across the ocean and to give us a picture of court life in the time of Charles II. with interesting glimpses of notable Englishmen of the time, Samuel Pepys among the number. The love story is charming, and the importance of the epoch which she has so entertainingly presented makes the book of unusual value. [Little, Brown & Co. $1.25.]

BOOKS FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

We do not often run across a more pleasant, wholesome story of its class than As Queer As She Could Be, by Jessie E. Wright. Its heroine is a refreshing young woman, earnest, plucky and resourceful, who, needing rest and recreation and wishing to share her good time with some less fortunate ones, takes five poor boys to spend the summer in a little shanty by the shore, and proves to the satisfaction of the reader that the enjoyment and benefit to be derived from a simple, unconventional, outdoor life, as well as the ability to minister to some of the world's neglected ones, are within the reach of a person of small means. In spite of its title the story will appeal to boys even more than to girls, and many older people will be interested in the summer's experiences of Hilary Barlow and her protégés. This is an excellent book for a Sunday school library. [Presbyterian Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work. $1.25.]

In His Footsteps, by William E. McLennan, is an attempt to make the life of our Lord more interesting to the average boy and girl by means of an imaginary journey to Palestine, starting from New York precisely after the fashion of modern tourists. Details of what to wear and carry on such a trip, also notes of what may be seen at places en route, are introduced, and it is expected that maps and photographs will be freely used by way of illustration. As a supplementary study to the gospel narrative, or as an exercise for Junior Endeavorers, an outline work of this character might serve a useful purpose. It is certainly worth a trial, and the author states that this practical test has been applied with most satisfactory results. It is the first in the Footsteps Series of books of travel. [Hunt & Eaton. 50 cents]

Those parents who prefer to have their children know something of the great men and important epochs of the world rather than to be absorbed in the juvenile literature of the day will welcome the attractively bound and illustrated Story of David Livingstone, by B. K. Gregory. A feeling of disappointment is likely to follow, however, when the book proves to be only a condensed statement of the facts in the life of this wonderful man, with slight attempt to make them attractive to the young. A little more care in selecting from the wealth of material at the author's hand and a less prosaic and matter of-fact style would have made this convenient little book both fascinating and valuable to hundreds of boys and girls. [Thomas Whittaker. 50 cents.]

The number of writers who have expanded, in a satisfactory manner, the gospel narrative of our Lord's life for youthful readers, or recast it in more picturesque form, are conspicuously few. Mary E. Jennings, in Asa of Bethlehem, has essayed to do this, and the result is as good as the average. The pictures of Jewish life and customs are accurate, the style reverent, and there are mothers who always gladly avail themselves of this sort of literature for reading aloud to their children on Sunday afternoons. [A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.25.]

The Hero of the Ages, a Story of the Nazarene, by Catherine Robertson McCartney, is not a successful attempt to tell the story of our Lord's life as part of a romance. The task is far above the powers of the author, whose reverence and zeal cannot make up for the lack of real dramatic power and a vivid but self-restrained style. Because of this imperfect taste, which shows itself often in "stagy" effects and incongruous situations, we should not wish to put the book into the hands of children. [Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.00.]

In The Release, or Caroline's French Kindred, Charlotte M. Yonge takes her heroines through the experiences of the last days of the French Court and the Revolution. The story rather lacks unity and is quite too ecclesiastical for our taste, but it has the assured ease of manner and occasional power of exciting incident which has made and sustained Miss Yonge's reputation. The scene is in England and France. The men are shadowy and the historic characters rather wide of the mark (Dr. Franklin for instance), but the story is clever and harmless enough. [Macmillan & Co. $1.00.]

MISCELLANEOUS.

From Abram English Brown, who has already won a reputation as a careful historian of New England annals, we have Beneath Old Rooftrees, the first volume of a prospective series to be known as Footprints of the Patriots. In a pleasant, narrative style Mr. Brown reviews the opening events of the American Revolution, particularly those that cluster around April 19, 1775. While recording in an interesting way many well-known incidents in regard to Concord and Lexington, he dwells especially on a less familiar phase, the part which other towns, such as Acton, Lincoln, Billerica, Menotomy, Groton and Woburn played in the experiences of that memorable day. The author has collected his facts, together with fresh and thrilling anecdotes, by means of conversations with aged descendants of the patriots, and as far as possible these stories are given in their own words, while illustrations of historic homesteads form an attractive feature of the book. Mr. Brown has succeeded in catching the spirit of the times and he will find enthusiastic readers, especially among the sons and daughters of Massachusetts. [Lee & Shepard. $1 50]

Unity and the Lambeth Declaration, lectures under the auspices of the Minnesota Church Club. The lectures in this book range in merit all the way from Bishop Whipple's devout and beautiful address in Lambeth Chapel at the conference in 1888 to one which is no more than a badly reported, rambling and rather incoherent talk. Professor Ten Broeck of the Seabury Divinity School contributes perhaps the strongest paper, which by bravely begging the question of church orders in the apostolic church reaches the familiar Protestant Episcopal conclusion. That side of the argument has many stronger books than this to show. [Milwaukee: Young Churchman Co. 50 cents.]

Various phases of the great evil of intemperance are set forth by Rev. L. A. Banks, D. D., in a little volume called Seven Times Around Jericho, in a manner that merits cordial approval. Each chapter is the substance of a sermon preached originally to his own congregation in Brooklyn, and the discourses are marked by an earnest, dispassionate style which, to intelligent readers, is more convincing than appeals to the emotions or tirades against those engaged in the liquor traffic. In his outlook for the future the author recognizes the advance already made in public sentiment against the saloon and rejoices that the clergy, including many of the Roman Catholic priesthood, are its stanch opponents. In any temperance "campaign of education," upon which we lay so much stress in political life just now, literature of this sort would serve a useful end. [Funk & Wagnalls Co. 75 cents.]

Songs Tried and Proved, edited by Russell H. Conwell and Theodore E. Perkins, is above the average of Sunday school hymn-books. It comprises favorite melodies selected with discrimination from such composers as Gabriel Millard and Fischer or adapted from the German, with original material both tuneful and harmonious. The literary quality is also excellent. [A. J. Rowland. 30 cents.]

NOTES.

—— Mr. Justin McCarthy is preparing a new volume of his History of Our Own Times, which will bring its record down to date.

—— Zola's Rome, which we reviewed unfavorably some time ago, has been put upon the Roman Catholic Index Expurgatorius, which is not at all surprising, though we fear it may prove a good advertisement.

—— The discovery of a flaw in the block of granite intended for the Tennyson Memorial on the Isle of Wight has made it necessary to begin the work over again, and it will b spring before it can be set up and dedicated.

—— In answer to many inquiries we would say that Field Flowers, the volume issued in aid of the Field Monument Fund, to which we referred a fortnight since, is published by A. P. Swift & Co. of Chicago. The price is $1 00, including a certificate of subscription to the fund.

—— Boston has probably the most diversified and beautiful park system of any city in the world. An article in the September New England Magazine, by Mr. Charles Eliot, who has been Mr. Frederick Law Olmstead's assistant in planning these public pleasure grounds, gives a survey of what has been accomplished and planned in this direction, and will be of wide interest to the students of public improvements in other cities.

—— Rev. Edward A. Steiner, Ph. D., of the First Church, Springfield, O., has received from Germany two poems by Schiller, which have never been in print. Dr. Steiner wrote to the Century Publishing Co. about these two rare manuscripts, inclosing them, and the editor has written him requesting him to write a history of the poems and the circumstances in which they were written and found. These circumstances were very interesting and romantic. Schiller addressed them to a lady whom he very much admired, and they were put away in a trunk which was preserved as an heirloom and the poems have only been discovered recently. The Century "reader" assures Dr. Steiner that the poems are genuine, but of this there was no doubt.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. Boston.

PLANE AND SPHERICAL TRIGONOMETRY. By Webster Wells. pp. 79.

E. T. Clarke & Co. Reading.

CHEERFUL PHILOSOPHY FOR THOUGHTFUL INVALIDS. By William H. Clarke. pp 41. 50 cents.

Macmillan & Co. New York.

MODERN READER'S BIBLE: Genesis. Edited by Richard G. Moulton, Ph.D. pp. 167. 50 cents.

Fleming H. Revell Co. New York.

THIRTY STUDIES IN THE GOSPEL BY JOHN. By Prof. W. W. White, Ph.D. pp. 130. 50 cents.

THROUGH FIRE AND FLOOD. By F. B. Meyer. pp. 162. 50 cents.

THE SECRET OF GUIDANCE. By F. B. Meyer. pp. 125. 50 cents.

ADOLPH, AND HOW HE FOUND THE "BEAUTIFUL LADY." By Fannie J. Taylor. Illustrations by Helene Toerring. pp. 86. 50 cents.

ROBERT WHITAKER MCALL. A Fragment by Himself. A Souvenir by His Wife. pp. 252. $1 50.

A CYCLE OF CATHAY. By W. A. P. Martin, D.D, LL.D. pp. 264. $2 00.

DEMON POSSESSION AND ALLIED THEMES. By Rev. J. L. Nevius, D. D. pp. 520. $1 50.

Columbia Book Co. New York.

OUR HUMOR. By Richard Shelburn. pp. 256. $1.50.

Funk & Wagnalls. New York.

PLATFORM PEARLS. By Lilian M. Heath. pp. 244. 75 cents.

Christian Publishing Co. St. Louis.

JESUS AS A TEACHER. By B. A. Hinsdale. pp. 330. $1.25.

PAPER COVERS.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Boston.

THE COMING OF ARTHUR. By Alfred, Lord Tennyson. pp. 119.

Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. Boston.

THE STORY OF TURNUS. By Moses S. Slaughter, Ph.D. pp. 66.

Fowler & Wells Co. New York.

UNCLE SAM'S LETTERS ON PHRENOLOGY. By Nelson Sizer. pp. 143. 50 cents.

Fleming H. Revell Co. New York.

"GOD'S BOX." By Mabel N. Thurston. pp. 31. 10 cents.

EXPECTATION CORNER. By E. S. Elliott. pp. 32. 10 cents.

John G. Scott. New York.

HOW TO SEE THE POINT AND PLACE IT. pp. 40. 15 cents.

Princeton College. Princeton, N. J.

THE COST OF AN EDUCATION AT PRINCETON—A HANDBOOK OF PRINCETON.

Presbyterian Board of Publication. Philadelphia.

MINUTES OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

University of Chicago Press. Chicago.

ANNUAL REGISTER.

MAGAZINES.

September. MCCLURE'S.—CATHOLIC WORLD.—ST. NICHOLAS.—PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL.—AMERICAN KITCHEN.—KINDERGARTEN NEWS.—HOMILETIC REVIEW.—A MARITAL LIABILITY.—NEW ENGLAND.—ART AMATEUR.—SAILOR'S.—APPLETON'S POPULAR SCIENCE.—MUSICAL RECORD.—JOURNAL OF HYGIENE.—TREASURY.

THE CATHOLIC SUMMER SCHOOL OF AMERICA.

BY REV. THOMAS J. CONATY, D. D.

The desire for self-improvement in all the branches of popular study has led to the establishment of summer schools in which instruction is placed within reach of those anxious to become familiar with all phases of current thought. The rapidly developing system of university extension brings to the people in many centers the ripe scholarship of college and school and thus the work of general education is promoted. For many years it was queried among Roman Catholics why such schools or such means of instruction were not placed within their reach in an atmosphere, and under the direction, of Catholic thought. A paper read at the Cleveland convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union by Warren E. Mosher, A. M., of Youngstown, O., who had followed the courses of Chautauqua, brought to the minds of many the advantages of the Catholic Reading Circle movement, which had been established by him. His Reading Circle Review was the first to discuss the idea of a summer school.

The first session in New London, Ct., July, 1893, was very successful. People from all parts of the country flocked to New London and listened to the program of lectures which had been prepared as carefully as could have been done in the time allotted. Such a good feeling was established and such hopes of success were fostered that it was determined to establish the summer school permanently.

Many offers of suitable sites were made, but the one which pleased the majority of the trustees was that at Plattsburg, N. Y.; the location was deemed excellent and the gift of the site was princely. Generous citizens of Plattsburg, in conjunction with the Delaware & Hudson Railroad Company, purchased what was known as the Armstrong Farm—450 acres, with a heavily wooded bluff and a large frontage on Lake Champlain. This cost the donors $32,500, and passed in fee simple as a pure gift to the Catholic Summer School of America, subject only to the condition of the expenditure of as much money in improvements as the farm had cost. In the summer of 1893 the second session of the school was held at Plattsburg, and each succeeding year until the present one all lectures were given in the Plattsburg Opera House, while the members of the school lived in the town during the session. The first improvement made on the land of the school was a building, which was then known as the Administration Building, an elegant clubhouse, at an expense of $22,000. In this building several lectures were held in the session of 1895. It was the purpose of the trustees, as soon as possible, to erect such buildings as were necessary for the holding of lectures, and the housing of the people upon the assembly grounds, but the depressed condition of business made it difficult for them to obtain the necessary funds. The only means of revenue, besides the sale of lots and tuition fees, is a fund established by honorary life memberships, by which, on the payment of $100, the friends of the school could assist it in its work. About 250 names are now on the rolls of the school for that purpose.

At the session of 1895 a promise was given to the people that the session of 1896 would be held on the school grounds, and immediately the trustees prepared to fulfill their promise. In April, 1896, the work was begun, and the present session opened with accommodations for about 200 people. Cottages, a dining hall, chapel and an auditorium that would seat about 700 were erected. The six cottages erected are neat in architecture and convenient for the purposes of the school, while the temporary chapel, near the auditorium, for devotional purposes is capable of seating about one hundred. Here religious exercises have been held during the session, with the exception of Sundays, when pontifical high mass has been celebrated in the town of Plattsburg at St. John's Church.

The session of 1896 opened July 12, with a pontifical high mass by Bishop Gabriels of Ogdensburg; the session closed Aug. 14 The only regret the trustees had during the session was that they were not able to accommodate and furnish lodgings for more than half the people in attendance at the school. Over 1,500 people were registered during the session, while the average attendance of people registered for the school work was about 400.

The system of lectures is based on the collegiate idea, following year after year a regular course of systematic study on literature, history, science, the Bible and art, while miscellaneous subjects give opportunity to many lectures upon matters of current interest. The program of this year, including seventy-eight lectures, was distributed over the subjects of philosophy, experimental psychology, Christian art and archæology, English and German literature, Shakespeare, the study of the Psalms, political economy, church history and American history, general archæology, climate and biography. Every day, except Saturday and Sunday, these lectures were given, one at 10, another at 11 15 and the third one in the evening. Attendance at the lectures is at the option of the people. The corps of lecturers included distinguished ecclesiastics and laymen, professors of universities and colleges and men eminent in law and medicine. Special classes were also held in French and physical culture during the entire session of the school.

The class of people who attended the session represented all ranks of social and professional life. Bishops and priests, members of religious orders, both men and women, teachers in academies, parochial and public schools, successful business men, men and women of leisure, of culture and of wealth, all united in forming a great family intent upon education. When it is said that twenty-two States of our Union and Canada were represented, that the best social and intellectual elements were gathered together and that all were as one in search of the best in knowledge, while promoting social advancement, it will be realized how successful the Catholic Summer School has been. For the first time in our history a large contingent of distinguished men and women have come to us from Canada. This, no doubt, was due to the fact that our program included eminent lecturers from Canada, who certainly gave great satisfaction as well as instruction to the audience who enjoyed their work.

The aim of the school has been to call together the best elements of Catholic social and intellectual strength for the purpose of hearing the discussion of the great question of education from the standpoint of Catholic truth. Our motto is that of the old Oxford University, Deus Illuminatio Mea, God my light. While the school is under Catholic influence and taught by Catholic teachers, eminent in college, university, literary, professional and business life, yet its doors are open to all persons seeking the truth and desiring to know what the Catholic Church has to say upon the great questions of the day, and we are glad to record the fact that many non-Catholics have been among our most attentive members. It is a pleasure to record that our first session on the grounds has captivated all who came; nothing but satisfaction has been expressed by every one.

During this session it has been a pleasure to find so many of our young college men attending, and the tent life, which was inaugurated, gives promise of many inducements in the future to our ambitious college men, as it is hoped to make the school a center of attraction to all the leaders of educational life. A convention of college journalists was held during the session and a permanent organization effected. Reading circle and Sunday school work had special conferences. The Administration Building, which was erected a few years ago, has passed under a lease into the hands of a number of gentlemen who have organized what is called the Champlain Club, offering the attractions of a clubhouse and bringing influence to the success of the school. This draws to the assistance of the school business men from many centers, who, uniting together for the purpose of establishing a country club, have aided in bringing the school to the attention of business men generally; this club has also served as a place of reception and social enjoyment during the session, thus helping to popularize the school.

Our school holds a charter from the University of the State of New York and is under the supervision of the regents, thus enjoying all the privileges possessed by Chautauqua and other schools. It is governed by a board of twenty-five trustees, equally divided between laymen and ecclesiastics and elected according to the university laws.

GLEANINGS FROM OUR MAIL BAG.

A GOOD WORD FOR BOSTON AUDIENCES.

Apropos of the editorial in The Congregationalist upon the critical faculty as it is supposed to exist in Boston, I am glad to speak, for one, of the heartiness with which I, as a stranger, have been welcomed at the "Hub." As I am not a minister I may not, of course, speak from the standpoint of one who is introduced as "Doctor So-and-So," but as I am without that fine knowledge of rhetorical finish which only our best colleges can give, and am woefully conscious of my ignorance in many ways, I can certainly testify to my extreme trepidation when I went to speak for a deserving Christian benevolence in Boston. I was amazed, not merely at the absence of any undue critical disposition, but by the consciousness, while speaking, of a sympathy quite unusual in the audiences of New York before which I am sometimes heard. My first address was in the Baptist church whose place of worship has been sanctified by the pulpit ministries of the late Dr. Gordon, and a kind word spoken in my ear by the assistant minister, just as I was rising to begin my remarks, put me at my ease at the beginning, while the attentive interest shown by the people as I proceeded led me to feel that I, at any rate, had misjudged the Bostonians. In the evening a similar experience awaited me at Berkeley Temple, and if that church is a type of New England Congregationalism no one need shiver at the thought of addressing it, and if the dreaded, critical, east wind which is supposed to sweep in upon a speaker's soul from the frigid, clear-cut faces of a Boston audience was that which came to me, I must have been mistaken, for I thought that the stirring in the mental atmosphere was more like a summer zephyr, warm with sympathy, yet cool enough to stimulate mental action. No, I cannot believe that Boston folks are "terribly critical," though I suppose that if a speaker, by manner or matter, invited you to assail his position the critical faculty would assert itself.

A NEW YORKER.

The Christian doctrine of the future life needs to be expounded so that it may take its stand side by side with the Christian doctrine of God and the gospel message of salvation. It is true that revelation has not fully withdrawn the veil which hides the future, and where God has not spoken man should be silent. But it is necessary that the Christian consciousness of today should assimilate and make thoroughly its own what Scripture has revealed concerning the future—no more and no less; and this process needs to be somewhat more actively pursued, if the Christian pulpit is to do its duty and be faithful in this part of its sacred message.—Prof. W. T. Davidson.

News from the Churches

Meetings to Come.

BOSTON EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE, Bromfield Street Church, Sept. 14, 10 A M. Subject, The City—Our City. Speakers: Rev. Messrs A. D. Mayo, W. E. Barton, S. F. Hershey and F. E. Marsten.

THE FOREIGN MISSIONARY PRAYER MEETING, under the auspices of the Woman's Board of Missions, will be resumed Friday, Sept. 25, at 11 o'clock A. M., in Pilgrim Hall, Congregational House.

NEW HAMPSHIRE FEMALE CENT INSTITUTION AND HOME MISSIONARY UNION, annual meeting will be held in connection with the meetings of the General Association at Littleton, Sept. 23, at 2 o'clock P.M. Mrs. H. S. Caswell of New York will address the ladies. Auxiliaries are requested to send delegates. All women interested in home missions are cordially invited.

ALICE M. NIMS, Secretary.

FALL STATE MEETINGS.

Montana,	Billings,	Tuesday, Sept.
North Dakota,	Fargo,	Tuesday, Sept. 15.
New Hampshire,	Littleton,	Tuesday, Sept. 22.
Minnesota,	Faribault,	Tuesday, Sept. 15.
Washington,	Tacoma.	Tuesday, Sept. 22.
Maine,	Ft. Fairfield,	Tuesday, Sept. 22.
North Carolina,	Haywood,	Thursday, Sept. 24.
Oregon,	Portland,	Tuesday, Sept. 29.
Wisconsin,	Antigo,	Tuesday, Sept. 29.
Wyoming,	Wheatland,	Sept.
Idaho,	Boise,	Oct.
New Mexico,	Albuquerque,	Oct.
Utah,		Oct.
California,	Sacramento,	Tuesday, Oct. 6.
Colorado,	Denver,	Tuesday, Oct. 6.
California, South'rn,	Claremont,	Tuesday, Oct. 13.
Nebraska,		Monday, Oct. 19.
Alabama,	Shelby,	Wednesday, Nov. 11.
Connecticut Conf.,	Winsted,	Tuesday, Nov. 17.

Benevolent Societies.

THE CONGREGATIONAL HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY is represented in Massachusetts by the MASSACHUSETTS HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY, No. 9 Congregational House, Rev. Joshua Coit, Secretary; Rev. Edwin B. Palmer, Treasurer.

WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Room No. 32, Congregational House. Office hours, 9 to 5. Annual membership, $1.00; life membership, $20.00 Contributions solicited. Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Treasurer.

AMERICAN BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS, Congregational House, No 1 Somerset Street, Boston. Frank H. Wiggin, Assistant Treasurer; Charles E. Swett, Publishing and Purchasing Agent. Office in New York, 121 Bible House; in Chicago, 153 La Salle St.

WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS, Rooms 1 and 2 Congregational House. Miss Ellen Carruth, Treasurer; Miss Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Bible House, New York. Missions in the United States, evangelistic and educational, at the South and in the West among the Indians and Chinese. Boston office, 21 Congregational House; Chicago office, 153 La Salle Street; Cleveland office, Y. M. C. A. Building. Donations may be sent to either of the above offices, or to H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer, 108 Bible House, New York City.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH BUILDING SOCIETY —Church and Parsonage Building. Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., Secretary; H. O. Pinneo, Treasurer, 59 Bible House, New York; Rev. George A. Hood, Congregational House, Boston, Field Secretary.

CONGREGATIONAL EDUCATION SOCIETY.—(Including work of former New West Commission.) Aids four hundred students for the ministry, eight home missionary colleges, twenty academies in the West and South, ten free Christian schools in Utah and New Mexico. S. F. Wilkins, Treasurer. Offices, 10 Congregational House, Boston, 151 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. Address, 10 Congregational House, Boston.

CONG. SUNDAY SCHOOL & PUBLISHING SOCIETY.—Contributions used only for missionary work. Rev. George M. Boynton, D. D, Secretary; W. A. Duncan, Ph. D., Field Secretary; E. Lawrence Barnard, Treasurer, Congregational House, Boston.

MASSACHUSETTS BOARD OF MINISTERIAL AID.—Treasurer, Mr. Arthur G. Stanwood, 701 Sears Building, Boston Address applications to Rev A. H. Quint, D. D., Congregational Library, 1 Somerset Street, Boston.

MINISTERIAL RELIEF.—In order to afford a little timely aid to aged and disabled home and foreign missionaries and ministers and their families, the committee of the National Council asks from each church one splendid offering for its permanent invested fund. It also invites generous individual gifts. For fuller information see Minutes of National Council, 1892, and Year-Book, 1893, page 62. Secretary, Rev. N. H. Whittlesey, New Haven, Ct.; Treasurer, Rev. S. B Forbes, Hartford, Ct. Form of a bequest: I bequeath to the "Trustees of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States" (a body corporate chartered under the laws of the State of Connecticut) [here insert the bequest], to be used for the purpose of Ministerial Relief, as provided in the resolution of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States at its session held in Chicago in October, 1886.

THE CONGREGATIONAL BOARD OF PASTORAL SUPPLY, established by the Massachusetts General Association, offers its services to churches desiring pastors or pulpit supplies. Careful attention is given to applications from without the State. Room 22A, Congregational House, Boston. Rev. Charles B. Rice, Sec.

THE BOSTON SEAMAN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, organized 1827. Chapel and reading-room, 287 Hanover St., Boston. Open day and evening. Sailors and landsmen welcome. Daily prayer meeting, 11 A. M., Bible study, 3 P. M. Sunday services, usual hours. Meetings every evening except Saturday. Branch mission, Vineyard Haven. Is a Congregational society and appeals to all Congregational churches for support. Send donations of money to B. S. Snow, Corresponding Secretary, Room 22, Congregational House, Boston. Send clothing, comfort bags, reading, etc., to Capt. S. S. Nickerson, chaplain, 287 Hanover st. Bequests should read: "I give and bequeath to the Boston Seaman's Friend Society the sum of $——, to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said society." Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS.

We are glad to note a Connecticut church that does not seem to be affected by the hard times.

That Michigan pastor is doubtless only one of many who have made their vacations a means of spiritual enrichment to needy souls around them.

If some enterprises must be given up for lack of funds, let such strategic points as the only center of religious influence in large sections be the last to suffer.

Our New York brother who has just celebrated the golden anniversary of his entrance into the ministry does not seem to be greatly disturbed by the "dead line of fifty."

Churches can render the temperance cause practical service by organizing good citizenship leagues. One in Minnesota has already shown itself potent in controlling the liquor element.

Oakland persuasiveness has at last won its case. Dr. Nehemiah Boynton and Mr. Jefferson were proof against it, but Rev. C. R. Brown of Charlestown succumbs. Congratulations to the Pacific coast, condolences to the Atlantic.

We are glad our pugilistic friend in San Francisco hears such good preaching. We must have the church militant before we can have the church triumphant, and we trust our brother's present training will result in his fighting only the battles of the Lord.

All honor to those Nebraska churches which, though cramped by crop failure, still keep a warm heart and open hand for others in distress; and to the pastors who have chosen to stay by their flocks to cheer them through the heat and drought of summer.

That seven months old Michigan church which places denominational literature where it can be found by stranger and citizen alike knows how to make itself an educative power in the community. The unworldly spirit of the pastor carries one back to apostolic times.

MINISTERIAL STAGE-COACH.

To the uninitiated the life of our churches in summer may seem an uneventful calm, but a gentle agitation has been going on in the ministerial ranks which reminds us of the old-fashioned game known as "stage-coach," with the result that we find many of our churches differently manned at the opening of the fall campaign than they were in the spring.

In the early summer our theological seminaries opened their doors, each sending forth a band of consecrated young men ready for service, some of whom have already accepted calls. Among these Andover sends Rollin L. Hartt to Helena, Mont., Ernest H. Abbott to Fryeburg, Me., and John Comin to Chamberlain, S. D.; while Edgar C. Wheeler goes from Yale Divinity School to Ellensburg, Wn. The West beckons to the East and receives William H. Scudder, who goes from Norwich, N Y., to Tacoma, Wn.; J Alexander Jenkins, who leaves Mt. Carmel, Pa., for Pacific Church, St. Paul and, last of all—a gift she ill can spare—Charles R. Brown of Charlestown, Mass., who becomes pastor of First Church, Oakland, Cal. In return, the West generously sends W. O. Conrad of Blue Earth, Minn., to Rollstone Church, Fitchburg; Mahlon Willett of Oakland to Decorah, Io.; Samuel M. Dick of Chicago to First Church, Lowell; William A. Bartlett of Ridgeland, Ill., to Kirk Street Church of the same city; James A. Chamberlin of Owatonna, Minn., to Newark, N. J., Norman Plass of Cincinnati to Barrington, R I., and John L. Sewall of Kansas City, Mo, to First Church, North Brookfield. The North makes overtures to the South, and in response E. Tallmadge Root of Baltimore accepts the call of Elmwood Temple, Providence, and Edward A. Berry of Chattanooga that of the First Church, Cedar Rapids, Io.; while, to keep the balance true, Albert P. Miller goes from New Haven to Lincoln Memorial Church, Washington, and Tougaloo University captures Cyrus Hamlin of Beloit. Evangelist Billings settles down in Third Church, Los Angeles; on the other hand, E. Winthrop Jenney leaves the parsonage at Chamberlain, S. D., to travel as general missionary of the C. H. M. S. Not less important than the above, though shorter, is the step taken by Henry A. Stimson of New York city, who goes from Broadway Tabernacle to the new enterprise on the West Side. A similar promising movement is inaugurated in Brookline, Mass., to be under the care of Harris G. Hale of Warren.

Judging from numbers alone, the heaviest draft of the summer has been made by the East on the West. Far be it from us, however, to rejoice in the prosperity of one section of our country at the expense of another:

> The East and West are one in Allah's grace,
> Which way soe'er ye turn, behold—his face!

SUMMER WORK AND REST IN IOWA.

The financial stringency has reduced the aggressive work of the churches to narrow limits, yet progress has been made. A Sunday school in Gaza, held in the waiting-room of a railway station, survived through the winter, and now the people have raised funds for a meeting house, which will be ready for dedication soon. Between the towns of Doon and Alvord a Sunday school has just been planted. To this whole county Rev. W. L. Brandt ministers with earnestness and success. Larger churches, like that at Grinnell, carry on their work in the summer as well as in the winter with unflagging enthusiasm. In the absence of the pastor the C. E. Society has been holding cottage prayer meetings in different parts of the town. At one of the Sunday services, by special invitation, Hon. R. M. Haines repeated the address which was so well received at the Sunday school convention in Davenport. The W. H. M. S. of this church devoted its August monthly meeting to a consideration of Sunday school work, with special reference to what is being done in Iowa. A report was made of the Boston meeting.

Clear Lake is one of the favorite resorts of many Iowa pastors. The camp is owned by a company of ministers and laymen, and affords needed rest at a comparatively small price. An unusual number of persons have availed themselves of the advantages of this beautiful spot this year. Others have found equal pleasure and profit at Spirit Lake and Lake Okobogie and at several lakes in the northern part of the State.

Superintendent Towle of the C. S. S. and P. S., with his wife, have been in New England attending the International Sunday School Convention in Boston and visiting friends. Mr. Towle had several opportunities to speak of the missionary work of the society. F.

NEW ENGLAND.

Massachusetts.

WORCESTER.—The receptions and hearty greetings, rising in several instances to a demonstration, with which the people have welcomed their pastors back testify to the happy relations existing between them and are pledges of co-operation and best conditions for successful work the coming year.—Union occupied its new chapel for the first time Sept. 6. Good progress has been made on the church edifice, and it is hoped to complete it by Christmas.—Armenian. Rev. Hachadoor Benneyan, recently from Harpoot, Turkey, has taken pastoral charge. The church is without any building and holds its services in the Y. M. C. A. rooms. There are about 600 Armenians in the city, and it is hoped that this native pastor will prove acceptable and successful among them.

SPRINGFIELD.—More churches have been closed this summer than ever before. In some cases preaching services only have been suspended, while in others no meetings have been held.—First. Recent improvements on the organ have put the instrument in fine condition. Organist J. Hermann Loud will continue his series of free recitals, having given the first of the season Sept. 7.—South. The pastor, Rev. P. S. Moxom, has returned from his European trip greatly improved in health and spirits. His itinerary covered portions of England, Holland and Germany, and included a trip up the Rhine and the Wagner festival at Bayreuth. Dr. and Mrs. Moxom celebrated their silver anniversary Sept. 7, with the assistance of about 500 friends who gathered at their residence. The gifts included a generous check from the advisory board of the church, as well as remembrances from former parishioners in Boston and Cleveland.—Hope. This church has held regular meetings hroughout the summer. Evangelist G. F. Needham has been supplying the pulpit during Rev. R. W. Brokaw's absence.——Olivet. Rev. L. H. Cone was unable to preach Aug. 30, and his place was taken by Rev. G. W. Reed of Fort Yates, N. D. The communion service was postponed.——Eastern Avenue. The members welcomed to the pulpit Aug. 30 Rev. J. D. Potter of Westboro, whose services were so highly appreciated in the spring revival. On account of ill health, however, Mr. Potter was able to preach only in the morning, and the C. E. Society took charge of the evening service.——St. John's. Rev. J. W. Tolliver has returned from Oberlin, O., where he spent August.——Park. The new pastor, Rev. A. E. Cross, is getting well into the work, and good results are expected from his efforts.

Maine.

CAMDEN.—A convention of deaf mutes held here was an event of much interest Rev. L. D. Evans preached, Prof. A. S. Clark of Hartford interpreting. Professor Clark also lectured on The Duty of Citizens. The singing was in the sign language.

HARPSWELL.—The King's Daughters gave a fair, netting $81, for the benefit of the church. Rev. Elijah Kellogg, the beloved pastor, made a characteristic address.

LIMERICK.—Rev. A. Z. Conrad of Worcester, Mass., and his wife are here, ministering to Mrs. Conrad's mother, who is seriously ill.

The church at Cumberland has paid $50 toward the debt of the A. M. A.——At Ellsworth the parish meeting was recently held and the treasurer's report showed a decrease of $297 on the debt during the past year.——A concert held at the church in Falmouth netted $100 for the treasury.——Miss Charlotte T. Sibley lectured on Egypt at the church in Boothbay Harbor.——The Second Church of Biddeford receives $1,000, a bequest of the late ex-mayor, John Q. Adams.——The church in Warren entertained the Sunday school convention of Knox County, Aug. 2.

New Hampshire.

KEENE.—First. The entire community was recently saddened by the death, at the age of 76, of W. G. Hall, a consecrated business man, noted for his benevolence and activity in the Sunday school. He was for many years president of the Cheshire County Sunday School Association, and was widely known as a member of the State executive committee. His unselfish devotion to every good work for the good of humanity and the glory of the Master was an inspiration to his fellow-workers.

AUBURN.—The long-continued sickness of the wife and sister of the pastor, Rev. W. B. T. Smith, has drawn to the family the heartfelt sympathy of their many friends. Summer boarders have rendered valuable and appreciated service in a musical way and will long be remembered with pleasure and gratitude. A bi-monthly meeting in the interest of the temperance cause is a regular feature of the program of aggressive service.

NASHUA.—First. The pastor, Rev. Cyrus Richardson, D. D., has just entered upon his fifteenth year of service. He has lately returned from his pilgrimage to the historic places of Congregationalism in the old world and resumes work with renewed vigor.

Vermont.

BENNINGTON.—Second. A neat year-book has just been issued, giving lists of officers, committees and members, with report of work done in the past twelve months. Each of the numerous departments and societies is fully represented in the unusually complete record of this live and active church. Twenty-five children have been baptized and 29 names have been added to the membership roll, which now numbers 430. The benevolences in all departments amount to $2,103.88. Rev. C. R. Seymour is pastor.

Connecticut.

SIMSBURY.—The 200th anniversary of organization will occur Nov. 10, 1897. In anticipation of this event the interior of the edifice has been restored in old colonial style at a cost of about $13,000, and a new organ, the gift of a lady parishioner, has been added, at a cost of nearly $4,000 more. A handsome chapel connected with the church is nearly completed, built largely through generous gifts from the sons of William E. Dodge, Sr., who, with their widowed mother, make their summer home in this place. Mr. Ames R. Eno generously volunteered to pay half the cost of all interior alterations and improvements, and besides has contributed $7,000 to the permanent funds of the society, which, with previous gifts and $1,000 received from the will of Benjamin Ely, late of Brooklyn, N. Y., gives the parish a permanent fund of nearly $17,000, and one of the most beautiful church edifices in the State. The new seats will accommodate sixty more worshipers than the old ones, meeting a pressing need of the rapidly increasing congregation. It is expected that the building will be ready for rededication about Oct. 1. Rev. C. E. Stowe is pastor.

WILLIMANTIC.—The improvements, under the direction of the women, are advancing rapidly, and it is hoped to have them so far completed by the middle of the month as to permit of the church being used. The interior will be much improved when finished, being re-carpeted, re-decorated and furnished with new cushions. The chapel and parlors have also come in for their share of the repairs, and a new roof has been put over part of the structure.

EXETER.—Rev. D. J. Bliss recently preached a strong sermon against haying on Sunday, as breaking the Fourth Commandment, and the following week repeated it at Columbia, exchanging with Rev. J. P. Harvey. Being delivered in farming communities where it is generally the custom to get in and save whatever hay is cut if signs of a shower are seen, even on Sunday, it was received with considerable diversity of opinion.

STAMFORD.—Rev. Samuel Scoville and family spent their vacation at West Cornwall, where Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher celebrated her 84th birthday Aug. 26, as the guest of her daughter, Mrs. Scoville. Mrs. Beecher is still strong and vigorous for one of her age. She has 10 children, 15 grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

DANIELSON.—Rev. H. S. Brown and family on their return from vacation found the parsonage filled with members of the church and C. E. Society, and a floral piece, "Welcome Home," was suspended in one of the rooms. Many needed repairs on the interior of the parsonage had also been made during their absence.

WINCHESTER.—The meeting house presented an attractive appearance at the recent anniversary exercises, the interior having been thoroughly renovated, the improvements including a new metal ceiling and new carpets. A modern furnace will be put in this fall.

BRIDGEWATER.—The church was opened for service Aug. 23, after having been newly painted, decorated and carpeted. It is much improved and modernized by the new platform and the removal of some of the pews, giving increased space.

ANDOVER.—The heating arrangement has been much improved by placing the furnace in the basement and making new and larger connections with it. Considerable grading has also been done on the grounds, and a bank wall has been built.

BURLINGTON.—A special service for the aged was held Aug. 30. Carriages were sent for those unable to walk, and a reception committee welcomed the guests and escorted them to reserved seats. A sermon of comfort was preached.

WOODBURY.—During the vacation of the pastor, Rev. J. A. Freeman, the congregation held services on Orenaug Park, where the early settlers worshiped in 1681 before the first meeting house was built.

STRATFORD.—Rev. F. S. Fitch, pastor here about 15 years ago, was recently welcomed by many of his old parishioners, when he supplied the pulpit in the absence of Rev. J. S. Ives.

OAKDALE.—Services have been held in the chapel for the past few Sundays while the meeting house was being painted and otherwise thoroughly renovated.

CENTRAL VILLAGE.—Rev. O. M. Lord preached his farewell sermon last Sunday. Curbing has been placed in front of the church and a new walk put in.

DAYVILLE.—The vestry has been greatly improved by painting and general redecoration, making it much more cheerful and inviting.

The women of the church in Newtown netted $96 at their recent sale and supper ——At Southington the Armenian relief fund amounts to nearly $200.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

BINGHAMTON.—Rev. Edward Taylor, D. D., having just completed 50 years of pastoral service, his ministerial association signalized the event by presenting him with a unique silver vase, beautifully engraved with appropriate inscriptions. Dr. Taylor's health is excellent and he has more calls for pulpit and platform service than ever before. In former years he was a valued correspondent of The Congregationalist from New York and Brooklyn, Michigan and central and western New York in turn.

DE PEYSTER.—The pastor, Rev. Grant Van Blarcom, has "resigned" from single blessedness and "called" to become his bride one of his most estimable parishioners, Mrs. May Hydorn. The happy couple were recently tendered a reception by their people.

THE INTERIOR.

Indiana.

KOKOMO.—The edifice has been remodeled at an expense of several thousand dollars and is now one of the most modern, commodious and beautiful of our denominational buildings in the State. It was rededicated Aug. 30. This church will entertain the State Association at its next meeting. Rev. R. J. Smith is pastor.

Michigan.

PORT HURON.—Ross Memorial. Since its organization last February this little church has doubled its membership, which now numbers 80. Self-supporting from the first, in addition to paying its own expenses it has extended its influence by supporting a mission school. A second promising mission was organized Aug. 27. The faith and self-sacrifice of the pastor, Rev. B. P. Brundage, who exacts no stated salary, but tells the members to "care for themselves and their families first," is rewarded by rare appreciation and devotion. An interested lady friend has given the nucleus of a building fund, which is steadily growing. The church subscribes for the denominational papers to be kept on file in the public library.

IRONTON.—Rev. J. P. Sanderson of Lansing, while sojourning with his family in this quiet retreat, by preaching to the pastorless people has greatly cheered and helped them.

THE WEST.

Iowa.

CHARLES CITY.—Rev. C. C. Otis has just completed his first year's pastorate, during which the edifice has been thoroughly renovated, the payment of an old debt provided for and over 80 new members received into fellowship. The church shows its appreciation of his services by adding $250 to his salary for the coming year.

MARSHALLTOWN.—The meetings conducted by Evangelist Williams are increasing in interest daily. Here, as elsewhere, the local press criticises the preacher for his plain talk, but the people crowd to hear him and many are turned from sin.

GAZA.—This little railroad village as yet has no organized church. Sunday school and preaching services are held, and a chapel is in process of erection. Rev. J. K. Nutting, who is working this field, looks forward to organization.

DICKENS.—The pastor, Rev. J. C. George, on a recent Sunday raised $125 to provide for last bills on the building, which enables the church to secure the $500 promised by the C. C. B. S.

AMES.—The retiring pastor, Rev. F. J. Douglass, who has served the church six years with marked success, leaves with the respect and affection of church and congregation.

BAXTER.—Rev. G. L. Shull has resigned, to close his pastorate Dec. 1. During his ministry of two and one-half years 36 persons have united with the church, 23 on confession.

HARLAN.—The people count the resignation of their pastor, Rev. J. B. Mather, a great misfortune, and indorse him with strong resolutions.

A house of worship is in process of construction at Elkader, to cost over $3,000. Rev. F. L. Fisk is pastor.

Minnesota.

HANCOCK.—This church, with Lake Emily, has been pastorless for several months. The people were discouraged by debts and became indifferent. The Sunday school was maintained. The debts have now all been paid and the church is preparing to call a pastor. Being the only one in the community its closing for several months has been peculiarly unfortunate.

BENSON.—Rev. J. S. Hayward has resigned, to close work in November. During his pastorate the church has prospered and efforts have been made to bring it to self-support. Removals from the town make it uncertain whether this can be accomplished.

KRAGNES.—This community, though without a church organization, is laying the financial foundation of a meeting house. Rev. D. G. Colp gives up the work and goes to Yale Seminary. Another pastor is sought to care for this community and Harwood, N. D., with which it is yoked.

BELLEVIEW.—Rev. G. E. Northrup will do general missionary work along the line of the railroad, commencing at this place, where a Sunday school has been organized and the people are planning for a building. One or two other churchless communities desire services.

Nebraska.

HAYES COUNTY FIRST.—This church has been reorganized, the place of worship moved about four miles and the name changed to Eureka to correspond with the post office. The new organization includes nearly all the members of the old church, with 11 others representing four denominations. The Sunday school has also been reorganized, and church and school reach a large population, some families coming five or six miles to the service.

RIVERTON.—Rev. Samuel Williams has stayed by his work during the heated term, not only maintaining public service but continuing pastoral visitation, though this has had to be done on foot. The abundant rains of the season have seconded the efforts of the people, and church and parsonage yards are now covered with blue grass, where before was unsightly barrenness.

HAYES CENTER.—This church, to which Rev. T. C. Moffatt ministers in connection with Hayes County First and Palisade, is much disheartened on account of another crop failure. Some persons will move away, but many having small herds of cattle will remain and services will still be needed.

LINCOLN.—First has granted Swedish the use of its basement for the present. It is hoped that the latter will be able to build before winter.——Vine Street. Encouraging news comes from Rev. A. F. Newell, who is still confined in the hospital at Dieppe, but expects to return by Oct. 1.

GRANT.—This church, in the region where crop failure has been severe, has shown its sympathy with laborers abroad by coutributing to the work of the A. B. C. F. M., the Quick Relief Fund and the sufferers in Armenia. Rev. G. W. Knapp is pastor.

OGALALLA.—A generous response was made to the appeal of the A. B. C. F. M. for the Quick Relief Fund by church, Sunday school and Y. P. S. C. E. Rev. W. S. Hampton is pastor.

OMAHA —Rev. Messrs. Jacob Flook of Hillside, L. S. Hand of the Cherry Hill-Saratoga field and A. W. Ayers of Pilgrim have stayed by their people during the heated term.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

BERKELEY.—First. Rev. G. B. Hatch is encouraged by the large number of students, both young men and maidens, attending service. In the evenings he is giving a series of sermons on Christian Endeavor. Having emphasized the former word, he is now finding much suggestion in each letter of the latter. Thus far he has spoken on Embassy, Nationalism and Denominationalism. The new building for social meetings is nearing completion.——North. Rev. J. C. Robbins has returned from his six weeks' vacation and been warmly welcomed by his people.

SAN FRANCISCO.—First. The trustees were granted in August permission by the court to mortgage the property for $10,000, wherewith to pay expenses of the recent ecclesiastical trial, pastor's salary, and to meet current bills, including taxes. ——Plymouth. On a recent Sunday evening Dr. Williams preached by request on Christian Science, giving 10 reasons why it is not Christian.——Third. Rev. William Rader numbers among his large audiences Pugilist Choynski, whose wife is a Congregationalist.

SOMERSVILLE.—In this coal mining village, one of the several charges of Rev. F. H. Wales, an entertainment was given recently which netted $140. As yet there is no organization here, though a suitable building is at the disposal of worshipers.

ADIN.—Rev. J. A. Jones has been greatly cheered by the visit of Missionary Cooke who, accompanied by his host, did much to arouse a religious interest in the village and surrounding country. Several Sunday schools were revived.

BLACK DIAMOND.—The C. E. Society and the W. C. T. U. recently gave an entertainment the proceeds of which, applied to the church debt, went far in relieving the financial burden of the church.

Washington.

QUILLAYUTE.—This church, which dedicated a new edifice Aug. 16, is situated on a small prairie surrounded by dense forest, near the center of a territory 60 miles by 100 on which, as far as can be learned, there is no other church building. The nearest house of worship is at Clallam, 40 miles north.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

The first fall district meeting in Massachusetts will be held in Dalton Congregational church on Tuesday, Sept. 15. Rev. George W. Winch of Holyoke will make the principal address of the evening. The district comprises twelve towns, with 36 schools, immediately surrounding Pittsfield, and is known as Central Berkshire. Eleven towns contain an aggregate population of 12,365, which with Pittsfield's 20,447 inhabitants makes a total of 32,812 and a school to each 911 persons.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

For September the members of the World's Prayer Chain are asked to pray for the Christian Sabbath, that it may be preserved to those that come after us as a day of rest and worship and spiritual refreshment.

A librarian is appointed by a society in Belfast, Ireland, and all the members furnish him with a list of their own books that they are willing to lend to others. Each one borrowing a book pays two cents to the missionary treasury of the society.

Petitions to Congress have been prepared by the Endeavorers of Hamilton, O., calling for laws for compulsory education, the arbitration of railroad strikes, investigation of labor problems and the repeal of Oklahoma's and Arizona's divorce laws

A reading circle connected with a California society has been making a careful study of the history and doctrines of its denomination, varying this by giving an occasional evening to the study of other denominations and inviting ministers representing them to come and give brief addresses and answer questions.

From rescued Chinese slave girls received into the Presbyterian Mission Home in San Francisco a Junior and a Young People's Society have been formed. Their interest in the convention next year is shown by their plans for a reception to the delegates and by their pledge of fifty dollars for convention expenses.

The Christian Endeavorers of Clear Creek, Tex., sent out an appeal to other societies to join them in refusing to patronize the fair of the Texas Coast Fair Association, which has always sought to draw an especially large crowd on Sundays. The announcement has since been made that out of respect to Christian sentiment the fair will be closed on Sunday.

OTHER CHRISTIAN WORK.

Assembly week at Good Will Farm, Fairfield, Me., was an occasion of much interest, and marked advance was shown during the past year. The Hall Cottage for boys has been erected and dedicated and now has 15 occupants. The Moody school building has been completed and is used by more than 100 pupils of three grades. The Blackwell farm and other land has been purchased and paid for; and the number of boys increased to 91, occupying six cottages. The Lizzie Wilcox Smith building, the first erected for girls, was dedicated July 29 and is beautifully located, about a mile from the boys' homes. It has been provided and completely furnished by Walter M. Smith of Stamford, Ct., a memorial to a daughter. Mr. Smith has also deeded to the association two-thirds of a fine grove called the Assembly Pines, a tract of 30 acres, thickly covered with pine growth, and $500 have been contributed for a suitable auditorium for summer assemblies. About midway between the homes for boys and girls is the fine location for the new church building, the corner-stone of which was laid assembly week. The program included practical talks on the professions and callings in life, also musical and athletic features which were greatly enjoyed.

Be content thy person be trod upon for peace sake. Thy person, I say, not thy conscience.—Philip Henry.

All

Diseases originating in impure blood yield to Hood's Sarsaparilla, which cures scrofula, salt rheum, boils, humors, etc.

"My mother had several painful boils, but after taking one bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla they were all gone. My father has taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for eczema on his head. He began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and the sores began to heal."—Miss HESTER JENNIE LEAKS, Beckleysville, Md.

HOOD'S
Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

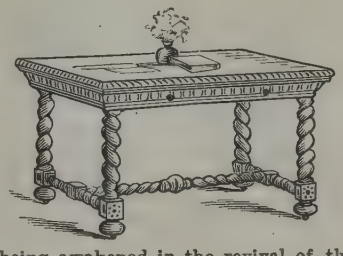
Hood's Pills the best family cathartic and liver stimulant. 25 cents.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church & School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

IMPROVED
Cathedral Tubular Bells,
CHIMES AND PEALS (Harrington and other patents.)
U. S. Tubular Bell Co. Sole Mfrs., Methuen, Mass.

RARE TABLES.



The adaptability of a piece of furniture is a large factor in its worth.

Here is a Library Table which is already being eagerly sought as a Hall Table. The truth is that it is equally valuable in either apartment. It can be interchangeably used in this two-fold capacity. Such pieces are not common.

This is one of the new designs of this season, and it shows the direction in which our designers are working. There is a great deal of interest being awakened in the revival of the old spiral fluted frames. They have a very distinguished appearance.

Our exhibit of Tables is attracting great crowds this week. People are anxious to see the late designs before too many are sold. There are over 100 designs represented by only a single specimen. Here is a chance to have a table unlike any other ever made.

JUST ISSUED.—General Catalogue for 1896-97. Square octavo, 256 pp., 300 illustrations. Sent to any address on receipt of five 2-cent stamps for postage.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,
48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

The more hopeful feeling noted last week has not abated; indeed, it has perceptibly increased. The improvement in sentiment is not only to be found among wholesale merchants, but extends to the investing class, so called, as shown in orders to purchase securities which have been received by commission houses for the first time in months. The factors which are responsible for this better feeling are belief that the silver craze is waning and the large imports of gold.

The latter have been of sufficient volume to take the edge off of the money stringency. At one time, just prior to the imports of gold, a severe squeeze in money seemed impending, but the influx of the yellow metal came in time to allay fear and to restore reason to lenders of funds. Money rates are still relatively high, and the restricted discounts and fewer time loans operate as a check on general trade. Were monetary rates lower, merchants would undoubtedly take advantage of the low prices now ruling for nearly all kinds of merchandise.

The volume of trade improved in many different lines during the past week. Notable in this improvement is the iron and steel industry. Sales of iron have been larger and prices are firmer on prospects of harmony among steel makers. Boots and shoes are in fair demand, and the auction sales of spring dress goods at New York recently were regarded as fairly satisfactory. Prices of many staples have shown advancing tendencies, notably wheat.

In New England cotton goods production has been increased somewhat by the starting up of idle machinery, but the policy of curtailment is still largely in force. Wool continues dull but steady, with a large part of the woolen mills run on orders as received. There has been some improvement in the position of lumber, but the trade still remains in a very unsatisfactory condition. Bank clearings for last week increased 10 per cent. over the previous week, but were 10 per cent. less than for the same week of last year.

DEFINITIONS.

ORIGINALITY: Not an addition to knowledge; it is only a new arrangement of color.—Ian Maclaren.

WHAT IS A MIRACLE? It is an event in physical nature which makes unmistakably plain the presence of God working for a moral end. —Canon Charles Gore.

THE LONDON TIMES: The most arrogant, the most unbribable thing in Europe; sober, serene, exasperatingly honest, more British than Queen Victoria and more ubiquitous than the Vatican.

THE HISTORIAN: The office of the historian can only be compared with that of the priest, although its subject-matter may seem more secular. The flowing stream of time seeks to overwhelm the past and the new age interprets the old according to its own ideas. The historian exists in order that he may understand for himself and teach others to understand the true spirit of every epoch. He must with perfect impartiality keep his subject and nothing else before his eyes. Over all things there rests the divine order which, although we cannot demonstrate, we can yet surmise. In this divine order, which is one with the procession of ages, the great characters of history have their place; and it is thus that the historian must understand them. The historic method which only seeks the real and true is thus closely connected with the highest questions which affect the human race.—Leopold von Ranke.

NONCONFORMITY: When I say Nonconformity I mean thorough and pronounced Nonconformity. I mean the doctrines that the church consists of Christians; that the church cannot be governed by kings and parliaments; that it can call its own ministers and minister to itself; that from its own resources it can provide for its support, extension and progress; that the confession of sin to man, its forgiveness by man, or its washing away by man is a superstition and an usurpation; that episcopal authority cannot make men ministers, or churches holy, or graveyards sacred; that the minister is not a priest; that the sacraments do not operate spiritual changes; that a piece of bread is not God; that it wounds the dearest interests of religion to confer political privileges or inflict disabilities in its name; that the Church of God is where God is with his people, not merely in colossal organizations dominated by hierarchies.—Rev. J. Hirst Hollowell.

PITHY SAYINGS OF AN OLD-TIME DIVINE.

FROM THE WRITINGS OF REV. PHILIP HENRY, FATHER OF MATTHEW HENRY.

Short sins cost us long and sad sorrows.

A little jogging puts a clock or watch out of frame, so a little passion the heart.

A man cannot wrestle with God and wrangle with his neighbor at the same time.

Those who are too merry when pleased are commonly too angry when crossed.

An angry man is like one in a crowd who hath a sore boil—every one thrusts and troubles him.

Solitariness is no sign of sanctity. Pest houses stand alone and yet are full of infectious diseases.

Forced absence from God's ordinances and forced presence with wicked people is a grievous burden to a gracious soul.

He is no fool who parts with that which he cannot keep, when he is sure to be recompensed in that which he cannot lose.

There are two things we should beware of —that we never be ashamed of the gospel, and that we may never be a shame to it.

We shall be the more apt to seek for opportunities of doing good when we have money lying by us of which we have said, This is not ours but the poor's.

For Sick Headache
Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.
It removes the cause by stimulating the action of the stomach, promoting digestion and quieting the nerves.

Not a Patent Medicine.

Insomnia

shows trouble with the brain, indicating the need of a Brain Tonic, especially one containing phosphorus.

Freligh's Tonic

A Phosphorized Cerebro-Spinant

acts differently from opiates and bromides; gives food to the brain; tones up the nervous system to the normal pitch. Nature intended man to sleep.

Prescribed and endorsed by forty thousand physicians. Sample by mail, 25 cts.; regular bottle, $1.00, 100 doses. Concentrated, prompt, powerful. Descriptive pamphlet, full directions, testimonials, etc., mailed to any address.

I. O. Woodruff & Co.,
Manufacturing Chemists,
106-108 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

Formula on Every Bottle.

Do You Use It?

It's the best thing for the hair under all circumstances. Just as no man by taking thought can add an inch to his stature, so no preparation can make hair. The utmost that can be done is to promote conditions favorable to growth. This is done by Ayer's Hair Vigor. It removes dandruff, cleanses the scalp, nourishes the soil in which the hair grows, and, just as a desert will blossom under rain, so bald heads grow hair, when the roots are nourished. But the roots must be there. If you wish your hair to retain its normal color, or if you wish to restore the lost tint of gray or faded hair use

Ayer's Hair Vigor.

7 PER CENT. NET.

First Mortgage Loans on Improved Farms in the Wonderfully Fertile Red River Valley

and in North Dakota and Minnesota. 20 years of experience in the business, and an actual residence of over 8 years in the Red River Valley and of over 22 in Minnesota and North Dakota. A personal knowledge of lands and values. Loans only made to industrious, thrifty farmers, on well improved farms. I give my personal supervision to the business. Loans made in your name and interest coupon-notes and mortgages and applications sent to you and held by you. Interest collected by me and forwarded to you by New York Check. Funds now earning you only 2, 3, or 4 per cent. in Savings Banks will here earn you 7 per cent.—about doubling your income. Remit funds for investment by New York or Boston Draft, or by personal check payable to my order. Address

E. P. CATES,
2628 Portland Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

£ EVERYWHERE and AT ANY TIME
CHEQUE BANK CHEQUES
are payable. Not in one spot only, but in every country in the world.
Send for circular.
Agency of the U. S. Cheque Bank, L'd.
FREDERICK W. PERRY, Manager,
40 and 42 Wall St., N. Y.

A SOLID INVESTMENT.

WE HAVE FIVE BILLION feet of standing timber, consisting of walnut, cherry, oak, hickory, white wood, beach, maple, birch and many other hard woods.
On a cut of 100,000 FEET per day we can earn over 25 PER CENT. per annum. On a cut of 280,000 FEET per day (the limit of our mill) we can earn over 75 PER CENT. per annum. Call or send for circular.
EAST TENNESSEE LUMBER & MG. CO.
246 Washington St. Rooms 16 to 20.

SOMATOSE a perfect food, tonic and restorative for the invalid or convalescent. Send for free pamphlets.
SCHIEFFELIN & CO., New York.

Busy Women should use— WHITMAN'S INSTANTANEOUS CHOCOLATE.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

DEACON WILLIAM F. SLOCUM.

Many friends of Deacon Slocum were shocked by the announcement last Friday that he had that morning been struck by an express train while crossing the track near his home in Newtonville, Mass., and instantly killed. Deacon Slocum was seventy-four years old and has been for many years one of the prominent lawyers of Boston. He will be greatly missed from the Central Congregational Church of Newtonville, from the Congregational clubs of that city and of Boston, and from many circles where his Christian influence has been helpful and strong. He leaves three sons, two of them lawyers and one, his namesake, the president of Colorado College.

REV. ELIAS BOND,

Who died in Kobala, Sandwich Islands, July 24, in his eighty-fourth year, was one of the few survivors of the group of early missionaries to whom the islands owe so large a part of their history. Born in Hallowell, Me., Aug. 19, 1813, the son of Elias and Rebecca (Davis) Bond, he graduated from Bowdoin and from Bangor Seminary in 1840. He was ordained and married Miss Ellen M. Howe that year, and sailed as one of a band of six missionaries under the American Board, landing in Honolulu in 1841. Assigned to work in North Kohala he continued to reside among and labor for the good of the Hawaiian people for fifty-five years. One of the first of the missionaries to assume self-support, he found abundant occupation for his great powers in school and church building, preaching, teaching, pastoral work and the service of the people in various administrative capacities. Some land having been granted him by the government for his services as an engineer, he began sugar planting and manufacturing as a means of supplying work to the people who were drifting toward Honolulu, and sustained it with no paying returns until the reciprocity treaty with the United States in 1876 made it profitable. Since that time he has been able to make large gifts for church work in Hawaii and to help in the endowment of Bangor Seminary (including the larger part of fund for the Bond lectureship) and Bowdoin College. His known contributions exceed $100,000. A man of intense vitality and abounding activity, he accomplished an immense amount of hard work with both hands and brain. His piety and self-consecration were fervent and uncompromising. He received more than 3,000 into church fellowship, was principal of a boys' school for forty years and later founded a school for girls. His later years have been clouded with much bodily pain, but his faith burned steadfast to the end, while the memory of his active and devoted life is an inspiration to all who knew him.

OBITUARIES.

DEACON GEORGE WASHBURN.

Deacon Washburn was a man of strong Christian faith and character, having been active in his Master's service for more than fifty years and much of the time an officer in the church. The duties of the Christian life were a great delight to him, and he was very faithful in them all. It was a cause of deep regret to him when he could no longer meet with God's people in his house, and yet he was perfectly resigned to the Lord's will. He suffered much during the last months of his life but patiently waited the coming of the Son of Man. When at length the messenger came for him he put out his hands and said "I'm ready, rejoice," and passed peacefully away like a child going to sleep.

Mr. Washburn died in Orfordville, N. H., Aug. 23, aged 77 yrs., 1 mon., 3 dys. He leaves a beloved wife, who has been his faithful companion for more than fifty years, three worthy Christian sons—Geo. W. of Newtonville, A. C. of Lexington and Frank E. of Orfordville, N. H—also a daughter, the wife of Rev. E. H. Stickney of Fargo, N. D.

WALTER CRAFTS

Of Columbus, O., entered on eternal life Aug. 2. He was born in Newton, Mass., in January, 1839, was educated mainly by the Aliens and, after study in technical schools here and in Germany, became a mining engineer. Many years were spent as an iron master, chiefly in Alabama and Ohio. Lately he was president of the Columbus Commercial Bank. Among positions of usefulness which he held he was a corporate member of the American Board, a trustee of Berea College and president of the Columbus Missionary Union.

With many through the land his city deeply mourns him. Employés in his works counted him their best friend. His furnaces rested on the Sabbath. With generous gifts and wise counsels "he stood for political morality, business integrity and a pure and exalted home life." "He was a calm, even-tempered, cultured, Christian gentleman, and a consistent, high-minded, manly citizen." Pure, strong and true as the iron he made was his life—full of self-forgetful kindness.

After a day of business he retired to rest away from home. As is supposed, with no special premonition, without a movement or a pain, as he quietly slept, he entered on eternal rest—and activity. Beautiful, precious is his memory—

An honored life, a peaceful end,
And heaven to crown it all.

Remembering his faith and his works we may indeed say: "Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace." W. P. A.

ILL tempered babies are not desirable in any home. Insufficient nourishment produces ill temper. Guard against fretful children by feeding nutritious and digestible food. The Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is the most successful of all infant foods.

EASE and comfort from pain. Pond's Extract. Do not be deceived by counterfeit preparations.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR, ECKSTEIN } Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, BRADLEY, BROOKLYN, JEWETT, ULSTER, UNION } New York
SOUTHERN, SHIPMAN } Chicago.
COLLIER, MISSOURI, RED SEAL, SOUTHERN } St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS. CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

THE KIND THAT PAYS, the kind that lasts. In painting, labor is three-fourths the cost; and with Pure White Lead and Tinting Colors more work can be done in a given time than with inferior materials. It makes—with Pure Linseed Oil—the best paint and the kind that lasts. To be sure of getting examine the brand (see list genuine brands). Any shade or color desired can be easily obtained by using NATIONAL LEAD CO.'s brands of Pure White Lead and Tinting Colors.

Pure White Lead

Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New York.

Golden Yellow. Larger and Sweeter than the Chinese. Finest Flower for Winter. Frost Proof and Thrives in any Window.

Like the Chinese it blooms very quickly after planting, either in soil, sand or pebbles and water. May be had in bloom by the Holidays, each bulb producing several spikes, the exquisite beauty and fragrance of which will surpass everything. To introduce it we will send (together with 64-page Catalogue and sample copy of "Mayflower" with two lovely colored plates,) by Mail, postpaid, 2 Fine, Large Bulbs for 10 cents, or 6 for 25c.

OUR CATALOGUE, ELEGANTLY ILLUSTRATED, of all kinds of Plants and Bulbs, for Fall Planting and Winter Blooming, also new Fruits, Shrubs, etc., is now ready, and will be mailed FREE to all who apply. Choicest Hyacinths, Tulips, Narcissus, and other Bulbs, at greatly reduced prices. Write for it at once Address

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Floral Park, N. Y.

SAVE ½ YOUR FUEL

By using our (stove pipe) RADIATOR. With its 120 Cross Tubes,

ONE stove or furnace does the work of TWO. Drop postal for proofs from prominent men.

TO INTRODUCE OUR RADIATOR, the first order from each neighborhood filled at WHOLESALE price, and secures an agency. Write at once.

ROCHESTER RADIATOR COMPANY,
41 Furnace St., ROCHESTER, N. Y.

WHEATLET is never absent from our breakfast table, it is so hearty and affords nourishment so lasting that it seems in a great measure to supply the place of flesh food.

MRS. HESTER M. POOLE.

Metuchen, N. J., Jan. 28, '95.

Sold in 2-lb packages by all leading Grocers.

How to Disinfect.

We desire to mail you free, a valuable illustrated book prepared at great expense. Simple directions on disinfecting in cases of contagious diseases and in everyday life—sinks, sewers, etc. Send your address.

"Sanitas" Co. Ld., 636 West 55th St., N. Y.

Religious Notices.

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, etc., published under this heading at ten cents a line.

LAY COLLEGE FOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS, Station R, Boston, fits for all kinds of Christian work.

THE REV. DR. FRANCIS E. MARSTEN, of Columbus, O., may be addressed by correspondents until Oct. 1 at Attleboro Falls, Mass.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the Society at New York.

JAMES W. ELWELL, President.
REV. W. C. STITT, Secretary.
W. C. STURGES, Treasurer.

Subscribers' Wants.

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

Printer. Wanted an all-round printer to superintend printing office in Southern colored school. References required as to ability, church membership and missionary spirit. Address Printer, care The Congregationalist.

A Graduate of Harvard, highly recommended, desires a position to teach. High school principalship preferred or situation as teacher of Latin, Greek, French, History, Mathematics and English. F. R. Page, Bradford, Mass.

A Mother's Helper wanted to assist in care of children. References exchanged. Address Lock Box No. 1295, Orange, Mass.

Position Wanted. A middle-aged Christian man desires a permanent situation. Capable of managing a mercantile or manufacturing business. Would assume any situation of trust or responsibility. Moderate salary. Correspondence solicited. J. C. Mather, Noroton Heights, Ct.

Church Wanted. A successful minister desires a church. Age, 39. Salary not less than nine hundred. Address Rev. A. L. Brown, Dayton, Wyo.

Graduate of Smith College desires position to teach. Experienced in families and private schools. Address until Sept. 7, Box 283, Franklin Falls, N. H.

Wanted, by a clergyman's daughter, a position as private secretary, companion, attendant, mother's assistant, or other position where she can make herself useful. Satisfactory references. Address G., care Congregationalist.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS in the World.
PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).
Send for Price and Catalogue.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

Does Your Hair Fall Out?

Is it getting thin—lessening in volume? If so, I can help you. If totally bald do not write. Select family patronage for ten years. Send self-addressed stamped envelope to Miss RACHEL T. WYATT, Centerville, Mass.

CUTTING CORNS makes 'em grow. A-Corn Salve removes corn without pain or soreness. 15c. box—druggists or by mail.
GIANT CHEMICAL CO., 305 Cherry St., Phila.

"Use the Means and Heaven will give you the Blessing." Never neglect a useful article like . . SAPOLIO

WEEKLY REGISTER.

Calls.

ARMSTRONG, Edward P., Rochester, N. Y., to Keuka College, to organize and take charge of the Bible Training School. Declines.
AYRES, Andrew F. (Metb.), Huntsville, O., to Pilgrim Ch., Indianapolis, Ind. Accepts.
BEAUCHAMP, Jethro M., Gaston, Greenville and Hillside, Ore., to Central Ch., Salem, and to Willard. Accepts, and has begun work.
BENNEYAN, Hachadoor, Harpoot, Turkey, to Armenian Ch., Worcester, Mass. Accepts.
BRETT, Geo. S., Central Ch., Springfield, Mo., to Waukesha, Wis.
BROWN, Chas. R., Winthrop Ch., Charlestown, Mass., to First Ch., Oakland, Cal. Accepts.
CARLSON, Thos. A., Sidney, N. Y., to Weybridge, Vt. Accepts.
CASE, B. N., to E. Granby, Ct. Accepts.
COLBURN, E. E., Christian Ch., Laconia, N. H., to N. Reading, Mass. Accepts, to begin at once.
DOUGLAS, Newell F., Garner, Io., to Eagle Grove. Accepts.
FULLER, Edgar R., Aurora, O., to Imlay City, Mich.
HAKES, A. W., to Winfred and Freedom, S. D. Accepts, to begin Sept. 15.
IMES, Benj. A., Knoxville, Tenn., to be chaplain and principal of the Bible Dept. of State Normal and Industrial Inst., Normal, Ala. Accepts.
KEPHART, Wm. H., Plymouth Ch., Binghamton, N. Y., accepts call to North Ch., New York, N. Y.
MERRILL, Chas. W., Northfield, Minn., to Open Door Ch., Minneapolis. Accepts.
MYLNE, Geo. W., Freeport, Mich., declines call to Carson City.
NORTHRUP, Geo. E., Merritt, Minn., to undertake general missionary work along the line of the railroad, beginning at Belleview. Accepts.
PARKER, Fred. W., Huntington, Ore., to Pendleton. Accepts, and has begun work.
PARSONS, Jas., Yacaville, Cal., to Central Ch., Los Angeles. Accepts.
POST, Aurelian H., Tolland, Ct., to Bristol, N. Y. Accepts.
POST, George H., Hartford Sem., to Jellico, Tenn. Accepts.
PRESTON, Chas. L., Sheridan, Mich., accepts call to Grand Blanc.
SNYDER, Henry C., Roscommon, Mich., to Addison. Accepts, and has begun work.
SNYDER, Owen M., to remain another year at Homestead and Honor, Mich.
STAVER, Dan'l, Forest Grove, Ore., to Gaston, Greenville and Hillside. Accepts, and has begun work.
THOMPSON, Jas., Hannibal, Mo., accepts call to Norwood and Norfolk, N. Y.
WALL, Arthur A., Central Lake, Mich., to Grand Ledge and Wacousta.

Ordinations and Installations.

BELL, Jno. W., o. as evangelist, Newington, N. H., Aug. 27. Sermon, Rev. W. A. Hadley; other parts, Rev. Messrs. T. V. Haines, L. H. Thayer, G. L. Richmond, E. B. Pike, G. A. Foss.
FAY, Chas. E., i. Newport, Vt., Aug. 25. Sermon, Rev. J. K. Fuller; other parts, Rev. Messrs. David Wallace, H. M. Perkins, J. C. Langford, R. C. Moodie.
JACOBS, W. J., o. Penfield, O., Sept. 1. Sermon, Rev. E. S. Rothrock; other parts, Rev. Messrs. A. F. Skeele, H. F. Thompson, J. F. Berry, F. H. Richardson.
MAIR, Wm. M., Winfred, S. D., Sept. 1.
SHORT, Wallace M., o. Evansville, Wis., Sept. 4. Parts by Rev. Messrs. H. M. Whitney, G. R. Leavitt, D. D., W. W. Sleeper, O. P. Bestor, A. S. Kaye, W. N. Moore.

Resignations.

BLISS, Geo. C., Rutland, N. Y., to study at Hartford Sem.
HAYWARD, Jno. S., Benson, Minn.
KELLEY, Geo. W., North Ch., Willard, Me., to take effect Dec. 1.
KEMP, Geo. H., Maywood, Ill., to take effect Oct. 1.
LORD, Orlando M., Central Village, Ct.
ROSS, David C., Marlboro, Ct., for further study. Resignation will take effect Oct. 1.
SHULL, Gilbert L., Baxter, Io., to take effect Dec. 1.
WILTON, Richard T., Wolfeboro, N. H.

Dismissions.

MCKINLEY, Chas. E., Yarmouth, Me.

Churches Organized.

EUREKA, Neb. (formerly Hayes County First Ch.), reorganized, adding eleven new members.
HARVEY, Io., six miles from Clarion, 24 Aug., 13 members.
ST. JOHN, Ala., 12 Jan., 11 members. The church now numbers 32.

Miscellaneous.

BIGELOW, Frank, has closed his summer's work at Weybridge, Vt.
HOWES, Albert W., has closed his brief but successful engagement at Plainfield, Mass., and will resume his theological studies at Andover.
JONES, Carl S., has been invited to remain till the close of the year at Kalamo, Mich., where he has been supplying.
LEETE, Wm. W., and PARK, Wm. E., members of The Congregationalist's party, returned together on the Aurania, landing at New York Aug. 26. At the close of the regular tour Mr. Leete spent some time in England and Mr. Park in Switzerland. The latter begins his autumn work much invigorated by his journey.

NOTEWORTHY FORTHCOMING MEETINGS.

Annual Congress of the National Prison Association, Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 26–30.
American Board, Toledo, O., Oct. 6–9.
Indian Conference, Lake Mohonk, N. Y., Oct. 14–16.
American Missionary Association, Boston, Mass., Oct. 20–22.
Convention of the Open and Institutional Church League, Hartford, Ct., Oct. 20, 21.
International Convention of Christian Workers, Louisville, Ky., Nov. 5–11.
National W. C. T. U. Convention, St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 13–18.

We were misled by a usually reliable contemporary into a statement that Helen Keller, the famous deaf mute, was to enter Radcliffe in October. It is The Cambridge School for young ladies, of which Arthur Gilman is the accomplished principal, where she is to be a student and fit herself for college. Though Miss Keller is already in advance of some college students in certain subjects, the preparatory course may take considerable time.

LIVING TRUTH.—An old proverb says: "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." If you have Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam, you have both prevention and the cure, and it costs almost nothing for this unfailing safeguard to health. At all druggists.

IS THIS FOR YOU?—The slight rearrangement of the house which you have in mind for this fall suggests the fact that you will perhaps be interested in the duplicate table advertised in another column by the Paine Furniture Co. Such a piece of furniture as this, which can do duty in two separate apartments, is always valuable.

MAKE THE MOST OF YOURSELF.—It is the duty of every man to make the most of himself. Whatever his capacities may be, he is sure to find some place where he can be useful to himself and to others. But he cannot reach his highest usefulness without good health and he cannot have good health without pure blood. The blood circulates to every organ and tissue and when it is pure, rich and healthy it carries health to the entire system, but if it is impure it scatters disease wherever it flows. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the one true blood purifier. It cures salt rheum, scrofula, catarrh, dyspepsia and rheumatism because these diseases have their origin in the blood.

FEED the nerves upon pure, rich blood and you need not fear nervous prostration. Nerves are weak when they are improperly and insufficiently nourished. Pure blood is their proper food and pure blood comes by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which is thus the greatest and best nerve tonic. It also builds up the whole system.

HOOD'S PILLS are the favorite family cathartic, easy to take, easy to operate.

Columbia
Bicycles
LEAD THE WORLD.

You have noted that all bicycles are judged by Columbias. Others are offered as being "just as good." It is the universal acknowledgment of Columbia superiority. Why make experiments when you can have certainty? Ride the Columbia—

Standard of the World.

$100 TO ALL ALIKE

POPE MFG. CO., Hartford, Conn.
Columbia Art Catalogue free from all branch houses and agents, or will be sent by mail for two 2-cent stamps.

Blake Bell Foundry
Established in 1820.
Successors to WM. BLAKE & CO.
Manufacture bells of every description, single or chimes, of Copper and Tin. Address
BLAKE BELL CO., Boston, Mass.

PULPIT SUITS and LODGE ROOM FURNITURE. Send for Catalogue.
A. B. & E. L. SHAW, - 27 Sudbury St., Boston, Mass.

The Standard of Excellence

The average woman cannot discriminate justly between machines, so far as their mechanical construction is concerned, but she can always wisely judge their work.

ALL THE ESSENTIAL QUALITIES OF A FAMILY SEWING-MACHINE ARE MOST PERFECTLY COMBINED IN . . .

SIMPLICITY— so it can be easily adjusted, and won't get out of order.

SPEED— so that it will do the most work with the least effort.

STABILITY— so that it will last for a lifetime, without repairs.

STYLE— so that it will be an ornament to the home.

SINGER WORK IS ALWAYS GOOD WORK.

This is why Singer Machines maintain their supremacy all over the world, making the Singer trade-mark a reliable guarantee of perfection. . . . . .

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

OFFICES IN EVERY CITY IN THE WORLD.

BAILEY'S REFLECTORS
compound, light-spreading, Silver-plated Corrugated Glass reflectors. The most perfect light ever made for CHURCHES, Halls, etc.
Handsome designs for electric light, gas and oil. Catalogue and price list free.
BAILEY REFLECTOR CO., Pittsburg, Pa.

CHURCH CARPETS AT MANUFACTURERS' PRICES. JOHN H. PRAY, SONS & CO., CARPETS AND UPHOLSTERY, 658 WASHINGTON ST. OPP. BOYLSTON ST. BOSTON.

A BAR HARBOR MISSION.

It is a warm Sunday afternoon, but the heat is tempered by Bar Harbor breezes, which never desert this favored spot. We pass the churches between which lies a quiet "God's acre," leave the street over which the showy equipages of the summer residents continually roll, and turning our faces "unto the hills" we pass down the less-frequented road to the woodland. Here we pause and regard with some perplexity the various wood paths. But the voice of singing falls with a pleasant sound upon our ears and after two or three minutes' walk along a side path we come quite suddenly upon a clearing.

Here a novel scene awaits us, for in one of "God's own temples" this quiet Sunday afternoon a company of worshipers is gathered. No frescoed ceiling meets one's eyes, only the clear, exquisite blue of the heaven; no beautifully tinted windows—one must look to the fleecy clouds, which rest lovingly upon the mountains, for the soft colors which are so grateful to the eye. Pulpit there is none, nor sweet-toned organ, only a common wagon, in which the speaker stands, and beside him a little reed organ, which, with a cornet, lends its aid in the singing.

Nor is it the place of meeting alone which is unusual. The congregation also is most diverse. On the outskirts hover the Indians, whose encampment is near at hand. There they gather, the old "queen," unkempt and weather-beaten, and men and women past middle age, while the younger people and children are sprinkled between and an occasional dog adds to the picturesqueness of the scene. Upon the rough seats are assembled, in a spirit of true Christian fraternity, the representatives of many households. Side by side with some of the summer residents sit the men and women from the village, and in the service of song all voices blend. Rough men are there whose presence the churches, alas! often seek in vain, and the children rejoice in the greater freedom which the open air gives to restless feet and hands.

The speaking by the earnest missionary, Mr. Garlett, and visitors whose hearts are in sympathy with the work—Rev. A. F. Schauffler of New York being one of these—is brief, fervent and to the point. An especially sympathetic interest is always accorded to the woman whose loving heart and fertile brain gave birth, six or eight years ago, to this mission. Having spent her summers for many years at Bar Harbor, in the employ of a family whose gifts to works of charity and Christian philanthropy have been both bountiful and frequent, her heart was stirred with a longing to carry the good tidings to those who would not seek it for themselves. Her desires were listened to with sympathetic interest by those about her, a Sunday school was formed, and now during these beautiful summer afternoons a good number gather, coming apart from the bustling life of a summer watering place and entering into the calmer, purer atmosphere of the worship of God.

It is good for these children of the forest, who seem sometimes less apt to "look up" than to "look down." It is good for the men and women of the place, upon whom the external forms of life are continually pressed by the crowd of visitors which throng their shores. And it is also good for the visitors, who can, by their sympathy in this bit of the Master's work, keep their spiritual life from being dulled by the anæsthetic of continual pleasure seeking.

Surely Squaw Hollow Mission has a place in the life of Bar Harbor, and though the work is unchronicled and by many unknown yet it rests, as some one has said, "in the hollow of His hand."

Bar Harbor. M. B. M.

Teacher: "Tommy, who was Joan of Arc?"
Tommy (who is considered great at guessing): "Noah's wife."—Home Guard.

WEE WITTICISMS.

"O, pa," exclaimed little Johnny, the first time he saw a trout, "it's got the measles, ain't it?"—Boston Transcript.

"Say, mister," said the little Fresh Air child as she watched the cattle enjoying their cud, "do you have to buy gum for all of them cows to chew?"

Aunt: "Why did you stare at the gentleman so rudely, Ethel?"

Little Ethel: "O, he's a dreffful man. He never goes to church nor nothing. I heard father say he was an acrostic."—Judy.

Bobby: "Say, mamma, was the baby sent down from heaven?"

Mamma: "Why, yes."

Bobby: "Um! They likes to have it quiet up there, doesn't they?"—Los Angeles World.

"Were there many people at the circus?" asked Frances's mamma, when that little girl returned in the care of her uncle.

"Yes, indeed," replied Frances, "there was an awfully large congregation."—Harper's Bazar.

A little four-year-old occupied an upper berth in a sleeping car. Awakening once in the middle of the night, his mother asked him if he knew where he was. "Tourse I do," he replied. "I'm in the top drawer."—Youth's Companion.

Freddy's mamma had a caller one day, who several times during her stay said, "Now I must go," always resuming her seat, nevertheless. Upon another repetition of the remark, Freddy said solemnly, "Don't you believe it until she's gone, mamma."—Indian Witness.

A GHOSTLY HINT.

It was very quiet in the dining-room, when a slight noise was heard in the china closet. "Sh! What was that?" queried mamma in a startled tone. "O, don't be frightened, mamma," said Maude; "I guess it's only the 'skeleton in the closet'; 'twon't hurt you"—Woman's Voice.

Photography Simplified.

Picture taking with the Improved Bullet camera is the refinement of photographic luxury. It makes photography easy for the novice—delightful for everybody.

LOADS IN DAYLIGHT with our light-proof film cartridges, or can be used with glass plates. Splendid achromatic lens, improved rotary shutter, set of three stops. Handsome finish.

Price, Improved No. 2 Bullet, for pictures 3½ x 3½ inches, - - - - - $10.00
Light-proof Film Cartridge, 12 exposures, 3½ x 3½ - .60

EASTMAN KODAK CO.

Booklet Free. Rochester, N. Y.

BROWN'S French DRESSING

For Ladies' and Children's Boots and Shoes

Ask your dealer for Brown's French Dressing and accept no other.

"OUR NAME—FAMILIAR IN THE MOUTH AS HOUSEHOLD WORDS."

MAGEE RANGES & HEATERS ARE THE BEST ALWAYS RECEIVE HIGHEST AWARD

LEADING AUTHORITIES ON COOKING say the

"MAGEE GRAND"

fulfills every requirement. "All who see the working of the OVEN THERMOMETER are delighted with it."

The wonderful Dock Ash Grate is the only one by which a continuous fire can be kept.

SOLD BY LEADING DEALERS. DESCRIPTIVE CIRCULARS FREE.

MAGEE FURNACE CO., 32-38 UNION ST., BOSTON.

AGENCIES: 96 LAKE ST., CHICAGO. 27 NEW MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

BRIGHT'S DISEASE.

DR. HARVEY L. BYRD, of Baltimore, Md.: "I am certained value in Bright's Disease. A BUFFALO LITHIA WATER has an as knowledge of its action on that disease thus far would seem to warrant the belief that it would in many instances, at least in its early stages, arrest it entirely, and in its more advanced stage prove a decided comfort and palliative."

Sold by Druggists. Pamphlet free. Proprietor, Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.

PRICE REDUCED FROM $25.00 to $10.00.

The Electropoise TRADE MARK

CURE WITHOUT MEDICINE.

THIS MOST WONDERFUL TREATMENT now within the reach of all.

The above price is ordered from July 1 to Oct. 1, 1896. $10.00 by Express, $10.25 by Registered Mail, with Book of Directions complete. Do not miss this opportunity.

L. A. BOSWORTH, 36 Bromfield St., Room 18, Boston, Mass., General Agent for New England States

L P Fisher Jan96

'ROUND THE WORLD

HIGH CLASS TOUR UNDER PERSONAL ESCORT.

OCTOBER 6, 1896, to MARCH 27, 1897.

H. GAZE
AND SONS, LTD.

From "Japan as we saw it" -- by permission.

ILLUSTRATION FROM GAZE'S 'ROUND THE WORLD PROGRAM.

OUTWARD VIA

United States, Sandwich Islands, Japan, China, Malay Peninsula, Ceylon, through India.

HOMEWARD VIA

Egypt, Italy, Switzerland, France, England to New York, with facilities for optional independent excursions up the Nile, or to Greece, Turkey, etc.

WITH a view to enable our clients to choose their route across the United States we have afforded an opportunity for crossing either via Canadian Pacific and Vancouver; Yellowstone Park route, Northern Pacific and Tacoma; or Denver, Manitou Park, the Rockies and San Francisco. The three sections will start from New York, meeting at Yokohama for our party 'Round the World at even rates.

We have included a large amount of jinrikisha travelling in Japan, sedan chair in China and carriage rides in India, and also dandies and horses for ascent of Tiger Hill (at Darjeeling) for witnessing the sunrise effect on snowy range of the Himalayas etc.

 Correspondence invited for European and Holy Land escorted parties. Programs post free. Travel tickets everywhere. Official agents of London & Northwestern Railway, England's greatest railroad; also New York Central & Hudson River Railroad, America's greatest railroad. Write for. Tourist's Gazette free.

For full particulars and Itineraries, including 'Round the World Program, apply to 113 Broadway, New York.

201 Washington Street, Boston.

HENRY GAZE & SONS, LTD.

220 South Clark Street, Chicago.
135 South Fifth Street, Philadelphia.

142 Strand, London, England.

Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society Number

Volume LXXXI Number 38

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Boston Thursday 17th September 1896

SAMUEL B CAPEN.

President of the Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society.

IT is now nearly fifteen years since the Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society was practically reconstructed and began earnestly to prosecute missionary Sunday school work. . . . We think this period of fifteen years may be fairly called the Renaissance of Congregationalism. We no longer go about as a denomination with a kind of "hang-dog look," as though we were apologizing for our existence, but we have come to have some self-respect. We believe more and more in the simple polity which we have inherited from our Pilgrim ancestors, and are determined to do our part with other denominations in an aggressive Christianity which will help redeem this land of Christ.—Samuel B. Capen.

Educational.

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY.
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established, 1855.
3 EAST 14TH STREET N. Y.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.
4 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.. Chicago, Ill.; and Los Angeles, Cal. 100-page Agency Manual free. EVERETT O. FISK & CO.

THEOLOGICAL.

MASSACHUSETTS, ANDOVER.
ANDOVER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
Term begins Sept. 16. Opening lectures at 4 P. M. For catalogue or further information apply to GEORGE HARRIS, Pres. of the Faculty.

CONNECTICUT, NEW HAVEN.
YALE DIVINITY SCHOOL.
Term opens Sept. 24. The School offers many University advantages. For catalogues or information, address Prof. GEO. B. STEVENS, New Haven, Ct.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

NEW LONDON, N. H.
COLBY ACADEMY.
$200 to $250 a Year. Coeducational. 44th Year. Send for Catalogue. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, President.

MASSACHUSETTS.

MASSACHUSETTS, DUXBURY.
POWDER POINT SCHOOL (FOR BOYS).
F. B. KNAPP, S.B., Duxbury, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, SOUTH BYFIELD.
DUMMER ACADEMY (Home School).
Founded 1763. Thorough training for College and Technical Schools. PERLEY L. HORNE, A. M.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.
BOSTON UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL,
New Hall, Ashburton Place,
Opens Oct. 7. Boston, Mass

MASSACHUSETTS, ANDOVER.
ABBOT ACADEMY
For Young Ladies. Begins its 68th year September 17th, offering enlarged opportunities. Three Seminary courses of studies and a College-fitting Course. Address Miss LAURA S. WATSON, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, BRADFORD.
CARLETON SCHOOL for Young Men and Boys. College preparatory and general course of study. Individual teaching. Gymnasium bowling alley, etc. Circulars. I. N. CARLETON, Ph. D.

MASSACHUSETTS, MONTVALE.
ASHLEY HALL HOME SCHOOL
For Young Ladies.
Ten miles from Boston. Music, Art and Languages. Thorough preparation for college.
Miss WHITTEMORE, Principal, Montvale, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, ASHBURNHAM.
CUSHING ACADEMY,
Ashburnham, Mass. Co-educational. Six courses of study. New buildings. Large Gymnasium. Fine Laboratories. $200 a year. Send for catalogue to H. S. COWELL, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.
College of Physicians and Surgeons.
Men and women. Rules of Assoc. Am. Med. Colleges 17th year opens Sept 16. Part tuition for clinical service. 20,000 med. calls in '95. Near Boston City Hospital. AUGUSTUS P. CLARK, A.M., M.D., Dean. (Send for Catalogue.) 517 Shawmut Ave., Boston, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.
HIGHLAND MILITARY ACADEMY,
Worcester ("The Academic City"), Mass. 41st year. Best preparation for College, Professional or Business life. Healthful location. Careful selection and supervision of students. Small Classes.
JOSEPH ALDEN SHAW, A. M., Head Master.

MASSACHUSETTS, DANVERS.
WILLARD HALL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
Tenth Year begins Sept. 22.
College Preparatory and Elective Courses.
Principal, SARAH M. MERRILL.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.
SCHOOL OF DOMESTIC SCIENCE
and Christian Workers. Courses for Teachers, Matrons, Home-Makers, City Missionaries, Pastor's Assistants, Y. W. C. A. Secretaries, etc. Ninth year. Address for circulars Miss L. L. Sherman, Principal (formerly principal D. L. Moody's Training School), 52 Berkeley St., Boston, Mass. (B. Y. W. C. A.)

MASSACHUSETTS, NORTON.
WHEATON SEMINARY
For Young Ladies. Regular and elective courses, literary, scientific, classical. Pupils also fitted for advanced courses in leading colleges. Excellent advantages in art and music. Fine library, laboratory, observatory, gymnasium, bowling alley; outdoor sports, careful physical training. Perfect sanitary arrangements. Best home influences. Beautifully situated, 28 miles from Boston.
62d year. Fall term, Sept. 10, 1896. For illustrated prospectus, address
Miss A. E. STANTON, Principal, Norton, Mass.

JUST PUBLISHED!
Eighteen New Copyright Editions
OF THE
Genuine "Oxford" Teachers' Bibles,
WITH NEW HELPS, MAPS AND 124 FULL-PAGE PLATES.
Over 2,000,000 copies of former editions sold.
"By far the most useful and beautiful Bible the world has seen as yet."
"No description can adequately represent all that it includes."
100 Styles, from $1.25 upwards.
For sale by all Booksellers. Send for Catalogue.
OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS,
American Branch
HENRY FROWDE,
91 and 93 Fifth Avenue, New York.

THESE NEW EDITIONS ARE
Models of Clear Type, Strong Bindings, Excellent Paper.
THE VERY LATEST AND BEST HELPS.
It is worthy of note that the "Oxford" Bible is the only Teachers' Bible that has ever been imitated and reprinted, a sure proof of the wonderful popularity and merit of the Genuine Edition.
No other Bible contains these New Helps and Plates.
Don't allow an inferior Bible to be palmed off on you by the statement, "It is as good as the 'Oxford.'"
Be sure this imprint is on the title page:
OXFORD:
PRINTED AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS.
LONDON: HENRY FROWDE.
Oxford University Press Warehouse, Amen Corner
NEW YORK: 91 AND 93, FIFTH AVENUE.

ASK FOR THE GENUINE OXFORD EDITION

Educational.

CONNECTICUT.

CONNECTICUT, LAKEVILLE.
THE HOTCHKISS SCHOOL,
Lakeville, Conn. Prepares for the best Colleges and Scientific Schools. The next year will begin September 16, 1896.
EDWARD G. COY, Head Master.

CONNECTICUT, NORWALK.
MISS BAIRD'S INSTITUTE FOR GIRLS,
Norwalk, Conn. 25th year. Primary, Academic, and College Preparatory courses. Music, Art, and the Languages. Careful attention to morals and manners. New buildings, steam heat, gymnasium.

CONNECTICUT, STAMFORD.
"What we do, we do well."
Betts Academy,
Stamford, Conn.

On September 21st the old bell will ring in our 53th year.
Home life and the individual are the keynotes at this school. Each boy is taught how to study—how to think and reason for himself, and is trained in observation and research.
Preparation for any Technical School or University, and a liberal, practical training to those not intending to enter college.
New building, modern conveniences. Large, beautiful grounds adapted for athletics and out-door sports of all seasons. Illustrated catalogue on application. Personal inspection preferred. (One hour from New York.) WM. J. BETTS, M.A. (Yale), Principal.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, PEEKSKILL.
THE PEEKSKILL MILITARY ACADEMY
Peekskill, N. Y. 63d year. Send for illustrated catalogue. COL. LOUIS H. ORLEMAN, Prin.

NEW YORK, POUGHKEEPSIE.
LYNDON HALL SCHOOL.
For Young Ladies. 48th year. College preparation SAMUEL WELLS BUCK, A.M., Poughkeepsie, N. Y

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.
Miss S. D. Doremus
BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
RE-OPENS OCTOBER 1ST.
735 Madison Avenue, New York.

NEW YORK, CORNWALL-ON-HUDSON.
NEW YORK MILITARY ACADEMY,
Cornwall-on-Hudson, N. Y. For boarding cadets only. Completely equipped and beautifully located on Hudson River, near West Point. For catalogue, address S. C. JONES, C. E., Supt.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.
MRS. LESLIE MORGAN'S
Boarding and Day School for Girls, 15 West 86th Street, New York City. Thorough English from Kindergarten through College Preparatory. Miss Catherine Aiken's Method of Concentrated Attention in Mind Training a special feature; also conversational French and German. Home and Chaperonage for special students.

NEW YORK, KEUKA.
KEUKA COLLEGE,
Institute and School for Christian Workers. Institute prepares for college and business. College offers two courses, classical and Latin scientific. School for Christian Workers (interdenominational) aims to increase the efficiency of young people in our churches. $175 covers all expenses. Year begins Sept. 8. Apply to Rev. N. M. CALHOUN, President.

PENNSYLVANIA.

PENNSYLVANIA, PHILADELPHIA.
THE WALTON-WELLESLEY SCHOOL,
2101 and 2103 Spruce St., Philadelphia. For Girls. Possesses finest private property in city. Boarding and day. 15th year. Academic, College Preparatory and Musical Depts. For illus. cat. and refs., address Dr. and Mrs. JAMES R. DANFORTH.

Educational.

MASSACHUSETTS.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.
THE IDEA OF "GOING TO EUROPE" for a musical education grows weaker as the power of the
New England Conservatory of Music,
Elocution and Languages,
Boston, Mass., grows stronger. Already the largest in America, it competes with the world. Carl Faelten, Director. Send to Frank W. Hale, Business Manager, for prospectus.

MASSACHUSETTS, SPRINGFIELD.
Attractive Life Calling.
An unequaled opportunity for some of our best men and women in the "new profession"—lay, Sunday school and missionary work. The School for Christian Workers, Springfield, Mass., should enter 100 leaders Sept. 2d in order to begin to fill the demand. New: Ladies' Home, recognized practical missionary instructor, decision by trustees to place institution on highest educational basis and secure as president a leader among college and seminary presidents. Arouse your friends and send for catalogue.

Religious Notices.

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, etc., published under this heading at ten cents a line.

REV. C. H. WILLIAMS, of Hartford, may be addressed at the Norfolk House, Roxbury, until Oct. 1, by churches desiring his services.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.
Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the Society at New York.
JAMES W. ELWELL, President.
REV. W. C. STITT, Secretary.
W. C. STURGES, Treasurer.

Subscribers' Wants.

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

Printer. Wanted an all-round printer to superintend printing office in Southern colored school. References required as to ability, church membership and missionary spirit Address Printer, care The Congregationalist.

A Mother's Helper wanted to assist in care of children. References exchanged. Address Lock Box No. 1295, Orange, Mass.

Position Wanted. A middle-aged Christian man desires a permanent situation. Capable of managing a mercantile or manufacturing business. Would assume any situation of trust or responsibility. Moderate salary. Correspondence solicited. J. C. Mather, Noroton Heights, Ct.

Wanted, by a clergyman's daughter, a position as private secretary, companion, attendant, mother's assistant, or other position where she can make herself useful. Satisfactory references. Address G., care Congregationalist.

TRAINING OF ATTENDANTS.

The classes, under the care of the Massachusetts Emergency and Hygiene Association, Dr. John Homans, 2d, President, for the training of women in the care of the sick and aged will be resumed October 5th, 1896, and continue through the winter Tuition, $15.00 for nine weeks' instruction, including practical demonstration. Dr. ANNA G. RICHARDSON, Instructor. For further particulars apply to the secretary, 18 Exeter Street, Boston.

Walking Hats

For Ladies and Misses, in Wool, Fur and Camel's Hair Felt, trimmed in every conceivable way, at 50c. and Upward.

Wm. S. Butler & Co.,

TREMONT STREET, BOSTON.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.'S

NEW BOOKS.

Talks on Writing English.

By ARLO BATES, Litt.D., Professor of English in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

Mr. Bates has done the difficult task of writing an interesting book about the art of writing. It is not a formal treatise, but a familiar and animated explanation, full of apt illustrations of the principles of effective expression.

George Fox.

By THOMAS HODGKIN, D.C.L. An important volume in the Leaders of Religion Series. With a Portrait by Sir Peter Lely. 12mo, $1.00.

An Arctic Boat Journey in the Autumn of 1854.

By I. I. HAYES, M.D. New Edition. With 14 illustrations. 12mo, $1.50

Sold by all Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

Sunday: The Lord's Day.

"The literature of the subject should be studied."—Pastoral letter in The Congregationalist, June 18.

Prominent, timely and warmly commended on all sides. Among recent books on this subject is The Sunday Question, by S. E. WARREN, C. E., showing the day to be especially man's day. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

JAMES H. EARLE, 178 Washington Street, Boston.

THE HOLY CITY.

BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED LECTURES,

Fresh, entertaining, instructive. One thousand new and striking pictures, covering every topic of interest connected with Jerusalem and Palestine. At popular prices these valuable lectures are placed easily within the reach of Lyceums, Churches, Christian Endeavor Societies and Sunday Schools. Bishop Phillips Brooks said: "Dr. Merrill is the most interesting lecturer on Palestine that I have ever listened to." Address

SELAH MERRILL, Andover, Mass.

HIGHEST PRAISE. FOR SABBATH SCHOOLS. $30 per 100.

Christian Endeavor Hymns. $30 per 100.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.,

6 East 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, MERIDEN.

KIMBALL UNION ACADEMY,

Meriden, N. H. New buildings. Enlarged facilities. Beautiful and healthful location. Four-years courses of study. The Departments of Oratory and Physical Culture just established. Young men and women fitted for our best colleges. Students of limited means received on the "$100 a year plan." 82d year begins Sept. 9, 1896. Send for Catalogue.

W. H. CUMMINGS, A. M., Principal.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER.

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
- Paragraphs 393
- The People Can Be Trusted 394
- Examine It; Support It 394
- Retrospective September 394
- The Board's Financial Year 395
- The Eastern Problem 395
- Dorcas and Her Usefulness 396
- The Dominant Note in Reading 417
- Current History 396
- In Brief 398

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE:
- The Interior 399

CONTRIBUTIONS:
- The Bible Schools in the Smaller Places. Milton A. Dixon 400
- The Mystery of a Nation's Wrongs. Rev. James Denney, D.D. 401
- Charity Chance. Chap. X. Walter Raymond 402
- The Sunday School Library. Charles S. Olcott 403
- How General Gordon Tried to Kill Li Hung Chang. Rev. F. T. Rouse 403
- A Review Lesson. Rev. A. W. Hitchcock 404
- A Word About the International Lessons. Rev. F. N. Peloubet, D.D. 404

THE HOME:
- The Thinning Ranks—a poem. Margaret E. Sangster 412
- Out West. Rev. Cornelius H. Patton 412
- "Are You Ready for Church?" A Puritan 413
- Good-By—a selected poem 413
- Health Hints 413
- Closet and Altar 413
- The Little Teacher 414
- Posing—a selection 414
- Mothers in Council 415
- Juvenile Jokes 415
- Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 406
- Corner Scrap-Book 406

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL—Review 416
- Notes 425

Y. P. S. C. E.—Topic for Sept. 27-Oct. 3 405

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM 405

LITERATURE 417

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 419
- Weekly Register 426

MISCELLANEOUS:
- English Comment on an Anglo-Russian Alliance 402
- From the Hawkeye State 404
- The Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society 407
- Co-operation in Sunday School Work 410
- An Ohio Dedication 411
- Biographical 411
- Notices 419
- Business Outlook 424
- Boston Superintendents' Union 425
- Marriages and Deaths 425
- Our Honor at Stake—a selection 427
- President Bliss and Mr. Bryan—a selection 427

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER.

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849.

Published every Thursday,

At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.

PER COPY, 6 CENTS. PER YEAR IN ADVANCE, $3.00.

TWO YEARS IN ADVANCE, $5.00; FIVE YEARS, $10.00.

IF PAYMENT IS DELAYED, $3.50 PER YEAR.

ONE OLD AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION, $5.00.

CLUB OF FIVE, ONE AT LEAST BEING NEW, $10.00.

On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 cents.

RECEIPTS for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.

DISCONTINUANCES.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

ADVERTISING RATES.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 11½ inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.

READING NOTICES, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston.

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd.

I'LL TRY GAZE'S TOURS GOOD IDEA.

52 YEARS OF SUCCESS

Escorted Parties leave as follows October 6:

ROUND THE WORLD	All Included	Choice of Routes	Programs Free By Post
Southern Europe and Italy	By American Line	By North German Lloyd	Sept. 30 and Oct. 3 & 31
Excursions to Rome	Sept. 19 and Oct. 10	Special Rates All Included

53 DAYS $280.00 UPWARD.
60 DAYS $450.00 UPWARD.

Write for Programs of Oriental Tours. Also First Class.

113 DAYS $860.00, All Included.

Independent Travel Tickets Everywhere. Good Steamer Berths by all Lines.

WRITE FOR TOURIST GAZETTE AND SAVE MONEY.

Post Free Upon Application.

H. GAZE & SONS, Ltd.,

113 Broadway, New York, or

W. H. EAVES, New England Agent,

201 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

PROGRAMS WILL BE FURNISHED NOW.

"Where Times are Prosperous"

IN THE

Rocky Mountains

TAKE THE...

ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

To Denver, Colorado Springs, or Pueblo.

ONLY DIRECT LINE TO COLORADO SPRINGS, MANITOU AND PIKES' PEAK

4 HOURS QUICKER TIME TO CRIPPLE CREEK

which should be included in your trip, and an investigation of the resources of this place may well repay your visit.

Tourist Dictionary ...Sent Free... Apply for it.

Address JOHN SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Pass. Agent, CHICAGO.

THE ORIGINAL FAST LINE

BETWEEN

CHICAGO
DUBUQUE
ST. PAUL
MINNEAPOLIS
DES MOINES
ST. JOSEPH
KANSAS CITY

F. H. LORD, G. P. & T. A., CHICAGO.

Every pound of . . .

The Franklin Mills Fine Flour of Entire Wheat

represents a pound of Food Value, and is the cheapest flour ever known.

Always ask for "Franklin Mills." All leading Grocers sell it.

Congregational S. S. & Publishing Society,

Congregational House, Boston. 175 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

The Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society keeps always in stock or has arrangements for the prompt supply of ALL BOOKS, RELIGIOUS AND SECULAR, likely to be called for by Pastors, Churches, Sunday-Schools, Endeavor Societies, or Christian Families. But we call attention to goods in the following departments of our business.

DEPARTMENTS.

Periodicals.

Our own "PILGRIM SERIES" of Lesson Helps and Papers is superior to all others in the estimation of Congregational schools. THREE SEPARATE COURSES are now published, each in four or five grades. We also have arrangements for furnishing Sunday-School publications of all other houses and denominational societies at their prices. No school, therefore, needs to divide its orders when it wishes to use some publication other than ours. We furnish everything at lowest rates and save you the trouble of unnecessary correspondence.

The Sunday-School Library.

We make a specialty of approved books for Sunday-School Libraries, including the best publications of all leading houses as well as our own. We have, therefore, the most complete and carefully selected stock that money can buy. On the very best books we make (with few exceptions) a reduction of one-third from catalogue prices. On old and shopworn books, as also on some excellent books in sets, still lower rates. We have an APPROVED LIST of books, prepared by our own Reading Committee, which we are happy to send you on application.

Sunday-School Cards.

We carry some 300 different styles of cards selected from the lines of the leading art publishers in Europe and America. We make a discount of 20 per cent. on all cards, and a larger discount upon special lots when the selection is left to us. At this rate small tickets cost from $\frac{1}{10}$ to $\frac{1}{5}$ of a cent each, and large and beautiful reward cards from $\frac{3}{4}$ of a cent to 3 cents each.

Hymn Books.

We have all the Church, Sunday-School, and Prayer Meeting Hymnals in common use, including all editions of Gospel Hymns. We are special agents for all the prominent publications, and our prices are always as low as can be had anywhere. We often have second-hand hymn books at remarkably low prices. Do not buy hymn books until you have corresponded with us.

Church and Sunday-School Supplies.

We publish the PILGRIM RECORDS, for Churches, Pastors, Sunday-Schools, Treasurers, etc. The most complete and practical series in existence, and we keep all kinds of requisites for churches and schools, such as Weekly Offering Envelopes, Church and Sunday-School Record Books (of all publishers), Maps, Blackboards, Communion Wine, Money Barrels, Baptismal and Marriage Certificates, etc. We print Catalogues, Manuals, Circulars, etc., in the best manner, and can even execute your order for a pulpit, or chairs, or communion set in a very satisfactory manner.

Bibles.

Prices have been greatly reduced on Oxford, Bagster, International, and Eyre and Spottiswood Bibles, both old and revised versions. From the reduced prices quoted by the publishers we make a further reduction to our regular customers. Special prices on Family and Pulpit Bibles. Never could a really good Bible be bought for so little money as now.

Theological Books.

Ministers may safely order from us any book they see reviewed or advertised. We receive the important new books, American and foreign, as soon as issued, and we are in constant communication with the principal publishing houses. Moreover, we try to know something more of a book than merely its title, and can often give helpful suggestions to purchasers who cannot come and examine for themselves. We make 25 per cent. reduction on all except "net" books, and special rates and easy terms on large orders.

General Books.

We have the works of all popular writers, Histories, Cyclopedias, Dictionaries, Atlases, Books of Science, Philosophy, Sociology, Fiction of the better sort, Artistic Gift-Books, Poems, etc., in all styles, at all prices. It is not necessary to cut your orders apart and send us only the strictly religious portion. We fill your whole order for anything in the book line at our usual low rates and in a prompt and intelligent manner.

Our Earnings help our Missionary Department in its important work of organizing new and in aiding weak Sunday Schools. If all our Congregational people would take pains to send us all their orders we could contribute several thousand dollars more than we now do for this purpose. May we have all your orders?

PATRONIZE YOUR OWN BOOKSTORES.

Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society,

BOSTON AND CHICAGO.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Volume LXXXI Boston Thursday 17 September 1896 Number 38

HANDBOOK No. 11 (July, 1896).

Anglo-American Comity. By Rev. WASHINGTON GLADDEN, D D

HANDBOOK No. 10 (April, 1896).

Eighty Years of Congregationalism. WALKER.
Eighty Years of Christian History. HURST.
Eighty Years of Political History. HART.

✠ TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS. ✠

6 Months for $1.00
3 Months for 25 cts. 4 Weeks Free.

"RALLY Sunday," which occurs this year Sept. 27, rings with inspiration and ought to be one of the most notable and fruitful days in the church year. Designed to serve primarily as a starting point for the Sunday school work of the autumn and winter, it may have a still larger bearing and prove to be the point of departure for renewed activity in every department of church life. Our issue of this week aims to kindle enthusiasm in this direction, and while the interests of our own denominational Sunday School Society are given a deserved prominence, much material is furnished which relates to Sunday school problems in general. Helpful articles on the library, the review lesson, the opportunities of the Bible school in small towns and other practical everyday concerns will not be overlooked. We take it for granted that the great majority of our readers are either members of Sunday schools or hearty believers in that institution. As such, then, we expect them to appreciate the special flavoring of this issue. Once or twice a year is certainly not too often to call attention to what the right arm of the church is and what it ought to be.

There is much church business to be transacted in the next few months, and there are countless opportunities for disagreement and misunderstanding, which become also opportunities for wisdom and forbearance. Fortunately, most men upon whom the churches have conferred the honor of responsibility regard it as the most sacred of trusts and are ready to make any possible concession to avoid a public disagreement. When we stop to consider seriously what a church quarrel means, any sacrifice of self-interest or pride seems little compared with its disaster. Remembering how it lames enthusiasm, puts a stop to active work, allows the profane to rejoice in the divisions of God's people, what slights, neglects, insults or vexations shall induce us to be sharers in the mischief? To choke quarrels in their beginning is easy if Christians are devoted to Christ's service. We hope for an increase of this devotion which will give us a clean record for the winter in this respect among all our churches East and West.

In the lifetime of a single generation the most disagreeable experiences are forgotten. There are tens of thousands of older men who remember the wildcat banks and the uncertain and locally shifting value of bank bills, and yet there are multitudes to whom a bank is the summing up of all iniquity because of the very laws which make it stable and its bills secure and acceptable from one end of the country to the other. Here, for instance, is one of our Roman Catholic newspapers asking in an ironical catechism, "What is an anarchist?" Its answer is: "A person who questions the divine right of plunder enjoyed by banks, trusts and other forms of predatory organization. . . ." The question of allowing banks to issue notes which pass for money is an open question which we cannot discuss here, but no one is compelled to take a national bank note. Banks exist to collect the money of depositors and loan it on good security to business men. No one is compelled to deposit money in a bank or to borrow money from it. Where, then, does the "divine right of plunder" come in, and how is an institution which can only exist by the confidence of the public and goes into instant liquidation when its deposits fail properly called "predatory"? It is where there are no banks that money is hard to borrow and only to be had at oppressive rates of interest. We wonder whether our contemporary keeps a bank account and pays its bills by check? Certainly, if it does have dealings with one of these "predatory" institutions it does so by no compulsion save that of its own convenience.

The Archbishop of Paris forbids his clergy to bicycle as, in his opinion, "it is incompatible with ecclesiastical dignity, calculated to lower the rider in the estimation of the faithful, and expose him to the taunts and mockeries of the infidel." How much more sensible the view taken by the Wesleyans of England and the Salvation Army here and abroad who are itinerating on the bicycle and letting "ecclesiastical dignity" go to the winds. What is dignity, anyhow, if, as the London Spectator says, it be not based on "moderation, calmness of manner, good sense and good feeling," all of which a man can reveal astride a wheel as well as astride a horse or walking.

Some weeks ago in our educational number we discussed the question of compulsory worship in our colleges, and the article has been widely commented upon. One correspondent suggests that it is compulsory attendance, not worship, which is the college law, for no one can be compelled to worship. We recognize this fact and the obligation it carries for Christians in the faculty and among the students. The daily public prayers are an opportunity of worship, and the spirit in which that opportunity is accepted by those to whom worship ought to be a privilege will largely determine the public sentiment of the under-graduates. The writer attended morning prayers in his own college recently and was shocked to observe that the tutor who sat next him in the gallery was openly employing the prayer time in noting the presence or absence of the members of the class for which he was responsible. If this is the way in which the faculty regard the daily opportunity of worship what can we expect of the under-graduates? If the morning hour of prayer is to be a mere rounding up of the students for marking attendance the total abstention of the teachers becomes excusable. If it is intended to be real worship, which shall express the corporate life of the institution, some of them, sometimes, ought to have interest enough to attend.

Desirous as we are of stimulating interest in our denominational Sunday school work, we would not have our Congregational constituency blind to the advantages of interdenominational activity. Indeed, the existence of the International Lesson System and the holding of great interdenominational gatherings show that already many steps have been taken in this direction. Secretary Boynton's address at the recent Boston convention, a portion of which we reprint this week, indicates the disposition of our own leaders to join hands with Christians of other bodies whenever the opportunity offers. New England is already well organized with State associations in which evangelical Christians work in harmony. Most of the States employ a field secretary and maintain distinct county and district organizations, in which frequent conventions secure the spread of enthusiasm and constant improvement in the quality of Sunday school work. Massachusetts was the first State to employ a secretary to develop primary work, and as a result of the labors of Miss Bertha M. Vella for four years and a half several primary unions have been organized. Meanwhile, the State committee has not neglected the home department and the arousing of interest in normal training. This State body in its present organization represents the united zeal and wisdom of many of our most experienced and ardent Sunday school workers. We are constantly discovering traces of the association's fruitful activity in various parts of the State. We hope the forthcoming Northampton convention, Oct. 6–8, will be the best ever held and generate a feeling of hopefulness that will reinvigorate many a school throughout the State.

At the instance of the students who are taking the theological course in the University of Aberdeen, Scotland, Professor Johnston has been tried by the University Court, declared incompetent, removed from his chair and given a retiring allowance. He has appealed from the decision and is posing as a martyr to the cause of orthodoxy, whereas the evidence on which the verdict was based was entirely relative to his shortcomings as a pedagogue, and not as to his orthodoxy or heterodoxy. Public opinion in Great Britain sustains the verdict, people generally sensibly holding that it is of far more consequence that young men should be properly instructed and guided than it is that the individual teacher's feelings should be spared humiliation. Would that there were some gentler method than a formal trial for bringing about the same reform in some of our American institutions of learning. The British Weekly is quite right when it says, in commenting on the Johnston case, "Teachers (in theological seminaries) ought to be employed as other men are employed, and put under the wholesome rules and regulations which other men have to submit to. They should be placed in circumstances where they suffer immediately from the result of insufficiency and should be promptly removed when it is seen that they are unfit for the offices they are appointed to."

THE PEOPLE CAN BE TRUSTED.

This generation has never shared in a political campaign in which moral issues were so prominent as now. The questions under discussion are mainly economic, but first of all they require an answer as to what is fair dealing between man and man. That is the pivotal question. It is not a question only as to what is righteous between this nation and other nations, nor as to what is just between one section of the country and another, but it is the question as to whether a man in any section can trust his neighbor. If he cannot, the nation is beyond hope.

Is it fair to demand payment in gold, or its equivalent, for debts contracted when products of labor generally commanded higher prices than now? Is it fair to change our laws so that debts may be paid in silver which can now be procured for about half the face value of these promises to pay? Either of these questions is answered affirmatively by many honest men. On both sides men give their reasons for their positions with frankness and earnestness which demonstrate their sincerity. Multitudes defend the free coinage of silver who do not expect to be directly benefited if free coinage should prevail. Indeed, it is probable that as large a proportion of honest men are to be found in one party as in another.

The issues of the campaign, then, must be discussed on their merits, and those on one side must not asperse the character of those on the other. This has been said often enough already were it not that it is constantly being disregarded. But, further than that, the rank and file in all the parties can be trusted. They love their country. They would not willingly weaken its strength nor destroy its fair fame. There are many in every political party and, indeed, in every community, who would die in its behalf.

This campaign, too, ought to be carried on with confidence in the future of our nation. Political leaders ought to speak of their opponents, not as traitors but as patriots. When they seek to show that the measures they oppose would lead to disaster, they ought to make it plain that all the people would be involved in the disaster and to admit that none are intentionally working for it. Our opponents are not our enemies. We are to offer them, not the sword blade, but light, and be ourselves open to light. If both sides in this contest —for at present there are only two sides— believe in the integrity of purpose of the whole people, we shall maintain our unity as a nation and gain a satisfactory solution of our problems. If the people lose faith in one another, whether as a whole or in part, then whichever side wins the country is lost.

But if we believe the people are honest in purpose, then in present conditions the gravest responsibilities press on us to place the situation clearly before them. Those who believe, as we do, that integrity can be maintained and prosperity assured only by maintaining the standard of money held by the other great nations of the world, must leave no honorable means untried during the next seven weeks to put before all the people the grounds on which we stand. We have underestimated our duties as citizens. Where every one is a sovereign every one ought to know how to rule. To give money, time, thought and prayer to instruct in righteousness our own citizens on questions in which the life of the nation is involved, especially when they are soon to vote on these questions, is as truly a religious duty as to give the gospel to other nations and not a whit less important.

Above all, let us approach our fellow-citizens with confidence that they mean to do right. Let us join heartily in the appeal to their self-interest and insist that it pays to be honest. But let us hold fast to the conviction that they will be honest when they see what is the honest way, whether it pays or not. The American people value righteousness more than prosperity, manhood more than money, and it is safe to trust them to strive for the higher good if we can make them see clearly what is that good. If through our negligence or selfishness the majority fail to see it, we shall deserve the disaster that will follow.

EXAMINE IT; SUPPORT IT.

We have tried this week to portray the administrative work of the Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society, or the Children's Society, as it is sometimes called, because it is, to a large extent, a mission by the children for the children and through the children to their homes and neighborhoods. And what a sensible, thrifty child the denomination has in this society, to be sure! Its money never goes for sweets or fireworks and it never spends its bottom dollar. How little it asks, how much it gives!—for great are the gifts of childhood. Into crowded city and out on plain and prairie it goes with outstretched hands and "shining morning face"; and ignorance and discord flee at its approach. Shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, it safely treads where church and pastor might not be able to find a footing. Happy the land that welcomes and nourishes such an influence for good! Childhood won to Christ in this generation means the nation for Christ in the next.

There would be a more general appreciation of all our societies if pains were taken to study their methods and arrive at a proper estimate of the character and value of their work. The result of our recent study of the administration of the Sunday School Society confirms us in the conviction that not only do economy, foresight and enterprise characterize its management, but that this society could not give over its work to any of the others without endangering the cause at stake. Those critics who think we have too many societies need only to acquaint themselves with existing facts and conditions to have removed, so far as the Sunday School Society is concerned, the last vestige of doubt and misgiving as to its right to be.

There are special reasons why the denomination should be loyal to this society. It has undergone in the last fifteen years a thorough reconstruction in its business and literary departments at the hands of exceptionally careful and progressive business men. As a result the society now challenges comparison, both as respects its methods of administration and the outcome of its labors in the field, with those of other denominations organized for a similar purpose. It never incurs a debt and never keeps its missionaries waiting for their salaries. It has adopted a commendable policy in reference to legacies, whereby they are in their expenditure spread over a period of three years. In short, promptness, thoroughness, energy and devotion, not measured by the personal gains to accrue from service, are the cardinal qualities that have brought the society to its present pitch of prosperity, and that insure for it, provided the churches are faithful, giving to the business department their patronage and to the missionary department their contributions, a future career of ever increasing usefulness.

RETROSPECTIVE SEPTEMBER.

September is at once the consummation and the epitome of all the spring and summer months. She not only brings their undertakings to completion, but also in her varying moods she recapitulates them in hidden nooks and corners, as if by way of making sure that she has not forgotten. The children come back from their explorations bringing violets. "We went for a walk to explore the country around there," writes a wee maiden, "and just as we were going back to our things I saw something blue in the grass. On looking closer I found it was a violet. After quite a while three more were found. We got lots of ferns and found a great many frost grapes." It is the unexpected that delights us. The frost grapes were a matter of course in September, but the blue violets hidden in damp hollows among the tangled hillside grasses were worth searching for and bringing home as treasures.

This September habit of retrospect, offering us unexpected glimpses of bygone days, is one of the special charms of the season. The wild blue violets in early May are too many even for the child's enthusiasm, but in September, with its coarser growths and its perpetually multiplying, beautiful but saddening tokens of completion and decay, even the most prosaic of mortals may be delighted to find them or receive them as a gift from a friend. They touch the springs of memory, and the happy days of growth-time shine again.

Other flowers there are in which the season brings the thought of its lost youth back to our remembrance. You may pass through the orchard some foggy September morning and find a single bough or a whole tree snow-white with apple blossoms. It is commonly a crab which indulges in this beautiful eccentricity—as if to hint at acid tempers mellowing with age. We knew a tree which had this habit year by year, and was spared for the beauty of its double blossoming when its sour fruit would have doomed it to the woodpile and the fire.

Belated strawberry flowers are quite as common as September violets. On a cold morning in late September, as we crossed the woods, a dry hillside in an open glade was whiter with strawberry blossoms than with hoar frost. It was a year when an unseasonable frost in May had robbed the birds and children of their feast of berries, and these wild plants, having their vigor unexhausted by fruit-bearing, had launched out upon a brave, but fatal, experiment of autumn blossoming, which meant, we fear, a short crop in the following summer also. It was a beautiful, but also a pathetic, sight, for the strawberry flower is not like other flowers. In seeing it we always think of the beauty of the fruit hanging crimson on its stalk beneath the leaves, and this white hoar frost on which the pale sunlight glistened was a too sure forerunner of the snow.

It is in the growths of the field rather than the wood that this September recapitulation most commonly and naturally happens, but it is not unknown in the wood depths. In the deep shadows of the high forest one may sometimes find a few blossoms of the frail wood sorrel, hinting of the earlier beauty that transformed the carpet of light green leaves; and the blossoms of the dwarf cornel, or bunchberry, are not at all uncommon. But who ever found a lady's slipper belated or mistaken in its blossoming time, or a snowy orchid, or a painted trillium, or a silken-hooded hepatica bud uplifted from its clump of bronze-purple leaves? Who has ever discovered even one of the fur-mantled buds which the trailing arbutus makes ready with such dainty and deliberate care opening before it has made acquaintance with the snow? Yet in the open glades and at the wood edges you may find more than the strawberry and the violet. The earliest hawkweed with its mat of purple-veined leaves, which the early settlers associated with the rattlesnake, often makes a new beginning and sends up a lusty shoot in September. A fragile windflower looks up astonished to the maple tree above it, full leaved and crimson against the sky. Rarest and most beautiful of all, by northern wood openings and pathsides, the linnæa sometimes takes the time of autumn's glory to lift up her companies of twin pink bells from which such exquisite perfume is always ringing.

Much more common than these returns upon its own history are the survivals of the year. The long-burred wands of agrimony are golden at the tips, meadow-sweet spires are still to be discovered on the hillside, pink and white thoroughwort, though frayed and faded, holds possession of the brookside, with the last fire of the cardinal flower between. You may even launch upon some quiet pond in the recesses of the woods and come home with treasure-trove of water lilies and, perhaps, a stray pickerel weed or saggitaria. The growing world, in fact, seems quite as reluctant to give up its memories of summer as mortals ever are, and clings to every show of youth. When the earliest frosts come with their sharp discrimination between delicate and hardy growths, even then September does not quite despair. There are gaps in her array, but many of the smitten ones take heart of grace and lay new plans of blossoming on the return of genial days. When the real end comes—the black frost that ruins everything—it is upon a still ambitious and courageous life it falls.

It is in the life of birds that September's note is saddest, for here she reads the story of the spring again, but reads it backward. All the feathered multitudes that hurried home or paid us cheerful visits on their northward flight are passing by; but the jolly note, the song of love, the glory of the fresh courting plumage—all is changed. The sojourners gather on the sheltered side of the woods in flocks. They are shy and silent, and evidently discontented with the prospects of the time. Some day, when we go to look for them, they are gone. Only the tardy thistle birds are atilt on the tall weeds, rejoicing in their special harvest time of oily seeds, and in the high woods rings the ever cheerful note of the chickadees, careless of winter cold. September holds the magic spell of winged life, but reads it backward, so that all the vision disappears. We must make friends with our few cheery comrades of the wintertime, and wait with patience until April, in her turn, takes up the book and recites the charm for us in the happier order of growth, delight and song.

THE BOARD'S FINANCIAL YEAR.

All friends of missions will be encouraged by learning that the American Board closed its financial year Sept. 1 without debt and with $502 in its treasury. It began the year with a debt of $114,632. Not for a long period has business been weighted with so heavy a depression as during most of the last twelve months. Many churches have found great difficulty in meeting their current expenses. Incomes have been reduced that had already largely fallen off. Yet during the entire history of the Board its receipts have never been so great as this year except in the years of 1890–1892. The figures are as follows:

	Year ending Sept. 1, 1895.	Year ending Sept. 1, 1896.
Regular donations,	$423,373.11	$426,730.92
Donations for special objects,	45,569.04	43,989.15
Legacies,	150,435.16	116,988.70
	$619,367.31	$587,708.77

Besides donations and legacies, the receipts for the debt, interest on permanent funds, etc., were $155,395.82, making the total from all sources $743,104.59. In addition to all this the Board has received and forwarded for the relief of Armenian sufferers $130,035.96, a large part of which has come from its constituency and much of which would, but for the great need caused by Turkish barbarities, have been given to it for ordinary missionary work. Still further the treasurer has forwarded more than $80,000 to Armenians in Turkey from their relatives and friends in this country.

It will be understood, of course, that so large a portion of the receipts, nearly $115,000, having been given for the payment of the debt, this favorable result has been reached only by severe retrenchment in the field, checking the work at important centers. Yet on the whole the year has been spiritually a prosperous one for missions and in some fields, as in China and Turkey, barriers have been removed and opportunities were never so promising as now.

The treasurer's report is a demonstration of the wisdom of the financial management of the Board, a most cheering evidence that it continues to possess the confidence of the churches, and that its work was never more dear to Christian hearts than now. The conversion of the world to Christ is the supreme mission his followers have undertaken, and though they seem as yet but dimly to comprehend it their interest in it is not waning but increasing. The coming annual meeting will be quickened by the facts that for the first time in four years the Board will face the future without a debt and that it has resolved in future to expend only what is put into its hands. The gathering at Toledo Oct. 6–9, held at a midway point geographically, ought to be largely attended and matters relating to the Japan and Turkish missions are in such a condition that deliberation in regard to them will take on exceptional importance.

THE EASTERN PROBLEM.

There is no conclusive evidence yet that either Great Britain acting alone or the Powers acting together are prepared to prevent further massacres of Christians in Turkey, but there is some evidence of an approaching crisis that will seriously effect not only Turkey but the future of Europe. The tension in Constantinople is high. Great Britain has a fleet of fifteen vessels as near as Thasos, within easy striking distance. Sir Philip Currie, the British ambassador, has forced from the sultan during the past week an irade, putting an end to the deportation of Armenians without trial and conviction. Officers of the Turkish army filing claims for back pay and resigning because they failed to get it have been arrested and cast into prison, a proceeding not calculated to develop loyalty in the Turkish troops. The European residents of the city realize that nothing but their own efforts, and those of troops which might be landed if occasion demanded, stand between them and murder, theft and rapine, so absolute is the breakdown of all authority and so farcical is the pretense of executing justice. On Aug. 31 the Powers sent to the Porte abundant testimony proving the guilt of Turks responsible for the recent awful massacres in Constantinople and its suburbs. The Porte has just replied, scoffing at the sworn testimony of European eye-witnesses; and the Extraordinary Tribunal, constituted to investigate the recent massacres, has acquitted the few Turks who were arrested, and, in short, brought in a whitewashing report.

Turning from Constantinople to European centers of population, the outlook is brighter. Public opinion in Great Britain is such now that Lord Salisbury will be supported in the most radical and aggressive action which he may care to take, whether co-operating with the other Powers or not. The Tory press, both religious and secular, is at last awake to the horrors that have been perpetrated and the duty of Christendom, while Liberal organs like The Spectator, The Speaker, The Chronicle and The Daily News are thundering forth demands for the most summary treatment of the sultan; and Lord Rosebery and Mr. Asquith of the recent cabinet have let it be known that the Liberal rank and file will stand shoulder to shoulder with Conservatives in supporting the most drastic measures. Mr. Gladstone has written another letter, in which he says:

In my opinion the assassin, and not his Mohammedan subjects, is the author of the massacres. From first to last their atrocity has no parallel in recent history. The concert of Europe is a miserable, disgraceful mockery, and some sovereigns and governments have given direct countenance and support to the assassin. Indeed, the presence of the embassies at Constantinople is in itself substantial countenance of support to him and his guilty proceedings. The coercion which should long ago have been applied to him might even now be the means of averting another series of massacres.

Mr. Gladstone is expected to speak at one of the many great indignation mass meetings which are to be held in England and Scotland this week.

Happily there are signs of aroused public opinion in Germany and France as well. Thanks to the personal testimony of a son of Leipsius, the great Egyptologist, who recently traveled through Armenia, the German people have at last been given unimpeachable testimony concerning the massacres, and his letters have been republished by the Roman Catholic, Jewish and Protestant press and have made a profound impression. Mass meetings of protest were held in Hamburg and Brunswick last week. Arrangements were made for spreading the news throughout the realm, exciting popular indignation and securing aid—diplomatic and pecuniary—for the persecuted Armenian Christians. In France, too, three of the Christian Socialist deputies have notified M. Honotaux, the minister of foreign affairs, of their intention to interpellate the government as to what measures it has taken or will take to protect the Christian subjects of the sultan of Turkey, and their action and the reply of the ministry will afford an opportunity for beginning a discussion of France's duty. Queen Victoria is credited by some with stiffening Lord Salisbury's backbone, and when the czar of Russia reaches Balmoral the indignant Protestant ruler of Great Britain is expected to confer with the mighty head of the Russian empire and the Greek Church respecting their joint duty as Christian sovereigns. May God grant that they may see their duty clearly and act swiftly. The quotations from English papers which we make elsewhere, and many others that might be reproduced, show that Christian sentiment in England is almost unanimous in favor of an Anglo Russian alliance.

Our own duty in the matter is clear. The Bancroft, which sailed from New York last Saturday, must enter the Dardanelles, when it arrives, and our cruisers now nearest the Mediterranean should be collected where they can be effective if needed. Mr. Terrell, our representative in Constantinople, should keep the Government at Washington informed of every essential incident in the tragedy, and when the time comes for action it should be made clear that, while the United States has no desire to participate in European scrambles for territory, it must be reckoned with as a defender of its own citizens and the protector of the innocent and weak against the vicious and strong. Harold Frederic, the London correspondent of the New York Times, intimates that Great Britain would welcome our support in a movement calculated to end misrule in Turkey. Of course she would, even if it were only moral support. But some day something more tangible than moral support will be needed perhaps, and new precedents, growing out of conditions that George Washington could not foresee, will be established. Face to face with Slavic or Mongolian hordes some day the English-speaking peoples of the world will unite for self-preservation and the perpetuation of Christian civilization and democratic government.

A North Carolina lawyer-preacher was so stirred with righteous indignation recently that, in voicing his wrath, he was almost betrayed into language not permitted to consistent Christians. Checking himself in the midst of an outburst, he said, "I wish to say that the Christian Church ought to invent some form of sound words to be used by ministers of the gospel in times of great provocation."

DORCAS AND HER USEFULNESS.

Dorcas has been the most conspicuous example of the activity of her sex in Christian benevolence and service throughout the history of the church. Humble although she may have been and brief as is the account of her, she is and always will be honorably famous. Moreover, we seem to know just what sort of a woman she was, so suggestive is the mention of her in the sacred record.

Woman's work in the church has its own individuality, the outgrowth in part of external conditions and in part of her feminine powers and tastes. In spite of an exceptional instance now and then, she is not likely to enter the pulpit often as its regular occupant, although her occasional power of eloquent public speech is readily conceded. But in the administration of charities, in the organization and promotion of relief and rescue work, she is easily leader. Patience, perseverance, cheerfulness, sympathy and fertility in resources are her characteristics as a Christian worker, and in sagacity she is not second to the other sex, especially when experience has trained her.

The field of work in the church for women is likely to broaden. The making of garments for the poor apparently was its chief feature in the case of Dorcas, but were she living now this item would be to her but one among many. Yet the modern Dorcas is the same as the ancient. She can be found in almost every church. We all know and love her. Her sweet self-forgetfulness, her quick response to every appeal of grief or need, her appreciative and helpful yet discriminating sympathy, her persuasive influence—succeeding often when every other appeal has failed to save—her unshaken faith in human nature, and above all her calm, sure trust in God as she busies her hands and feet in his service—these are her qualities, and as they are mentioned certain faces come to mind at once. Thank God for them!

Dorcas need not and will not disregard the obligations of home or friends. She need not neglect self-culture or the legitimate claims of society. But in all and through all her first and ruling thought is how to serve God by serving her fellowmen and women, especially those whose lives have become overcast.

CURRENT HISTORY.

The Political Campaign.

Mr. McKinley is gaining the ear of the voters of the country in his series of felicitous speeches to those who make up that ever changing stream of organizations—political and otherwise—that passes by his Canton door. He thus has the advantage of being able to say naught but that which he has had time to weigh, and he can suit his argument to those to whom he is appealing. Especially noteworthy during the past week were his talks to the journalists of Ohio, and to the club of 1,000 former Democrats who journeyed from Chicago to see him and tender their support. Mr. Bryan, after a brief sojourn at his home in Lincoln, has begun a tour which will take him South and East, and bring him in touch with a large number of voters. His determination to return East is counter to the wishes of the managers of his party, but he believes that he can carry New York State and will poll a larger vote in New England than others anticipate. His letter accepting the Democratic nomination we refer to in another paragraph. Mr. Watson persists in attacking Mr. Sewall and inveighing against Populists casting their votes for Mr. Bryan if he, Watson, is not recognized by Mr. Bryan and his managers as the natural and legitimate running mate for Mr. Bryan. Back of Mr. Watson in this demand is a very large faction of the Populists in the South and some of those of the West, and it is by no means certain that the silver forces will really fuse and vote together on Nov. 3.

Mr. Hobart, in his letter accepting the Republican nomination of vice-president, revealed again intellectual ability and depth of conviction that promise well, should Mr. McKinley be elected and Providence then decree any sudden elevation of the vice-president to the more responsible position. The letter of Senator Carter of Montana, former chairman of the Republican National Committee, asserting his intention to support Mr. McKinley, notwithstanding his dissent from the monetary plank of the St. Louis convention, is a straw which seems to indicate that the defection of Western silver Republicans will not amount to as much on election day as seemed probable just after Senator Teller and others walked out of the St. Louis convention.

The Defeat of Free Silver in Maine.

The voters of the State of Maine, in unprecedented numbers, went to the polls last Monday and voted for county, State and congressional officials. Neither local issues nor the intrinsic qualities of the candidates counted for much, as during the fiercely fought campaign the emphasis of the speakers and the interest of the auditors centered exclusively on the sharply defined, national issue—a gold or silver monetary standard. The result is due to a union of former Republicans and Democrats determined to maintain the reputation of the State and nation for sanity and honesty. A few of the Democrats voted for the gold standard candidate for governor, Mr. Clifford; more remained away from the polls, and even more voted the Republican ticket, local as well as State and congressional. As a result Hon. Llewellyn Powers, the Republican candidate for governor, has a plurality of 50,000; Maine's distinguished quartet of congressmen, Reed, Dingley, Boutelle and Milliken, go back to Congress with majorities of more than 10,000 each; and Mr. Arthur Sewall, the Democratic candidate for vice-president, not only has been repudiated with the platform on which he stands but the Democratic ticket failed to carry his ward in the city of Bath. Mr. Reed interprets the result as indicating "that the American people intend to dispose of the free silver question in a very decided fashion," and Mr. Reed is not a rainbow chaser.

Mr. Bryan's Letter of Acceptance.

Mr. Bryan's letter accepting the Democratic nomination gives but little attention to the question of monetary standards and even less to the tariff. It is chiefly a defense of those articles of the Chicago platform which condemn the Executive for its assertion of Federal authority in 1894 when dealing with obstructions to interstate commerce, which asperse the reputation of Federal courts and threaten to make them subject to popular whim or dictation. The letter also attacks the national banking system. Life tenure in the civil service is decried and a plea for "a fixed term in appointive offices, except where the Federal Constitution now provides otherwise" is filed. The position virtually is taken that after many years of hard struggle to eradicate the spoils system we are to return to it again.

The Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Harmon, in his letter published last week making known his intention to cast his vote against Mr. Bryan, did well to set forth clearly just what Mr. Bryan's clamor against Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Olney means, how ignorant he is of the Constitution to which he appeals and how wide he is of the mark in his statement of facts. Stripped of its platitudes, Mr. Bryan's contention is that:

> While the United States guarantees to every State a republican form of government and is empowered to protect each State against invasion, it is not authorized to interfere in the domestic affairs of any State, except upon application of the legislature of the State, or upon the application of the executive when the legislature cannot be convened. This provision rests upon the sound theory that the people of the State, acting through their legally chosen representatives, are, because of their more intimate acquaintance with local conditions, better qualified than the President to judge of the necessity for Federal assistance.

Mr. Harmon replies:

> According to Mr. Bryan, there is somewhere implied in the Constitution a prohibition of the free use of force by the United States against persons who, within the limits of a State, may be resisting its officers and paralyzing all its operations as a government, unless the local authorities first make request or give consent. This is contrary to the settled principle that, while the Federal Government's operation is confined to certain subjects, it has, as to those subjects, all the attributes of sovereignty, and one of these is always and everywhere, within the territory of the States which compose it, to suppress and punish those who in any wise interfere with the exercise of its lawful powers. The fact that there are within that territory other governments exercising sovereignty over all matters not so committed to it can make no difference under our double form of government.
>
> Congress has authorized the President to use the armed forces of the Government in aid of the State authorities when requested by them, as provided in the Constitution, and has also authorized him to employ such forces upon his own judgment alone against "unlawful obstructions, combinations or assemblages of persons" in whatever State or Territory the laws of the United States may be forcibly opposed or the execution thereof obstructed.

Both Mr. Bryan and Mr. Harmon are quite right in thinking that the issue on which they disagree is a vital one. We had supposed that the Civil War buried the States' right doctrine so deep that it would not be raised again. Apparently it is alive, and not as a sectional, but a class, war cry. Mr. Bryan's letter, by its omissions and commissions, goes far toward warranting the prediction that his appeal to voters from this time on is to be one calculated to win all the lawless and discontented to his side.

Mr. Cleveland Bolts the Chicago Ticket.

That which has been predicted has come to pass, and yet who, one year ago, would have dared to prophesy that the titular head of the Democratic party, the man who created an issue on which the party returned to power after nearly a generation of exclusion, would repudiate the nominations and platform of his party named and formulated at a convention whose regularity none can dispute, and cast the influence of his administration in every conceivable way, nominally in behalf of "bolting" Democratic candidates, but virtually in behalf of the candidate and platform of the Republican party? And yet that is the situation today, unparalleled in our political history, the significance of which contemporary students of history will not, and cannot, appreciate as justly as those who will come after them. The indorsement of the Palmer and Buckner ticket and platform by President Cleveland, Secretaries Carlisle, Lamont, Herbert and Francis and Attorney-General Harmon during the past week accentuates the division within the Democratic party as nothing else could; and its far-reaching results can only be dimly seen. A weighty Democratic precedent for the "divine right of bolting" has been established. Democratic United States senators, whose lack of judgment or principle are virtually condemned by the President, will have their revenge at the approaching session of Congress. Legislation of the greatest importance may pass or not as the result of this decisive action.

Labor Interests at Home and Abroad.

The pregnant fact that the majority of American wage earners are, by deliberate choice, not members of labor organizations makes it impossible to judge from the utterances of the leaders of organized labor in this country how the current of thought on political issues with the rank and file is running now, or how the wage earners of the country will vote on Nov. 3. But enough of the wage earners are enrolled as members of the trades unions to make it possible and a duty to consider their attitude, and thus far it must be conceded that their drift seems to be toward Mr. Bryan, presumably not so much because of their faith in the remedy of free silver which he prescribes for the social disease, but because he not only heartily indorses but emphasizes those planks of the Chicago platform which condemn Federal interference in labor disputes, either by force of arms or resort to injunctions issued by equity courts. Mr. Debs and his associates in directing the American Railway Union, during the past week, have issued an address to railway employés calling upon them to support Mr. Bryan. On the other hand the former head of the Knights of Labor, Mr. T. V. Powderly, is on the stump appealing to wage earners to vote for Mr. McKinley. But both Mr. Debs and Mr. Powderly are discredited and count for little now. Leaders like Mr. Arthur and Mr. Gompers are not committing themselves or their organizations. In Massachusetts most of the prominent leaders of organized labor are working with the Williams free silver faction of the Democratic party. Throughout the country, however, the majority of wage earners are reading voraciously, are flocking to political rallies in unprecedented numbers, and are doing their own thinking, and their very silence is distracting to all the party managers, for it is recognized by all that they and the farmers have a voting power that is irresistible.

Our alien immigration law, a portion of which was directed at Canadian mechanics, has provoked retaliation, and already the Canadian Parliament has a bill of this sort before it which Premier Laurier has promised not to oppose, if our Government maintains its present stiff attitude. The citizens of British Columbia are aroused on the subject of Asiatic immigration, and are fighting at Ottawa for legislation which will preclude not only Chinese but Japanese laborers from entering their bounds. The feeling is so intense and general that Li Hung Chang received no courtesy in Vancouver save from the Chinese, and went directly from his train to the steamer on which he sailed for China. Hawaii, too, is feeling more and more that a great mistake was made when the doors were opened so unreservedly to the Japanese, and their chief problem now is how to shut the door without giving offense to a Power to which Hawaii is inferior, viewed from the militant standpoint. The Australian colonies also are facing this same problem, and dreading the same measure of naval and military strength. Mexico, ever in search of cheap labor, has just made new concessions to Japanese colonists.

The British Trades Union Congress, in session at Edinburgh last week, was a much more conservative and peaceful gathering than the congresses of 1894 and 1895. The work begun last year, of reinstating conservative trades unionists as leaders, has been completed, and the Norwich platform of 1894 with its socialism has been repudiated. At the same time the demand has been renewed for the nationalization of certain natural monopolies, and credit has been given to the socialist leaders for their service in arousing public sentiment and calling attention to glaring evils. The Edinburgh congress erred, as has all its predecessors, in emphasizing the theoretical and political and depreciating the practical and individual.

The Defeat of the Tillmanites in South Carolina.

South Carolina, on the whole, was cursed by the domination of her old white aristocracy. She was plundered by her white and black rulers during the reconstruction period. She has suffered grievously under the rule of the revolting masses of the whites led by Senator Tillman. It would seem now as if his rule were about to end, and a new era begin in which the best elements of society, drawn from all factions, will rule. There must be enough intelligent men in the State to realize that the commonwealth cannot prosper by a return to past or a continuance of present conditions—political or social—and wherever found these men, whether white or black, learned or unlearned, should unite. Senator Tillman's effort to put John Gary Evans, whom he first made governor of the State, into the United States Senate as his colleague has been repudiated by the rank and file of the Reformers, who joined with the Conservatives in naming Judge Earle at the popular primaries held last week. Judge Earle is a Reformer, but a gentleman, a man of ability and character, and a far worthier incumbent of the seat formerly occupied by Charles Pinckney and John C. Calhoun than either of the men—Irby and Tillman—whom the revolt of the masses against the classes in South Carolina has projected into the arena of national politics. This is Senator Tillman's first defeat. His prestige has gone, and now that his own character as well as that of Governor Evans is assailed, and charges respecting their venality, as well as their subordinates, are current, it becomes apparent that this fomenter of class hatred must divert his attention for a time from national problems and return home to the people, who are revolting against his high-handed rule, and pacify them if he can. If his enemies can prove, as they say they can, that he and Governor

Evans and the head of the State dispensary have all feathered their nests by accepting commissions from manufacturers of liquor sold in the State dispensaries, then the famous dispensary system which Mr. Tillman established when he was governor will probably perish with the fall of the Tillman dynasty.

NOTES.

The bank failures in New Orleans during the past week were caused by rascality in some cases and by lack of reserve strength in others.

After Jan. 1, 1897, Glasgow's revenue from municipal property, chiefly street railways, will be so large that the city will cease taxing its citizens.

Miss Clara Barton has arrived in New York. To all who desire an accounting from her for the work done by herself and agents she promises a statement soon.

Nansen's reception at Norway's capital shows that he is the hero of the Scandinavian people today, and every additional bit of information respecting his trip toward the north pole confirms the opinion that it was a marvelous feat, and one that contributed much to the world's stock of knowledge.

John Hancock's grave in the Granary Burying Ground, Boston, is now marked with a handsome monument, paid for by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, the legislature following the lead of an Afro-American member of the legislature now representing the district of the city where Hancock resided.

The British army's advance toward Dongola and the heart of the Soudan has been resumed. Sir Cecil Rhodes, now that Mr. Chamberlain is in this country, is reasserting authority in Rhodesia, which, it was understood, had been denied him, at least until he had met and answered the charges against him.

Leavenworth, Kan., a historic town in the long struggle to make the Negro a freeman, suffered a blot on its escutcheon last week when an Afro-American graduate of West Point, United States cavalry officer, was refused entertainment by Leavenworth's hotels and compelled to go to Kansas City to find shelter.

A semi-official statement from Scotland Yard explains the arrest, in Boulogne, of Tynan, the Phœnix Park murderer, and the arrest of his fellow-Irishmen in Rotterdam, as the forestalling by British detectives of a gang of Irish Fenian and Russian Nihilist conspirators who had planned to assassinate both Queen Victoria and the czar of Russia while the latter was visiting at Balmoral.

Through thick and thin, ignominy and contumely, whether Tweed plundered or Croker stole, the New York Sun has stanchly defended Tammany and assailed its foes. But Tammany's indorsement of Mr. Bryan and the Chicago platform has caused Mr. Dana to feel more squeamish than when his fellow-citizens have been plundered and misrepresented and misgoverned, and the Sun last week bade Tammany a sad farewell. But, with the Mail and Express, we fear that this farewell is of the Brutus order:

> Therefore our everlasting farewell take;
> Forever and forever, farewell, Cassius!
> If we do meet again, why, we shall smile:
> If not, why then this parting was well made!

We are learning now the truth of George Meredith's aphorism. "Expediency is man's wisdom. Doing right is God's." Ever since the war ceased we have been paltering and compromising on matters pertaining to national finance, calling that money which is only a pledge to pay in money, and catering to producers of a metal that like iron and copper has ceased to be precious and become a commodity. Today we suffer the consequences and shall for years to come, whatever be the verdict in November.

IN BRIEF.

Ian Maclaren sails from Liverpool this week Wednesday on the Germanic. His numerous American admirers, who are keenly anticipating his visit, will appreciate the illustrated character sketch of him which we shall print next week. It is from the pen of our London editor, Mr. Dawson. We shall also print next week a business man's view of the political situation. It will be entitled The National Crisis of 1896, and the author is Mr. Samuel B. Capen.

Hon. Whitelaw Reid of the New York Tribune rises to remark that this is an "honest and Christian nation."

Naught but deep regret is felt by the friends in this country of Dr. Alexander Mackennal, of Bowdon, Eng., who have heard of his breakdown in health and cancellation of all engagements.

An organization in Atlanta calls itself a church, without creed or covenant. Any one may become a member if he will only pay his dues. The contribution box is essential in a church, but when it takes the place of the communion table the name of the organization should be changed.

Rev. Dr. Henry Reynolds, one of the ablest of the English Congregationalists, formerly editor of the British Quarterly Review and later editor of The Evangelical Magazine, is dead. From 1860 until a recent date he has been president of the Countess of Huntington's College at Cheshunt.

Drs. Bradford of Montclair, Noble of Chicago, Smith of St. Paul, Lorimer of Boston and Whiton of New York have been preaching in London this summer and with a success which the British Weekly credits partially to their "high spirits," fed by breathing Atlantic winds en voyage.

The deaths during the past week of Treasurer Pinneo, of the Church Building Society, and of Mr. W. H. Wardwell of Brookline, a prominent director of the S. S. and P. S., call fresh attention to the valuable services rendered by laymen in conducting the affairs of our benevolent societies. The gaps made by their dropping out are not easy to fill.

The Jews in Boston's North End, who assaulted and robbed a fellow-Hebrew last week because he would not close his place of business on the holy day set apart by ceremonial law, revealed that old Pharisaical spirit which exalted the letter and overlooked the spirit of the law. They also showed that they did not understand the American spirit and law.

Perhaps some of the Northern friends of Berea College will realize how great is the darkness in which it serves as a beacon light when they learn that at the laying of a corner stone of a Baptist Church in Berea last week copies of Mr. Bryan's Chicago and Madison Square Garden speeches were placed alongside of the Bible as worthy of preservation in the corner stone pocket.

Lest some rush in where scholars fear to tread we quote the latest definition of sociology, German to be sure, but for that reason, perhaps, in the eyes of some all the more valuable if not intelligible. "I understand," says Professor Simmel of the University of Berlin, "the task of sociology to be description and determination of the historico-psychological origin of those forms in which interactions take place between human beings."

Quite a number of Congregational ministers, judging from reports in local newspapers, find it their duty to speak on the moral issues of the political campaign, and we think most of them believe that sound money is righteousness. The Nebraska News, which is well posted on Congregational affairs in that State, says: "We know of but one [Congregational] minister who wears a Bryan button, and but few headed that way."

While Dr. Walker has made no substantial gain since his paralytic seizure of Aug. 22, certain slight changes in his condition give some hope of, at least, partial recovery. Though he is still physically helpless and unable to speak intelligibly, his mental activity has increased and his apparent comprehension of what is said to him. No rapid improvement, however, may be looked for. He is still at Brattleboro, Vt.

We venture to say that two Boston deacons summering down on Cape Cod rendered their help to the local church in a way that has not been duplicated throughout the land the past season. They gave a sleight of hand exhibit in the Town Hall and the $29 accruing therefrom were transmuted into hymn-books. Thus a long felt want was supplied and a demonstration afforded of the possibilities of turning the heathen art of juggling to Christian uses.

Dr. Arthur T. Pierson stood in close personal relations with the late Dr. A. J. Gordon, both in general evangelical work and in Northfield interests and endeavors. He was Dr. Gordon's helper in the compilation of the hymn-book which is used by the Clarendon Street Baptist Church in Boston. He is always welcome there and finds a sympathetic and interested congregation. His two services last Sunday were largely attended in spite of the pouring rain.

Some of the oddities of ignorance in this campaign are worth recording. Many strange mistakes have been made in regard to the meaning of "sixteen to one," like that of the Missouri Populist whom Mr. Puddefoot tells about, who thought it meant that he could take a gold dollar to the mint and get sixteen silver dollars for it. To match this a Populist tells of a Democratic speaker in Maine who "attempted to talk tariff, but when he classified hydraulic hose as women's stockings he was hauled off." It is good to have a little fun interjected into the seriousness of the campaign.

Huxley is often quoted as the chief apostle of the modern unbelief. It may be well, therefore, for some of the young men who fancy that the chief weapon of controversy is the hammer of the iconoclast to read what Mr. Wilfred Ward says of him in his reminiscences, published recently in the Nineteenth Century. "He often resented being identified with simple destruction in matters of religious faith, and disclaimed all sympathy with the scoffing spirit. His opposition to theology had not meant, he said, opposition to religion." The spirit which rejoices in destruction is ignoble always.

It will doubtless be a kindness to many Sunday schools to call attention in this number, devoted so largely to their interests, to the illustrated lectures of Rev. Selah Merrill, D. D., on Jerusalem and Palestine. They have already found favor in a number of places. The current lessons have so much to do with the Holy Land, and especially with the Holy City, that whatever imparts reality to the events studied is of great value. Though Dr. Merrill is now living quietly at Andover, as American consul he was in Palestine ten years, and before and since his residence there he has devoted much time to acquiring an accurate knowledge of the country.

Eight leaflets have just been added to the Old South historical series, bringing the number up to seventy-three. Most of them are reprints, judiciously selected, of documents connected with our early history as a nation. Among them are Columbus's Memorial to Ferdinand and Isabella, John Winthrop's speech on Liberty, Cotton Mather's Bostonian Ebenezer and Governor Hutchinson's account of the Boston Tea Party. These leaflets are doing valuable service in stimulating popular historical study and showing to young students the sources from which history is written. They are sold very cheaply and can be obtained through Edwin D. Mead of Boston.

In a journal devoted to advancing the interests of insurance we find the statement that "the mortality by suicide on insured lives is known by all insurance men to be enormously greater than it is on the whole population. No other evidence than this is needed to establish the fact that life insurance is responsible for the great majority of suicides." A certain form of life insurance policy may be responsible for the increase, but not life insurance per se. Officials of the companies in draughting policies, and judges and jurors in construing them, can, if they set about it, soon make it impossible for men deliberately to take their lives, certain that their heirs will profit by their self-murder.

The secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in one of New England's cities resigned last week. A sentence from his letter of resignation deserves consideration, for it indicates a peril which every secretary of such an association—and many a pastor as well—faces. He writes: "The business side absorbs nearly all one's best thought and energy, leaving little time for that side of the work—the spiritual—which was the primary cause of my entering the general secretaryship." Multiply the functions of the Y. M. C. A. or the church and increase the fiscal liabilities, and, unless laymen step in to bear the burden, the secretary or pastor must, to a large extent, cease to be a spiritual guide and become a business manager.

Congregational families removing to New York and young people going there this autumn as students will be glad to know of the new Congregational church to open uptown on the West Side under the pastorate of Rev. H. A. Stimson, D. D., recently of the Broadway Tabernacle. It is to worship in the new, beautiful and churchly hall, corner of Eighty-third Street and the Boulevard. Few such attractive places of worship are to be found outside the newest church buildings. It has a series of smaller rooms for the week day meetings, and will be the center of a strong social life. The church will probably be known as the Manhattan Congregational. The opening service is to be held Sunday, Sept. 27. Success to Dr. Stimson on the West Side!

To Harvard's loss in the recent death of Prof. J. D. Whitney another is added in the passing away, Sept. 11, of Prof. Francis James Child, the eminent Anglo-Saxon scholar and for forty-five years a member of the faculty. He was Boston born and trained in the public schools, graduating from Harvard in the famous class of 1846. In the field of literature he had won laurels in England as well as in this country, though as an editor of the works of others rather than as a writer of books. His edition of English and Scotch ballads and his collections of other poems have been widely circulated and praised on account of the critical notes that accompany the original text. His qualities of mind and heart bound him closely to all who knew him, and there have been few men at Harvard within the last half-century who have exerted an influence tantamount to his.

The New York Christian Advocate has completed its threescore years and ten, the period which covers many of the mightiest triumphs of Methodism in America. It has had eleven editors, and the faces of nine of them appeared on the cover page of last week. The first left behind him no portrait, and the present editor, Dr. J. M. Buckley, was too modest to add his own to complete the series up to date. But his term of service has already exceeded that of any of his predecessors, and the estimate of his work which is held in his own denomination was indicated by his unanimous re-election by the last General Conference. It seems to us that it must take almost superhuman ability for a man to please his constituency well enough as an editor to secure their unanimous approval and at the same time to please his own conscience; but we have no doubt that Dr. Buckley is as true to his convictions as he is loyal to Methodism, and he has shown himself fearless more than once by combating proposals which many leading Methodists have urged. The Christian Advocate is one of the ablest religious papers which comes into our office, and is always carefully examined.

We have had no more interesting visitor this summer than Prof. S. Satthianadhan of India, who favored us with a brief call last week. He occupies the chair of logic and moral philosophy in the Presidency College, at Madras, India. He is a graduate of Cambridge University, England, and has taken two post-graduate degrees there with honor. As chairman of the National Council of the India Y. M. C. Association he has been of great service to the cause of Christianity in India. His wife, an earnest Christian of high descent, is the first Hindu woman to achieve note in English literature. The professor comes to this country to attend the annual retreat of the international secretaries of the Y. M. C. A. and to visit the larger American cities. On his return to India he will stop long enough in England to receive his M. A. degree in Cambridge. As we conversed for a few moments with this charming Christian Hindu, whose use of the English tongue is as accurate as it is easy and whose dress and bearing pronounced him a gentleman and a scholar of the first rank, we realized afresh how incidental are differences in complexion when compared with qualities of the mind and heart that render their possessor at once a citizen of the world and of the kingdom of heaven.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM THE INTERIOR.

Close of Vacation.

Although Sunday was communion day, in nearly all our churches there were large congregations to welcome back their pastors and pledge them their earnest co operation during the coming year. Leavitt Street Church commissioned one of its deacons to read a carefully prepared address of welcome to its pastor, Rev. Mr. Silcox, at the morning service. In many other churches where no address was read the reception was no less hearty. Dr. Withrow of the Third Presbyterian Church returned in time for the Wednesday evening meeting, Sept 9, which fills the spacious room in which it is held, and to find a newly-decorated audience-room and a building thoroughly renovated in every nook and corner. Dr. Noble still lingers in England, where he has received courteous attention. For several Sundays he has preached in prominent pulpits and some of his sermons have been reported in full. Meanwhile his people have renovated the Sunday school rooms and parlors of the church, and are eagerly counting the Sundays which must elapse before they see him again in the pulpit. They are anticipating a great deal from the outing he has had, since, in accordance with his custom, they know that his experiences will find their way into his sermons, and that through his eyes they will themselves get the benefit of his tour in foreign lands. Dr. Gilbert, lately of The Advance, has not yet returned from his trip abroad, but Professor Mackenzie is in his place in the seminary.

Ministers' Meeting.

The first gathering of the season was at the Sherman House, Monday morning, President Loba in the chair. The time was occupied by accounts of vacation experiences. These were varied enough to suit the most fastidious. Rev. Q. L. Dowd of Winetka, browned by the sun, had a delightful and profitable time on his wheel in Great Britain and upon the continent and eagerly awaits an opportunity to repeat it. Mr. Silcox preached one Sunday in Christ Church, London, Newman Hall's former church. Other brethren found health and pleasure and profit at Macatawa Park. Some went as far north as Minneapolis and breathed the invigorating atmosphere of Lake Minnetonka. Dr. Goodwin was in northern Wisconsin, where he remained till the law against fishing drove him home. A few stayed by the stuff and reported good congregations during the summer and a hopeful outlook for the winter. Indeed the feature of all the reports was the hopefulness of the brethren, especially on the part of those who are in what are thought to be the less attractive fields. It is also true that in the older and stronger churches there is a feeling of encouragement not always apparent at this season of the year. Some familiar faces were missed at the meeting. Rev. G. F. Herrick, late secretary of the Education Society, has left us to take up his duties as president of Washburn College. In his place we were glad to welcome Rev. C. R. Bliss, so much loved and respected by all our ministers. It is the universal feeling that in these hard times the society he represents ought not to be left to suffer.

Labor Day.

The weather was all that could be desired and the people made the best possible use of it. The streets were full from early in the morning till late at night. There were few disturbances. The processions were long and an object of curiosity to thousands of beholders. Prominent everywhere was the United States flag, expressive of the loyalty which labor cherishes toward the Government. At Sharpshooters' Park there were perhaps 15,000 persons present to listen to Mr. Bryan. He did not discuss political issues, although he had considerable to say about the wrongs the poor are suffering from the rich and prosperous classes. If one were inclined to criticise him it would be for the persistency with which he dwells on the oppressive disposition of employers of labor and for the efforts he seems to be making to create enmity between those who ought to be friends. Still the speech Labor Day was one of the best Mr. Bryan has yet made.

The Political Caldron.

The situation here grows interesting. Saturday night Central Music Hall was crammed to listen to a masterly discussion of the issues of the campaign by Hon. Carl Schurz of New York. Mr. Schurz was at his best, and although his address was very long he held his audience to the last. The representative men of the city were present, and applauded his sentiments to the echo. Next Saturday evening Hon. Bourke Cochran is to speak in the Auditorium, and the Saturday following it is expected that in the same place Governor Altgeld will set forth the issues involved in the election as they appear in his mind. Meanwhile, at the respective headquarters of the national committees, the work goes on with an energy commensurate with the principles and results at stake. John C. Black, to the disappointment of many, has declined the nomination for governor of Illinois, tendered him by the sound money Democrats. From his letter it would be impossible to decide which of the other two candidates he favors, although it is well known that he has not been over friendly toward Governor Altgeld. Hon. W. S. Forman, whose letters descriptive of Governor Altgeld's irregularities in the use of State funds have created such excitement, has been nominated in Mr. Black's place, and will make a vigorous fight against the present governor. So will also Lieut.-Governor Gill, who knows Governor Altgeld well. It is altogether too soon to hazard any prophecies as to the outcome. The issues are sharply defined and are becoming clearer every day. The letters of Messrs. Bryan and Hobart, the speeches of Mr. Watson and Governor McKinley, are leaving voters without the shadow of an excuse for ignorance of the principles upon which they are asked to decide. Such men as Postmaster Hessing are doing all that they can, both through the press and by voice, to win German-Americans over to sound money, and predict their almost complete unanimity for the gold standard. The Chicago press is nearly a unit against free silver. It is also in favor of civil service and the authority of the Supreme Court. It believes in the right of the Federal Government to interfere and put down Debs riots, and in so much protection as will meet the expenses of Government and secure living wages for those who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow.

The Rockford Messiah Once More.

The notorious George J. Schweinfurth, who has so long figured as the Messiah and the head of the home near Rockford, has finally proved false to his own assertions and married one of his converts, Mrs. Mary Ann Tuttle. The wedding took place Wednesday, Sept. 9, in the large Universalist church, Minneapolis. At the same time two other couples from the same home were united in wedlock. It looks as if the end of the establishment at Rockford had come, and as if the good people of that prosperous and beautiful city were to be relieved of the scandals which its existence has brought upon them.

The Opening of the Schools.

Tuesday morning an army of at least 200,000 pupils marched into the rooms provided for them and under their teachers began work for the year. Few changes have been made in the teaching personnel, although there have been some promotions and here and there a dismission. On the whole, Chicago has reason to be proud of its teaching force. Not only in ability, but in the excellent moral influence they exert, will its members compare favorably with the teachers of any other city in the Union, and yet few of our citizens pay any attention to our schools or consider that the most important work done within our limits is done among those who are of school age and by those whom our social circles almost entirely overlook.

Lewis Institute.

This great benefaction this year becomes available for the public. It has long been a question with the trustees of the fund, now considerably more than a million dollars, as to the character of the school to be opened. It has finally been decided to make it a school of technology, but with departments for literature and business. Twenty-four teachers have been engaged and four hundred pupils have been admitted, all that are to be received this year. Tuition for three terms a year has been fixed at sixty dollars. The building, at the corner of Madison and Robey Streets, is large and convenient. Its equipment will be sufficient to meet every reasonable demand. Probably some of the university extension lectures for which Miss Helen Culver's gift provided will be given in its auditorium. Mr. Carman, formerly principal of the Morgan Park Academy, has been put in charge of the school. There is some disappointment over the fact that the tuition practically excludes poor youth, more especially as it has been understood that it was the intention of the testator to bring educational opportunities within reach of those whose circumstances do not permit them to attend our colleges or our schools of technology. The first year is, of course, somewhat experimental, and it is probable that in some way the wants of those who are poor will be met.

The Seminary.

The term has opened with a few more than a hundred names on the treasurer's books. Undoubtedly there will be at least fifty more in a few days. The opening address by Professor Chamberlain, Thursday afternoon, was of a high order and exceedingly appropriate. The subject was The Condition of Effective Preaching. This the professor found in the indwelling Spirit, who speaks through his ministers, using every faculty with which they are endowed, so that often the most effective addresses are those which seem to have had the least preparation. Yet the professor insists on the most rigid and constant preparation, and, above all, that the whole person be placed at the disposal of the Spirit as his temple, so that it may truly be said, "It is not ye that speak, but the spirit of your Father which speaketh in you."

Chicago, Sept. 12. FRANKLIN.

THE BIBLE SCHOOLS IN THE SMALLER PLACES.

BY MILTON A. DIXON.

What shall a smaller Bible school do? Plod along its old, monotonous way simply because it cannot have all the advantages of a modern four-track road—its huge engines and vestibule trains? If you cannot have a big railroad, have a little one; if you cannot have a Bible school with all the modern equipments—classrooms, parlors, pianos and tables—have the principles of the larger school, just as far as you can adapt them to your own peculiar circumstances.

First, then, have the best superintendent you can get. You may not have a Wanamaker, a Jacobs or a Lawrence, but secure some one who is both businesslike and spiritual, dignified and agreeable. Do not have one who talks too much. A too much talking superintendent reminds one of the little steam yacht with such a big whistle that when the whistle blew the yacht had to stop going. Then make your rooms as cheerful as possible. At least have good air. Again, even in the smallest schools, do not as a rule neglect your opening services. Let them be spirited, interesting and devotional, a fitting preparation for the lesson study. Make them varied and not stereotyped, and so that every one can participate.

Of much importance, also, is the benevolence system. Encourage your school to give, for giving in the right spirit has a most broadening influence. But whether you give ten cents or ten thousand dollars a year, let them also know to what they are giving. To know about a worthy object is usually to become interested in it, and this means in many cases an increase in the gift. Let the objects to which you give be explained occasionally to the school, perhaps by the superintendent, but still better by some classes that are made responsible for them.

What we most need today, aside from deeper spirituality, is the recognition of the graded organization principle. The child of five years, the boy of fifteen and the man of fifty are not to be approached in the same way. Is this principle applicable to the smaller schools? I fail to see why not. First, decide what you would have in a larger school, and then see what of this can be applied to yours. My own preference, where the school is large and the rooms are adequate, is to have seven different departments, the first six of three years each, and the seventh, or adult, of twenty-one years and upwards. There are other and perhaps better schemes. Now of what ages is your school largely composed? Perhaps you can make seven classes to take the place of departments. If not, can you have six, or five? or perhaps you must have only two. Give each department something definite to learn. Mr. Pease of the Springfield School for Christian Workers has prepared some excellent aids to the teaching of the Lord's Prayer, Twenty-third Psalm and also courses on the books of the Bible and on the Old Testament history—good because they avoid the fatal error of teaching the children what they do not understand. For young people take up the study of Bible characters, or a complete course of Bible history, church history, doctrines and denominational polity. The home department is sometimes even better adapted to the country churches than to the city. Experience has shown how much good can be accomplished through this agency. By all means have a home department. Write to your denominational headquarters for literature on the subject.

But if we are to make our schools most successful we must equip our officers and teachers for their work. The time has come when we have some excellent text-books that can be used with normal training classes without even a specially equipped leader, though the latter of course would be helpful. Your denominational publishing house will recommend such books for your use. Organize a normal training class for future and present teachers, even though you can have only three or four members. The benefits to be derived will more than repay your efforts.

Another need of the smaller schools is the library. Especially if you have no public library you need to have books of literary as well as of moral merit. Have the best standard books. A reference library also would be helpful. Such books as Boynton's Model Sunday School, Dunning's Sunday School Library and Bible Studies, Hazard's Studies, Smith's Bible Dictionary, Stalker's Lives of Christ and Paul, Hurlbut's Manual of Biblical Geography and Revised Normal Outlines, Pease's Sunday School Teachers' Normal Course and many lesson helps and books suggested in them would be valuable additions for teachers with limited means.

Many a man and woman has traced his success back to the Bible school of his younger days. Let us widen the influence, especially in our country towns, whence has come such a large proportion of our leading men. Thus may the Bible school prove to have utilized fields far more valuable than those of marble and granite. Thus may the little road we have built show itself quite as valuable in its way as the larger and sometimes more envied routes.

The Mystery of a Nation's Wrongs.

By Rev. James Denney, D. D., Broughty Ferry, Scotland.

The massacres and outrages in Armenia have been discussed enough, and for all that has been done far more than enough, from the political point of view. But they have a deeper than any political interest. They have distressed many sympathetic souls, not only with shame for their country, but with doubts about the righteousness of God himself. They have brought to mind again the similar horrors that have so often darkened history—the Albigensian wars in the thirteenth century and the Spanish Inquisition in the Netherlands, for instance—and have provoked Christians to ask whether the word of God has any light to throw on situations so horrible.

As far as can be made out, the Israelitish people had only one grand experience of religious persecution—that which befell them under the Syrian kings, and from which they were delivered by the Maccabees. Several of the Psalms are cries out of this agony—the Forty-fourth, Seventy-fourth and Seventy-ninth in particular. "They have set thy sanctuary on fire, they have burned up all the synagogues of God in the land. Their blood have they shed like water round about Jerusalem, and there was none to bury them." The words might have been written in Asia Minor any time these two years past. The sting of this awful experience was that it came on the Jews because of their stubborn adherence to God. It was not a judgment on sin; the national conscience was never purer. "For thy sake are we killed all the day long." To renounce Jehovah for Zeus, to deliver up or to burn the law—as in Armenia to abandon Christ and the gospel for Mohammed and the Koran—would have made everything easy. Why should such things be, how can they be, in a world ruled by One who loves justice and mercy?

If any one could answer these questions clearly and completely the world would be a simpler place than it is. But reflection suggests some things which are worth considering as probably connected with the true answer.

1. These atrocities are the works of men, not of God. God has trusted man with power, which he is capable of using well or ill, and it seems inevitable, if man is to be a moral creature, that this should be so. The abuse of the power which God has given us—the turning of it against God himself—in other words, the existence of evil in whatever shape and on whatever scale, is part of the whole trial of faith in God to which man is exposed in the world. In principle, the smallest act of injustice or oppression is as much a contradiction of God's government of the world as all the horrors in Armenia. Perhaps the tremendous examples of wrong are meant, among other uses, to shock us into observing the nature of wrong under all circumstances. Who can tell which is more hideously at war with God—the wild Turkish outrages in a Christian village, to read of which almost makes one choke, or the dull, brutal outrages perpetrated year in year out in the drunkard's house in our own street, which we know about but never mind? Let those who hate any injustice hate all, and recognize that whether it be insolent or underhand the atheism of it is the same.

2. Oppression has brought out heroic qualities in man, which no less potent stimulus seems able to produce. Of course it is not always so. Oppression, as Solomon says, may make wise men mad. Often its first effect is a blind rage. The child that gets a slap in the face it did not deserve knows this, as well as a nation in its agony; it cannot strike back, for it has no strength, but it could find it in its heart to kill. In the same way a people long oppressed breeds fanatics, capable of defying both reason and justice. They may get up hopeless rebellions, like those which ended at Rullion Green and Bothwell Bridge; or if they are weaker, and have less faith in God, they may become Nihilists and dynamitards, and fight injustice with its own weapons. I do not suppose this ever comes to good but it shows at least that men can prefer death to a tame submission to wrong. But there is a far nobler reaction than this, that which is seen when men prefer death to any infidelity to the cause which they represent. Martyrdom is not only the blackest crime, it is the brightest glory of human history. It is the supreme revelation of what man can do. The early Christians, who refused to burn incense to the emperor; the Scottish Covenanters, who refused to acknowledge the king as head of the church; the Armenians, who choose death rather than circumcision and Islam, show the hight to which humanity can rise. Without the persecutions of Decius and Diocletian, without the tyranny of the Stuarts, without the infamies of Abdul Hamid, the world would want not only the darkest but the most glorious pages in its history. Death is the doom of sin, but death itself is ennobled and transfigured when it is a sacrifice of life to liberty and to God.

3. The same thing may also be represented from the side of God, rather than man. Such heroic conduct under wrong and oppression shows the extraordinary hold which God has upon his people. God is glorified when a man is found to say, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." The book of Daniel is one of the fruits of that great persecution to which reference is made above, and it gives a magnificent illustration of this. The three Hebrew children are about to be cast into the furnace, and it is they who speak. "If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thy hand, O king. But if not, be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up." But if not: there

> . . . man stands out again, pale, resolute,
> Prepared to die—which means alive at last.

And there, too, if anywhere, God can look at his creature and not be ashamed of him. Wrong has sometimes exalted faith into fanaticism, or given it a savage tinge; sometimes it has really deepened it; rarely has it extinguished it. The atheists are not among the persecuted, but among the persecutors and the indifferent spectators.

4. In Israel the great persecution was at least closely connected with the entrance of the resurrection hope into the heart of the nation. "Some were tortured, not accepting deliverance, that they might obtain a better resurrection." The life to come grows fearfully incredible if life here demands no sacrifices and presents no problems. It is matter of history that the faith in the resurrection gained its footing in Israel thus: men found it impossible to believe that those who had died fighting the Lord's battle should have no part in the Lord's victory when it came. The Sadducees, who would not on any account have died for their religion, could not, of course, have this hope. In the same way still, those who have nothing to endure for their faith inevitably tend to be secularist, Epicurean, worldly-minded, indifferent to the future. But a persecuted church reads the Apocalypse and believes in heaven. The door is opened into the unseen, with all its splendors and rewards, over those who are in the great tribulation. We cannot tell how much of its vitality the resurrection hope owes to the intolerable wrongs which have been borne by the church of God.

5. Such wrongs as we have witnessed in Armenia appeal to the humanity and the justice of others. The whole world is never wronged at once, and the cry of the oppressed ought to raise champions for them out of the ground. If it did, there would be no temptation to atheism in the mere existence of wrong. The sick man does not doubt that there is love in the world—no, nor that God is love—if his sickness evokes the sympathy and the ministry of others. And so it is with wrong and outrage of every kind. For what do men exist upon the earth, if injustice is to reign unreproved and the blame be cast on God? God acts in such cases through men; it is we, and not he, who are put to the proof by them. The most humiliating aspect of that great wrong which has been perpetrated under our eyes is the failure of the Christian nations to respond to the summons of God. The selfish balancing of rival interests in face of the unspeakable barbarities going on all the while in Asia amounts to a contempt of God far more rooted and profound than anything that could be laid to the charge of the Turkish miscreants at Sassoon. If God did not judge this, we might be atheists indeed.

Considerations like these do not solve the problem of evil. Very likely it is in its nature insoluble, while our knowledge is as limited as it is. Very likely, while the world lasts, it will have to be solved, not speculatively, by showing how it is good in the making, but practically, by men dying rather than have anything to do with it. But they enable us, at least, to connect some ideas with it, which mitigate its perfect horror; and I believe they do not lower but rather stimulate the conscience to react vigorously against it in the name of God and man.

Agnosticism is an "I don't know," coupled with a plain, bold "I don't care."—Broadus.

Zion's Herald admits that American Methodists are "not producing preachers to meet the demand of this thoughtful and enlightened age. . . . The appeal from devout laymen for relief in this respect is plaintive and pitiful. . . . As the ministry is responsible for the situation it must work out the needed change. The stress must be put back on the pulpit."

Charity Chance.*

A Serial Story by Walter Raymond.

Summary of the Previous Nine Chapters.—The scene of this story is Somerset, in the west of England. Miss Graham, a maiden lady of means and a cripple, has adopted Charity Chance, who calls her aunt. Miss Graham's nephew, Graham Poltimore, the son of her dead sister, seeks the hand of Charity Chance in marriage and is accepted, though the girl has some misgivings in relation to the depth of her affection for him. Miss Graham is delighted to have her heart's desire thus gratified, and Charity, who cherishes her fondly, finds a satisfaction in having acceded to her patron's wishes for her. Miss Graham visits her brother-in-law, Mr. Poltimore-Briggs, the sole surviving trustee of her property, to inform him that she has but a brief time to live and to arrange to settle some money upon Charity, but he advises postponement, and the interview is interrupted, to his evident relief. A somewhat lackadaisical poet, Alfred Prentice, a friend of Graham Poltimore, appears on the scene and mingles socially with the other characters. Mr. Prentice talks with Charity in the woods, is impressed with her sympathetic nature, and urges her to meet him again that he may read to her some of his poems. Charity tells no one of her interviews with the poet, but defends him from the sneers of the Babblemouth folk. Mr. Prentice, meeting Charity one evening, declares his love for her, but she repulses him gently. Miss Graham gives Charity a bridal veil and urges her immediate marriage with Graham Poltimore. Charity feels that she must see Mr. Prentice again.

X. THE MEETING.

BABBLEMOUTH was astir! True, it was a little place, but, once aroused, it displayed that phenomenal activity which is the brightest attribute of a little body. Villagers flocked in from all around and filled the town to overflowing. A brass band paraded the streets, and other attractions were manifold. There was to be an orator from a distance, a display of fireworks, and it was rumored that a tight-rope dancer would walk from cliff to cliff upon a slack wire. Many understood that Mr. Poltimore-Briggs himself would perform this feat, but the event proved this a mere Radical invention.

Below Mr. Poltimore-Briggs's mansion, and running parallel with the harbor, was a row of ancient houses, quaint and irregular. Between them and the quay lay an open space, where fishing-boats put up their spoil to auction and country folk pitched their wares on market day. Upon this forum a wooden platform had been raised with seats to accommodate a hundred supporters. There Mr. Poltimore-Briggs was to address the electorate.

It was evening. The proceedings had not yet commenced, but the place was already crowded when Charity reached the corner of this little square. She was later than she intended. Above the heads of the people she could distinguish Mrs. Mortimer and Theodosia, sitting in state amidst the élite of Babblemouth society. For her, also, was reserved a seat upon the platform, but how to get to it was more than she could tell, for the crowd, although certainly good-natured, was in high spirits and jocular with a coarseness from which she shrank.

Close beside her a group of electors loudly discussed the merits of Mr. Poltimore-Briggs. Charity had so long regarded him with awe that it startled her to hear that great name thrown to the four winds upon the breath of disparagement.

"Poltimore-Briggs! Who's Poltimore-Briggs?" cried an elderly, sharp-featured little man, in a shrill voice, looking around defiantly. "A fine fellow to put up for Parliament indeed. Put up for sale, you'd buy him dear at his own valuation. Why, I remember when he was nobody. I was in his father's office once—but that's out o' memory. We can't call that to mind now. He wasn't so big then. I say, that's his house; that's his horses, walking up and down for show there in front; that's his yacht out there covered with flags. Where did he get it? That's what I want to know. Why, out o' Lord Babblemouth's estate. Eh? Something clinging to the hand everything that's done. I tell 'ee what 'tis, he couldn't ha' got it if he hadn't robbed somebody."

There was a general guffaw, for the little man winked at every other word and talked like an oracle.

Charity stood perplexed, wondering if it were possible to go on.

"O, come, come!" drawled a countryman, with a face round and red as a Dutch cheese. "We do know where the man picked up his money. His Uncle Briggs died an' lef' it to un. I knew his Uncle Briggs well afore he died. Had a shop 'pon Finsbury Pavement, an' died sudden. Zold me hams for years. Hundreds o' hams. Capical hams, all sweet pickle. Ah, zixpence a poun' them times an' did well. Ha, ha!" He laughed in happy recollection of those hams, and then added, with deep earnestness, "But you can't do nothen out o' pig-butcheren nowadays."

"His Uncle Briggs?" returned the other, fiercely; "under thirty thousand pounds, for I saw the will in the Illustrated. And Poltimore bought land wi' it, an' farmed it foolish ever since. And the land gone down half since then. And who knows who's got the deeds, eh? Aha! oftentimes a man hasn't got all that goes in his name. No; what he got from his Uncle Briggs couldn't do it. He stole it. That's what he did. He stole it."

"I stigmatize that as a lie. A paltry lie, imported for base party purposes. And any one who brings that tale here will very soon find himself in the wrong box. He'll soon learn the taste of Bablemouth harbor."

Thus spoke the Babblemouth draper and undertaker, a tradesman of the first magnitude, whose fine feeling and tact in seasons of bereavement had earned him the respect of all. Many deceased members of the Poltimore family had he buried, only to gain thereby a deeper interest in the living. In virtuous indignation he strode two steps toward the little man, and looked fierce enough to kill him first and bury him afterward. The little man fell back and butted against Charity. The undertaker bowed with reverence and apologized.

At this moment, by good fortune, the air was rent with cheers.

"Mr. Poltimore-Briggs—that is Mr. Poltimore-Briggs!"

Every eye turned toward the platform. The landau traversed the fifty yards between Mr. Poltimore-Briggs's house and the wooden island in the sea of heads, and safely deposited its precious freight. The applause increased as Mr. Poltimore-Briggs, followed by the orator, ascended the steps. Yet there was opposition, too, hooting and hissing, which lasted longer than the cheers. The little man plucked up and cried: "Booh!"

To attempt to cross the square was useless, and Charity turned to go back. She did not care about politics. Hooting and cheers alike disturbed her, and her only desire was to get away. Around by-streets, now all deserted, she could reach Babblemouth House and there await the return of the politicians and the fireworks. Speeches were nothing but weariness to her.

Amongst the old houses was one much smaller than the rest, with a bay window almost as big as itself. As Charity passed the front door quickly opened. Some one spoke to her, and, looking round, she saw Alfred Prentice.

"Are you going home, Miss Chance? Will you come into my room? There is an excellent view of the people." His manner was distantly respectful, then suddenly dropped into tenderness. "Yes. Come, please, and talk to me just this once."

So this last meeting to which her mind was made up had befallen by accident after all. Ought she to accept this invitation, so contrary to the code of Babblemouth? Yet why not? He, too, recognized the inevitable when pleading for just this once. It was only natural to wish to watch the crowd from some place of safety, and better far than going into the wood by design. Her thanks were scarcely audible. At once she passed through the opened door and followed him up the stairs.

(To be continued.)

*Copyrighted, 1896, by Walter Raymond.

ENGLISH COMMENT ON AN ANGLO-RUSSIAN ALLIANCE.

The London Methodist Times says: "There is nothing so urgently needed in the best interests of Armenia, Crete, England and the human race at large as an alliance between this country and Russia. It might secure the peace of the world for generations. Surely, the historic and other difficulties are not nearly so great as those which separated France from Russia. . . . Russia has every reason, and so have we, for coming to terms in Asia. We have no really antagonistic interests, and until that insane Crimean War we never met on a battlefield except on the same side. There is nothing for which Scriptural Christians should more earnestly pray than that God would dispose the hearts of our rulers to conciliate Russia. We are too fond of dwelling exclusively upon the dark side of Russian rule, forgetful of the dark side of our own. Dr. Wenyon, our well-known Chinese missionary, recently traveled right through Russian Asia, and was amazed and delighted to discover what a blessing Russian rule had quickly become in those vast districts. In two decades chaos has been succeeded by cosmos." The Christian takes the same position and believes that "a good understanding between England and Russia would tend to the peace of Europe and of the world. It would tend to develop Russia, to introduce civil and religious liberty, and to relieve our brethren, the Stundists, of the disabilities, oppressions and persecutions under which they now suffer. And energy wasted in watching one another would be used in ameliorating the condition of the nations dependent upon each."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LIBRARY.

BY CHARLES S. OLCOTT, MONTCLAIR, N. J.

The argument is often heard nowadays, "We don't need a library. The children have all the books they can read at home, or if they have not there are plenty of public libraries where they can get them." Those who make such statements show that they have failed to understand the real function of the Sunday school library and its proper relation to the school. The conscientious teacher seeks to do more than teach the lesson of the day. He studies the peculiarities of each pupil, strives to win his confidence by showing an interest in things outside the school and aims to lay the foundation for a strong character. The teacher who is actuated by such motives is quick to discover that good literature is one of the best aids he could have, and if this help is to be found in connection with the Sunday school itself a bond of union is at once cemented between pupil and school as well as between pupil and teacher.

Are Sunday school libraries as they exist today fitted to accomplish such purposes? Could a teacher, who is interested in a bright boy of good common sense, by using only the books of the average Sunday school library, lay out for him a course of reading of sufficient interest to hold his attention and at the same time inculcate a taste for the best literature and eventually lead to the development of character? The experiment would be a sad failure if tried with some libraries.

The real cause of the stigma that has justly attached itself to the Sunday school library in the past, and has not yet disappeared, is that the average "Sunday school book" has been made to order to fit into a certain narrow groove while good books of broader character have been excluded. Most schools have a library committee, who are apt to purchase books without any very definite conception of the real purpose of the library. Oftentimes the governing thought, so far as one exists, is that the books must supplement the work of the school by being religious in their character. But, knowing that children are not attracted by such subjects, they select a class of books that contain a religious teaching, sugar-coated with a story of alluring title, But no library will ever successfully supplement the work of the Sunday school by administering doses of "religion" to unwilling patients.

There ought to be no such thing as a "Sunday school book," in so far as the term signifies a special class. A book that is good enough for a Christian home is worthy a place in the Sunday school library. A Christian father, desiring to provide good reading for his family, would select from the whole broad field of literature. He would carefully avoid sensational books. He would also shun stupid books and those beyond the comprehension of the young. He would omit mere story-books—that waste the time of the children and leave nothing behind except a passing sensation of pleasure in the reading; but he would not throw out all history except that of the Christian Church, all biography except the lives of missionaries and saints, and all fiction except that which was supposed to teach religious truth.

He would rather depend upon the Bible for religious instruction, supplementing it, perhaps, for the little children with a few simple illustrated books like Foster's Story of the Bible and First Steps for Little Feet, and for the older ones with some really valuable books like Stalker's Life of Christ, which young folks will not only fully comprehend but really enjoy. To these he would add the inspiring thoughts of Longfellow, "The Children's Poet," and some of the stories of Hawthorne, whose tales, couched in the choicest diction, appeal to children of all ages. He would not fail to include biographies of Washington, Franklin, Lincoln and other men of achievement, a few good histories of our own and other countries and some good historical novels like Ivanhoe, Ben Hur and Uncle Tom's Cabin. And as the children must have some good story-books, he would find an ample supply in the writings of Miss Alcott, Mrs. Stowe, Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, Mrs. Craik, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Mrs. Wiggin, Mrs. Whitney, W. O. Stoddard, J. G. Holland, Thomas Hughes, J. T. Trowbridge and other authors of this class.

If the old-time prejudice against Sunday school literature is to be removed, and if the libraries are ever to become potent factors in the work of the schools, the artificial, made-to order Sunday school book of the past must disappear and the library of the future be built upon the same principle that ought to characterize the selection of books for a refined, intelligent Christian home. The keynote should be the development of character through the reading of the best books.

HOW GENERAL GORDON TRIED TO KILL LI HUNG CHANG.

BY REV. F. T. ROUSE, PLANTSVILLE, CT.

A little before our Civil War the Tai-ping rebellion had been gaining ground in China. Li Hung Chang was then the imperialist governor-general of the Kiang provinces, where the contest was hottest. When in 1860 Shanghai was threatened by the Taiping forces, a number of wealthy merchants of that commercial city determined to subscribe funds for a foreign force to check the enemy. Two Americans were engaged to recruit the force, one of whom, a Mr. Ward, was to have the command. Ward, though an adventurer, was a brave and skillful fighter, and his forces were so successful, aided, as they were, also by Chinese recruits, that they came to be called the "Ever Victorious Army." Ward was killed by a chance ball in the vicinity of Ningpo. The army was then commanded by Burgevine, the second American who with Ward recruited the forces; but he was more of an adventurer than his predecessor, and was soon in hot water with the governor of the provinces, "Governor Li," as he was then known in England.

Sir Charles Staveley was then in command of the regular British forces in China. Governor Li begged him to appoint an English officer over this motley but successful force. Staveley had in his aid a young man who held the position of commanding engineer. His name was Gordon. He had but just turned thirty. He was brave and trusty, and in his hands, though but a youth, was placed the command of the Ever Victorious Army and, as it proved, the fortunes not only of Li Hung Chang but of the imperial government of China herself; for without Gordon in all probability the great rebellion would have succeeded, or at least long continued.

Gordon had accepted an onerous task, and he realized the importance and sacredness of his mission. "I think," said he in 1863, "that any one who contributes to putting down this rebellion fulfills a humane task, and I also think tends a great deal to open China to civilization. I can say that if I had not accepted the command I believe the force would have broken up and the rebellion gone on in its misery for years. I think I am doing a good service."

But we started to tell how the great Li was once in danger of being shot by the brave young Gordon. It was a case of righteous indignation. The natural center of the war was the great city of Soochow. It had been held since 1860 by the Tai-ping rebels. The story of its siege and capture is a long one, but through the skill and bravery of the young engineer and general it came about that the Tai-ping "Wangs" or "Kings" were ready to surrender. To save appearances Gordon was to make an assault. Gordon had stipulated that the rebel Wangs should have mercy, and Li had assented, and on the night of Sept. 30 the city was surrendered.

Gordon, with that hatred of bloodshed that is in every true general's, not to say Christian's, heart, rejoiced that the Wangs were to be spared, and that the too customary Chinese butchery would be avoided. The city had been taken. Gordon was at ease, and the surrendered Wangs were taken to the headquarters of the governor. But what was the young Christian general's horror when he heard rumors of treachery and bloodshed. His own blood was kindled. He hurried out and crossing a canal, as he himself relates, he "found six bodies and recognized Nar-Wang's head. The hands and bodies were gashed in a frightful way and cut down the middle."

Gordon burst into tears and then tears were changed to uncontrolable indignation. It was the righteous indignation of the young hero heated to fusion. Though in the army he had never borne a weapon, but had gone about in the thick of the battle with but a little cane which the natives had learned to call "General Gordon's wand of victory," he armed himself with a revolver and started under the terrible impulse to revenge on the treacherous governor himself the lives of these murdered kings.

"But," says Archibald Forbes, "Li had come to realize what manner of man Gordon in his wrath could be and had escaped into town. Gordon pursued him, but the governor got into hiding and remained there. Gordon had ordered out his troops to assist in the search, but finding that vain he led them to camp, telling his officers that no British officer could serve longer under Governor Li."

We know not what went through the mind of the great and wily Chinaman as he stood before the beautiful sarcophagus of General Gordon in St. Paul's in London not long ago. No doubt the heathen viceroy has learned much of the milder forms of more civilized warfare since those comparatively early days. We cannot believe he harbored any ill against the great general. On the contrary, we know that he sincerely revered the memory of this Christian statesman warrior; and his soul must be made better by the memory. And Gordon certainly, after the first threatened outburst of his passion, bore no ill will toward the great Chinaman.

Li received the yellow jacket from this victory of General Gordon at Soochow, a large part of the glory of which he took to himself. Gordon, however, refused a gift of $17,500 tendered him by the grateful emperor, owing, as he said in a respectful letter to the emperor, "to the circumstance which occurred since the capture of Soochow." "I leave China as poor as when I entered it" were his modest words. The emperor, however, before his departure invested him with the title Ti Tu, which gave him the highest rank in the Chinese army.

Li remained in power and the great general returned with honor to England, there, for a time, in peace to render those acts of love and kindness to all, and especially the poor about him, which marked the gentle Christian heart of the noble soldier though he had feared not to face the enemy or, if need be, at the peril of his life, wreak indignant vengeance on the head of a treacherous prince, while yet "the sun had not gone down upon his wrath."

A REVIEW LESSON.

BY REV. A. W. HITCHCOCK, NEWBURYPORT.

Our Sunday school recently completed the third quarter in a series on the life of Christ with a review conducted by the pastor. The period covered extends from Peter's formulation of the Messianic confession in northern Galilee to the quiet days in Bethany preceding Passion Week. Many of the lessons took up special parables and miracles, and did not present an easy field for an ordinary review. So a new plan was tried.

A young art student was ready to help with pencil and brush, and produced a creditable outline map of Palestine about eight feet long by five feet wide on smooth wrapping paper. The divisions were marked out and the four districts named. Cities and towns were located, but not named. Jerusalem and Samaria were ringed as capital cities. Bethlehem was marked with a star, Cana with a wine jar and each of the three homes where Jesus lived—Nazareth, Capernaum and his friends' home in Bethany—was marked with the picture of a house. This map was backed with eighth-inch pine, a small brad was driven to stand out at each city or town and the map thus prepared was hung where all the school could see it. Then the pastor, having a ball of red twine, began to question the school about the lessons to be reviewed, beginning with the place where Jesus resided at the time of the first lesson. Fastening the twine at Capernaum he continued his questions, and as a new locality was named he drew the twine to the brad standing there, tracing the journey of our Lord through Phœnicia, Cæsarea Philippi, the Mount of Transfiguration and the varied experiences in Perea, Jerusalem, Bethany, Ephraim and the villages of Samaria.

As the route was marked, events were called out and fastened in memory to the various places in which they occurred until the lessons were well covered and the map also. The red cord marked a network of travel back and forth, ever converging toward Jerusalem from that day when Peter said, "Thou art the Christ." The map itself at conclusion of the lesson preached a striking sermon on the life that sought so faithfully to lead and gather men when they would not be led. It was also suggested that the path he trod must be the pathway of every follower, in duty setting his face like a flint, even if it were to go to enemies and suffering and shame.

The idea of symbols for names of many localities can be extended all over Palestine, and the colored cord that follows all the journey of the life of Christ that we can trace will be even more strikingly picturesque and interpretative.

A WORD ABOUT THE INTERNATIONAL LESSONS.

BY REV. F. N. PELOUBET, D. D.

One morning at Chautauqua I heard an aged Methodist minister "who had a brilliant future behind him" discourse on Calvin and Calvinism. It was a fearful picture. The next morning Dr. Hodge of Princeton, who spells Calvinism with a very large C, began his lecture by saying, "If what the speaker yesterday described as Calvinism is Calvinism, then I am not a Calvinist." So I am inclined to say that if what has been repeated many times of late as a characterization of the International Lesson system is a true picture, then I have not been teaching the International Lessons these past years.

We have no word to say against any other system, but the International system is taking its part in the onward movement and at the front. It is not a back number. It is not like Sancho Panza asleep on his donkey saddle, which the robbers propped up on four sticks and drove the donkey away. It is continually making an "advanced step," and adapting to itself everything good that is gained in experiments in every part of the world. The greatest improvement is in the spread of better methods of teaching. There can be no real progress that does not retain the good things already attained. Unless uniformity, at least in the main school, be retained, then any step that leaves that out is a step backwards and not forwards—backwards to where the schools were, as we well remember, twenty-five years ago. We are "heirs of all the ages"; let us not give up a portion of our inheritance.

That bright phrase, "hop, skip and jump," has been applied to the International system so many times that one would imagine that some system had been discovered by which the whole Bible could be studied in three or four years and nothing be skipped. The fact is that the expression, while it may describe the method of some teachers, does not apply to the International system as it is intended to be used. Every wise teacher glances at all the intervening portions, stopping longer on the more important events, and gaining a comprehensive view of the whole Bible history. It is a continuous story.

Again, the International system is a graded system. There is no possible way of going through the Old Testament history, or through the life of Christ, in a few years without in the main having the same passages for study, (unless it be a swifter course for the youngest scholars.) But every great truth and event has many sides, adapted to various ages and classes. For instance, God and creation are not yet fully understood by the wisest men, and yet there are practical truths concerning them which interest and help the very youngest child. The system is one of graded helps, but it is as really graded as the studies in our day schools, which take up the same countries in geography and the same numbers in arithmetic in many grades of the schools, but use them in a different way in the different grades.

So also the International system is a system of Bible study, with the emphasis on Bible, and of Bible study, with the emphasis on study. Never was there so much study as now, and never greater need of more study. The lessons are of wide-reaching interest to all classes. They touch upon questions which are stirring the thought of men all over the world. It is a splendid opportunity for teachers' meetings and normal classes in every church and community.

The earnest discussion of these various plans, the efforts to measure results, the search after better things are signs of life. I was dining the other day with some educators, when the president of a prominent college near me made the severest criticisms on many of the present methods and tendencies in college education. Any one whose ears are open can hear the sharpest condemnation of various things in our common schools. The Sunday schools are not the only schools under the fire of the critics. Everywhere there is movement, there are experiments, criticisms, a cry for better things. They should not discourage but encourage us.

FROM THE HAWKEYE STATE.

The political campaign has just begun so far as mass meetings are concerned, though earnest discussions have been going on for months on the street corners and in the harvest fields. The free silver idea has not prevailed in Iowa to the extent that it has in many other Western States. True, the movement has a large following, but to all appearances it is already waning. Election day may reveal a different result, but we think not. The bulk of the Democratic party will support Mr. Bryan. So will a small element of the Republican party. Some acute observers calculate that one-fourth of the Democratic party will refuse to support the party nominee. A considerable portion of this element will vote for Mr. McKinley, while others will cast their vote for the gold standard Democrat. A considerable number of the Democratic leaders have taken the stump for McKinley. The normal vote of the State on national issues is about 225,000 Republican, 175,000 Democratic, 30,000 Populist and from 6,000 to 10,000 Prohibition. The old party lines will have less influence in directing the vote this fall than ever before.

The crops are abundant this season, but the farmers feel that they have reason for complaint in the low prices. The price of corn is only about fifteen cents, oats from ten to thirteen cents and hay sells for $5.00 a ton. Still many see that all prices are relatively low. Recently a laboring man worked two days on a farm and got $2.00 as compensation. The pay seemed small. When he came to spend the money for family supplies he remarked, "I never saw a time when $2.00 would buy so much." Many long for the good old times of the past when farm products brought a big price. Some of these same persons forget that in this region they used to pay $1.25 a gallon for kerosene, forty cents a yard for calico and could buy only three pounds of sugar for $1.00.

The normal rainfall during the summer has done much to brighten the prospects for the future. One serious result of the long continued drought is the killing of thousands of trees in all parts of the State. The hard maple has been planted in all our towns and our soil has seemed specially fitted for its growth. It is our most attractive shade tree and is the pride of all our villages. It is a cause of regret that it has yielded to the long dry spell and is dying in all parts of the State. The forest trees are also dying in large numbers, particularly the black oak. It is hoped that the increased moisture will save the rest of the trees.

Dr. W. M. Brooks retires from the presidency of Tabor College after a generation of faithful service. No one stands higher in the estimation of the people. He has been a great power, not only in Tabor College, but also among the educational and religious forces of the State. As president emeritus he will continue to use his great personal influence to promote the interests of that noble institution of learning. Rev. R. C. Hughes, who has served efficiently as vice-president for some years, has been promoted to the presidency and enters upon his work with great promise of success. W. W. G.

Rev. Dr. W. E. Griffis of Ithaca has been elected a member of the Netherland Society of Letters, Leyden. Here is a prophet honored abroad and at home too.

The knowledges that you adjoin to memory do not fill out the man unless you reach in his own mind the faculty that generates thought. —Julia Ward Howe.

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM.

THE SURPRISES OF A MISSION TOUR.

BY ABBIE B. CHILD.

"What are your impressions of the missionary work now that you have actually seen it?" This question, oftenest asked of one who has visited mission fields, is not as easily answered as might be supposed. Impressions, especially among the strange surroundings in Oriental lands, are elusive things, formed today only to be displaced by contradictory ones tomorrow. Even those who are so warmly taken into the hearts and homes of missionaries, as we were, must have the feeling of looking on from the outside, which warns one to be careful lest false impressions be given to the public. A few of these outside impressions may be of interest to the readers of The Congregationalist; perhaps we ought to call them the deepening and expansion of those previously formed rather than positively new.

In the first place, we thought we had some knowledge of the isolation of our workers, but at our very first visit outside of Bombay we found that we had little idea of it. We were at Satara one evening sitting on the veranda of Mr. Bruce's bungalow, hearing about his "parish" of a million and a half of people to be cared for by three persons, a father and mother and daughter. When we heard how every inch of ground had been gained through long and tedious battle, when we thought that this had been going on for years by just these three without human aid or sympathy or companionship, we involuntarily exclaimed, "How do you bear this isolation?" "You notice it do you?" was the simple reply with tears in the voice—we could not see the eyes—then brightly, "But we have our compensations. There are great compensations." This impression was not lessened the next day when we went to the sacred village with its thirty-two temples. As we stood under a tree swarming with hundreds of "sacred" monkeys leaping from bough to bough and chattering ceaselessly, as we watched Mrs. and Miss Bruce tell the gospel story for the first time to a little gathering of women, as we saw the vacant, bewildered, unresponsive faces and felt how much more the tree and the monkeys appealed to them than the beautiful gospel story, the words "What are these among so many?" took on a new meaning.

The same day we went on to Wai, where two ladies, Mrs. Sibley and Miss Gordon, are working alone in a bigoted Brahman city with an outside parish of 30,000 souls. Imagine for an instant what it must be never to see a white face except an occasional visitor from outside, never to make or receive a friendly call from one of their own race, never to go to a lecture, a concert or an inspiring religious gathering—not an elevating influence of any kind, nothing but benumbing, depressing, vitiating heathenism everywhere, in the very air they breathe. In our Marathi Mission there are five of these isolated stations with only one family at work and the same number in the Madura Mission. Surely that young mother is very wise who for her own sake, her children's, and the work's sake makes it a duty to go into Ahmednagar once a month for the sight of friendly white faces and the refreshment of social intercourse.

In the second place, we thought we knew something of the uncomfortable surroundings of our missionaries, but we were not prepared to find, for instance, that our missionaries in the city of Foochow have positively no place to go for a walk outside their premises except through the narrow, filthy streets of a Chinese city, with heaps of rubbish or the slime-covered pavement under their feet, with the vile smell of the offal pails which the field women carry, and the odors of burning fat and cooking garlic in the street restaurants on every corner; where their ears are filled with the most unearthly jargon in the world, and the shrieks of the chair coolies, which warn one to flatten one's self up against a stone wall or to dodge behind a protruding sign or a large basket of ill-smelling fish to allow a mandarin's chair to go by; where one cannot stop for an instant without being surrounded with a crowd of curious, chattering, jeering men and boys, whose rags and filth are highly suggestive of cholera, smallpox or leprosy. After two miles of this our friends can reach the foreign community, where there are clean streets and attractive houses and gardens, but by that time the desire for exercise somewhat cools. We all admire the "slum sisters" of the Salvation Army who spend their lives in the dark places of our American cities, but is there one of them who cannot in five or ten minutes find a clean street, a bit of green and a sight of cultivated Christian faces?

Another element in mission work which we had not appreciated is the constant suspicion of motives. It is certainly most trying that the first thought when a man or woman expresses an interest in Christianity must be, "Is he honest or is he looking for some selfish gain?" till the missionary cries out in despair, "Is there any one in this heathen land that I can trust?" The story is told of a Presbyterian missionary in Amoy who, some years ago, after long and patient effort, had secured the just punishment of some men who had made a causeless assault on one of his church members. As a consequence his name went abroad as one who had power with the officials. A few days afterward he received a letter from a wealthy Chinese offering him a thousand taels if he would baptize him. So astounding a proposition certainly required investigation, when it was found that the man was in trouble with the officials on account of a very questionable transaction in salt mines, and he thought if he could only be baptized as a Christian not only would his reputation for honesty be established but he would be powerfully defended by the redoubtable foreigner.

We were also surprised at the extent to which some of the converts just out of heathenism, true-hearted Christians though they are, must be held upon their feet by main force to keep them in the narrow way. It was a delight but not a surprise to see a shrine in a Chinese house dismantled of its idols and to find in their place the Lord's Prayer, Apostles' Creed and Ten Commandments, to see instead of the "good luck" mottoes opposite the entrance, "There is no God but the one true God," "If you will read the Bible and obey it you will find happiness." But we were not prepared to hear it was difficult to keep the people from worshiping them as miraculous charms. It is in the second and third generation of Christians that one sees the grandest results of missions. It was good to be introduced to a fine-appearing young man in Bombay and to have Mr. Hume say, "This young man knows no more about heathenism than my boys do"; to see the son of Ram Krishnapunt in Ahmednagar, the leader of a new church enterprise in the city, a lawyer of high repute on week days and a preacher on Sunday until money can be secured to pay a pastor; to meet the sons of Helper Meng in China, and many other bright, intelligent, consecrated men and women. Any one of these would give a most emphatic answer to one who still asks the question, "Do missions pay?"

As for Japan it was a constant surprise. Going there as we did from conservative China, with its few miles of railways in its immense territory, with so little mail system, even for the imperial city of Peking, that our missionaries, to make sure that we should receive their letters at a specified time, sent them by special messenger, the contrast was very great. We found ourselves continually asking, How did these Japanese know how to do this? Where did they learn to do that? Trolley cars whizzing through the streets of Kyoto, the city of temples, electric lights glaring amid the dim picturesque Japanese lanterns and even shining out from the forehead of an immense bronze Daibutz, tall factory chimneys towering in the midst of the low wooden and paper houses of the people—indeed, all the modern inventions seem as much domesticated there as in Chicago or New York.

One impression, not new, but burned into our souls with a new force, has haunted us night and day since our return. We realize as never before that the church of Christ has entered upon a tremendous undertaking in the evangelization of the world; that with only a small fraction of the church at work upon it, as now, it will not be accomplished for ages, if ever. Halting, faltering, retrenching, blighting the budding work in hundreds of places for lack of workers, constant bitter hampering of the workers for want of means, will never lead to victory. The church, under its unconquerable Leader, undoubtedly has the power to do it "in this generation," but it must move with unbroken ranks, it must move speedily, prayerfully, resistlessly.

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Sept. 27–Oct. 3. Lessons from David's Life and Words. 2 Sam. 22: 1–22.

David in the Old Testament and Peter in the New come close to us because they are such absolutely human characters. Their natures were a mixture of good and evil. They were both ardent and impulsive, and both had to spend a long time in the school of discipline before they were ready to graduate. Perhaps David is even more representative a type than Christ's leading apostle, because David's life moved through a multitude of diverse conditions. He was both poor and rich, popular and persecuted, successful and disappointed. He knew the simple cares and joys of a shepherd's life; he knew, also, the fashionable and artificial life of kings' courts.

In all these different circumstances God was ordering and developing David's life. He had a use for him here at one time and there at another. And the divine program included disappointment, trials and defeats, as well as glory and honor. The loss of his cherished friend, Jonathan, the ingratitude and sin of his son, Absalom, the thwarting of his purpose to build a temple to God's praise—these must have been very bitter drops in David's cup, yet only thus could God have his perfect way with this headstrong and ambitious man. And out of these hard experiences came the sense of God's leadership and love that gave birth to those Psalms that have been the reservoir of spiritual strength for all the ages. "Take me, make me," prayed a man desirous of serving God and his generation, but not until he was willing to pray, "take me, break me, make me," was he able to do his best work for the world.

All this time David was a child of God and was living the life of faith and desire after righteousness. He stumbled and fell, to be sure, over and over again. But there was in him that longing after God and after worth of character which made even his slips and mistakes stepping-stones to higher things. The life which has once been given to God in entire sincerity moves on toward him. It is a great thing to be a Christian, not because we attain perfection at a bound, but because we are in the struggle after it. If the grace of God means anything to us weak and erring mortals it means just this, that we have been brought within reach of influences by which, if we yield to them continually, we shall be led into ever enlarging peace and joy and victory. King David himself and King David's greater and entirely blameless Son bid us never despair of ourselves.

The ark is a guest that always pays well for its entertainment.—Philip Henry.

The Conversation Corner.

PACIFIC GROVE, CAL.

Dear Mr. Martin: I like to read the letters in the corner very much. I am taking my vacation down on the coast and I watch the folks in bathing every day. I have a little brother five years old, and we have fine times together. My brother was born the day I was three years old. I had a great-great-grandfather, named Thomas Harris, who was born in 1695 and died in 1801, so that he lived in three centuries. RAY S.

With such an ancestor as that Ray would better try and live in three centuries too. Please reckon up how old he will be if he succeeds? In contrast to his vacation on the Western coast I will tell you a little of my week's outing on the Eastern, although there is nothing very remarkable to tell. I watched the folks in bathing too—but the water was much colder than in the mild Pacific. I did not have any five-years-old brother with me, but I found other children of all ages, from a year and a half to three scores and a half. On the beach, you know, we are all children!

Once or twice a day some of us had to go for water, for although there was an ocean of water close at our feet—sometimes covering our feet, as the year and a half boy suddenly found to his surprise one day—it was not fit to drink. To the well, locked up in a little house, a half mile away, we hauled our cans in a little cart which we found in the barn belonging to our cottage. Some times Master 1 1-2 sat in the cart and drove. But if the ocean did not furnish us drinking water, it supplied us with food, and to get that we rode a mile or so down the beach—on our wheels—to "the fish-houses," returning after a chat with the fishermen with a couple of hake or haddock or cod tied to our handle-bars.

One day I rode off to a neighboring town—the roads near the beach all seemed to be hard and fairly level—and had a nice call upon three boys at a farmhouse, the youngest of whom was celebrating with frosted and lettered cake his tenth birthday. The others were taking the skin off a fine woodchuck they had caught the night before in a fox-trap. (Country boys do have some fun you boys in the city do not!) On Sunday I went as many miles in the other direction to attend church. It was called the "Line Church," because it was situated on the line between two towns. But, alas, while we were in the Sunday school it began to rain—you know one cannot carry an umbrella on a bicycle! But it turned out well, for I was invited to a house near by to dine and wait until the shower was over, and there I found two of the nicest boys, of proper Corner age.

Another day I went—a little way beyond the well-house on the opposite side of the road—to the alleged grave of Thorvald, the Norseman explorer of A. D. 1002. It is simply a rock in the field, on which are seen rude marks, thought by some antiquaries to have been cut by Thorvald's companions in compliance with his request, when wounded by an Indian arrow, that they should set crosses at his head and feet. I talked with some intelligent boys on the beach, who of course had studied about Eric the Red, Leif the Lucky (Thorvald's brother) and other Norsemen, and promised them I would tell them where they could find fuller account of those ancient voyages. It is in Higginson's Book of American Explorers (Lee & Shepard, Boston), and I think the part about the Northmen and Columbus can be bought separately for fifteen cents. A few miles away, out at sea, we could see also the isles discovered by Capt. John Smith when New England was North Virginia.

A much more modern relic of northern navigation lies on the beach, and a Watertown boy who was stopping near took me to it. It is the wreck of a large, three-masted schooner, belonging to New Brunswick, which got off her course in a thick snowstorm last winter and ran on a ledge in the bay. The sailors took to the rigging and for a time were in great danger, but at length a life-saving crew arrived from a station a few miles away with their apparatus. Four times a life line was shot before it could be secured by the benumbed and bewildered sailors on board. At last they were all hauled safely ashore. The cut kindly loaned me by the News Letter shows how the wreck looked at the time. Afterwards it drifted on the rocks nearer shore and the stern and mizzenmast were entirely carried away. The vessel was sold for a trifle and is now used as a restaurant for curiosity-seekers! On a long, strong line fastened at the masthead and reaching down nearly to the deck many boys swing far out over the water and at full tide drop into the sea. Others are content with climbing up the rigging or jumping down into the hold, now partly filled with sand.

WRECK OF THE GLENDON AT HAMPTON BEACH.

I have not mentioned the name or locality of the beach, but perhaps you can guess by reading the life of Captain Smith or Whittier's poem on The Wreck of Rivermouth, which was close by. [I am sorry to give you away, Mr. M., but I had, of course, to put the proper label under the cut!—D. F.]

Mr. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

Curiosities of Water. Some of them were mentioned in a paragraph in this column two weeks ago, but not the one referred to in this week's Corner. Why is the ocean salt? It is very inconvenient, sometimes very distressful, that travelers on the sea cannot satisfy their thirst by dipping from the ocean around them—

Water, water, everywhere,
Nor any drop to drink.

Why would it not have been better if the ocean had been made of water good to drink? What advantages offset this disadvantage? If I were in school as you are I would think up and read up the whole matter, and write a composition on The Saltiness of the Sea. Do not forget to explain why the Great Salt Lake in Utah is not fresh like other American lakes.

Water for the Children. I think of six ways in which water—in its different forms—is a special source of interest and pleasure to children. (What are they?) A seventh use is that recommended by the following lines, composed, typewritten and handed to me by a blind girl:

The bluebirds drink the gentle showers,
The honey-bees the dew;
The mountain stream that cheers the flowers
Is God's best drink for you.

Aquariums. Since writing the above, I have chanced to take up an English magazine containing a very interesting account of the way for boys to make an aquarium. That is a use of water for interest and pleasure which I had not thought of. It has full directions for making the tank, and for preparing the sand, shingle and rocks for it. The aqua is salt, not fresh, and to accommodate boys who do not live near the sea it refers to a preparation of "Aquarium Sea-salt," in the English trade. Are any of our members practically interested in aquariums?

Gold in the Sea. And now I have a second postscript to fill the Foreman's order for another paragraph, for I have just read a remarkable article in the Boston Transcript asserting that the ocean contains a certain percentage of gold—about four cents worth to a ton of water. The only trouble is to discover some economical process of separating the "yellow metal" from the briny fluid. It is estimated that there is $120,000,000,000,000,000 worth of gold in all the seas. Yes, but there are probably 100,000,000,000,000,000,000,000 fish in the ocean; at fifteen cents each (the price at the "fish-houses"), how much would they be worth—but you would have to catch the fish first!

L. H. M.

The endowment fund for Whitman College has climbed to $115,000.

Mr. E. S. Woodcock has accepted the principalship of the Eells Academy of Colville, Wn.

The Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society.

A Sketch of Administrative Methods and of the Official Routine.

If any of our denominational benevolent societies bears upon its face the purpose of its existence it is the Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society. Some time ago a friend wrote the secretary, Rev. G. M.

GEORGE M. BOYNTON.
Secretary.

Boynton, D. D., inquiring why another name could not be given the organization that would be "just as pious and twice as handy"; to which remark the ready secretary responded that he would give one hundred dollars if his genial critic would suggest a better and more appropriate caption than its present one. The offer was never accepted, and indeed if it be desirable that the exact object for which an organization exists should stand forth in the name by which it is known, then this society could not improve its title. The only justification for its being is the fact that it undertakes to plant and nourish Congregational Sunday schools and to supply them with a proper equipment and the denomination at large with a special kind of literature.

Like all our societies, this one has undergone a process of evolution whereby it has come to a more definite consciousness of its particular end in life. It has become the residuary legatee of the traditions and special functions of several preliminary organizations, and since the year 1883 has found the basis upon which it can best conduct its activities, as well as the field and scope of their exercise. A minute story of this process of development is written fully in pamphlets and reports that are easily accessible, and is not germane to the present article, the chief design of which is to set forth present conditions and methods, and to throw upon the screen a silhouette or two of the persons most concerned in the practical management of the society.

M C. HAZARD.
Editor.

Suffice it, in passing, however, to say that the Sunday school missionary and publishing work of the denomination is now conjoined in one society, first of all because historically it has been found that their separation or the intrusting of the missionary activity to any other kindred organization has not accrued to the advantage of the work; in the next place, from the point of view of both philosophy and common sense, the two aims belong together. It is just as important to take care of the child as it is to bring it into the world. It is just as necessary to give a Sunday school the right kind of diet as it is to make one more numerical addition to the figures that represent the denomination's investment in such schools.

Few people realize how interesting a

C H CASE, CHICAGO.
Chairman Committee of Interior.

thing it is to get at a benevolent society from the inside; to substitute, for a moment, in the place of the big, and often altogether too vague, capital letters by which it is known to the world, the living personalities who are contributing day by day of their vital forces to the propelling of the machinery and the enrichment and enlargement of the society in its various departments. As respects the C. S. S. and P. Society, now under consideration, the average man possesses at the best only stray bits of information regarding it. If he be a Bostonian or a frequent visitor to the capital of New England he knows, and perhaps frequents, the well-lighted and attractive bookstore occupying most of the first story of the Congregational House. If his home is in Chicago he has perhaps learned that at 175 Wabash Avenue is a first-class bookstore with the word Congregational upon its door-posts. The average Sunday school child throughout the country, fingering his quarterly week by week, casts maybe a passing glance at the imprint which shows whence the periodical emanates. The average church attendant is aware that about once in so often comes the stated appeal for funds wherewith to carry forward the missionary work of the society. The outside public looks upon it as one of several denominational organizations of the same sort.

We see the perfected product in a lesson

E LAWRENCE BARNARD.
Treasurer.

leaf or quarterly packed with the latest learning and the freshest and most suggestive side lights and comments, or in an attractive story-book just adapted for the Sunday school library, or in a thoughtful theological volume such as every pastor immediately wants to own. We hear of five or six hundred schools added annually to the thousands already existing, of the springing annually from these of more than sixty Congregational churches, but we must go behind the finished product and the row of dry figures adequately to comprehend how much of patient toil, and wise supervision, of constant journeying over plains and through forests, and hand to hand labor with all sorts of men and women is essential to the attainment of the gratifying results.

The bare basal facts relating to the internal administration are these: The society's headquarters are in Boston, from which point the missionary work is superintended and where all the literature is published, but Chicago has become an important center of redistribution and thither are sent most of the orders from Western

W F WHITTEMORE.
Business Manager.

States. It is important to keep this fact in mind, though this article will naturally have most to do with the Boston headquarters.

Spare an hour, then, for a visit to the bookstores in Boston or Chicago, as may best suit your convenience. Look over the well-stocked shelves where denominational literature is kept well at the front, but where also no embargo is placed upon any good literature emanating from the other

W. A. DUNCAN.
Field Secretary.

publishing houses of America and England, the constant effort being to supply the best modern religious and theological works and to make them available at as little outlay as possible to Congregational ministers and laymen.

At the headquarters in Boston Mr. George P. Smith for many years held the position of Boston agent. He died in July after fifty years in the service of the society This article will not be long in type when Mr. Smith's successor, Mr. J. H. Tewksbury, will be installed in his place, coming with a special equipment for his work derived from a long familiarity with the business of the society both in its Boston and Chicago offices. Close by the agent's desk are the book-keepers, who are busy day in and day out attending to the various and often complicated accounts of the society in all its branches, while a force of clerks and shipping agents is kept constantly at work along the different lines of a well-ordered bookstore.

Three flights of stairs separate the book store from the rooms at the top of the house that serve as headquarters for the missionary and editorial departments. In the good sized room that occupies the south east corner stand in friendly proximity the desks of Secretary Boynton and Field Secretary Duncan and of Editor Hazard. The most striking artistic adornment is the crayon portrait of the sainted Asa Bullard, who put the best fifty years of his life into Sunday school work and the whole of a heart which was as large as a meeting house. Two adjoining rooms are required for the other members of the official staff, and they, like nearly all the denizens of the Congregational House, will rejoice in the ampler accommodations that the much heralded new building promises to furnish.

As you take your seat by Dr. Boynton's side you are at the nerve center, so to speak, of Congregational Sunday school aggressiveness. He maintains a vigilant outlook upon the field of the society's operations, which comprises the entire territory of the United States. He determines to a large extent, in consultation with the proper committees, the policy of the society and its methods of operation. He has much to do with the appointment of superintendents and missionaries and with the many ramifications of their work. This obliges him to be in frequent correspondence with the men in the field, and to visit them from time to time as well as the different State associations and local conferences. His last transcontinental trip was, perhaps, a sample one. In thirty days he attended no less than five State meetings and made thirty addresses. But the larger part of the time he spends at the Boston office, and his force of trained assistants enables him to multiply his energies and make his personality felt all along the skirmish line as well as in the older communities and established centers, which serve as sub stations.

Persons of a methodical turn of mind would find a joy in examining the system of reports and book-keeping whereby the society is prepared at any time to render an account of its stewardship, to show exactly, in black and white, what it has done and is trying to do. Dr. Boynton, it is only justice to say, is a genius in inventing forms and devices by means of which the keeping of the accounts and the registration of statistics are simplified and facilitated. He has turned this talent of his to good account in such useful volumes as The Pastor's Pocket Memorandum and the Pilgrim Church and Pastor's Registers, published by the society and in wide use among the churches. And as respects the numerous clerical and mechanical details that pertain to the inner affairs of the society itself, he will tolerate no cumbersome or slipshod methods. As a result, as thorough and sensible a system has been worked out as any business house can exhibit. Once a month each superintendent and missionary sends to the missionary committee of the society a report. In order that it may be seen how minute and detailed this report is we subjoin its principal headings.

W. F. MACMILLEN.
Superintendent Ohio, Indiana, Illinois.

1. Schools organized during the month by superintendent or missionary, or as a result of his work.
2. Other schools organized. [This should only include schools not previously reported.]
3. Schools reorganized during the month by superintendent or missionary. [When schools have been discontinued two years or longer, the organization should be reported under No. 1.]
4. Schools visited (in addition to those named under 1, 2, 3).
5. Pastors and superintendents visited.
6. Institutes and Sunday school conventions conducted or assisted.
7. Other meetings attended in the interest of the society.
8. Sermons and addresses delivered. Total No.
9. Other missionary work (not included in 1 to 8).
10. Supplies given away from your stock received from the missionary department.
11. Amounts received for the business department in Boston only.
12. Amount received for the missionary department, including receipts for granted supplies.
13. Distances traveled.
14. Statement of account: Salary. Expenses (in detail).

Such a report, it will readily be perceived, brings before the officials in Boston a vivid picture of the actual service for the last thirty days of every man in the society's employ, whether he be in distant Oklahoma, twenty miles from a railway, or in the wheat-fields of Dakota. If the report needs explanation, here or there, a letter of kindly inquiry is at once sent. Thus the nature, size and possibilities of every school planted and nourished by the society are kept constantly in view. Of the five or six hundred schools organized yearly, perhaps a hundred are assigned to as many Sunday schools here in the East, and individual connection is thus established. A school in Providence, for instance, feels itself measurably responsible for one in Big Horn, Wyo., not only to the extent of providing the twenty-five dollars required to start the school and maintain it a year, but perhaps for opening a correspondence and trying to realize a genuine Christian fellowship.

The society strives to make the new schools self supporting just as soon as possible. Some reach the state of independence in the course of a few months, others are on the dependent list for several years. Perhaps the average length of the period of partial sustentation from without is three years, and naturally the process of learning to walk alone is made easy by gradual withdrawal of the supporting arms. Another principle of administration upon which emphasis is laid is the desirability of putting each new school as soon as possible in contact with some church or stronger school not far away from it with the idea of developing a reciprocity of interests and mutual good will. Hardly ever does it happen that any part of the twenty five dollars required to start a school goes for rent or running expenses. The grant is used chiefly for the furnishing of quarterlies and other literary helps.

The fact that the society has two entirely distinct departments has led naturally and wisely to the keeping of two distinct bank accounts, different banks being utilized as places of deposit. Mr. E. Lawrence Barnard, to be sure, is the sole treasurer of the society, but the actual financial transactions of the business department are as distinct from those of the missionary department as would be the business dealings of one firm with another. If the missionary department buys literature of the publishing department, as it constantly does, it has to pay just as good Deacon Jones does who sends in his order the first of every January

F. J. MARSH.
Superintendent New England.

for eight senior quarterlies and twelve intermediate ones for his beloved school in North Tiverton, N. H. It appears, then, that there are about as many careful checks on waste, extravagance and dishonesty—if such a vice could be thought of in connection with a benevolent society—as could be devised, and the result justifies the process. The publishing department not only meets all its own expenses but is able, each year, to turn over to the missionary department for pioneer work from three to five thousand dollars.

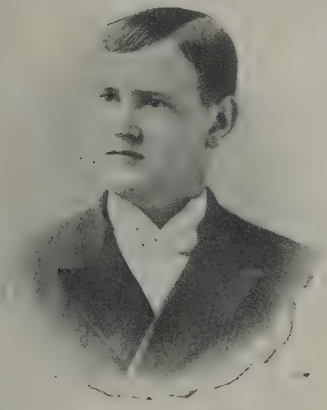
There are two other men at the Boston headquarters who are only second to Dr. Boynton in their identification with the missionary department, and not second to him in their devotion to it. Dr. W. A. Duncan gives ten months in the year to field work, the other two being spent at Chautauqua, where he is numbered among the presiding spirits; but Sunday school work is the idol of his heart, and if there is anything he loves to do it is to present the cause to the churches, to consult with the superintendents and missionaries, and to plan for and lead advances wherever strategic points encourage an aggressive campaign. Dr. Duncan's field is the whole country, while Rev. F. J. Marsh confines his comings and goings to New England. He is getting to be a familiar and welcome figure at ecclesiastical gatherings, large and small. Of the other field workers mention should be made of Rev. W. F. Macmillen, whose district is the important



REV. J. L. KILBON.
Managing Editor.

States of Illinois, Ohio and Indiana. And of the remainder of the thirty men it is sufficient to say that they have been selected with great care and with the thought of their adaptability to their peculiar fields. The society has always been more anxious concerning the quality of its representatives than for their number, and the men now on duty stand high in the esteem of the brethren who know them best. Three of the superintendents, Rev. Messrs. Stewart of Nebraska, Case of Southern California and Pratt of Oklahoma, have been in the harness since 1883, about the time of the reorganization, effected largely through the instrumentality of Rev. A. E. Dunning, D. D.

It is only a step or two from Dr. Boynton's desk to that of Dr. Hazard, but the transition opens up a new and inviting field of investigation. Here, in the person of its editor, M. C. Hazard, Ph. D., we are in contact with the source of that large volume of literature which has been and is being put forth. First of all comes the series of Sunday school helps. The old-time question-book has been entirely supplanted by quarterlies and lesson leaves, and with this substitution have come a larger differentiation and a vast improvement in the quality of the material. We have now three distinct grades of the Pilgrim Quarterlies—the Senior, the Intermediate and the Junior. More advanced still is the Pilgrim Teacher, less designed, as its name implies, for pupils than for their instructors, while at the opposite extreme are the publications issued particularly for the little people—the Little Pilgrim, in which the story of the lesson is given in conversational style and in large type with illustrations, and the popular Lesson Pictures, with the beautiful picture in colors accompanying a brief lesson in question and answer form. Dr. Hazard's supervision extends not only to this entire series of lesson helps but to all the society's publications. His distinctively original work, however, is confined mainly to the Pilgrim Teacher and to the exposition and illustration of the lessons. The same framework is used for all the grades, thus securing a unity of general treatment and accustoming the pupil who advances from one grade to another to a certain desirable similarity in the way in which a given lesson is approached. The illustration and practical application of the lessons naturally varies according to the capacity of the scholars. Perhaps it might be well to say, as an evidence of the way they are appreciated, that the lesson helps never had so large a circulation as now, having more than doubled within the last decade.

J. H TEWKSBURY.
Agent.

It falls to Rev. J. L. Kilbon to do the exegetical work for all the lesson helps and to furnish, besides, the material in the Bible Dictionary. He is a graduate of Williams College and Hartford Seminary and has developed exceptional ability as a careful exegete and commentator.

The primary department in the Pilgrim Teacher is under the care of Miss Anna F.

MISS ANNA F. BURNHAM.
Associate Editor.

Burnham, who has given it an exceptional worth and an honorable reputation. Miss Burnham is also directly responsible for most of the work in the junior grades of the lesson helps, as well as for the Little Pilgrim, which she edits with keen sympathy for the little people. A correspondingly high level of work is sustained by Mrs. Alice Mayo Swift, who has charge of the kindergarten department of the Teacher. All the writers on the International Lessons are obliged to have their copy ready from three to six months in advance.

The society's periodical literature includes also the Wellspring, which for two generations and longer has been a constant visitor in many a New England home, and has earned a notable reputation as a Sunday school periodical replete with a great variety of miscellaneous matter useful to young people. As it has aged it has brightened and broadened, and was never nearer the ideal of such a sheet than now, under the editorship of Willis Boyd Allen. A gifted writer and the author of several excellent stories and a volume or two of poems, Mr. Allen is no less skillful as a practical journalist. He has been abroad for most of the current year, but returns in October. In the meantime Miss Natalie Rice has conducted the paper so successfully that few have realized that its regular editor was absent. The Mayflower, started about ten years ago, aims to be to childhood what the Wellspring is to youth. It has been edited from its beginning by Mrs. Julia H. Boynton, the wife of the secretary, and there is never a dull line in its four prettily adorned pages.

MRS. JULIA H. BOYNTON.
Editor Mayflower.

Before leaving the subject of helps and special periodical literature, allusion ought to be made to the inductive lessons in the life of Christ and the history of Israel prepared in recent years by Dr. Hazard and designed for advanced Bible classes, as well as for any students or body of students who desire work more advanced and somewhat more consecutive than the International Lessons.

When it comes to the publication of books the denomination exercises a prudent policy, recognizing the unwisdom of incurring risks and of making such ventures as an ordinary publishing concern may be disposed to do. From fifty to sixty book manuscripts are submitted in the course of a year, and in exceptional years, as in 1888, when prizes were offered, the number has risen to 300. Mr. Kilbon first examines the work submitted, and whatever runs the gauntlet of his criticism passes next to Dr. Hazard, and usually, when his opinion is favorable, to Dr. Boynton, and thereafter to the publishing committee. The number of books published each year varies from ten to twenty, seventeen being perhaps a fair average. The larger half of these are stories, but the list will include now and then a theological work, a volume of ser mons, a choice biography like that of Dr. Gulick or Dr. Hamlin, or such a work as the Mary Lyon Year Book, or Dr. Hazard's admirable compilation of poems, The Tearless Land. What the society is most constantly in search of is first-class books suited to the Sunday school library, and there is always an eager welcome for a manuscript of this sort that can be marked A 1.

The improvement effected in all branches of the society's activity is nowhere more apparent than in the quality of its books, which have, in late years, been so good that other denominations and the trade in general have been glad to recognize and make use of them.

The process of putting into type accepted manuscripts imposes a task of no slight proportions upon Dr. Hazard and his coadjutors. Every manuscript must be subjected to scrupulous editing, and it is the uniform practice to verify all quotations and allusions, thus forestalling errors. Indeed, too much praise is not likely to be bestowed upon the accuracy and trustworthiness of all the literature that bears the imprint of the society. The original work of the editors bears upon its face the stamp of thorough scholarship, while careful editing and painstaking proof-reading make it sure that work done outside the office will be marked by the same qualities; and in this connection the services of Miss Annette C. Kemp as proof-reader for ten years have been invaluable. For the same period a great reliance has been placed upon the taste and fertility of invention of Mr. William F. Whittemore, the business manager. It has fallen to him to attend, in the main, to the artistic and mechanical matters in connection with making all the books and periodicals that the society sends out, and to him, in large measure, is to be credited the notable gain in their exterior attractiveness. He hopes soon to transfer these and other functions of his position to Mr. Tewksbury, inasmuch as his connection with the society has always been of a temporary nature and in addition to his regular vocation.

WILLIS BOYD ALLEN.
Editor Wellspring.

The society's committees render it service which is by no means small or perfunctory. That on missionary work, composed of seven ministers and laymen, meets monthly and considers carefully the actualities and potentialities of the broad field. The committee on publications and that on finance also hold stated meetings, and five directors living in or about Chicago constitute a committee for the Interior, of which C. H. Case is chairman, which supervises the business operations for the Western house and gives valued advice in regard to missionary work in the district. The Chicago branch of the publishing house has become an important and indispensable institution, and under Mr. Tewksbury's management has developed the capacities of its field to an extent fully realizing the most sanguine anticipations when the branch was established. Under Mr. E. Herrick Brown, who will assume, for the present at least, the management, it is likely to continue its prosperous career. These four committees, with other gentlemen, constitute a board of directors elected in groups of nine for terms of three years' service.

At the head of the society figures Samuel B. Capen, not as a figurehead but as president both in name and fact. His numerous and important business interests and his devotion to other forms of Christian activity, and to municipal reform and all good causes, do not militate at all against his fulfilling to the utmost the duties of his office. He attends the important committee meetings and keeps a tight grasp upon details, while his enthusiasm, courage and organizing ability are felt everywhere.

Fortunate, certainly, is the society in securing for its most responsible positions the services of able and consecrated men. Theirs is no easy calling; their work is continuous and exacting. They see on one hand broadening and ripening fields, while on the other hand they are confronted all the time with the problem of securing sufficient resources wherewith to cultivate these fields. They are laboring strenuously to secure results commensurate with the dignity of the society's traditions, with the demands of a constituency that expects large and worthy things and with the ever widening area of golden opportunities. Perhaps this little sketch may help to make the Congregational mind more intelligent and the Congregational heart more sympathetic with regard to a society that seeks to find and keep its place in the sisterhood of societies, to labor in harmony with them and with all Christian organizations and to do a work for the children of the country which it believes God has given it in particular to do.

CO-OPERATION IN SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK.

At the recent International Sunday School Convention in Boston one of the most suggestive and pungent papers was that of Rev. G. M. Boynton, D. D., on Denominational Co-operation. He first justified the existence of denominations, showed how aggressive effort is best prosecuted on denominational lines, and then went on to plead for a real and effective working co-operation. We should be glad, if space permitted, to publish the address in full, but the portion beneath given sets forth its main contention and is particularly valuable in revealing the catholic spirit that animates the policy of our own Sunday School Society.

Brethren of all the tribes of Israel, may I speak a word for one of them, not by any means the largest, but in this land one of the elder brothers and among the first to enter upon his inheritance. We do not claim to have been altogether guiltless in this matter of substituting competition for co-operation. Even among ourselves and in our older cities it has sometimes happened that unholy rivalries have sprung up, that the question has been, not in what location and by what methods can we serve the cause of Christ the best, but how can we serve ourselves best and perhaps get the better of our brethren. We take shame to ourselves so far as we are or have been guilty in this matter.

But we have faced the matter candidly in determining the policy of our aggressive Christian work, both in its Sunday school and church departments. For the former, so far as it is a denominational work, I speak officially. It is our determined purpose and our open offer to co-operate with all who love our Lord Jesus Christ so far as they will let us do it in his work; and it is equally our avowed policy and purpose not to initiate any competition under the pretext of doing the Lord's work with any church which believes that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. These are the instructions under which our Sunday school State superintendents and missionaries go forth and which they are expected to obey in the letter and in the spirit—a spirit of loving loyalty to our one Master and to the family in Christ which they represent, and of fraternal comity and co-operation with all the families which are named in him.

You might expect me here to add that we find the same spirit in all the other bodies of Christian workers in this broad field. God knows how gladly I would say it if I could. But we are not here to say pleasant things to one another only, but to say the things that are true and profitable to be heard. I say it in sorrow, we do not find this spirit even in the Sunday school missionary work. There is one denomination—I name no names and I shall name no names—which meets us always in the same fraternal spirit. The head of its Sunday school work and I are at one in this matter, and I have never known of an occasion of offense on either side. If it were to occur and remonstrance did not cause it to cease a speedy process of electrocution would.

But it is not universally true, sorry as we are to say it, and that with bodies which are largely represented here. They meet us here to co-operate in planning together for Christian work, but on the older fields and those just opening to cultivation they meet us not to co-operate but to compete. Shall I give an instance or two? A large and growing city in the older West; our missionary discovers a population of 300 souls separated from the main city by a stream, with no Protestant service in English. It had grown and no one, apparently, not even the good ministers of Christ, each busy in his own field, had noticed it. The aid of our own church across the river is secured, a place obtained, a school organized and occasional preaching services provided. Within a few weeks, before there had been given time for this new plant to take root, another closely affiliated denomination opens a school in the next block and makes the work begun difficult and finally impossible. Was that co-operation, or competition, or comity? Another place much further West, a lumber town; our missionary finds it, wins his way to the good will and at last assistance of the owners, gathers a school, sends an evangelist, wins forty souls to faith in Christ. A church is to be constituted, when another denomination sends in a preacher to divide the catch and make a second and divisive organization both of church and Sunday school. This effort is persisted in until it is so evidently rejected by the people that it fails.

I feel no fear of contradiction here when I say that these things ought not so to be; that they are a shame and a disgrace to the name we bear. I have been within a few weeks in the Territory of Oklahoma, where a friend of mine in a railroad car heard a leading official in an evangelical denomination say with emphasis to a minister of his own body, "Next to the devil, the hardest thing we have got to down in this Territory is the Congregationalists."

Now, friends, either we ought not to show the hypocrisy of recognizing each other as Christian brethren at all, or we ought to recognize each other fully and without reserve. We may be separated by matters of taste and preference and even doctrinal squint, but either we are working together or we are not. Which is it, competition or co-operation? Let us adopt a principle and emblazon it on our banners, and march where it leads us. Let us be honest.

If we are working for the building up of Christ's kingdom, let us decide who are with us in the purpose and give them room. The Western lands are full of commercial travelers. Each is trying to sell to paying customers the goods of the house he represents. What would the manager of a great commercial house do if he should find that half a dozen drummers were running a competition to secure the trade in a single town and leaving large sections of the country without solicitation? I tell you he would miserably withdraw those unfaithful servants who were trying to beat each other rather than to serve him. Wouldn't you? And wouldn't it probably be found that the wares they were trying thus to sell were not the genuine goods at all?

Denominations! They are good enough in their way. Christ! His is the name which is above every name, the only name to glory in in all the world. Competition between those who bear his name as their common denominator! It is a shame to mention it, unless it be that honorable competition which is eager to do its full part in the work he has left his disciples to do. Comity, the law of kindliness and good will, which esteems others better than itself and rejoices in their success for Christ as in its own, co-operation in all good things, within all wise and practicable limits, in all ways which increase efficiency and hasten the coming of his kingdom — this surely is the law of Christ.

Notable among the family reunions of the season was that of the Tyler family, held with great enthusiasm in North Andover by the descendants of the original Job Tyler, with whose coming to Rhode Island the story of the clan in America begins. The family has developed a number of college professors, of whom Moses Coit Tyler of Cornell was made president of the day. A paper on Tyler Biology, by the venerable Prof. William S. Tyler of Amherst, was one of the features, though the author himself was unable to be present. Other parts in the program were taken by his two sons, Prof. John M. Tyler of Amherst and Prof. Henry M. Tyler of Smith, and a letter of regret was read from Prof. L. G. Tyler of William and Mary College, Virginia. This family devotion to education may be further indicated by recalling that it was Mary Tyler who "had a little lamb," whose intrusion distracted the attention of the scholars at the school she attended, and by the general success and culture of the descendants and bearers of the name.

We talk about the dangerous classes. The danger lies in the separation of the classes — those who are the salt of the earth keeping by themselves instead of coming into contact with that which tends to corruption.—A. J. Gordon.

AN OHIO DEDICATION.

The church in Wellington dedicated its new house of worship with appropriate services on the 13th and 14th of this month. The edifice shown in the accompanying half-tone is the fifth house occupied by the church in the seventy-two years of its history. Of these, two have been destroyed by fire, the last Feb. 9, 1895. It was a fine brick structure, erected at a cost of $25,000 in 1879, one of the first houses in Ohio to adopt the style of architecture and arrangement now generally recognized as belonging to the modern church home.

During the nineteen months since the fire the church has occupied the Opera House, all its services and work have been well sustained and its membership shows a slight increase. The corner stone of the new edifice was laid Aug. 18, 1895. The material is brick with trimmings of Berea sandstone. It was designed by Mr. S. R. Badgley of Cleveland, on a model which is illustrated in the Pilgrim Church in Cleveland and the new church at Sandusky, which is already a favorite in northern Ohio.

The auditorium is in the form of an irregular octagon and has no gallery; the roof is supported by eight wooden trusses projecting into the room and finished in plaster; these meet at the top in an octagon, which is surmounted by a dome of colored glass. The room is decorated in soft colors shading from terra cotta, is trimmed with gilt and ivory and is abundantly lighted by stained windows with coloring in close harmony with the decoration. The main windows, east and south, contain handsome designs of the Good Shepherd and Christ Knocking at the Door.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, WELLINGTON, O.

The floor slopes toward the pulpit, which is placed at the inner corner, leaving the entire adjoining side for the choir and organ. On the other side of the pulpit is the Sunday school department, parted from the main room by a large partition which is swung on pulleys. The Sunday school wing has galleries at the ends, providing for a primary department and eight separate classrooms. The social equipment is below, and consists of ladies' parlor, dining-room, kitchen and dressing-rooms. The main audience-room is seated for 550 and the Sunday school rooms will accommodate 250.

The building is finished in oak and chestnut and the furniture is of polished oak. It is heated by steam and lighted by electricity. The cost of the house complete, including organ and furnishings, is about $27,000, of which $20,000 were received from the insurance on the former house. The stained windows were purchased by the Ladies' Society and the fine Steere organ was provided mainly by a Guild of the young people, with the substantial aid of a few individuals. The service of dedication occurred Sunday morning, with a sermon by Pres. C. F. Thwing of Western Reserve University, and in the evening addresses were given by Professor Currier of Oberlin and Secretary Fraser of Cleveland. Monday evening was devoted to the fellowship of the churches, with brief addresses by the pastors of the other churches in town, which suspended their Sunday services for the dedication, and by Rev. J. R. Nichols of Medina, Dr. H. M. Tenney of Oberlin and Rev. S. D. Gammell, pastor of the church from 1884 to 1889, now of Tallmadge, O. The present pastor, Rev. A. F. Skeele, enters this week upon his fourth year of service, and the people are looking forward hopefully to the work of the coming season. The present membership of the church is 320. s.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

HENRY ORMOND PINNEO.

The Congregational Church Building Society loses a faithful servant in the death of its treasurer, Sept. 8. He was the son of Rev. Bezaleel and Mary (Stone) Pinneo, and was born in Milford, Ct., Feb. 22, 1815. He was for several years a successful merchant importer in New York city. His business was largely with Southern houses. The disturbances occasioned by the Civil War absorbed the accumulations of years of hard toil and compelled suspension of business as a merchant. Having been employed as treasurer's clerk by the American Congregational Union, now known as the Congregational Church Building Society, May 16, 1883, Mr. Pinneo was chosen treasurer of this society and remained in that office until his death. With conscientious fidelity and up to the full measure of his strength he devoted himself to the financial work of this society. His widow, Mrs. Catherine Stansbury (Curtis) Pinneo, and four children survive him. One of his four sons died a few weeks ago.

REV. LUMAN A. PETTIBONE.

After a brave battle with ill health, continuing over a year, Mr. Pettibone died at Burlington, Wis., Aug. 24. A graduate of Beloit in 1877 and of Yale Divinity School in 1880, he returned to Burlington, Wis., to the pastorate of the Plymouth Church, which his father, Rev. P. C. Pettibone, helped to found in 1858. The son rendered faithful service in that field for fifteen years, resigning last September to accept a call to Tucson, Ari., where he hoped the climate would restore him to vigor, but this hope was disappointed. He was a man of great sweetness of spirit and a tireless worker.

Prof. Marshall R Gaines, for four years connected with the University of New Mexico, Albuquerque, has been appointed president of Tillotson College, Austin, Tex.

The Home

THE THINNING RANKS.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

The day grows lonelier; the air
Is chiller than it used to be.
We hear about us everywhere
The haunting chords of memory.
Dear faces once that made our joy
Have vanished from the sweet home band,
Dear tasks that were our loved employ
Have dropped from out our loosened hand.

Familiar names in childhood given
None call us by, save those in heaven.
We cannot talk with later friends
Of those old times to which love lends
Such mystic haze of soft regret;
We would not, if we could, forget
The sweetness of the bygone hours,
So priceless are love's faded flowers;
But lonelier grows the waning day,
And much we miss upon the way
Our comrades who have heard the call
That soon or late must summon all.

Ah well! the day grows lonelier here.
Thank God, it doth not yet appear
What thrill of perfect bliss awaits
Those who pass on within the gates.
O, dear ones who have left my side,
And passed beyond the swelling tide,
I know that you will meet me when
I too shall leave these ranks of men
And find the glorious company
Of saints from sin forever free,
Of angels who do always see
The face of Christ, and ever stand
Serene and strong at God's right hand.

The day grows lonelier, the air
Hath waftings strangely keen and cold,
But woven in, O, glad, O, rare,
What love-notes from the hills of gold!
Dear crowding faces gathered there
Dear blessed tasks that wait our hand,
What joy, what pleasure shall we share,
Safe anchored in the one home-land.

Close up, O comrades, close the ranks,
Press onward, waste no fleeting hour!
Beyond the outworks, lo! the banks
Of that full tide, where life hath power,
And Satan lieth underfoot,
And sin is killed, even at the root.
Close up, close fast the wavering line,
Ye who are led by One divine.
The day grows lonelier apace,
But heaven shall be our trysting place.

OUT WEST.

BY REV. CORNELIUS H. PATTON, DULUTH, MINN.

"Yes, I came from down in Maine," she replied, as her eyes rested lovingly on a bed of nasturtiums which were struggling hard with the weeds and grass. She had boarded up the bed as though to redeem it somewhat from the barren clay of the region. And then I noticed two lilac bushes, recently planted on each side of the walk, and some youthful apple trees at the side of the house.

"And are these also from Maine?" I queried, pointing at the young sprouts.

"Well, not exactly, Mr. Patton," was her rejoinder as she proceeded to shoo away the chickens who were scratching up the sawdust mulching which she had placed about the foot of the trees. "My husband says he calculates no Maine woman could live a year out of sight of a lilac bush. He laughs every time I mention my orchard, and declares that no one but a born Yankee would think of trying to raise fruit in such soil as this. I never supposed people could live in houses with no trees about them until I came here, and I told Mr. Gorrell that if he expected me to stay in such a forlorn spot as this that he would have to plant some trees and shrubs and make the place homelike."

"Then you do think this place is forlorn," I asked, in a rather hesitating way, having learned that Westerners, after they have been here for a time, are apt to be sensitive on the subject of the non-attractiveness of their surroundings. I have known men who were born under the elms of New England and lived there until middle life who, upon settling in pioneer regions of the West, within two years have so far forgotten the glories of New England trees, hills and streams as to call attention to a young growth of poplars springing up in the path of a forest fire as a fine piece of "scenery." I have known them to go into raptures over a shallow, muddy river flowing between two swamps and to solemnly ask me if I have ever seen anything in Europe to equal that. So I was not surprised when this jolly-faced woman from "down in Maine" told me she thought Claybank the nicest place she had ever seen.

This led to our going into the house, where she told me the story of her simple life, which I tell to the readers of The Congregationalist because it is typical of many another which might be told of people who have moved from the East to these raw Western towns. I had gone to Claybank to give an address in the little Congregational church which had been struggling along in spite of home missionary retrenchment and a decreasing and discouraged population. As I walked from the station to the house of my entertainer it seemed to me about as forlorn a place as I ever had seen. A hole had been cleared in the forest large enough for a big city, but the stumps were everywhere except in the middle of the main street, which, in mocking contrast, was finely macadamized and curbed, with a twenty feet walk on either side. The houses numbered perhaps a hundred, and were scattered over a square mile of land. The impression was of stumps, clay and weeds, with a sparse sprinkling of very small and very cheap dwellings. The church looked as if it had been dropped by a flood on the extreme outskirt of the town. They told me afterwards they were afraid if they located it more centrally that in a few years it might be in the slums. The building was fairly good, having been copied from a picture in the Church Building Quarterly. But the bank in front, bare of grass, was washed in deep gullies which, having worked back to the foundation, threatened to undermine the structure. The building was approached by rickety steps, evidently improvised after a particularly heavy rain. They held their place by virtue of the small size of the congregation. As I viewed these things the cheerlessness of the leaden skies seemed to settle down upon me, and I found myself saying, "God pity the people who have to live here, and especially those who have come from the comfortable and beautiful towns of the East."

When I was seated in Mrs. Gorrell's best chair, in a parlor which certainly looked cozy enough, she told me that for three months after her arrival she did little but cry. I could well believe it even before she described her old home in Maine. She was born in the house where her father and her grandfather were born, and she had never moved until she came West after her marriage to Mr. Gorrell in her middle life. Until that eventful journey she had never seen a saloon. She had never heard a foreign language spoken. "But there are foreigners in Maine," I observed.

"Yes," she replied, "there were three Irish families in our town. We called them Irish and thought of them as foreigners, but they were in the third generation on American soil, and property had passed from father to son so that they were really well-to-do and educated people."

And so she went on, giving me such a vivid picture of dear old New England life that I began to feel sort of moist about the eyes myself. She, however, was all smiles, and as happy as a home missionary at the State conference.

"Well," I asked, "how did it come about—your change of feelings?"

"It came about in this way," she said. "After I had cried for three months and made my husband miserable, myself miserable and every one around me unhappy, I came to my senses. I argued there was no use in crying. If things are so forlorn here I might as well try to make them better. And then I thought of those lilac bushes and our apple trees at home, and it came to me that some one must have planted them way back in the early days, and that my own beautiful Maine village was once a hole in the woods with stumps sticking up on every side just as they do here. The first thing I did was to send for a nursery man and have him set out those two lilacs." (I looked at them again through the window and saw they had several leaves apiece.) "And then came my orchard. You musn't laugh, for it will be an orchard some day. And then—then came a great change in my feelings towards my neighbors. We were the only people in town who had horses, and I began to take the women out riding. We drove to the city to do our shopping, and went on picnics together, and gradually I found that the people here are real nice. They are different from Maine people, but when you get used to their ways they seem just as good. I even like many of the foreign women first rate. Some of them have had as good an education as I have, and they are truly kind and appreciative."

As I expressed a lively interest in these things, Mrs. Gorrell hastened to add: "But I haven't told you the chief cause of this change that came over me. All the time I lived in Maine I never united with the church. I attended every Sunday, and my mother was a member. I supposed I was a Christian, but you know how one settles down into living in a certain way and how hard it is to make a change, especially if it is going to attract attention. As I look back on it now I don't believe I was a Christian at all; I spent so much time on myself. But out here in the little church there was so much to be done and so few to do it that I took hold, and I—well, I joined the church, and ever since I have been a happy woman."

I found that she was planning to visit Maine in the spring, the home ties being very strong, but with no desire to remain East. In that forlorn, overboomed, pioneer town in the heart of a Western forest this woman had found her work and found herself. She was contented, and Claybank was the "nicest place she had ever seen," because she had learned that happiness does not consist in having, but in being and doing. This is worth remembering when we ride through such towns on the railroad and commiserate the inhabitants. Not infrequently they may more appropriately commiserate us, because in our selfish enjoyment of luxury we are losing the richest blessing of life.

"ARE YOU READY FOR CHURCH?"

BY A PURITAN.

Up the stairway of a quiet New England parsonage used to come this question, Sunday after Sunday, asked by the minister in his calm, reverent voice as he came from his study, where he had been pleading for a blessing upon the day's labor, and down would float the various replies in careless, girlish voices: "Yes," "Almost," "No, don't wait for me, I'm not nearly ready."

And still after the lapse of many years, in the calm of the blessed Sabbath mornings, do I seem to hear the same old question. The same and yet not the same, for with the passing of time the meaning has broadened and deepened, going far beyond that which takes note of the outward adorning alone, for the words now come to my soul and the speaker seems to be "One whose form is like unto that of the Son of God," and again, as in the long ago, do I ofttimes have to make sad reply, "No, I'm not nearly ready."

In this experience do I walk alone? I fear not, and in the lack of individual preparation, it seems to me, may be found the reason why to so many of us the prayerfully, carefully prepared services of the Lord's house on his day prove to be "flat, stale, and unprofitable," when they might glow with divine power, leading our souls into "green pastures and beside still waters," so refreshing us spiritually that throughout the week we would be,

> Plying our daily task with busier feet,
> Because our secret souls a holier strain repeat.

If special preparation would lead to this result, would it not be worth our most earnest endeavor? Is it too much to ask that we who are called to present ourselves before the King of Kings and Lord of Lords should make ready? The simple rule in physics that no two things can occupy the same space at the same time holds good in spiritual matters as well, and we who would truly commune with God on his day must first be from "our worldly cares set free." We are so constituted that we cannot rush into his presence and be calmed and quieted instantly. While we are striving for a restful soul condition precious time is being wasted, and long before we have found the desired help the benediction is pronounced and we go from the house of prayer hungering and thirsting for that which we might have had.

In order to gain the most from this God-given day of rest, worship and service we need to preface each one with six days of earnest preparation. Without this daily living in touch with God a few special hours of devotion will avail little. But those whose lives are most in accord with that of the great Teacher are the very ones, seemingly, who most feel the need of adding to this weekly preparation a special time when they may, as it were, begin their "day of rest and gladness" before it really comes by a quiet season alone with their God.

There are many housekeepers who could do some of the extra work, which seems of necessity to precede the Sabbath, a little earlier in the week. If we only thought so there are times other than Saturday evening which could be used to reduce the pile of clothes in the mending basket. These and many other ways will suggest themselves to those whose steadfast desire is to make of these earthly Sabbaths foretastes of the heaven above. In this, as in all other debated questions of right versus practicability, the wise old saying, "Where there is a will there is a way," will prove itself true, and the blessing of the Lord will surely rest upon every effort to gain for one's self and others the most good from the right use of sacred times and seasons. Try for one month the plan of coming to this "day of all the week the best" rested in body, strong in mind, calm and peaceful in spirit, and thus be able to answer "Yes" when the question comes to your soul, "Are you ready for church?"

GOOD-BY.

We say it for an hour or for years;
We say it smiling, say it choked with tears;
We say it coldly, say it with a kiss;
And yet we have none other word than this—
Good-by.

We have no dearer word for our heart's friend.
To him who journeys to the world's far end
And scars our soul with going, thus we say
As unto him who steps but o'er the way—
Good-by.

Alike to those we love and those we hate,
We say no more in parting. At life's gate,
To one who passes out beyond earth's sight,
We cry as to the wanderer for a night—
Good-by.

—Grace Denio Litchfield.

HEALTH HINTS.

In its advice to young tennis players Harper's Round Table lays stress upon the necessity of plenty of sleep before midnight and discourages dancing, because this furnishes the most common excuse for sitting up late. The player who dances the night before a game usually wishes that he had gone to bed instead of to the ballroom. Thus do athletics become the handmaid of health.

A Chicago physician, who is interested in penology, having once been connected with a large reformatory institution, believes that if prunes were made a compulsory portion of the diet of the lower classes there would be less crime. He maintains that there is a certain medicinal property in this fruit which acts directly upon the nervous system, which is the seat of the evil passions. Might try it for a while on unruly children!

Eating heartily when over fatigued is an invitation to dyspepsia. A rest of only five minutes before a meal, when the system is exhausted, is beneficial. It will pay a woman to remove her dress, take down her hair, bathe her face in quite hot water, pressing the wash cloth against the eyes and back of the neck, and follow this treatment with a dash of cold water in which a little cologne or toilet vinegar has been sprinkled. Then if she can lie down a few minutes and on rising put on a different dress she will feel decidedly refreshed.

An eminent physician says that if he were limited to but one remedy for chronic diseases he would select hot water. The body, he claims, needs an internal as well as an external bath, and hot water, judiciously taken, stimulates the liver and liquefies the blood, thus lightening the work of the heart by making it easier to "handle" the blood than when it is sluggish and congestive. It washes out the uric acid in rheumatic and gouty joints, soothes shattered nerves, gives calm and cheerfulness to the mind and induces refreshing sleep.

Closet and Altar

Thy large bestowing makes us ask for more.

Prayer is a key to open the gate of heaven and let grace out, and prayer is a lock to fasten our hearts and keep grace in.—Adams.

> Be happy in thy God,
> On him cast every load,
> To him bring every care,
> To him pour out thy prayer.
> —Bonar.

Rededication and prayer are the indispensable background to any Christian work worth the doing. And without them Christian living fails of acquiring that depth without which Christian doing is sure to be superficial and ineffective.—H. C. Trumbull.

> We take with solemn thankfulness
> Our burden up, nor ask it less,
> And count it joy that even we
> May suffer, serve, or wait for thee,
> Whose will be done.
> —J. G. Whittier.

Who is there that hath not a burden, who that stands in no need of relief? The burden of ignorance weighs heavy on one man. He finds himself so lamentably in the dark with regard to many most important things. The burden of responsibility weighs upon another. The burden of some secret frailty, some unconquerable weakness, oppresses another. The burden of doubt is crushing to this sin-tormented soul. The burden of mortality, the fear of death, is more than another can bear. The burden of levity and thoughtlessness is heavier to some than is generally supposed. To one and all the command is, "Cast thy burden upon the Lord." He will not remove your burden so that you will have nothing to do—no more need of him—but he will sustain you, he will administer support.—George Bowen.

> I hear the voice of God among the trees,
> With thee in shady solitudes I walk,
> With thee in busy, crowded cities talk;
> In every creature own thy forming power,
> In each event thy providence adore.
> Thy hopes shall animate my drooping soul,
> Thy precepts guide me and thy fears control.
> Thus shall I rest, unmoved by all alarms,
> Secure within the temple of thy arms.
> —Mrs. Barbauld.

Thou who hast given us the rest of the night, in thy loving pity make it effectual for us in quiet sleep. Help us to put away worldly cares and perplexing questions in the assurance that all things work together for our good through thine unsleeping love. If the day has brought us sorrow, we are thy children still and we rejoice in thee. We have sinned, but there is forgiveness with thee. If friends have betrayed or forgotten us, help us to remember that we share the experience of Christ whose friendship never fails. If we are in bodily pain, let sleep bring healing. If we are anxious for others, to thee we commit them in assurance of thy love to all. If the morrow threatens, our hearts take refuge in the shadow of thy wings. Unto thee we commit our spirits. Our helplessness pleads for recognition from thy might. In the name of Christ we will both lay us down in peace and sleep, for thou, Lord, only makest us dwell in safety. And for thy guardian love we bring thee thanks through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE LITTLE TEACHER.

There are no more thrilling stories in all literature than those which record the experiences of some of the teachers in our mission schools on the frontier. Several years ago a frail, delicate-looking girl went from her Massachusetts home and opened a school in a small settlement composed of both Mormons and Gentiles. Omitting the story of her initial hardships, we print this touching incident as told in Christian Education.

One morning a tall young man was seen riding at break-neck pace toward the schoolhouse. Flinging himself off his horse, he opened the door and walked in, without so much as a knock, apology or doffing of his hat. A cowboy with spurs, schapps, sombrero and lariat was a new sight to Miss Selby, but with ready tact she concealed her surprise and quietly asked, "Would you like to become a member of this school?"

"Well, I don't know. I'll see how I like it"; and with this ungallant speech he sat down in the nearest seat and proceeded to view the situation. The teacher treated him as if cowboys had been always her friends, showed him books and pictures, explained the class work, and even sought to evoke some spirit of gallantry by asking him to move a heavy table for her.

"Why don't you move it yourself?" was the gruff query, which entirely failed to daunt the little mistress. For two days he came and went as he pleased, and often amused himself by throwing paper wads, and in various ways seeking to distract the attention of the pupils. The little strategist outmatched him at every point. Each child refused to take notice of his pranks, for had she not made a nice little speech to them the second morning, before he came in, in which she put them on their honor to show the untaught fellow a model school? At the end of the second day he surrendered, and throwing down his sombrero, said humbly: "I know I hain't behaved decent; but I hain't been to school since I was a little shaver, and I didn't know how to act. I knew better'n I've done though, but I did hate being bossed round by a girl, awfully, specially one that can't ride horses and rough it. But you're a cute one. I can't get ahead of you, an' I shan't try. If you'll forgive me, I'll settle down to study, for I like this school first rate." This long speech was quite an effort, and he paused, looking up at Miss Selby shyly to see whether he had said the right thing.

A long talk followed, and was closed by Jack's saying: "You've made me ashamed of myself."

From that time a wonderful change came over the burly, kind-hearted cowboy. He studied as humbly as a little child, and as diligently as any scientist. Nothing escaped him. He was content to take his place with those years his junior and to begin with subtraction and primary geography. With all the vim that characterized him when riding the plains, he threw himself into acquiring knowledge. . . . He had times of showing extreme restlessness. The schoolhouse would seem to him like a prison; the old life on the plains beckoned to him. He would act as if suffocating and in bonds. One day he could bear the restraint no longer. To dash over the prairie was a necessity. He rose abruptly, left the room without permission, mounted his horse, and rode for hours. The teacher feared he had gone as suddenly as he had come, and would never return. But next day he was in his place, repentant and pleading for readmittance. "I meant to keep the rules, but I felt in prison. My old habits returned upon me. I must get out."

"Why did you not ask to go?" inquired Miss Selby.

"The longing for the wild life overwhelmed me. I never knew when I walked out, until I was on my horse."

Jack was a constant attendant in the Sunday school, which Miss Selby held regularly. From miles around the people gathered to a service, half church, half Sunday school, for both old and young were to be interested. About half-past ten o'clock of a Sunday morning the little teacher might be seen coming over the prairie, creeping under the wire fence as gracefully as circumstances would permit, in the presence of her entire audience, who never went inside until she arrived. She performed the duties of janitor, usher, organist and preacher, gliding from one office to the other as if she had followed each until she were an adept in the separate arts. Jack took great pride in assisting at these services, helping with the singing, taking it upon himself to be usher, and making himself generally useful. One would not recognize in the polite, studious young man the rude cowboy of a year ago.

The second winter proved the severest in the history of the settlement. Stock perished on the prairie; the horses which the children rode to school shivered in the frail shelters built for them in the rear of the yard; and the teacher had hard work to keep fire enough to warm the room. Snow choked the chimney, and ran in sooty rivers to the floor; wraps had to be worn all day. The wood supply failed, and the horse sheds had to be burned for fuel. A week of such weather had passed, and Jack, who had heretofore been punctual as the sun, failed to appear. Anxious inquiries were made for him, when his father sent word that he was very sick; would the teacher come to see him? Soon as school was over, she mounted her pony and set out for the three mile trip. The cold was bitter; the snow so crusty and deep the pony could not go faster than a walk. Miss Selby kept bravely on until the log cabin was reached. Jack lay in a room in which were his five brothers and sisters, all threatened with pneumonia. Even to the teacher's inexperienced eye it was evident that Jack was very ill, and she urged sending for a physician. It was no small undertaking to secure one, the nearest being twenty-five miles away. But a kind neighbor volunteered his services, and meanwhile Miss Selby took her place by the bedside. Jack talked incessantly of school, of his last lesson in geography, and muttered, "I tho't that little teacher couldn't rough it, but she's a plucky one." Midnight, and the doctor came, too late to check the ravages of the disease. The next day a pall seemed to hang over the school. Gone was its eager, busy aspect, gone the merry zest for study. Suddenly a hush fell upon all. Jack's father had driven up, and according to the custom of the region was waiting for Miss Selby to appear. She went out swiftly, standing in the deep snow, her head bare to the bitter wind, while she raised her face questioningly to the speaker.

"Jack is dead, and he wanted you to conduct the funeral, and his mother and I wish it, too."

"O, it is not fitting. I never heard of such a thing. I could not do it. I don't know how," she gasped in broken sentences.

"But it was Jack's last wish; besides, how could we get a minister? The traveling is terrible; the nearest one is twenty-five miles away. You must do it Miss Selby; we all know you can; we'd rather listen to you than to a preacher. Don't you preach for us every Sunday? We'll leave all arrangements to you," he pleaded tearfully. Then the heroic spirit of her Puritan ancestors awoke in the little teacher. She gave one glance at the wind-swept, snow-covered prairie.

"I will do it," she said firmly, and returned to the waiting pupils, feeling that the weight of the world had suddenly fallen upon her young shoulders.

It was no time for regrets. There was work to be done, and speedily. She trained the school choir upon several suitable hymns; she directed the making of standards upon which the casket might rest; she covered them with black, and partitioned with ribbon the seats to be occupied by the mourning family; she trained an usher in his duties, selected bearers and arranged the room for the funeral company. She then went to the home to help cover with black cambric the rude pine coffin, and when all was completed she shut herself into her room to prepare for the address upon the morrow. What should she say? Like wildfire had the news spread that the "teacher" would conduct the exercises, and she knew the people of the settlement would come in spite of wind and weather. She meant to use her opportunity, to enter the open door. She must not fail. All night she wrote and prayed and planned. It took some courage to face the skeptical audience, with their interest-me-if-you-can air, and more to stand close by the dead, and some self-command to inspire the weeping choir with self-control. The little teacher had not yet outgrown her childish fear in the presence of death, but it must not appear now. Her voice trembled as she read the Scripture, grew firmer while she prayed, and gave no uncertain sound as she held her audience in close attention to the end. She spoke briefly of the dead, earnestly to the living. The people were moved to tears and to loyalty. The little teacher had won a victory.

The procession wound its way up the bleak hillside, the choir sang, then the teacher, chilled and trembling, standing in the deep snow, read the burial service, its solemn words sounding out faith and hope to ears all unused to them.

Disease, from exposure, fastened itself upon the teacher, and she went down to the gates of death. Time would fail to tell of her people's loving ministrations. Slowly she came back to life. The snows have now gathered thickly among her brown tresses, and when people whisper, "nervous strain," she only smiles, while a far-away look creeps into her eyes, and there flashes before her mind a picture of a broad prairie, a lonely hillside grave, a crowd of wondering people, a group of sorrowing children, snow piled high, and standing in the midst the trembling "Little Teacher."

POSING.

Why do some of our sweet, modest girls throw off their own innate reserve and, to put it mildly, "show off" in public places? You see it everywhere—the little conscious gestures, the general air of being on parade and, worst of all, the talking for the benefit of outsiders. It is in such poor taste to retail any private business in a public conveyance, yet it is a weakness especially indulged in by the younger members of the fair sex, who seem to think their affairs intensely interesting to strangers. It may be a great satisfaction to Miss Giddy to have a new party gown, yet it is to be questioned whether the man opposite with the amused smile on his face takes the same lively interest in her wardrobe. If our girls would only realize that refined manners weigh at all times against anything having a tendency toward the ostentatious or vulgar they would lower their voices, wear plain clothes in the street, and at no time be led into trouble through a desire to "show off."—Sacred Heart Review.

A woman the undertone of whose life is sweetly serious, who never knowingly deceives, misrepresents or exaggerates, who is scrupulous about appointments and promises, who never even inferentially claims aught in the way of ancestry, means, influence, scholarship or accomplishments that is not susceptible of the closest demonstration, takes the color out of all the pretty frauds about her, as the lovely moss rose would humble its cleverest imitations. But not immediately perhaps. The building up of an enduring social success is a work of time; and its substructure, slowly laid, but everlasting, is the confidence of those about one.—Katherine E. Conway.

Mothers in Council.

BUTTERFLIES AND HEAVEN.

Although the child is barely five years old, it is hard to answer many of her questions. Only a few days ago, as we were walking along a country road, she suddenly asked, "Mamma, what are we made for?" And her questions regarding life and death would puzzle the wisest of ministers. Recently we have found such a beautiful illustration, which has completely satisfied her, that I think it might benefit others who have the privilege of leading and teaching little ones.

One day, about the middle of July, she brought me a sprig of caraway with a caterpillar about an inch and a half long feeding upon it. I recognized it at once as the larva of the Asterias butterfly. The body was a beautiful shade of light green with bands of black resembling velvet and yellow spots on the black bands. I placed it under a wire fly screen. Whenever it was touched it would thrust out, from the top of its head, a short pair of soft, orange colored horns, which emitted a peculiar and rather disagreeable odor.

For two days we watched it and supplied it with fresh caraway leaves and blossoms. Then it ceased eating and began to crawl about the cage as if searching for something. The next day the child called me to see the caterpillar making a spiderweb, as she called it. Upon one side of the screen it had already firmly spun a casing for its hind feet, and its head seemed to be waving back and forth, but upon looking closely we discovered that it was spinning a swing. Back and forth, back and forth, "Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams," the little creature wove the silken thread until it was a firm cord, capable of holding up the rest of his body.

I explained to the child that the caterpillar had an instinctive knowledge that a change like death was coming, and that was the way to bury itself, although some caterpillars, when the time came for them to change, buried themselves in the ground. She watched it closely, and the next day discovered it as "he was kicking his skin off," as she expressed it. When I reached the spot the skin was rolled back half-way down the body, and spasmodic jerks were being made to throw off the remainder, which in a few moments fell in a small, dry roll on the bottom of the cage.

Then I explained to her that the caterpillar was apparently dead, but after a while would come to life, just as people do when they become angels in heaven; that the poor little crawling worm, which had never known about anything except eating caraway, would turn into something very beautiful and be able to fly all about and see many lovely things in the world which it never even dreamed of. Her interest was intense. For fifteen days she looked at it several times every day as the worm hung in the silken swing.

On the morning of the fifteenth day it had turned much darker and I noticed two cracks in the skin, one upon each side of the head, meeting in a point upon the breast. I went about my work intending to keep a sharp watch that day. In half an hour I looked again and the metamorphosis was completed. On the side of the screen clung the new-born thing of beauty.

The great black wings were still so soft that they drooped over in graceful curves. I called the child quickly, and together we watched it grow stronger and stronger and the great wings straighten out, till their velvety black glowed with their beautiful spots of yellow and blue and orange. It had become a wonderful, dainty thing, ready to fly away, to seek a beloved mate and to live among the flowers and all the beauties God has made in a butterfly's heaven.

Then it was so easy to lead the child's mind to understand that the angels of heaven would be as much more beautiful than we as the butterfly outshone the crawling worm; to teach her how much greater would be our powers and our enjoyment; how much more glorious heaven would be than all the flowers are to the single plant of caraway; what a simple, natural change death may be to a higher life; that the grave is only a resting place, where we may leave our bodies like the empty shell of the chrysalis, that still hung on the side of the wire cage.

With such thoughts planted in children's minds, to grow stronger with their strength, I believe death will lose all terror and they will grow up with natural, healthy thoughts regarding the future life.

MRS. V. P. DECOSTER.

THE EVENING HYMN.

Commenting upon the prayers in verse which were printed in this department two weeks ago, a young mother suggests these verses from the German as very pretty for the little ones to commit to memory:

Evening is falling to sleep in the west,
Lulling the golden-brown meadows to rest;
Twinkle like diamonds the stars in the skies,
Greeting the two little slumbering eyes;
Sweetly sleep; Jesus doth keep,
And Jesus will give his beloved ones sleep.

Now all the flowers have gone to repose,
Closed are the sweet caps of lily and rose;
Blossoms rocked lightly on evening's mild breeze,
Drowsily, dreamily swinging the trees.
Sweetly sleep; Jesus doth keep,
And Jesus will give his beloved ones sleep.

Sleep till the flowers shall open once more;
Sleep till the lark in the morning shall soar;
Sleep till the morning sun, lighting the skies,
Bids thee from sweet repose joyfully rise.
Sweetly sleep; Jesus doth keep,
And Jesus will give his beloved ones sleep.

JUVENILE JOKES.

Tommy: "I think mamma is an awful gossip."

Ethel: "O, Tommy! how can you say such a thing?"

Tommy: "Well, she is; everything I do she goes right off and tells papa. I hate gossip."—Ex.

"I understand that you have relics of the war for sale, my little man," said the Northern tourist to the tow-head.

"We did have," replied the boy, "but they have bought us out, an' the swords daddy buried last week won't git rusted 'fore winter."—Atlanta Constitution.

Mamma and Davie had been to church, and the former had put a cent in the contribution box, which had not escaped the boy's observation. On the way home she found fault with the sermon.

"Well, mamma," said Davie, in a lofty way, "you can't expect much for a penny!"—Judge.

Recently a mother heard terrible uproar in her room where the children were together, and going in to see what was the matter found the little girl weeping, while the boy, looking very conscious of virtue and radiant with efficiency, said: "She tipped over the 'pool-basket, mamma—but she's all 'panked!"—Boston Transcript.

A bright little girl, returning from school, was asked by her father what she had been learning that morning.

"All of us been learning to spell," said she.

"What did you learn to spell?"

"Learned to spell rat."

"Well, how do you spell rat?"

"R-A-T, rat."

"Now, how do you spell mouse?"

"Just the same, only in little smaller letters," said the little maid.—Harper's Magazine.

This is told of Rudyard Kipling. He took a great fancy to little Miss Dorothy Drew, the favorite grandchild of Mr. Gladstone, and endeavored to win her friendship by telling her stories. After some time Mrs. Drew, fearing Mr. Kipling might be tired, called to her and said, "Now, Dorothy, I hope you have been good and not wearying Mr. Kipling." "O, no, mother, not a bit," replied the child, adding with a sigh, "but you've no idea how Mr. Kipling has been wearying me."—Lewiston Journal.

While talking to a mission school upon the contrast between Darius and Daniel, a speaker said: "Now children, Daniel, in the den of lions, slept more sweetly that night than did the king. Why was it?"

"Darius was bad and Daniel was good," replied somebody.

"That is right. And now, what makes a bed soft?" continued the speaker, trying to develop the conscience point.

"Fedders!" exclaimed a four-year-old, quick as a flash.—Home Guard.

CLEVELAND'S BAKING POWDER
PURE & SURE

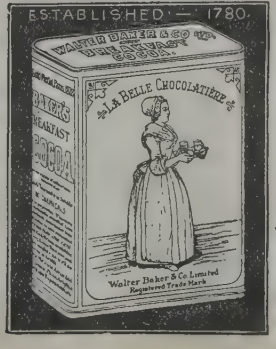
·Absolutely Pure-Delicious-Nutritious·



The Breakfast Cocoa
MADE BY
WALTER BAKER & Co. LIMITED
DORCHESTER, MASS.
COSTS LESS THAN ONE CENT A CUP.
NO CHEMICALS.
ALWAYS ASK YOUR GROCER FOR
WALTER BAKER & Co's. BREAKFAST COCOA
MADE AT DORCHESTER, MASS. IT BEARS
THEIR TRADE MARK LA BELLE CHOCOLATIÈRE
ON EVERY CAN.
·AVOID IMITATIONS·

The Sunday School

LESSON FOR SEPT. 27. REVIEW.

BY SOPHIA C. STEDMAN.

As we look back over the lessons of the past three months, certain events in the history we have studied stand out prominently and determine the line of thought for our review. Following the chronological order adopted by most Biblical students, the forty years of David's reign naturally fall into three periods.

1. A time of conflict, during which his throne was firmly established and the borders of his kingdom widely extended. This period was marked by great religious fervor and activity on the part of the king, and was brightened by a glorious Messianic prophecy.

2. A time of rest and material prosperity, marked by David's apostasy, and shadowed by God's displeasure; yet the clouds of approaching retribution were illumined by pardoning mercy.

3. A time of defection and open rebellion, when David, chastened in spirit, clung to the promise of Jehovah. Each period suggests a topic for our consideration.

I. The Development of Messianic prophecy in the time of David.

With the promise to David of a perpetual kingdom a new development in Messianic prophecy was reached. Hitherto the promise of a Redeemer had pointed to a "prophet like unto Moses," while the ritual and the priesthood had typified expiation and intercession. Thenceforth with these conceptions was joined that of sovereignty.

David recognized Jehovah as the true king of Israel, and understood his own representative position. Notwithstanding his early anointing at Bethlehem, he awaited the divine command before assuming control even over his own tribe, and the exercise of wise statesmanship in that limited realm for seven years resulted in the free submission of the disaffected tribes to his authority.

It was this losing his own will in the will of God, this recognition of his own representative character, which constituted him a type of Christ. And because, apprehending the theocratic nature of the government, he administered its affairs wisely, his became the type of the Messianic kingdom.

No period of Jewish history is more interesting and important than the reign of David. The consolidation of the kingdom, the organization of the army, the development of commerce, the division of the Levitical order into "courses," a division which continued until the time of Christ, the enriching of its ritual by the introduction into its worship of vocal and instrumental music—these all combined to indicate the great advance of the nation and the kingly qualities of its ruler; while the beneficence of its government, the prosperity of the kingdom and its widespread conquests foreshadowed the world-wide kingdom of Christ.

David probably did not grasp, in its largeness, the promise, but the later prophets developed the idea of the Messianic kingdom, and in the fullness of time Christ came to proclaim its spiritual nature; while to the New Testament prophet, John, was granted a vision of Christ upon the throne of his heavenly kingdom—"the Lion of the tribe of Judah."

Although it is evident why the kingdom of David, in the zenith of its prosperity, was chosen as a type of the perfect kingdom of God, it is not so clear how David, who sinned so deeply, could have been a fit type of the Messiah, unless it is borne in mind that it was not David the sinner but David the man after God's own heart, the ideal king in a corrupt age, the representative of Jehovah, who sustained this typical relation.

Perhaps, however, in his very frailty and liability to sin he faintly prefigured him who was "made in all things like unto his brethren," "was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin." The type is only a dim foreshadowing, a mere hint, of that which is, at the time, beyond human comprehension; and David and his kingdom fulfilled their mission when in some imperfect way they pointed forward to the "everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ."

II. The revelation of God in and through David's experience.

In the spontaneous outpouring of his heart in sacred song, David has given expression to the aspirations and thanksgivings of multitudes of worshipers since his day, and at the same time has made God more real and majestic to their apprehension.

But while he saw God more clearly than many in his own day or since, the story of his life reveals strange inconsistencies. His religious zeal, which prompted to the restoring of the ark, his desire to erect a dwelling place for Jehovah, his loyalty to his friend Jonathan, manifested in kindness to his crippled son, ill accord with the sensuality and cruelty of which he was guilty in the hight of his prosperity. He found a "law in his members warring against the law of his mind" and the very intensity of his nature opened the way for a most grievous fall, which was aggravated by the absence, for many months, of all evidence of penitence.

But when, with the message of Nathan, came repentance, swift, overwhelming, heartfelt, the prophet's assurance of divine forgiveness was verified in David's experience. How deep the penitence, how complete the pardon, how full the restoration, he has declared in those Psalms, the Fifty-first and the Thirty-second, which Luther called "Pauline Psalms" because they so clearly reveal God in his pardoning mercy.

So, through his fall, David grew into a knowledge of the forgiving love of God, and the Psalms which he wrote for use in the tabernacle service have widely proclaimed that knowledge and have brought hope and comfort to many a penitent.

III. The consequences of sin.

Although freely forgiven David reaped the fruits of his sins in the most overwhelming domestic sorrows and in the deterioration of his own character. His failure to regard the sanctity of the marriage relation paved the way for his great transgression, and planted the seeds of discord, hatred and murder in his own household, and even God's pardoning mercy could not spare him the crushing sorrows which thenceforth wrung with anguish the loving father's heart.

The prematurely old man, fleeing from his capital, obliged as the rightful sovereign to defend his kingdom against a rebellion organized by his favorite son, but forgetting his crown in his fatherhood when news was received of the death of Absalom, is one of the most touching pictures in literature, the more so because it is a striking illustration of the fact that not even the deepest penitence can avert the consequences of sin.

But it is not only in these sorrows that we trace the results of David's departure from God. In his later years we miss some of the most lovable qualities of the young King David. He was a less generous foe, a less magnanimous friend. Indulgence in sin had blunted his moral sense and paralyzed his quick sensibilities, furnishing some ground for Absalom's claim that justice was not properly administered.

Thus does sin always leave its impress upon the character. God's free grace may triumph, the sinner may be reclaimed, but the lost ground can never be regained, the best possibilities can never be fully realized.

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING.

Topic, Sept. 20–26. Dorcas and Her Usefulness. Acts 9: 36–42.

Woman's work in the church; her social duties; relative claims on her of her home and of the needs of others.

(See prayer meeting editorial.)

To Create A Revolution

in the household work so that while everything is kept clean, there may be leisure for social duties, is the aim of every housewife. She knows, that to obtain the best results in the shortest time, and to give the linen that special whiteness and freshness. only the BEST SOAP must be used.

Now, the soap which has the largest sale in the world is

Sunlight Soap

and so it is fair to presume that it is the Best Soap in the World.

At any rate it must be worthy of a fair trial.

Lever Bros., Ltd., Hudson & Harrison Sts., N.Y.

A Spoonful of Somatose

GIVES
Vigor and Health.

Somatose is a Perfect Food, Tonic and Restorative. It contains the nourishing elements of meat. Prepared for invalids and dyspeptics and those needing nourishment and a restored appetite. May be taken dry, or in water, milk, &c.

At druggists, in 2 oz., ¼, ½ and 1 lb. tins.

Also the following combinations, Somatose-Biscuit, Somatose-Cocoa, Somatose-Chocolate—each containing 10 per cent. Somatose. Very convenient and palatable preparations.

Pamphlets mailed by Schieffelin & Co., New York, agents for Farbenfabriken vorm. Friedr. Bayer & Co., Elberfeld.

WHITMAN'S INSTANTANEOUS CHOCOLATE. Pure, Delicious Flavor. Mix with boiling milk or water, and it's made. Stephen F. Whitman & Son, Philadelphia.

TURKISH BATH TOWELS.

Big, soft, absorbent Turkish Towels that measure 22 by 45 inches and have the long, luxurious loops that make a good "rub-down" a pleasure,

At 19 cents each,
or two for 35 cents. We pay the postage.

STRAWBRIDGE & CLOTHIER,
DRY GOODS. PHILADELPHIA.

Literature

THE DOMINANT NOTE IN READING.

If intellectual society is the best expansive and corrective force, reading is its best available substitute. We cannot all command the friends we would choose. Life's changes are too many, and the hours of fellowship too few. But most of us may absolutely choose our reading. What the companionship of books loses in vital adaptation and persuasion it gains in continuity and instant readiness to serve. Books we have always with us. Reading is so much a part of our daily modern life that we should feel ourselves more starved and cheated, perhaps, if we were shut up for a week without books and newspapers than if we were deprived for the same time of our most intellectually helpful friends. We travel away from friends, but we load our trunks and bags with reading. It began as an indulgence; it has become a necessity.

With this indulgence we have, naturally, no quarrel. We should not like to think of our readers as shut up in some doleful solitude where even The Congregationalist could not reach them. Nor do we find fault with that variety of topic and of method which is so noticeable in the books which we examine and review from week to week. We wish to suggest, however, that summer opportunities of extending acquaintance with literature are now gone by, and that autumn leads to winter, and to remind our readers that a little forethought now in choosing companions for the months to come will be worth a great deal in the way of garnered results. Wise reading leads to useful accumulation. We read much and variously, "for a change," we say. But for a change from what? Is there any dominant note in our intellectual life, or even any ruling purpose in our use of a season's opportunities of reading? If not, we have missed the real benefit of change as well as the joy of concentration. Variety is something better than an aimless hopping to and fro from book to book without a purpose.

Indeed we could probably make no better use of the time which we can this year give to reading than to take one great book and master it, one large subject and find out how little we know and how much there is to learn. A month of concentration would be worth a year of scattering, both in its effects on knowledge and on character. It would make us friends forever with some great man's deliberate thought, and it would rid us of the cowardice which makes us driftwood on the current of contemporaneous chatter, because it denies the possibility (for ourselves, at least) of concentration.

BOOK REVIEWS.

HOMILETICS.

Prophecy or Speaking for God, by Rev. Everett S. Stackpole, D. D. These lectures treat of the questions of the nature, purpose and method of prophecy in a very helpful and suggestive way. Dealing as they do mainly with the historic prophecies of the Old Testament, they yet consider the relation in which the modern preacher ought to stand toward God, by whose Spirit he is taught, and toward the people, to whom he declares God's will. "The modern prophet, like the ancient, must receive not only his call, but also his message, directly from God," is the burden of their teaching, and, again, "The truth that God is giving an inspired revelation to the world in the best thoughts of religious minds needs to be emphasized. It is the content of what is called the Christian consciousness, and yet again (speaking now of the predictive prophecy of the Old Testament), "Revelation of truth is by means of the natural, intuitive power of the soul, plus the special operation of the Holy Spirit." Dr. Stackpole's conclusions are boldly and plainly stated and will arouse much criticism, but the questions involved are pressing ones, growing out of the needs of the time and the effect of Bible study upon old theories of inspiration. Readers will perhaps find some of their cherished opinions called in question, but they will be called upon to think for themselves in a very helpful way. [Thomas Y. Crowell & Co. 75 cents.]

Christ's Trumpet-Call to the Ministry, by Daniel S. Gregory, D. D., LL. D. Dr. Gregory's book is an earnest plea for the needs of the world at the hands of the Christian ministry and for consecration of means on the part of the church at large to extend the preacher's opportunity. He puts his hand upon many of the failures and weaknesses of our modern church life and discusses the remedies. The book is too long and would have been more effective if the language of some of its denunciations had been more carefully considered. It will do good, however, in calling attention once more to a pressing need of the time. [Funk & Wagnalls Co. $1.25.]

On Sermon Preparation is a volume of 230 pages made up of "Suggestions and Recollections" as to sermon-making, by distinguished officials and preachers of the English Church. Primarily designed to meet the pressing wants of young men entering the service of that church, the "suggestions" are not without value for others — even American clergymen, who have enjoyed the advantages of a training in our best equipped theological seminaries. Although the articles of which the book is composed originally appeared in The Record and were evidently hastily prepared, they are certainly worth preserving. One reads with surprise that a graduate of one of the English universities is often ordained without having received any instruction in the making or delivery of sermons, the theory being that experience is the best teacher. For those thus situated, and burdened with the work of a parish, the experiences of men who have been successful as preachers will be of great interest. The writers agree in the fundamental principles of unity and progress of thought which they advocate as indispensable for the sermon, and also as to the need of spirituality in its author if it is to be of any special benefit to his hearers. The papers are written in good style and are pleasant reading. [Macmillan & Co. $1.00.]

STORIES.

Black Diamonds, a novel by Maurus Jokai, translated by Frances A. Gerard. Jokai is the greatest of modern Hungarian authors and it is time that a good translation of his works appeared in English. Miss Gerard seems to have done her work well, rendering the book into readable and well-balanced English. The portrait of the author is that of a distinguished man, and the book itself reflects a wide knowledge of the complex and cosmopolitan life of Europe as the stage on which a thoroughly patriotic Magyar drama is acted. The plot is a striking one and is skillfully handled, and the contrasts of character are brilliant and effective throughout. The scenes are laid in the mines, the stock exchange, the homes of the laborers and the palaces of the rich with equal power. [Harper & Bros. $1.50.]

Cromwell's mark is upon the soul of Ireland until this day, as the solid vote of the Irish home rule members against erecting his monument in the Parliament House in London testified, and as one may read, with vivid pictures of the causes of hate, in The Silk of the Kine, a novel by L. McManus. The story is founded upon the terrible experiences of the "transplanting" by which Cromwell sought to make the peace of Ireland secure. It was a bloody and cruel task, rendered inevitable in the mind of the Protector by a stern necessity, and we have no mind to defend it. The story is well written and interesting, though somewhat unequal. Mr. McManus shows an appreciation of the difficulties of the problem and of the possibilities of high character on both sides by making his heroine a daughter of the transplanted Irish and his hero one of the Cromwell's Ironsides, and doing justice to the heroic qualities of both. [Harper & Bros. $1.00.]

It is instinctive to compare any work of fiction that relates to Scotland with what the masters of the craft, such as Ian Maclaren and Stevenson, have wrought in the same department. This enforced contrast does not accrue to the advantage of Heather from the Brae by David Lyall, though we gladly credit him with having told ten pretty, wholesome stories, the scenes and the characters of which are thoroughly Scotch. He has the gift of vivid portrayal, even though he does not deal to any extent in startling incidents. The stories exalt moral and spiritual qualities, not abstractly, but by exhibiting them at work in the lives of quiet, humble, self-sacrificing men and women. [Fleming H. Revell Co. 75 cents.]

The opening chapters of Honor Ormthwaite, by the author of Lady Jean's Vagaries, give promise of strength which is hardly fulfilled in the progress of the book. It is a quiet story of a humble serving maid who marries an English squire and graces her high social position with astonishing self-possession and charm. A few clouds arise to darken her happy married life but one reads about them with an assurance that all will come out right in the end, as it does. A noticeable feature of the book is the absence of dialogues. We wish the author had allowed the characters to speak for themselves instead of writing chapter after chapter in narrative form. [Harper & Bros. $1.00.]

The prominent part which the stock market plays in modern fiction is illustrated in a typical story of English life by Julian Sturgis, called A Master of Fortune. Even the heroine plunges recklessly into speculative schemes, and her shrewdness seems to be one of her chief charms to the lover who first becomes her business partner, having previously amassed a fortune himself in Colorado after forfeiting one in England. The style is piquant and racy, and the characterization quite clever. If the metallic ring of "the almighty dollar," even in the midst of love-making, jars a little it is only a true echo of the commercial tone of society today. [Frederick A. Stokes Co. 75 cents.]

In the new library edition of the works of Mark Twain we have Life on the Mississippi, which is one of the best and most characteristic of all his works. [Harper & Bros. $1.75.]

THE SEPTEMBER MAGAZINES.

In the North American Review the most timely article is Sir Alfred Maloney's account of the change from a silver to a gold basis for the currency in British Honduras, of which colony he is governor. Miss Frances M. Abbott is inclined to be pessimistic about the opportunities and pay of women graduates from our colleges. Justin McCarthy reviews the late session of the British Parliament, and Mr. John M. Stahl, secretary of the Farmers' National Congress, answers in the negative the question, Are the Farmers Populists?"

In the Forum ex President Andrew D. White discovers the encouragements of the present political crisis, drawing a striking parallel with the French experience of a century ago. President Charles Kendall Adams of the University of Wisconsin points out in criticism of Mr. White's book on the Warfare of Science and Theology that it is the opposition of the older science rather than of theology which every new scientific theory has first to overcome.

The Atlantic for September is an unusually interesting and varied number. Frederick J. Turner discusses the problems of the West. Charles Dudley Warner tells again the story of Uncle Tom's Cabin, Bradford Torrey gives a picture of the rural South and Booker T. Washington has a strong article on the Awakening of the Negro. The number indicates further progress in that widening of sympathy and purpose which gives the magazine such a strong hold on the best readers.

The place of honor in the New England Magazine is given to an illustrated article on Harriet Beecher Stowe by George Willis Cooke. W. H. Stone describes the royal pines of New Hampshire, reserved in colonial days for the uses of the royal navy, and Edward W. Emerson describes the Grand Monadnock, with many pictures. The University of Vermont and City of New Bedford make fully illustrated articles. Of Mr. Eliot's article on the Boston metropolitan reservations we have elsewhere spoken.

Harper's gives the first place to a fully illustrated Washington article by Prof. Woodrow Wilson. Taking the title First in Peace, it sketches his life and occupations after the close of the Revolution. Mark Twain's Tom Sawyer, Detective, is concluded. Mr. T. Mitchell Prudden describes A Summer Among the Cliff Dwellings, and the other fully illustrated article is by William von Sachs describing the musical celebrities of Vienna. Mr. Warner, in his Editor's Study, discusses the enlarging effects of astronomy on human thought, with recent books for a text and a bit of suggestive moralizing for conclusion.

In the Century Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Pennell take the reader with pen and pencil for an easy and delightful journey in Spain. Professor Sloane is nearly at an end with his life of Napoleon. Professor Osborne reconstructs for us many of the strange prehistoric beasts whose remains have been discovered in the far West, and Mr. Isaac B. Potter gives an appreciation of the good results of the bicycle.

In Scribner's Mr. Brander Matthews devotes an article to his friend, the late H. C. Bunner. He knew him intimately and makes the reader share his appreciation, especially of Mr. Bunner's verse, in which, says Mr. Matthews, his best work was done. Prof. R. B. Richardson, director of the American School at Athens, writes a full and admirably illustrated description of the Olympian Games at Athens.

McClure's Magazine furnishes a historical document of the first importance in the recovered report of Lincoln's "lost" speech before the Illinois convention at which the Republican party of the State was organized. The report was made by H. C. Whitney, and Joseph Medill of the Chicago Tribune describes the effect which it produced on the convention. A striking profile picture of Lincoln is the frontispiece, and the number also includes one of Kipling's Barrack-Room Ballads.

Appleton's Popular Science Monthly opens with the third paper on the principles of taxation by David A. Wells. President D. S. Jordan contributes an amusing satirical skit which he calls the "Sympsychograph," in which he pokes fun at popular misunderstandings of scientific processes and discoveries—notably in connection with the X rays. The illustration is as amusing as the article. There is a wide range of serious science and a portrait and sketch of Samuel Luther Dana.

Lippincott's complete novel is A Marital Liability, by Elizabeth Phipps Train. Theodore Stanton shows the advantages of international exhibitions in stimulating trade, and John A. Cockerell tells how to conduct a local newspaper. Besides these practical articles there are bright short stories and poems of a remarkable brevity, as, for example, a single couplet by Clinton Scollard.

The Pall Mall Magazine has a judicious mixture of sketches, travel, history and fiction. Its experiments in pictures are interesting, including two photogravures and one delicate series of silver point illustrations. The half-tones are hardly so successful. The serial is Sir Walter Besant's City of Refuge.

The International devotes itself to translated articles. The September number has stories and articles from the French, German, Danish, Bohemian, Russian, French-Canadian, Japanese and Spanish, all very readable and interesting.

St. Nicholas for September is as varied and bright as ever, with fun and information mingled through its beautifully illustrated pages. We know the children who read it grow up, but it remains as youthful and delightful as ever.

The Chap-Book gathers abundant material of its own peculiar flavor. One is always sure to find some novelty or some novel view of old things. A portrait of Mr. Bliss Carmen, drawn from life by Dawson Watson, is, perhaps, the most striking thing in the current number.

Christian Literature is partly eclectic, taking articles from the English reviews, but it has also a larger original side, to which such men as Professor Warfield, Dr. Cuyler, T. T. Munger contribute in the September number. Its literary and statistical departments are kept up to date with well-chosen selections and opinions.

The Educational Review has an article on Horace Mann by William T. Harris, and one on Democracy and Education by the editor, with other interesting matter appropriate to its aim.

The Chautauquan for September has a good variety of interesting and timely matter. Its Current History and Opinion is kept well up to date and interesting.

The September number of Donahoe's Magazine is lavishly illustrated with both original and selected pictures. Mr. Bernard Morgan criticises Millais, deciding against his claim to sustained greatness. Timely and interesting is an article by M. E. Hennessy on Olney's Massachusetts Predecessors, and the general level of interest is high.

The Catholic World opens with a studiously noncommittal article on the New Issue, Silver or Gold. Joseph W. Wilstaet devotes himself to a glorification of Janssen's one-sided history of Germany. J. A. Floyd recalls the earlier, and especially the Roman, associations of York Minster in a well-illustrated article, in which we read of "patient, long-suffering Queen Mary" with an amused sense of the variety of human points of view. A more modern and practical article is Alice Worthington Winthrop's The Question of Food for the People.

With the September number the American Kitchen Magazine comes to the completion of its fifth volume. It occupies an important field with every indication of success in interesting and instructing its readers.

NOTES.

—— Tolstoi is said to be devoting himself with great energy and enthusiasm to writing a story for children.

—— Women are making a successful specialty of designing book covers, most of the recent novelties in this line having come from their hands.

—— Princeton's sesqui-centennial celebration is appointed for Oct. 20–22, and will be supplemented by courses of lectures from distinguished British and continental professors.

—— The North American Review has changed hands once more, passing from its present owners to a stock company. Neither managers nor policy will be changed under the new control.

—— How high the name of Burns stands in Great Britain after a century may be gathered from the fact that one statue was unveiled by the poet laureate, another by the greatest living scientist, Lord Kelvin, while at a third celebration the address was made by Lord Rosebery.

—— It is proposed to transport the remains of the late Kate Field from Hawaii to North Elba, N. Y., where it was her desire to be buried near the grave of John Brown, on the property which she was so influential in securing for public ownership, and her friends are raising money for that purpose.

—— The great statue of the Republic, by French, which stood in the Court of Honor at the Chicago Fair, facing the Administration Building, has just been burned by order of the Park Commissioners. It was sixty feet high and like most of the structures of the fair was built of "staff" and the weather had begun to make it shabby.

—— A correspondent of the New York Evening Post calls attention to the fact that there are two graves visited as that of Helen Hunt Jackson, "H. H." She was buried by her own wish on Cheyenne Mountain, overlooking Colorado Springs, but the place became a goal of pilgrimage and then a source of gain to the owners of the land through toll charged visitors, and the matter became so scandalous that Mr. Jackson had the remains transferred to the cemetery of Colorado Springs. But the pilgrimages to the empty grave on the mountain side seem to be as frequent as ever.

—— To our note about the literary work of the Chicago pastors the following should be added, viz.: Rev. Dr. Roy, long time correspondent for the Independent and later of the Congregationalist, has published a volume of letters under the nom de plume Pilgrim. These letters are chiefly historical and very valuable and almost indispensable for those who care to know thoroughly the history of religious opinion in the Northwest during the third quarter of the present century. He has also prepared a valuable volume for the Illinois Church History Society. Many papers of great excellence from his pen may be found in the reports of our State and local associations. This is also true of Dr. Savage. His paper in the Jubilee Volume of Illinois Congregationalism, as well as that of Dr. Roy, cost much labor and is very valuable. Rev. Edward Anderson, now resident in Chicago, formerly of Danielsonville, Ct, has recently published a volume of army reminiscences. For army men and all who love good stories well told this book is a treat. One may add not inappropriately a work soon to be published on Missions in Africa by Fred. Perry Noble. This will be a volume of great value, as it embodies an amount of research of which few persons can have any conception. It will undoubtedly be an authority of the first rank. The title of one of Mr. Campbell's books should read the Indwelling not the Increasing Christ, and Dr. John M. Williams has written on Rational not on National Theology. Probably other volumes have been written by our Chicago brethren which have not been named, but so far as at present ascertainable the list is fairly complete. Of course no account of fugitive articles and sermons, of which Dr. Goodwin has published many of rare eloquence and power, can here be taken.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

Roberts Bros. Boston.

POEMS. By Emily Dickinson. Edited by Mabel L. Todd. pp. 200. $1.25.

MY LADY'S HEART. By Ellis Markol. pp. 173. $1.00.

OLD COLONY DAYS. By May Alden Ward. pp. 280. $1.25.

THE PURITAN IN ENGLAND AND NEW ENGLAND. By Ezra H. Byington, D. D. pp. 406. $2.00.

George H. Ellis. Boston.

THE PERFECT WHOLE. By Horatio W. Dresser. pp. 254. $1 50.

Ginn & Co. Boston.

QUINTUS CURTIUS. Edited by Willard Humphreys, Ph. D. pp. 208. 55 cents.

Charles Scribner's Sons. New York.

SEVENOAKS. By J. G. Holland. pp. 463. 75 cents.

ARTHUR BONNICASTLE. By J. G. Holland. pp. 422. 75 cents.

ELEMENTS OF PSYCHOLOGY. By George C. Robertson. Edited by C. A. F. Rhys Davids. pp. 268. $1.00.

LENOX. By George A. Hibbard. pp. 54. 75 cents.

THAT LASS O' LOWRIE'S. By Frances Hodgson Burnett. pp. 340. $1.25.

STORIES BY ENGLISH AUTHORS: Germany. The Sea.

Harper & Bros. New York.

SHAKESPEARE THE BOY. By W. J. Rolfe, Litt. D. pp. 251. $1.25.

THE OLD INFANT AND SIMILAR STORIES. By Will Carleton. pp. 223. $1.25.

WITH MY NEIGHBORS. By Margaret E. Sangster. pp. 256. $1.25.

LITERARY LANDMARKS OF VENICE. By Laurence Hutton. pp. 71. $1.00.

D. Appleton & Co. New York.

THE STORY OF ELECTRICITY. By John Munro. pp. 187. 40 cents.

American Sunday School Union. Philadelphia.

THE PILGRIM CHILD. By Theodora C. Elmslie. pp. 178. 75 cents.

C. M. Barnes Co. Chicago.

THE NEW WOMAN AND OTHER POEMS. By J. B. Robinson, D. D., Ph. D. pp. 291. 75 cents.

Curts & Jennings. Cincinnati.

THE VISION OF CHRIST IN THE POETS. Edited by C. M. Stuart. pp. 304. 90 cents.

IN LEAGUE WITH ISRAEL. By Annie F. Johnston. pp. 303. 90 cents.

PAPER COVERS.

D. C. Heath & Co. Boston.

FRENCH LESSONS AND EXERCISES. By C. H. Grandgent. pp. 64. 25 cents.

G. P. Putnam's Sons. New York.

LITTLE JOURNEYS TO THE HOMES OF AMERICAN AUTHORS. Irving. By H. T. Tuckerman. Audubon. By Parke Godwin. Each 5 cents.

Cassell Publishing Co. New York.

JOHN BULL & CO. By Max O'Rell. pp. 319. 50 cents.

AT HEART A RAKE. By Florence Marryatt. pp. 341. 50 cents.

Johns Hopkins Press. Baltimore.

A STUDY OF SLAVERY IN NEW JERSEY. By Henry S. Cooley. pp. 60. 50 cents.

MAGAZINES.

September. OUR ANIMAL FRIENDS.—TRAVEL.—INTERNATIONAL.—UNITARIAN.—CHAUTAUQUAN.—PREACHER'S.—CENTURY.—NEW WORLD.—LITERARY NEWS.—PHILOSOPHICAL REVIEW.—NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.—CHRISTIAN LITERATURE.—CHAP BOOK.—GOOD WORDS.—REVIEW OF REVIEWS.—DONAHOE'S.—BOOK BUYER.—FORUM.—EDUCATIONAL REVIEW.—SUNDAY.

News from the Churches

Meetings to Come.

BOSTON MINISTERS' MEETING, Pilgrim Hall, Sept. 21, 10 A.M. Mr. Samuel B. Capen will speak on The National Crisis of 1896.

WORCESTER SOUTH CONFERENCE, Sutton, Oct. 28.

THE FOREIGN MISSIONARY PRAYER MEETING, under the auspices of the Woman's Board of Missions, will be resumed Friday, Sept. 25, at 11 o'clock A. M., in Pilgrim Hall, Congregational House.

NEW HAMPSHIRE FEMALE CENT INSTITUTION AND HOME MISSIONARY UNION, annual meeting will be held in connection with the meetings of the General Association at Littleton, Sept. 23, at 2 o'clock P. M. Mrs. H. S. Caswell of New York will address the ladies. Auxiliaries are requested to send delegates. All women interested in home missions are cordially invited.

ALICE M. NIMS, Secretary.

FALL STATE MEETINGS.

Montana,	Billings,	Tuesday, Sept.
New Hampshire,	Littleton,	Tuesday, Sept. 22.
Washington,	Tacoma,	Tuesday, Sept. 22.
Maine,	Ft. Fairfield,	Tuesday, Sept. 22.
North Carolina,	Haywood,	Thursday, Sept. 24.
Oregon,	Portland,	Tuesday, Sept. 29.
Wisconsin,	Antigo,	Tuesday, Sept. 29.
Wyoming,	Wheatland,	Sept.
Idaho,	Boise,	Oct.
New Mexico,	Albuquerque,	Oct.
Utah,		Oct.
California,	Sacramento,	Tuesday, Oct. 6.
Colorado,	Denver,	Tuesday, Oct. 6.
California, South'rn,	Claremont,	Tuesday, Oct. 13.
Nebraska,		Monday, Oct. 19.
Alabama,	Shelby,	Wednesday, Nov. 11.
Connecticut Conf.,	Winsted,	Tuesday, Nov. 17.

Benevolent Societies.

THE CONGREGATIONAL HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY is represented in Massachusetts by the MASSACHUSETTS HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY, No. 9 Congregational House, Rev. Joshua Coit, Secretary; Rev. Edwin B. Palmer, Treasurer.

WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Room No. 32, Congregational House. Office hours, 9 to 5. Annual membership, $1.00; life membership, $20.00 Contributions solicited. Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Treasurer.

AMERICAN BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS, Congregational House, No. 1 Somerset Street, Boston. Frank H. Wiggin, Assistant Treasurer; Charles E. Swett, Publishing and Purchasing Agent. Office in New York, 121 Bible House; in Chicago, 153 La Salle St.

WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS, Rooms 1 and 2 Congregational House. Miss Ellen Carruth, Treasurer; Miss Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Bible House, New York. Missions in the United States, evangelistic and educational, at the South and in the West among the Indians and Chinese. Boston office, 21 Congregational House; Chicago office, 153 La Salle Street.; Cleveland office, Y. M. C. A. Building. Donations may be sent to either of the above offices, or to H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer, 108 Bible House, New York City.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH BUILDING SOCIETY—Church and Parsonage Building. Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., Secretary; H. O. Pinneo, Treasurer, 59 Bible House, New York; Rev. George A. Hood, Congregational House, Boston, Field Secretary.

CONGREGATIONAL EDUCATION SOCIETY.—(Including work of former New West Commission.) Aids four hundred students for the ministry, eight home missionary colleges, twenty academies in the West and South, ten free Christian schools in Utah and New Mexico. S. F. Wilkins, Treasurer. Offices, 10 Congregational House, Boston, 151 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. Address, 10 Congregational House, Boston.

CONG. SUNDAY SCHOOL & PUBLISHING SOCIETY.—Contributions used only for missionary work. Rev. George M. Boynton, D. D., Secretary; W. A. Duncan, Ph. D., Field Secretary; E. Lawrence Barnard, Treasurer, Congregational House, Boston.

MASSACHUSETTS BOARD OF MINISTERIAL AID.—Treasurer, Mr. Arthur G. Stanwood, 701 Sears Building, Boston Address applications to Rev. A. H. Quint, D. D., Congregational Library, 1 Somerset Street, Boston.

MINISTERIAL RELIEF.—In order to afford a little timely aid to aged and disabled home and foreign missionaries and ministers and their families, the committee of the National Council asks from each church one splendid offering for its permanent invested fund. It also invites generous individual gifts. For fuller information see Minutes of National Council, 1892, and Year-Book, 1893, page 62. Secretary, Rev. N. H. Whittlesey, New Haven, Ct.; Treasurer, Rev. S. B. Forbes, Hartford, Ct. Form of a bequest: I bequeath to the "Trustees of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States" (a body corporate chartered under the laws of the State of Connecticut) [here insert the bequest], to be used for the purpose of Ministerial Relief, as provided in the resolution of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States at its session held in Chicago in October, 1886.

THE CONGREGATIONAL BOARD OF PASTORAL SUPPLY, established by the Massachusetts General Association, offers its services to churches desiring pastors or pulpit supplies. Careful attention is given to applications from without the State. Room 22A, Congregational House, Boston. Rev. Charles B. Rice, Sec.

THE BOSTON SEAMAN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, organized 1827. Chapel and reading-room, 287 Hanover St., Boston. Open day and evening. Sailors and landsmen welcome. Daily prayer meeting, 11 A.M., Bible study, 3 P.M. Sunday services, usual hours. Meetings every evening except Saturday. Branch mission, Vineyard Haven. Is a Congregational society and appeals to all Congregational churches for support. Send donations of money to B. S. Snow, Corresponding Secretary, Room 22, Congregational House, Boston. Send clothing, comfort bags, reading, etc., to Capt. S. S. Nickerson, chaplain, 287 Hanover St. Bequests should read: "I give and bequeath to the Boston Seaman's Friend Society the sum of $——, to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said society." Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS.

Kansas appears to lead the Union in interdenominational comity this week.

The evangelistic work of that Pastors' Band in Minneapolis might profitably be duplicated in other cities, or even in groups of country churches.

Christian harmony has been exemplified in an unusually pleasing manner for half a century in the worship of the churches of an Interior town.

Gifts such as that which an Ohio church has just planned, in memory of a young member, are most fitting and carry with them an element of marked suggestiveness.

That church in New Mexico has reason to be proud of its Pauline pastor, who scorns not to work with his own hands for the upbuilding of the temporal as well as the spiritual walls of Zion.

Let any who think it makes little difference whether or not they identify themselves with the cause of Christ note what two or three earnest, whole-souled Christians have recently accomplished in a Minnesota church.

That flourishing enterprise in a Wisconsin town has such broad sympathy at its beginning that the promise of its success is great. Its unpretending but pretty structure is a kind of St. Andrew's-by-the-Sea, for it is within sound of the endless murmur of the waves of Lake Michigan. May many a brother Simon be there brought to the Master!

Joyous welcomes to returning pastors after separations for health and happiness indicate a certain phase of the profit to the work and workers which results from the vacation season. If the renewed enthusiasm could be sustained from week to week until another respite, the greater breadth and depth of the results of this year's efforts would be attested by surprising records in the new period.

Our denomination should rejoice over such a superb triumph as that recorded by a Milwaukee church of late, and an item which contains such good news ought to quicken our pulses for an attempt at averting financial disasters at other points. The subscriptions in this instance came from such diverse sources as to add a peculiar interest to the success. Such generosity as was shown by a sister church deserves special remark. May its own affairs be forwarded with the more encouragement on account of its magnanimous sacrifice.

CONFERENCES AND ASSOCIATIONS.

VT.—Rutland Conference held its 36th annual meeting in Clarendon, Sept. 8, 9. The Problem of the Country Church was considered under: Its Opportunities, Its Drawbacks, The Indebtedness of the City to the Country Church. The Mutual Relation of Home and Foreign Missions was treated by Rev. H. L. Bailey, who had labored in both departments and was qualified to speak of them as the two arms of the Christian body, mutually necessary and helpful. An earnest address on The C. E. and the Coming Man was given by Mr. C. N. Thorp. The reports from the churches were encouraging, especially in the fact that so many churches are supplied with pastors. Rev. George A. Hood of the C. C. B. S. gave a stirring and eloquent appeal. The sermon by Rev. R. H. Ball and the communion service closed the conference. The weather was propitious, the attendance good and the hospitality of the entertaining church generous and abundant.

KAN.—Southwestern Association met at Kinsley, Sept. 4-6, with an unusually large attendance, nearly every church being represented. The meeting was one of the best in the association's history, spiritually and intellectually. The central topic was The Church, considered under the heads: Grounds of Obedience to the Church, Its Types of Spirituality, Its Frontier Work, Advantages and Responsibilities of Self-Government, The Church and Revivals, Its Place in the Present Campaign. Sunday School and Endeavor Work were given prominent places. The last evening was devoted to Home Missions, and Superintendents Broad and Bush, Evangelist Veazie and others made addresses.

Arkansas Valley Association met at McPherson, Sept. 2-4. Among topics considered were: The Church Member's Standard of Life, Systematic Giving, The Saloon or What? The Christian Young Man and the Church, Falling Away, Relation of the Prayer Meeting to the Church, Pulpit and Pastoral Work, Which Should Supersede? Christian Citizenship. Nearly all the churches reported good spiritual progress. Rev. D. H. Scarrow spoke for Washburn College, and Superintendents Bush and Broad for Sunday School Work and Home Missions, respectively.

NEW ENGLAND.

Boston.

The local pulpits last Sunday and those of the suburbs were generally filled by the regular occupants. By reason of the inclement weather the congregations which welcomed back their pastors were not large. The themes of the morning service reviewed in some cases the present political outlook, and helpful suggestions on the moral issue of the campaign were listened to.

Massachusetts.

LOWELL.—All the pastors have returned from their vacations and are actively at work.——French has been gladdened by increasing attendance and by the reception of six new members on the first Sunday in September. At the same time Pawtucket received five. That Sunday was so stormy that Highland voted to repeat the communion service on the second Sunday. Rev. W. A. Bartlett, who was confined to the house several days by an injury to his knee, is again about his work, but his installation will be deferred until the completion of the repairs upon Kirk Street.——Rev. G. H. Johnson has been elected president of the local Ministers' Union for the ensuing year.

TYNGSBORO.—Certain papers having given prominence to the report that Rev. Park Bradford had been forced to vacate the pulpit on account of his adherence to the cause of free silver, the officials of the church have authorized the publication of interviews declaring that Mr. Bradford's resignation was wholly due to the financial depression, which has reduced the income of the small congregation below the point of sufficient support of the pastor. They declare that Mr. Bradford did not obtrude his political views upon his hearers, and that while his interest in the Populist party during his Kansas pastorate was well known yet nothing of a political nature was in any way the cause of his resignation.

WORCESTER.—First Swedish. Since taking possession of the Salem Street edifice, June 1, this congregation of working people has raised $7,000 to apply in payment which, with the price of their former property, pays one-third of the cost of the new. The congregations have increased during the summer about one-third and now number from 400 to 600, both morning and evening. There is a warm spiritual interest and many conversions. Rev. A. L. Anderson is pastor and the present membership is 275.——Piedmont. During the summer the meeting house has been thoroughly renovated, the organ tuned, fresco retouched and other repairs made to the amount of about $4,000, greatly adding to the beauty and comfort. Dr. Eldridge Mix's report of the fresh air work shows a much larger usefulness than in previous years. Of the $700 contributed $115 came from Sunday schools and over $60 from Junior Endeavor Societies.

WESTBOROUGH.—Rev. and Mrs. M. A. Breed returned from their vacation, spent at Ann Arbor, Mich., to find the parsonage furnished with a new furnace. All services were held as usual during the summer with no decrease of interest. Evangelist J. D. Potter of the congregation secured the supplies, with whom he exchanged. The C. E. Society has shown unusual interest in missions during the summer and raised a considerable sum for that object.

CENTERVILLE.—Rev. W. G. Puddefoot, who summers at Martha's Vineyard, was secured for a recent Sunday, and the announcement brought the largest congregation of the season. Nearly every house in the long village street was represented and the presence of many who are seldom seen in church was noteworthy. A collection of $137 was taken up, a remarkable sum for a church which finds it hard to meet its own current expenses, but which since the coming of Rev. W. C. Detling, a few months ago, has shown many evidences of vigor. Many of the summer residents are a great help in carrying forward the services.

SHELBURNE CENTER.—First. At the ordination of Mr. J. A. Goodrich, who graduated at Andover last June, the large attendance of interested persons and the floral decorations elicited general remark. Mr. Goodrich now begins pastoral work here.

NORTH BROOKFIELD.—First. This church has lately been called to mourn the loss of its senior deacon, Mr. C. W. Nutting, who died Sept. 6, on the eve of his golden wedding anniversary. He was chosen as deacon in 1861, which office he held till his death. He had been a resident of the town for more than 40 years and commanded the respect and esteem of all who knew him.

SPRINGFIELD.—First. Exercises in recognition of the completion of the late improvements in the meeting house were conducted last Sunday, although the house was open the week previous. Rev. F. L. Goodspeed preached an anniversary sermon, reviewing many historical facts. The long life of the organization, 260 years, was particularly emphasized. Rally day was observed in the Sunday school.

Maine.

PORTLAND.—St. Lawrence Street. The foundations of the new edifice are being rapidly laid. Two months will see the roof laid. President Tucker of the Maine Central R. R. has donated granite for the entire superstructure. The pastor, Rev. A. H. Wright, has been recently honored by an appointment as chaplain of the 47th Massachusetts regiment of volunteers, in which he enlisted. Bowdoin College has also recognized his merit by conferring the honorary degree of M. A.——Fourth. The work of Mr. T. A. Smythe opens with great promise. He has already secured the incorporation of the church, thus giving it a financial basis that will greatly stimulate its prosperity. The young pastor will seek ordination by council at once.

NORTH BRIDGTON.—The meeting house has undergone extensive repairs, and a new part is added for social meetings. The new steeple, a steel roof, painting outside, stained glass windows, ash pews and new frescoing have cost $2,500, most of which has been paid. The service of rededication took place Aug. 18. A historical sketch was given by Rev. A. G. Fitz, the pastor, the prayer of dedication was by Rev. E. P. Wilson and a sermon was preached by Rev. D. P. Hatch. Greetings from others were received. About $250 were pledged on condition the whole debt could be cleared.

LITTLE DEER ISLE.—Strenuous efforts are made to secure a church building. Rev. Charles Whittier is helping to get out a granite foundation. The 300 people on the island have subscribed nearly enough to finish the outside. Although this island has been settled more than 100 years there has never been a meeting house. Good work has been done this summer and at Outer Long Island by Mr. J. M. Thomas of Bangor Seminary.

YARMOUTH.—Rev. C. E. McKinley preached his farewell sermon the last Sunday of August, and has been dismissed by council. The new chapel is nearly completed, and is an elegant and convenient edifice. A Boston friend paid the expense of the plumbing, which was quite extensive.

ISLE-AU-HAUT.—Mr. W. T. Bartley has done excellent service here this summer, also preaching several times on adjacent islands. A recent fair held by the ladies realized about $100, to be devoted to a substantial walk to the meeting house.

HIRAM.—Mr. G. P. Merritt, who has so acceptably done pastoral work here, enters Williams College. A farewell reception by the church, C. E. Society and friends was an occasion of much enjoyment.

WALDOBORO.—North. The old meeting house was struck by lightning, injuring it seriously and ruining the organ, valued at $1,600. Damages to the building amounted to $660.

ELLSWORTH.—Hon. G. P. Dutton, who died Sept. 8, will be much missed in the church, where he has been a valued worker. The whole community mourns his loss.

SOUTH BRIDGTON.—Miss O. A. Mills has been doing excellent evangelistic work here, and several conversions, with revived interest, are reported.

BANGOR.—A friend of missions offers to duplicate for each of the three churches a special contribution for the A. B. C. F. M. up to the sum of $50.

WILTON.—A beautiful communion service has been presented to the church by the widow of Deacon Abel Russel in his memory.

WOODFORDS.—The church cordially welcomed its pastor, Rev. E. P. Wilson, on his return from vacation by a largely attended reception.

New Hampshire.

MANCHESTER.—The city celebrated, Sept. 6–10, the semi-centennial of the adoption of its charter, for which elaborate preparations were made during the weeks previous. It was inaugurated with appropriate sermons by the pastors of the various churches on Sunday morning, and a grand union service in a mammoth tent in the evening. Dr. B. W. Lockhart of Franklin Street Church took for his topic Fifty Years of Theological Progress, and Dr. T. E. Clapp of the First Church The Elements of Stability in the Higher Life of the City. In the evening President Tucker of Dartmouth College gave an eloquent discourse on The Spiritual Life of the Modern City, which was greatly enjoyed by the large audience present.

TROY.—In view of the early departure of the faithful and beloved pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. W. P. Clancy, to their new field of labor, a large number of parishioners and friends gathered at the parsonage on the eve of Sept. 2 to tender a testimonial of the high esteem and affection in which they were held by an appreciative people, and to leave substantial tokens of good will. The occasion was a delightful one in its social festivities, though tempered with mutual regrets that the strong ties growing up from a pastorate so harmonious and pleasant should so soon be broken. Mr. Clancy began his labors at Hebron, Ct., Sept. 13.

NORTHWOOD CENTER.—Following in the line of past well doing, a recent volunteer party, with teams and needful implements, by three hours of enthusiastic service wrought a conspicuous improvement in the parsonage grounds, and before leaving gave prophetic intimation of an attempt in the near future to repair the horse sheds. Not to be outdone by the men, the Ladies' Aid Society has planned to add to the internal conveniences of the parsonage.

WENTWORTH.—In addition to his regular home service and two mission stations the pastor, Rev. T. W. Darling, proposes to increase his usefulness by teaching the village school the coming season. The propriety of heating the audience-room of the church with furnaces has been agitated with good promise of success. A late sociable netted nearly $40. Summer boarders have in many ways been helpful in church work during the present season.

DANBURY.—The parsonage has just received a coat of fresh paint, which adds to its attractiveness. With the assistance of talent from Massachusetts, a fine entertainment was lately given there, the program consisting of readings and vocal and violin solos.

LEMPSTER.—For several weeks Misses Milton and Abell, district home missionaries, have been holding two or three meetings a week and doing much to interest and encourage the people. Their labors have been blessed and good fruit is likely to follow.

CORNISH.—Increased congregations indicate the prevailing interest. The C. E. Society is in a flourishing condition. The pastor, Rev. S. P. Tucker, is on the lookout for a good second-hand organ for the chapel, if such can be had at a moderate cost.

ACWORTH.—The pastor, Rev. C. O. Parker, has the inspiration of a good congregation at the Sunday morning service. An afternoon service at a schoolhouse in East Acworth is also well attended.

The church in North Hampton has recently raised $100 for two shares in the jubilee fund of the A. M. A.

Vermont.

STOWE.—This church, Rev. S. F. Drew, pastor, through the energy of the Ladies' Society, is undergoing extensive repairs. A "birthday party for everybody" was successful in raising about $120, which sum is to be devoted to interior decorations. There was a generous response to the appeal of the mother church from its sons and daughters in all parts of the country, some of whom, if their ages were determined by the number of pennies they sent, must have been very old. This church was apparently never more prosperous. The pulpit was occupied on a recent Sunday by Rev. C. A. Savage, a son of the church and now pastor of the Valley Church, Orange, N. J.

RUTLAND.—Thirteen persons were received to membership Sept. 6, six of them on confession. Two children were baptized.

Connecticut.

NEWINGTON.—The Sunday schools at Wethersfield, Elmwood, Griswoldville, Kensington, West Hartford, New Britain, Rocky Hill and Berlin united with the local schools last week in the celebration of their 64th anniversary. The rally was one of the first of the series to be held this month and was attended by several hundred persons from out of town, making it one of the most successful gatherings of the kind held this year. The important question considered was Remedies for the Decline in Membership of Our Sunday Schools, and the discussion was ably opened by Dr. J. W. Cooper of New Britain.

ROCKVILLE.—Miss Eliza Talcott, a prominent missionary in Japan the past 25 years, has reached her home in this city, where she will make an extended stay to recover her health. Miss Talcott won much honor in Japanese hospitals as a nurse during the war with China, and her work is highly commended by Dr. Taylor, the medical expert sent by the English Government, and leading Japanese surgeons. Miss Talcott expects to return and continue her work under the auspices of the American Board.

HARTFORD.—All the pastors are back from their vacation now with the exception of Dr. Lamson of Center Church, who is expected next week. Services have generally been resumed and the fall work is now fairly opened. Rev. J. H. Twichell occupied his pulpit last Sunday for the first time since his vacation, and administered the communion which was postponed a week. One child was baptized.

KENT.—The church has voted to extend a call to Rev. Howard Mudie. It has been without a pastor for some time, having heard a large number of candidates. Rev. E. S. Porter of Bridgewater, Mass., formerly pastor here, occupied the pulpit a week ago Sunday, and was greeted by a large number of his former parishioners.

MIDDLETOWN.—North. Dr. A. W. Hazen occupied his pulpit a week ago Sunday for the first time since returning from his vacation. He preached a strong sermon on the issues of the day. His words caused considerable comment among the members of the congregation, meeting, however, with general approval.

ANDOVER.—The services were omitted for two Sundays during the time that improvements were being made on the edifice. Rev. Mr. Brown of Vermont began his duties here last Sunday, being greeted by large congregations.

GRANBY.—The church and grounds look clean and neat, the annual bee being held last week and a general cleaning and grading being done. The church has also been recently painted and new windows put in, adding much to the general appearance.

CHESHIRE.—Dr. David Marsh of Woburn, Mass., preached two forcible sermons last week Sunday. He was warmly welcomed, having formerly been pastor of the church here, and although over 80 years of age is still vigorous and doing good service.

FARMINGTON.—L. F. Dorman planted the handsome elms about the church just 53 years ago, and last week he assisted in removing them to make room for the improvements that are to be made.

UNION.—The church has voted unanimously to adopt the form of admission prepared by the special committee of the National Council in 1889 and submitted to the churches in 1894.

NIANTIC.—After midnight of Monday morning, last week, it was discovered that the church building had just been broken into and the doors were left open. Nothing was found missing.

NEW HAVEN.—Plymouth. The meeting house was opened a week ago Sunday after being closed three weeks for decorating and painting.

Rev. G. F. Bailey of Westbrook completed a year's pastorate the last Sunday in August, and took occasion to give an interesting review of the year just past.——Rev. John B. Doolittle of Suffield has been visiting with his former parishioners here, where he served as pastor several years ago.——The chapel in South Windsor is receiving a thorough painting, and a new modern furnace has been put into the meeting house.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

POUGHKEEPSIE.—The death of Mr. J. H. Dudley in June last was a great loss to the church, inasmuch as he was the only one of the original members on the roll, the church having been organized in 1837. He was the architect of the present church building, and for 45 years had served the church as clerk. In response to his wish his son, Deacon Guilford Dudley, gave the church $1,000, to be expended in making needed repairs As a result the church is newly frescoed, a Brussels carpet covers floor and platform, plush cushions are in the pews, better arrangements are made for choir and organist, the organ is renovated and additional lights and a beautiful memorial pulpit of brass are put in. The entire expense approximates $2,000. There have been 43 additions to the membership the past year.

SYRACUSE.—Pilgrim. The 10th annual reunion of the chapel was held Sept. 6, with addresses by Drs. E. N. Packard and W. A. Duncan, superintendent from the first. The work here is successful under the pastoral care of Mr. I. T. Hart of the university. Rev. H. N. Kinney has won the thanks of the good people of the city by persuading the mayor to suppress the Sunday baseball, which had become annoying. The argument used was a State law which was mandatory.——South Avenue. Rev. W. F. Ireland has just returned from his wedding tour and was given a reception on the evening of the 11th, at which many congratulations were spoken by local pastors and others.

BINGHAMTON.—Plymouth. The pulpit will be filled by Dr. William Taylor until a regular pastor is called. The people feel deeply their loss in the resignation of Rev. W. H. Kephart to labor in a larger field with North Church, New York.——First. The parlors of the church have been reopened after having been closed several weeks, during which time they have been recarpeted and decorated.

COPENHAGEN.—The meeting house has been thoroughly renovated during the summer, newly frescoed, carpeted and painted and new chandeliers were put in. The spiritual interest has also been greatly quickened under the leading of Rev. J. K. Griffith, who has been pastor six years. Twelve additions on confession are reported.

DEER RIVER.—The work is reviving under the leadership of Rev. G. A. Shaw. New members were added at his first communion here. The old belfry, blown down recently, has been replaced by a new spire, and other improvements are reported.

OGDENSBURG.—The pastor, Rev. C. W. Wilson, and his family occupied a cottage at Oak Point on the St. Lawrence during July and August. Union Sunday evening services were held with the other churches of the city.

SIDNEY.—All the churches of this place united, Aug. 30, in a pleasing service with the Congregational church, at which Rev. T. A. Carlson delivered his farewell address, preparatory to leaving for his new field of labor in Middlebury, Vt.

New Jersey.

NEWARK.—First, though it is but 45 years old, calls itself the Old First because, with the exception of a country church, it is the patriarch of the New Jersey family. It has been growing steadily in numbers and vigor ever since its change of location and the erection of its present handsome edifice. For eight years Rev. L. W. Hainer had been acting pastor only. In January last the church decided by a large majority to call him as permanent pastor. He declined, however, having decided to study at Oxford, Eng., and also to travel for at least two years. The church feels its loss keenly as Mr. Hainer was dearly beloved. Before Mr. Hainer actually left for Europe, the church found a successor in Rev. J. A. Chamberlin, and it believes it has been unusually successful in its search. Mr. Chamberlin has been for six years pastor at Owatonna, Minn , where the church has prospered under his charge, a prosperity evinced by an enlarged and beautified house of worship, many conversions, quickened and reconstructed prayer meetings and greatly increased evening congregations. He was born and educated at Beloit, is a graduate of Chicago Seminary and has been a graduate student at Yale Divinity School. He comes to Newark with the encomiums of the church he has served, and indorsed by his brother ministers, by business men and by college officials of the Northwest. He began work last Sunday.

GLEN RIDGE.—The pastor, Rev. F. J. Goodwin, has just completed his eighth year of service. During his pastorate the church has grown, though the suburb is still small, from a membership of 43 to four times that number, and from an annual beneficence of $78 to one of nearly $1,900. From meeting in the railroad station it has passed to a beautiful house of worship, which already is too small. The church now has two ladies' societies, two King's Daughters circles, two mission bands, a Boys' Club and a vigorous Endeavor Society. Strangely enough, though he is the only resident pastor, Mr. Goodwin, in his whole eight years' service, has been called to officiate at but 14 funerals and five weddings. The flower mission has resumed its work for some weeks past, and has already sent over 10,000 bouquets to the sick and the poor in New York. The church paper, The Polished Arrow, is doing well. The editors have invited unsigned criticisms by establishing a "growlery" for the current month.

THE SOUTH.

Maryland.

BALTIMORE.—Second. The departure of Rev. E. T. Root, who accepts a call to Elmwood Temple Church, Providence, R.I., means a loss to Congregationalism here. He was active in all Christian work in the city and was president of the State C. E. Union. The dismissing council passed resolutions expressing high appreciation of his work.——Fourth. The church is suffering from the prolonged absence of its pastor, Rev. Mark Wells, who has been sick for nearly a year. The physicians attribute his illness to a shock received while riding in an electric car.

North Carolina.

DUDLEY.—About 40 conversions, the deepening of spiritual life in a number vastly greater, the baptism of 22 adults, nine infants, the gladdening of households for miles around, are some of the results of a work of revival begun the last Sunday in July and continued for five weeks. But for cotton picking the meetings would still be going on. The oldest members say that since the establishment of the missionary work here no such work in respect to power and depth was ever before conducted at this place. The morning service for several Sundays has opened at a little past 9 A.M. and continued with increasing interest till after 2 P.M. The C. E. Society met at 4 P.M. and at night a congregation sometimes too large to be accommodated gathered. On one memorable Friday night the altar was filled with seekers before the sermon began, and so earnest were they that it was impossible to preach. The whole atmosphere of the place is changed.

Georgia.

STRICKLAND.—Liberty. Evangelistic services have recently been held which have surpassed in spiritual power anything experienced in this region for many years. Seventeen members have already been added to the church, with others to follow. The converts are of all ages, from 60 years down to childhood.

Alabama.

CALERA.—This church is in the midst of a work of grace which has added a score to the membership and the good work is still going on.

CLANTON.—Mountain Springs. A revival has stirred the entire community and already added 19 members to the church.

Arkansas.

GENTRY.—An excellent work has been done here during the summer vacation under the leadership of Mr. E. H. Price of Yale Seminary. Several conversions have been reported.

THE INTERIOR.

Ohio.

CLEVELAND.—Archwood Avenue has the walls of its addition up, and the work is being pushed rapidly. The capacity of the house will be more than doubled by this enlargement.——Olivet is acceptably supplied for two months by Mr. R. Thomsen, a member of Hough Avenue Church, and for the past two years a student at Berea College, Kentucky. By special invitation he has spoken at Olivet and also at Union and Pilgrim Churches upon the Kentucky Mountaineers and the Work of Berea College. ——Lakeview, under the energetic leadership of Rev. A. B. Cristy, has raised its frame chapel to conform to the new grade of Euclid Avenue, and has built a high and well-lighted basement, giving commodious rooms for Sunday school and social purposes and for its important Italian work. The cost of the improvements is about $2,100. The Italian work is in charge of Mr. G. V. Zottarelli, an Oberlin student. In addition to his work at Lakeview he conducts week night classes at the Central Friendly Inn.——Mt. Zion has been supplied during the summer by Rev. G. W. Henderson, D. D., of the University Church, New Orleans. A call has been extended to Rev. Jesse E. Moorland of Nashville, Tenn.

SANDUSKY.—The work of the fall opens with strong encouragement. Large congregations welcomed back Rev. C. A. Vincent Sept. 6. The morning congregation arose and gave the Chautauqua salute as the pastor entered the pulpit. The different departments have been running vigorously during the summer. Rev. F. J. Van Horn has supplied the pulpit during August.

SAYBROOK.—Miss Virginia Dox spoke for Whitman College Aug. 30. Much enthusiasm was aroused among the people, especially the young, and the church is endeavoring to secure $100 in pledges for the noble work as a memorial to one of the beloved young people, whose service was closed just as she seemed ripe for a larger work. Rev. C. W. Grupe is pastor.

NORTH BLOOMFIELD.—The 75th anniversary was celebrated Sept. 5, 6. The church has a special record. For more than 50 years it has occupied a house of worship jointly with another denomination, first the Methodists and then the Disciples, with whom the church is now worshiping. The recent anniversary was well attended and proved unusually interesting.

TOLEDO.—Washington Street has been greatly quickened during the two months since Rev. G. A. Burgess, D. D., entered upon the pastorate. Needed repairs have been made and the people are rallying to the work.

LORAIN.—South. This recently organized church is now supplied by Rev. D. L. Leonard, D. D., of Oberlin, under a commission from the Ohio H. M. S.

Illinois.

CHICAGO.—Millard Avenue. Rev. W. A. Waterman met with a serious accident Sept. 11, from which he is not likely soon to recover. He was struck by a train on the Burlington Road while crossing the track near his home, his right leg being broken below the knee and crushed, his left arm broken, several ugly wounds made on his head and his body severely bruised. He was carried at once to the Presbyterian Hospital, where he received every attention. The doctors say there is no immediate danger, and are hoping that the bones can be set and that amputation will be unnecessary.

Indiana.

KOKOMO.—Hope Mission Sunday school at the junction was compelled to vacate the factory room heretofore used, and the friends of the enterprise have collected money, secured a lot and erected a small building known as Union Chapel. The seats and carpets were donated from the First Church, which has been rebuilt. Hardware and doors came from individual members of that church. The chapel is nearly paid for. Occasional preaching services are held. The Sunday school numbers 70.

HAMMOND.—Rev. J. W. Welsh is taking hold of the difficult work with enthusiasm. He precedes the regular discourse with a special talk to the young people, which has resulted in a greatly increased attendance. Sixteen have recently decided for Christ. A week's special services have been held. The outlook for a spiritual harvest was never better. The building has been repainted without and renovated and decorated within. The new carpet is a gift from the Ladies' Society.

BROAD RIPPLE.—The church has been worshiping on the second floor of a school building and it had secured an organ and other furniture. The building was undergoing repairs of late and caught fire and was completely destroyed, with the loss to the young church of most of its property. Steps were taken to secure a hall at once. The Sunday school is especially successful.

FAIRMOUNT.—The church is much encouraged by the good congregations and manifest interest since Rev. Levi White began work. The pastor has rented a house and moved his family from Westfield, his former home.

INDIANAPOLIS.—Plymouth. The McCulloch Club held the first of a series of evening meetings on Civic Religion, Sept. 6. Rev. F. E. Dewhurst gave an address.——Rev. F. E. Jeffery has opened his work in the South Side enterprise prosperously.

Michigan.

DETROIT.—Plymouth. The pastor, Rev. Morgan Wood, who was formerly a Methodist, leads a portion of this church out of its present fellowship to become independent. One-sixth of the membership voted favorably to such action. Much money has been put into this enterprise while it was a mission.

Wisconsin.

TWO RIVERS.—With this church is affiliated a C. E. Society in the neighboring town of Two Creeks. The society's membership includes all of any age who wish to join. It became legally incorporated some months ago and has erected a chapel or "Endeavor home," the only house of worship in the town. This building was dedicated Aug. 30, with a sermon by Rev. F. N. Dexter and dedicatory prayer and original hymn by the pastor, Rev. J. N. Davidson. The new building is of wood, 24 feet by 34. A handsome triple window in front has some colored lights and a broad sheet of plate glass, giving an especially cheerful look to the church when it is lighted for evening service. The material used is all of good quality and the work has been done well. The foundation is of bowlder granite. The money actually paid out by the treasurer for building and furnishing was about $535. Moreover, work was done by men of the congregation that would probably have cost $200. One of the members gave the building site, a Roman Catholic friend gave an elegant reading desk and the North Side Congregational Church of Milwaukee a particularly fine pulpit. The organ that was in Two Rivers was secured at small cost and is in a condition to do good service. The seating is with chairs. No aid was asked from the Church Building Society. All bills were promptly paid, but the society was obliged to incur a debt of $125. Before dedication the men of the congregation pledged themselves that this should be paid.

MILWAUKEE.—Hanover Street is rejoicing in the clearing of its financial sky. The foreclosure of its mortgage, so seriously threatened, has been averted by the most heroic efforts of the people and the generous assistance of friends in the other churches. The congregation has subscribed $6,500, other churches $2,500 and Hon. J. M. Stowell, a noble-hearted Swedenborgian worshiping with this church, $1,000; $4,000 were paid down Sept. 1, and the entire $10,000 is due March 1 next. Only $5,000 is left to be raised in some other way to put the church out of debt. Rev. B. S. Mathews is the pastor.——North Side, Rev. N. T. Blakeslee, pastor, has been hoping to build this season, but has magnanimously waived its right to canvass for funds in the other churches for the salvation of Hanover Street Church.——Bohemian. The trouble in this church has been happily settled. The pastors of both factions have resigned, Mr. Beran going to new work at La Crosse and Mr. Totusek returning to study at Oberlin. Mr. Joseph Jelinek has come from Chicago to preach to the reunited church, and has brought with him efficient helpers in his own family besides an earnest Christian Bohemian physician.

EVANSVILLE.—Sept. 4 was a memorable day. Rev. W. M. Short was ordained and became pastor of the church, and the edifice was rededicated after thorough renovation costing $2,500. Dr. E. G. Updyke preached the dedicatory sermon, and a historical paper on Congregationalism in Evansville was read by Prof. E. D. Holmes. Just 50 years ago the First Congregational Church was organized in this place by Rev. Messrs. Stephen Peet and B. C. Church. The organization was disbanded in 1850 but resumed in 1851, and since then its history has been one of uninterrupted progress.

BRODHEAD.—Rev. A. S. Kaye spent his vacation bicycling in Ontario, Canada. His present pastorate, which began in 1888, is now the longest in the Beloit convention.

LA CROSSE.—First, Rev. Henry Faville, pastor, has offered to the C. H. M. S. the use of its mission chapel for Bohemian work under care of Rev. John Beran.

BELOIT.—Second. The interior has been renovated and the roof repaired. A kitchen will immediately be built and other improvements made.

THE WEST.

Missouri.

VALLEY PARK.—A church of six members has recently been organized in this small town, 18 miles southwest of St. Louis. It is the terminus of a suburban railroad and may also be reached by the Missouri Pacific. The nucleus of the work was a Sunday school organized some years ago by the county Sunday School Union and held in a room furnished by a Roman Catholic. This was the only religious service in the community. The union made overtures to several denominations looking to church organization, but without avail. At length the superintendent of city missions became interested, and through his efforts a modest frame building has been erected, where Sunday school and preaching services are held, with an attendance of from 40 to 70. The work is under the care of Supt. A. L. Love who, with the pastors of the city, supplies the pulpit. The town has had its saloons and its baseball park but this is its first church.

SPRINGFIELD.—First. Full houses before the return of the college students accentuate the need of a new church building. The parish is divided into districts, in each of which, preparatory to the communion service and at other times, cottage meetings are held with much profit. The Sunday school has returned to the International system after six months' trial of another. It has introduced Laudes Domini as a song-book, after many years' use of Gospel Hymns.——Central. An attempt to drive the Salvation Army from the streets by a city ordinance was defeated, largely through the efforts of Rev. G. S. Brett, whose sermon vigorously defending the army has been printed.

ST. LOUIS.—Compton Hill. A message was received Sept. 10 announcing that Rev. G. C. Adams, D. D., had been called to supply First Church, San Francisco, at a salary of $4,000.

Iowa.

DUBUQUE.—Summit. During the vacation of the pastor, Rev. G. M. Orvis, the members maintained regular Sunday services, sermons by Moody, Sam Jones and Drs. Parkhurst, Gladden and Barton being read by various young people. On the return of the pastor and his family an enthusiastic reception was tendered them by the members of the congregation.

EAGLE GROVE.—At the farewell service for Rev. Walter Radford members spoke glowing words of his successful pastorate of two and a half years. Mrs. Radford's work, including assistance in the pulpit, was also highly commended. They closed their labors Aug. 30. Rev. N. F. Douglas comes to this field from Garner.

SWANTON.—A new church at this point was recognized by council Sept. 9. It is under the pastoral care of Rev. W. B. Sandford of Parkersburg.

GOWRIE.—News comes of the sudden death of Rev. L. H. Cook. He had resigned at Gowrie to go to Jewell and Lincoln.

New churches have recently been organized at Harvey, in Wright County, through the labors of Rev. Edwin Ewell of Clarion, and at Gospel Ridge, a suburb of Ottumwa.

Minnesota.

MINNEAPOLIS.—A Congregational pastors' evangelical band has been formed, in which Rev. Messrs. James McAllister of Fremont Avenue Church, Richard Brown of Vine, William Hardcastle of Union, J. W. Heyward of Bethany and J. E. Smith of Fifth Avenue unite for the purpose of holding a two weeks' service in each of the churches represented. A chorus will be organized in each church and all five of the pastors will assist in the work. Being better acquainted with the needs of the field than our professional evangelists, it is hoped that this method will produce good results. Rev. James McAllister is president of the band and can give information as to its working. ——Forest Heights. Rev. R. A. Hadden since coming in the spring has conducted an evangelistic service every Sunday evening. Interest has always been manifested. Growing congregations and Sunday school and a hopeful spirit are manifested.

LYLE.—This little church, a few years ago reduced to one member and he a non-resident, during the 15 months' pastorate of Mr. Ernest E. Day has raised $1,350 and erected a parsonage. It is now planning to reduce the amount of home missionary aid and expects soon to be self-supporting. Much of the credit is due to two or three men who, when the church was in its weakest state, made a profession of religion and bravely took up the burden of the work. The community numbers only 400, a large number of the population being Lutherans, and the church has only 37 members. Mr. Day closes his work to enter Yale Seminary.

LAKELAND.—Largely owing to the efforts of Rev. A. A. Davis the house of worship has been completely renovated and the parsonage as well, except that the exterior of the latter needs a coat of paint. About $300 have been spent, counting the labor that was given. To this fund 100 persons contributed. The edifice is now the handsomest building in town. The young people have been interested and the church saved from threatened extinction. An enthusiastic congratulatory service was held Sept. 7, with a large attendance. Rev. J. H. Morley preached and Rev. Messrs. W. B. Millard and R. P. Herrick made addresses.

ST. PAUL.—Pacific. This church, after the failure of negotiations for union on the part of the Arlington Hills Presbyterian Church, secured a pastor, Rev. J. A. Jenkins, who is on the ground. The people are united and determined to succeed Good congregations greet the new pastor.——Atlantic. Though suffering from the financial stringency a subscription has been raised for current expenses and the church is looking for a pastor.

FARIBAULT.—Rev. Lauren Armsby of Council Grove, Kan., pastor here from 1856 to 1865, occupied the pulpit Aug. 31, and although in his 80th year preached a sermon of great vigor. He was greeted by a large congregation including many old soldiers. Mr. Armsby was the first pastor of the church and from it entered the army as chaplain.

BIWABIK.—Rev. G. E. Northrup closes his work here. During his four years' stay the parsonage has been burned, as well as the church building. Another meeting house has been secured. Uncertainty as to the financial policy of the country makes the future of the mining interest dubious.

STEWARTVILLE.—The salary of the pastor has been increased and is promptly paid; several old debts have been liquidated. The church is greatly encouraged by the decision of Rev. R. G. Jones to remain; and hopes soon to make an effort for the final payment on the new house of worship.

MANKATO.—Swedish. Rev. E. B. Bjorklund has increasing congregations and the outlook is good for a strong church.——West. The Sunday school has been suspended for the present, a Free Baptist school having been organized which does the work.

ORTONVILLE.—Through the efforts of Rev. G. W. Shaw a good citizenship league has been formed, which has made itself felt in resisting the lawlessness of the saloons. At Odessa, a churchless community, services have been commenced.

Rev. William Griffith will remain another year at Belgrade and South Bend. During his vacation a lay member of the church conducts the services.

Kansas.

GREAT BEND.—Excellent work is being done here. The Sunday school numbers 120 and the Y. P. S. C. E. has an active membership of 45. A well-attended teachers' meeting held weekly at the parsonage is an important feature. A marked interest in their classes has developed among the teachers, whom the pastor regards as among his best helpers for every good work. By request of the young people he will soon begin a series of normal Bible lessons.

LITTLE RIVER.—All the regular services were maintained during the long illness of the pastor, the late Rev. C. T. Young. The church has 60 members and an attendance of 75 at its Sunday school. The only debt is to the C. C. B. S. Rev. Messrs. Henry and Severance of Maize have frequently supplied the pulpit during recent months.

CHASE.—The pulpit is being efficiently supplied on alternate Sundays by Rev. J. B. Schlichter, who resides at Sterling. Through repeated crop failure the church has suffered financially, but is spiritually active, not only sustaining its own midweek prayer meetings but engaging in two weekly cottage meetings besides.

MCPHERSON.—By systematic effort during the recent years of financial depression all but $16 of the $400 indebtedness to the C. C. B. S. has been paid. Three C. E. Societies, an Epworth League and a Baptist Young People's Union of the city unite in a monthly service which is always crowded, enthusiastic and helpful.

NICKERSON.—Unusual prosperity is enjoyed here. Audiences are large, the Sunday school and other services well maintained, and the pastor's salary is promptly paid. Rev. D. H. Snowden, who ministers here, resides at his country home, preaching regularly and doing such pastoral work as his impaired health permits.

KINSLEY.—Two payments of $100 each have been made to the C. C. B. S. during the past year, beside meeting the pastor's salary and current bills. The relations between the Methodists and Congregationalists are specially cordial, the two pastors uniting in a weekly ministers' meeting.

STERLING.—During the hot months the pastor, Rev. T. W. Cole, has held the Sunday evening services in the open air, attracting large audiences, many listening as they sat in their carriages.

North Dakota.

OBERON.—The church will observe the 10th anniversary of its organization Sept. 27. To mark the occasion the pastor, Rev. O. P. Champlin, will establish a parish library for the use of the general public. Good books of all description are solicited.

South Dakota.

ERWIN.—Rev. J. B. Lewis is taking a trip around the world. During his absence of six months Miss E. K. Henry will supply. The church defers calling a regular pastor in the hope that Mr. Lewis may resume work here.

Utah.

SALT LAKE.—Plymouth. Rev. J. D. Nutting and family spent the month of August delightfully in camp in Parley's Canyon, 10 miles from Salt Lake City, Rev. George Ritchie supplying the pulpit. On their return they were surprised by finding the parsonage open and a substantial repast prepared by some of their people. The work is moving forward encouragingly. The way is now practically open to furnish the new building.——Phillips has just extended a hearty call to Rev. George Lindsay of Aberdeen, Wn., which he has accepted, and will begin work as soon as he can move here.——Rev. W. S. Hawkes, superintendent of the C. H. M. S., has just returned from his Eastern trip, having been in New England most of the time for about three months. He is pleased with the interest there in the great Utah problem.

Idaho.

The church at Wardner is making wholesome progress. A flourishing C. E. Society has been organized.

Arizona.

TEMPE.—A Mexican church was organized here July 5 with 11 members, three of them being the pastor and members of his family, Americans; four persons have since been added. Rev. Stephen Edwards has charge of this hopeful work in a valley sustaining a large Mexican population. An organ has been purchased.

New Mexico.

SAN RAFAEL (Mexican). An addition to the parsonage and improvements on the mission schoolhouse have been made, for the most part by the skillful hands of the pastor, Rev. G. E. Birlew, who has also in charge the erection of two schoolhouses at other points for the use of the Education Society.

DEMING.—Rev. N. W. Hankemeyer of New Rockford, N. D, began work here Aug. 30. The church had been pastorless most of the time for four years, but kept up a flourishing Sunday school and Aid Society.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

SAN FRANCISCO.—First. The trustees presented their resignations at a called meeting of the society Sept. 3, the first gathering held in the edifice since Dr. Brown's resignation. The feeling has been strong on both sides but all parties voted unanimously that the trustees be asked to reconsider their action. A meeting of both church and society has been called looking toward reopening the house of worship. The property is supposed to be worth $130,000, less a $10,000 mortgage.——Seamen's. Chaplain Rowell has had the longest pastorate in the city—38 years. It has been distinguished by its large number of conversions.

OAKLAND.—First. The call to Rev. C. R. Brown of Charlestown, Mass., was practically unanimous, the vote standing 361 to one. He is expected to take charge of the church Oct. 1. Neither people nor committee had ever seen or heard the pastor elect.

A student Bible class, to be led by seminary professors, has been established at Berkeley. It starts off with 40 members.——The church at Dehesa will hereafter be in care of Rev. J. A. Rogers of Alpine, who will preach there alternate Sundays.

Oregon.

EUGENE.—The new pastor, Rev. R. C. Brooks, has entered upon his duties with energy. As a kind of first fruits nine new members were received Sept. 6—all on confession. Union meetings were held every Sunday evening in August in conjunction with the Presbyterians, the pastors preaching alternately to crowded houses. Repairs costing $235 have been made upon the edifice during the summer.

GASTON, GREENVILLE AND HILLSIDE.—Formerly these were mission stations of the Forest Grove church; now they are independent organizations—100, 29 and 51 members, respectively—and are yoked together. For three years Rev. J. M. Beauchamp has ministered to these people; now Rev. Daniel Staver has charge of the work.

PENDLETON.—This church, after a pastorless year, recently called Rev. F. W. Parker from Huntington, and he began work here Sept. 1. The building has been completely renovated and presents an attractive appearance. With Mr. Parker as leader, the church faces the future with renewed hope and courage.

HUNTINGTON.—Rev. D. Leppert and wife, evangelists, who came here immediately after Rev. F. W. Parker's departure, will have charge for a time. The field, while on the extreme frontier, is an important one, and this church is the only source of religious teaching in an area 40 miles square.

WILSONVILLE.—Hood View. The people rejoice greatly at the return of their pastors, Rev. J. M. and Rev. Dora R. Barber, from a visit East, and also because of the improved health of the latter.

SALEM.—Central is yoked with Willard, Rev. J. M. Beauchamp serving as pastor. These churches have a membership of 30 and 34, respectively, with good Sunday schools, numbering 60 each.

ONTARIO.—Mr. Ghym Alley, a student of Pacific University, is doing effective work here as a supply. A new bell was recently purchased and new chairs have been secured.

Washington.

Mr. C. W. Bushnell, the new pastor at Oakesdale and Rosalia, has practiced law for 20 years.——Rev. and Mrs. H. M. Mobbs of Chewelah are bereaved by the loss of a child.——Rev. H. P. James of Colfax spent his vacation with the surveyors on the Colville reservation and Rev. Jona. Edwards of Spokane among the miners of the upper Columbia country.

THE special train for the Fitchburg Railroad Hoosac Tunnel excursion of Sept. 19 leaves the Union Station, Boston, at 8.15 A.M. Rate only $2.

IN continuation of what has always been the policy of the management, the faculty of the New England Conservatory of Music, of Boston, Mass., has been recently strengthened by the addition of several teachers of high standing and national reputation. The two new three manual electric organs which are now being installed add still more to the unrivaled advantages for organ students.

Gain

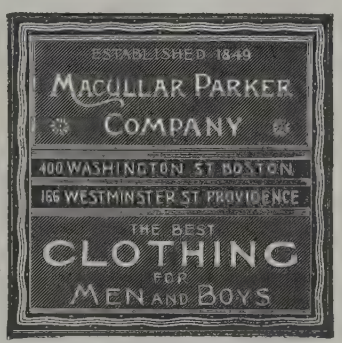
Nerve-strength by feeding your nerves upon pure, rich, red blood. Purify, enrich and vitalize your blood by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"My wife was broken down in health and was very weak. She suffered from headache and constipation. She began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and it has built her up. Hood's Sarsaparilla has also cured me of boils."—L. T. CARTER, Round Hill, Va.

HOOD'S
Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

Hood's Pills do not cause pain or gripe. All druggists. 25 cents.



NEARLY BLACK.

Here is an old Flemish Dresser of the 16th century—that same article of furniture which, in the manorial halls of yore, was garnished with the reliquaries of the feudal lord.

It is constructed of dark Flemish Oak, skillfully stained so that it has the appearance of being 300 years old. It bears the same interesting color which is seen in the Coronation Chair of Edward I. in Westminster Abbey (A. D. 1296).

The upper shelf is supported by huge beasts exquisitely carved in full relief. The drawer fronts and posts are a mass of carving. The framing of the front legs is very odd and interesting.

Within the great doors is a closet having a storage capacity of 17,340 cubic inches. This may, from its unusual size, be used for plate, glass and linen combined.

JUST ISSUED.—General Catalogue for 1896-97. Square octavo; 256 pp., 300 illustrations. Sent to any address on receipt of five 2-cent stamps for postage.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,
48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.

Financial.

Guaranty Trust Co.

of New York.

Formerly New York Guaranty and Indemnity Co.
Mutual Life Building,
65 CEDAR STREET, N. Y.

CAPITAL, - - - - - $2,000,000
SURPLUS, - - - - - - $2,000,000

ACTS AS TRUSTEE FOR CORPORATIONS, FIRMS AND INDIVIDUALS, AS GUARDIAN, EXECUTOR AND ADMINISTRATOR. TAKES ENTIRE CHARGE OF REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATES.

INTEREST ALLOWED ON DEPOSITS
subject to check or on certificate.

WALTER G. OAKMAN, President.
ADRIAN ISELIN, Jr., Vice-President.
GEORGE R. TURNBULL, 2d Vice-President.
HENRY A. MURRAY, Treas. and Sec.
J. NELSON BORLAND, Assist. Treas. and Sec.

DIRECTORS.

Samuel D. Babcock,	Adrian Iselin, Jr.,
George F. Baker,	Augustus D. Juilliard,
George S. Bowdoin,	James N. Jarvie,
Frederic Cromwell,	Richard A. McCurdy,
Walter R. Gillette,	Walter G. Oakman,
Robert Goelet,	Alexander E. Orr,
G. G. Haven,	Henry H. Rogers,
Oliver Harriman,	Henry W. Smith,
R. Somers Hayes,	H. McK. Twombly,
Charles R. Henderson,	Frederick W. Vanderbilt,
William C. Whitney.

7 PER CENT. NET.

First Mortgage Loans on Improved Farms in the Wonderfully Fertile Red River Valley

and in North Dakota and Minnesota. 20 years of experience in the business, and an actual residence of over 8 years in the Red River Valley and of over 22 in Minnesota and North Dakota. A personal knowledge of lands and values. Loans only made to industrious, thrifty farmers, on well improved farms. I give my personal supervision to the business. Loans made in your name and interest coupon-notes and mortgages and applications sent to you and held by you. Interest collected by me and forwarded to you by New York Check. Funds now earning you only 2, 3, or 4 per cent. in Savings Banks will here earn you 7 per cent.—about doubling your income. Remit funds for investment by New York or Boston Draft, or by personal check payable to my order. Address

E. P. CATES,
2628 Portland Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

HOME INSURANCE COMPANY

OF NEW YORK,
OFFICE, NO. 119 BROADWAY.

Eighty-Fifth Semi-Annual Statement, January, 1896.

SUMMARY OF ASSETS.

Cash in Banks	$469,914 59
Real Estate	1,705,895.91
United States Stocks (market value)	1,418,425.00
Bank, Trust Co., and Railroad Stocks and Bonds (market value)	3,946,493.00
State and City Bonds (market value)	855,927.93
Bonds and Mortgages, being first lien on Real Estate	463,009.13
Loans on Stocks, payable on demand	426,550.00
Premiums uncollected and in hands of Agents	515,227.06
Interest due and accrued on 1st January, 1896	52,185.92
	$9,853,628.54

LIABILITIES.

Cash Capital	$3,000,000.00
Reserve Premium Fund	4,395,659.00
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Claims	752,514.13
Net Surplus	1,705,455.41
	$9,853,628.54

D. A. HEALD, President.
J. H. WASHBURN, E. G. SNOW, } Vice-Presidents.
W. L. BIGELOW, T. B. GREENE, } Secretaries.
H. J. FERRIS, A. M. BURTIS, Ass't Secretaries.

New York, January 7, 1896.

£ ALL OVER THE WORLD
Cheque Bank Cheques

are cashed by Agents, Shops, Hotels, etc. Use them in sending money abroad. See circular.

Agency of
UNITED STATES CHEQUE BANK, L'd.
FREDERICK W. PERRY, Manager,
40 and 42 Wall St., N. Y.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS in the World.
PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).
Send for Price and Catalogue.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

The prospects for trade improvement, noted last week, were realized this week to some extent, for many Southern and Western centers report a more active movement of general merchandise. The indications seem to point to a further improvement in demand as the autumn advances. A feature of trade at the present time is the purchase of stocks to replenish depleted supplies. These purchases are not on so liberal a scale, it is true, as they would be if times were normal, but after the great depression in business any improvement is appreciated.

The New Orleans bank failures came at an inopportune time, for the early movement of cotton and sugar in prospect had furnished a stimulus to general trade in that section of the country. In iron and steel there is a gratifying measure of improvement, although the change is not so much in increased consumption as it is in a more confident tone. The production of pig iron in the United States has been reduced from about 10,000,000 tons per annum to less than two-thirds of that amount at the present time, and the stagnation in the iron and steel industries is beginning to yield to such a drastic remedy. Thus prices are stronger and there is some improvement in the demand.

In cotton goods a little better business is doing, although prices continue low, being all out of proportion with the cost of raw cotton. The more sanguine of the cotton mill men are figuring upon a good business in November. If it comes it will make much difference in the operations of the mills for the year, but if it does not many will make but small profits. A prominent mill treasurer says that the curtailment of production should still be prosecuted, as not sufficient improvement has as yet appeared to warrant an increase in production all along the line.

In the stock market there is also a good feeling, and prices have ruled very strong. The large continued imports of gold are very reassuring to confidence.

Low Rates to the White Mountains.—The wealth of natural beauty and the many pleasing associations surrounding the White Mountains make it a valuable yet interesting locality to visit. Marvelous are the works of nature which are displayed, and in many cases of so curious a construction that to one who has never visited this region there is a store of delights which has few, if any, equals. The lines of the Boston & Maine Railroad so thoroughly cover the mountain regions of New Hampshire that every point of interest is within easy access. To permit the thousands who desire to visit this land of Paradise the Boston & Maine Railroad will, during the period from Sept. 10 to Oct. 10, greatly reduce its rates to mountain points. These tickets will permit holders to stop over at any point north of Plymouth or North Conway, and side trips to the summit, to Maplewood, Profile House and nearly a score of other points will be on sale at Fabyans and Bethlehem Junction. Information can be obtained at station ticket offices or at the Boston City Ticket Office, 322 Washington Street, corner of Milk Street.

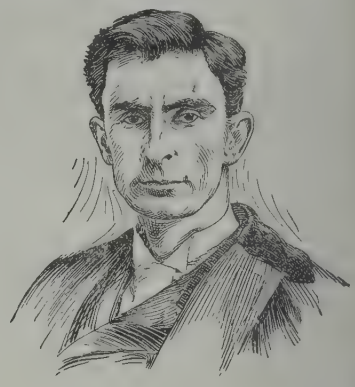
An Old German Fad.—The severe simplicity of the German Renaissance is coming to the front in much of our furniture in this year of 1896. The cabinet work of this period suggests days of stirring deeds. There is nothing frivolous or effeminate in its rigid lines and stern angles. Some of our readers may be interested to see some of this old German furniture, and for their benefit we here call their attention to the unusually good exhibition of it at the warerooms of the Paine Furniture Company on Canal Street.

Low Values.—Never in the history of the crockery trade were prices so low as now. The new inventions of fuel-saving kilns, transfer decorations and lower duties have brought values to the lowest record. Jones, McDuffee & Stratton's establishment is among the largest in this country.

AN ENTHUSIASTIC CLERGYMAN.

Rev. Thomas Dixon, Jr., Speaks, and his Opponents Create a Disturbance—Comments of the New York Papers.

On Sunday morning, Sept. 6th, Rev. Thomas Dixon, Jr., announced that he would preach on "The Political Crisis," and probably 4,000 people gathered at the Academy of Music—the "People's Church"—to hear this brilliant pulpit orator who is not afraid to think for himself and tell his thoughts to the public.



REV. THOMAS DIXON, JR.

During the sermon he was again and again interrupted, but as the New York Herald of the following day says, "The hisses that broke in on the preacher's vigorous sentences were drowned by cheers and applause." The unusually clear and penetrating voice of Mr. Dixon stood him in good stead in this clamor. In this connection the following letter, written only a week before, seems particularly to the point.

New York, August 26, 1896.

Dear Sir:

I am very loath as a minister to give an indorsement to a patented article, but I feel it but just to you to say that I have used your Hyomei for Bronchitis with perfect success. I had a chronic cold last winter which stubbornly resisted every remedy for seven weeks. Your Hyomei gave me relief in one day and enabled me to fill all my subsequent lecture dates with satisfaction.

Truly yours,
(Rev.) Thomas Dixon, Jr.,
Pastor People's Church.

"Hyomei,"

the new and wonderful Australian "Dry-Air" treatment of all the diseases of the respiratory organs. "Cures by inhalation,"

Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, and all similar complaints.

PRICE, $1.00.

For sale at all druggists, by mail, or at home office. Send for free pamphlet.

R. T. BOOTH, 23 E. 20th St., New York.

Established 1857.

The Great CHURCH LIGHT

FRINK'S PATENT REFLECTORS for electric, gas or oil, give the most powerful, softest, cheapest and best light known for churches, halls and public buildings. Send size of room. Book of light and estimate free. Don't be deceived by cheap imitations.

I. P. FRINK,
551 Pearl Street, New York.

THE CINCINNATI BELL FOUNDRY CO.
CINCINNATI, OHIO.
SOLE MAKERS OF THE BLYMYER BELLS
FOR CHURCH, SCHOOL, FIRE ALARM &c.
Catalogue with 2500 testimonials. Prices and terms FREE.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church & School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

CHURCH CARPETS AT MANUFACTURERS' PRICES. JOHN H. PRAY, SONS & Co., CARPETS AND UPHOLSTERY. 658 WASHINGTON ST. OPP. BOYLSTON ST. BOSTON.

BOSTON SUPERINTENDENTS' UNION.

Last Monday night, when Dr. Peloubet said that the paper to which he had listened was the best address on Music in the Sunday School that he had ever heard, he voiced the judgment of the entire audience. It must have been a delight to the chief speaker, Rev. W. A. Bartlett of Lowell, to receive the unanimous applause of this earnest body of Sunday school workers, as he outlined in a telling manner the value and uses of worship music, and the effectiveness of his words could be traced to the fact that he exemplified the teaching which he would have every music leader impress upon his singers: that he was in his place "for business." As a later speaker stated, Mr. Bartlett's testimony had added worth in that it came from the pulpit as well as from the chorister's stand.

The average low grade of singing in our schools was an unpleasant suggestion as the speaker described that "outburst of song" which should be a feature of every Sunday school as the consequence of a soul culture, which results from training of the heart more than the voice. Teaching people to sing, said he, not to be sung to, is the reform which should be effected. The active interest and participation of the superintendent, the winning of the sympathy of the audience, the drilling of the songs as a part of the life of the school and a leader who possesses the spirit of the hymns were stated as cardinal requisites of restoring the lost art. Mr. Bartlett's paper was full of illustrative suggestions which were still further carried out by his use of the audience and the Berkeley Temple C. E. quartet to demonstrate the effects of varied methods of rendering hymns. The gratuitous assistance of that quartet and of the Damon instrumental quartet of young ladies was highly appreciated. At the close President Hathaway was deservedly congratulated upon the high standard which was set for the year by this first meeting of the season.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Ohio has a special exercise arranged for Association Day, Sept. 27. The committee furnishes it free in any quantity desired. It also issues a circular and visiting pads for those engaged in house to house work. Each pad is large enough for 25 families and the circular fully explains the work.

Miss Bertha F. Vella, the State primary secretary of Massachusetts, has spoken during July and August at the Kentucky State Convention at Mountain Lake Park, Md., and at Laurel Park, Mass. At these Chautauquas a ten days' program was furnished and the primary work of the Sunday school was given a place each day.

Mr. R. M. Scruggs of St. Louis has purchased the International Evangel and makes it a gift to the Sunday school cause throughout the world. He has publicly pledged to give the entire profits as a direct personal cash contribution to organized Sunday school work in his own State and in the country at large. He is the superintendent of Cook Avenue School of the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church.

The teachers and scholars of Berkeley Temple, Boston, have raised the money and renovated the vestry and adjoining rooms preparatory to an enlarged work. The funds have been secured by the use of Rev. A. A. Kidder's unique devices known as "the tithing dollar," "the nickel album" and the "tithe gleaner," into which nickels and dimes are gathered in amounts from one to five dollars, respectively. The effort has been much enjoyed by the small number who remained at home during the summer and did the work.

The fall conventions of State associations promise this year to be of unusual interest and value. Massachusetts people will meet at Northampton Oct. 6-8, free entertainment being guaranteed to 450 delegates, representing the several districts of the State. The program will have to do with the exaltation of a higher type of work, a better knowledge of the Bible and a more practical application of theories. The list of speakers includes such attractive individualities as President Hall of Clark University, President Gates of Amherst, Dr. Hurlbut of New York and Mrs. Julia Dimock Dudley of New Jersey. The railroads grant reduced rates, and a special train will start from the Union Station, Boston. Each Sunday school is entitled to three delegates besides the pastor and superintendent. Hamilton S. Conant, associate State secretary, 110 Boylston Street, will furnish programs and full particulars.

NOTEWORTHY FORTHCOMING MEETINGS.

Annual Congress of the National Prison Association, Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 26-30.
Massachusetts Sunday School Association, Northampton, Oct. 6, 7.
American Board, Toledo, O., Oct. 6-9.
Indian Conference, Lake Mohonk, N. Y., Oct. 14-16.
American Missionary Association, Boston, Mass., Oct. 20-22.
Convention of the Open and Institutional Church League, Hartford, Ct., Oct. 20, 21.
Woman's Home Missionary Association, Annual Meeting, Boston, Oct. 28.
International Convention of Christian Workers, Louisville, Ky., Nov. 5-11.
National W. C. T. U. Convention, St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 13-18.

Marriages.

The charge for marriage notices is twenty-five cents.

ALLEN—DOUGHTY—Aug. 26, by Rev. A. S. Twombly, D. D., of Newton, Prof. Eugene Allen of Rolla, Mo., and Harriett Doughty of Arlington.

BEAN—BOND—In Derby, Vt., Sept. 7, by Rev. H. M. Perkins, Melvin J. Bean of Cambridge and Mrs. Annie L. Bond of Derby, Vt.

SOULIS—BASCOM—In Tremont Temple, Sept. 9, by Rev. G. C. Lorimer, D. D., Benjamin F. Soulis and Lora A. Bascom, both of Boston.

Deaths.

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

BABSON—In Mt. Desert, Me., July 28, Deacon E. E. Babson of the Somesville church, aged 73 years. For ten years he served as town clerk, for thirty-five years as teacher in the schools of the island. A studious Bible class teacher and an officer of the church, he was in a large view a veritable pillar of the cause of Christ in the town and region.

LEES—In Lowell, Aug. 15, of heart disease, Columbia Willis, widow of the late Samuel Lees, aged 82 yrs., 5 mos.

PINNEO—In New York city, Sept. 8, Henry O. Pinneo, treasurer of the C. C. B. S., aged 81 yrs., 6 mos., 17 dys.

STONE—In Westchester, Ct., Sept. 12, Ida May, daughter of Rev. Edward G. and the late Carrie N. Stone, aged 15 yrs.

WARDWELL—In Brookline, Sept. 10, William H. Wardwell, aged 78 years, an old and honored member of the Eliot Church, Roxbury, and since 1880 a director of the C. S. S. and P. S., serving for many years as chairman of the committee on finance, of which he was a member from his first official induction into the society.

YOUNG—In Colorado Springs, Col., Aug. 10, Rev. Charles Theodore Young, aged 39 years. He had rendered pastoral service in Wichita, Chase and Little River, Kan.

BEST INVESTMENT ON EARTH!!

SIMPLE STRONG

SILENT SPEEDY

They earn more money, in proportion to cost, than any other product of human ingenuity.

The SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

Ostermoor Patent Elastic Felt Church Cushions have almost entirely displaced the use of hair cushions in churches of all denominations.

The First Baptist Church, Hartford, Conn., says: "Over 38 years ago we bought your Patent Elastic Felt Cushions. They are still in use and in good condition, and if we were to have more, we would without hesitation again use your Felt in preference to hair."

Send for our free book, "Testimonial Wonders," and free sample cushion and coverings.

OSTERMOOR & CO., 116 Elizabeth St., New York.

China Dinner Sets and Lamps.

We have ready for exhibition the largest, most valuable and comprehensive stock of FINE LAMPS and DINNER SETS ever shown by us. The former display is on the Gallery Floor, and the latter in the Dinner Set Department (3d Floor). Whether fine table services complete, course sets, or matchings to old sets, intending buyers or those interested in seeing the best productions of the potters' and glassmakers' art will find an extraordinary collection. Intending buyers will find in the Dinner Set Department more than fifty decorated stock patterns to choose from, ranging in price from the ordinary everyday set up to the finest china services, $10 to $800; and being stock patterns they can be matched for years to come, an advantage appreciated by experienced housekeepers.

Visitors will also find new specimens of

—Genuine Old Blue Delft Plaques—
—Doulton Loving Cups—
—Rich Carlsbad Glass Loving Cups—
—Floor Vases—
—Rich Cut Crystal Glass—
—Copeland Pitchers with Football Scenes—
—Boston Historical Plates—
—Boston Souvenir Pitchers—
—London China Tea Infusers—
—London Pudding Dish Collars—
—French Jardinières—
—Rich Vienna China—
—Punch and Lemonade Bowls—
—Fine Lamps and Shades—
—German Beer Mugs—
—Umbrella and Cane Holders—
—Palm Pots and Pedestals—
—English Maxims China—
—Whist Prizes—
—Rich Fancy Pitchers—
—Rich Chocolate Pitchers—
—German Beer Flagons—

Jones, McDuffee & Stratton Co.,

China, Glass and Lamp Merchants,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

120 FRANKLIN STREET.

WEEKLY REGISTER.

Accessions to the Churches.

	Conf.	Tot.
ALABAMA.
Kidd,	7	14
Wicksburg, St. John,	4	4
CALIFORNIA.
Pomona,	1	6
San Francisco, Market St.,	3	19
Plymouth,	—	5
S. Riverside,	4	4
CONNECTICUT.
Hartford, Fourth,	1	4
New Milford,	4	6
W. Winsted, Second,	11	21
INDIANA.
Anderson,	—	3
Indianapolis, People's	—	3
Terre Haute, Second,	1	3
IOWA.
Aurelia,	—	5
Charles City, First,	—	5
Harvey,	—	13
MAINE.
Ashland,	3	3
Searsport,	—	14
Whiting,	2	3
Wilton,	4	4
MICHIGAN.
Allendale,	3	3
Bass River,	6	6
Grand Rapids, First,	—	4
Second,	—	3
MINNESOTA.
Ellsworth,	—	3
Faribault,	3	5
Minneapolis, Plymouth,	3	3
NEW YORK.
Copenhagen,	12	12
Deer River,	1	5
De Ruyter,	—	23
OHIO.
Cleveland, Franklin Ave.,	5	5
Hough Ave.,	2	7
Olivet,	2	4
Madison,	13	13
OKLAHOMA.
N. Enid,	—	13
Paradise,	—	30
S. Enid,	—	3
Turkey Creek,	—	7
VERMONT.
Rutland,	6	13
Shelburne,	7	8
WISCONSIN.
Foskett's Corners,	—	24
Harris Ridge,	—	30
Milwaukee, North Side,	—	9
OTHER CHURCHES.
Alcester, S. D.,	3	3
Atlanta, Ga., Central,	—	7
Dwight, Ill.,	3	5
Eugene, Ore.,	9	9
Eureka, Neb.,	—	11
Hatton, N. D.,	—	6
Roxbury, Mass.,	2	3
Rush Center, Kan.,	3	8
Tempe, Ariz., Mexican,	—	15
Valley Park, Mo.,	—	6
Washington, N. H.,	—	9
Churches with less than three,	33	41

Conf., 161; Tot., 495.

Total since Jan. 1. Conf., 12,073; Tot., 20,975

Calls.

ADAMS, Geo. C., Compton Hill Ch., St. Louis, Mo., to supply First Ch., San Francisco, Cal.
ALGER, Frank G., Fitchburg, Mass., formerly of Oneida, Ill., to Blackstone, Mass.
ALLEN, Herbert O., recently of Franklin Ave. Ch., Cleveland, O., to Garrettsville. Accepts, and has begun work.
BRADFORD, Geo. F., Bristol, Me., to New Ipswich, N. H. Accepts, and has begun work.
BRETT, Geo. S., Central Ch., Springfield, Mo., accepts call to Waukesha, Wis.
CAMERON, Malcolm J., Chicago Sem., to Lynxville, Seneca and Gay's Mills, Wis.
CLANCY, Wm. P., Troy, N. H., to Hebron and Gilead, Ct. Accepts.
COMPTON, Herbert E., to remain another year at Fessenden, Sykeston and Cathay, N. D.
CONLEY, I. B., who has been supplying at Springfield, Me., to Andover.
CRANE, Edward P., to remain another year at Pelican Rapids, Minn. Accepts.
FULLER, Edgar R., Aurora, O., accepts call to Imlay City, Mich.
GRIFFITH, Wm. E., to remain another year at Belgrade and S. Bend, Minn. Accepts.
HALLOCK, Leavitt H., recently of First Ch., Tacoma, Wn., to lecture and preach at Mills College, Cal. Accepts.
HANKEMEYER, Nath'l W., New Rockford, N. D., to Deming, N. M. Accepts.
HATT, Thos. B., Carritunk, Me., to E. Madison. Accepts.
JONES, Richard, Highmore, S. D., to supply temporarily at Worthing. Accepts.
LINDSAY, Geo., Aberdeen, Wn., to Phillips Ch., Salt Lake, Utah. Accepts.
MILLS, Harlow S., Union City, Mich., accepts call to Benzonia.
MOORLAND, Jesse E., Howard Chapel Ch., Nashville, Tenn., to Mt. Zion Ch., Cleveland, O.
MORSE, Morris W., Chicago Sem., to Crete, Neb., for a year.
MUDIE, Howard, formerly of Mantorville, Minn., to Kent, Ct.
NICHOLS, Sampson, to Gorham, N. H. Accepts.
POST, Aurelian (son of A. H. Post, Tolland, Ct.) to Bristol, N. Y. Accepts.
SODERHOLM, Henry, Swedish Ch., Thomaston, Ct., to First Scandinavian Ch., Chicago, Ill. Accepts, to begin Nov. 1.

Ordinations and Installations.

BIRD, M. B., o. Second Ch., Brainerd, Minn., Sept. 2.
CAMPBELL, Wilbur A., o. McPherson, Kan., Sept. 2. Sermon, Rev. L. P. Broad; other parts, Rev. Messrs. T. W. Cole, A. S. Bush, L. C. Schnacke, J. T. Hanna.
GOODRICH, Jos. A., o. Shelburne, Mass., Sept. 9. Sermon, Prof. E. Y. Hincks; other parts, Rev. Messrs. G. G. Atkins, A. C. Hodges, Jno. Cowan, D. D., Lyman Whiting, D. D.
HALBERT, Chas. T., o. Meckling, S. D., Sept. 8. Sermon, Rev. W. J. Marsh; other parts, Rev. Messrs. B. W. Burleigh, J. M. Bates, E. E. Webber, G. E. Paddock, D. B. Nichols, D. D.
MANWELL, John P., o. and i. Harford, Pa., Sept. 9. Sermon, Prof. H. M. Tyler; other parts, Rev. Messrs. A. S. Wood, W. B. Thorp, S. E. Eastman, Edward Taylor, D. D.

Resignations.

BOSS, Thos. M., Leavenworth, Kan.
COLP, Donald G., Georgetown, Minn.
CRANE, Edward P., W. Dora, Minn.
DONALDSON, David, Trenton, Neb.
DUFF, Chas., Parkdale Ch., Toronto, Ont.
EAGLE, John P., Free Ch. (Swedish), Providence, R. I. He will spend a year in Sweden.
McQUARRIE, Neil P., Hillsboro and Kelso, N. D., to engage in evangelistic work in Illinois.
MATHEWS, Robt. J., Lebanon, Mo., to take effect Dec. 1.
MORTON, John, First Ch., Hamilton, Ont., after a pastorate of 15 years, on account of illness in his family.
NORTON, Edwin F., Almont, Mich., withdraws resignation.
RADFORD, Walter, Eagle Grove, Io.
SAVAGE, John W., Chassell and Jacobsville, Mich.
SHEARER, Herman A., not resigned at Hobart and Ross, Ind.
SHEPHERD, Herman T., Elk Point, S. D.
SYLVESTER, J. Walter, S. Broadway Ch., Denver, Col., to take effect Oct. 1.
TREFETHREN, Eugene B., Worthing, S. D., to attend Hartford Sem.
WILLIAMS, R. Howard, Pilgrim Ch., Lawrence, Kan.

Dismissions.

BODMAN, Fred. H., Coleraine, Mass., Sept. 8. He will study at Amherst College.
COVELL, Arthur J., Waterbury, Vt., Sept. 8.
SEWALL, John L., Clyde Ch., Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 10.

Churches Organized.

EAST McDONOUGH, N. Y.
FOSKETT'S CORNERS, Wis., 27 Aug., 24 members.
GOSPEL RIDGE, Io., near Ottumwa.
HARRIS RIDGE, Wis., 28 Aug., 30 members.
SWANTON, Io., rec. 9 Sept. Rev. W. B. Sandford is in charge.
VALLEY PARK, Mo., 6 members. Supt. A. L. Love supplies the pulpit.

Miscellaneous.

CRESSMAN, Abraham A., in addition to his service as field secretary of Doane College, will preach three Sundays each month at Grafton.
DANA, Malcolm McG., will supply at Lee Ave. Ch., Brooklyn, N. Y., until Rev. J. Brittan Clark so far recovers as to resume preaching.
DEAN, Wm. N. T., and family have removed from Woodstock, Ct., to Middlebury, Vt., where his daughter is to enter college.
EDWARDS, Rosine M., of Spokane, Wn., who has already been approbated to preach, has entered Pacific Seminary.
FINDLAY, Jno. J., of Vernondale, Cal., is at present debarred from preaching on account of illness. The pulpit is supplied by the volunteer service of brother ministers.
HILLMAN, Alfred T., the active secretary of the New Hampshire H. M. S., is ill with nervous prostration at his home in Concord.
MITCHELL, Geo. W., has been granted a three months' vacation by the church in Franklin, Neb., and with his wife has gone to the mountains.

I think it is folly—it is suicidal—this attempt to identify the interests of bimetallism with the present free coinage agitation. I have conferred with leading bimetallists in Europe and I find that they deprecate this movement in America. In all their advocacy of the remonetization of silver they assume as a necessary condition that this free coinage shall not prevail.—Gen. Francis A. Walker.

The Harvard Y. M. C. A., wishing to increase its membership and influence among the new students, asks for the co-operation of clergymen and others who know of students coming to Harvard for the first time. If such will send the names and church connections of entering students to George Gleason, Topsfield, Mass., they will greatly aid the officers of the association.

Are You Nervous?
Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. H. B. BRUSSTAR, Birdsboro, Pa., says: "I have used it in nervous troubles for years, and always with good results."

The Cord Edge is the latest in
S·H·& M·
REGISTERED TRADE MARK
BIAS
VELVETEEN
SKIRT BINDINGS

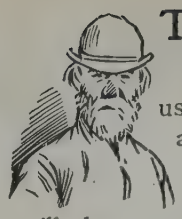
CUT BIAS—fits skirts of any shape.
CORD SECURED—can't drop out and look unsightly.
STITCHED EDGE—gives more elegant finish and is more easily applied than any other.

If your dealer WILL NOT supply you we will.

Samples mailed free.

"Home Dressmaking Made Easy," a new 72 page book by Miss Emma M. Hooper, of the Ladies' Home Journal, tells in plain words how to make dresses at home without previous training; mailed for 25c.

S. H. & M. Co., P. O. Box 699, N. Y. City.

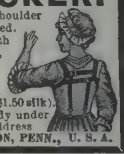


These stopped using soap, long ago. This one stopped because — well, we'll have to guess why. Perhaps, because it gave him too much work to do. That's what everybody thinks, for that matter, when there's nothing but soap at hand, and there's a good deal of dirt to be removed from anything.

But this one stopped because she had found something better than soap—Pearline (use no soap). Something easier, quicker, simpler, more economical. No rubbing to speak of, no wear—easy work and money saved, whether it's washing clothes or cleaning house. 492

KNICKERBOCKER.

No more round shoulders. Shoulder Brace and Suspender combined. Easily adjusted. Worn with comfort. Sizes for men, women, boys and girls. Sold by druggists, appliance stores, general stores, &c. By mail $1 per pair ($1.50 silk). Send chest measure around body under arms. Circulars free. Address



KNICKERBOCKER BRACE CO., EASTON, PENN., U. S. A.

CHURCH REMODELING.
THOMAS W. SILLOWAY, Church Architect,
10 Park Square, Boston.

Mr. Silloway's long practice in building or remodeling over 400 church edifices enables him to save and utilize all the valuable parts, and for a comparatively small outlay produce a building preferable to a new one of much greater cost. He proposes to continue the work of remodeling as a specialty, and tenders his services to committees who would practice economy, and where the means are limited.

Blake Bell Foundry
Established in 1820.
Successors to WM. BLAKE & CO.
Manufacture bells of every description, single or chimes, of Copper and Tin. Address
BLAKE BELL CO., Boston, Mass.

Does Your Hair Fall Out?
Is it getting thin—lessening in volume? If so, I can help you. If totally bald do not write. Select family patronage for ten years. Send self-addressed stamped envelope to Miss RACHEL T. WYATT, Centerville, Mass.

ESTABLISHED 1836.
ISAAC RILEY,
Successor to Baird & Riley,
PLUMBER AND SANITARY ENGINEER,
85 Joy St., Near Cambridge St., Boston.
Telephone, Haymarket 294.

THE MAGEE IDEA

The highest quality at the lowest cost. It is the difference between cheap ranges and ranges cheap—between value and cost.

"MAGEE" RANGES

are made from the cook's standpoint. They embody every device, every convenience, every scientific improvement consistent with good cooking and saving in fuel. Once tried, always used. The name MAGEE is a guarantee of quality in ranges and furnaces. Descriptive circulars free. For sale by leading Dealers.

MAGEE FURNACE COMPANY, 32-38 Union St., Boston.
Western Agency, 86 Lake St., Chicago. Pacific Coast Agency, 27 New Montgomery St., San Francisco.

DO YOU KNOW THAT THERE IS SCIENCE IN NEATNESS? BE WISE AND USE . . . . . SAPOLIO

OUR HONOR AT STAKE.

Our Revolutionary forefathers left but one blot to tarnish their bright record—their continental money was not redeemed. That error we must not repeat. Our first duty is to see to it that our country does no act to discredit her fair name. America has a vast bonded debt, incurred in suppressing the rebellion. It has agreed to pay that debt, principal and interest, in a currency redeemable in gold. Ever since the resumption of specie payments we have declared gold to be the ultimate currency of redemption. Every man at home or abroad who has purchased a bond of the United States has acquired that bond with the understanding distinctly expressed in our statutes that it was to be paid in something equal to gold. If we propose to pay principal or interest in anything less than that, we propose to pay in something different from the promise, in something less valuable than that to which our national faith has been pledged.

Governments cannot be sued. That is all the more reason why they must be true to their promises. If an individual repudiates his contracts, the courts are at hand to keep him to his obligations. But when a nation repudiates there is no remedy. Nothing but its honor is at stake. But when we say that we confess that everything is at stake. America is not a bankrupt asking for money from her creditors. She is able to do all that she has agreed. Shame upon the man who by his vote or his conduct would repudiate her solemn undertakings. This is no mere party question. Parties are but the instruments of public policy. They are the creatures of the time. The nation will outlive them. It is our country to which is due allegiance and our love, and that allegiance is worthless and that love is unfaithful if we do not cherish her good name beyond all price.—William Dudley Foulke.

PRESIDENT BLISS AND MR. BRYAN.

The following open letter to Mr. Bryan was written by Rev. Dr. D. Bliss of the Syrian Protestant College at Beirut, and was first printed in the New York Sun:

The Hon. William J. Bryan; Dear Sir: I see by the papers that you are a good Presbyterian. I am glad, for I wish your advice. I am the president of a college in Asia in which there are 300 students and twelve American and several native instructors.

Many years ago good Presbyterians like yourself and other good men gave money for the college, all of which was invested in this country in railroad and other bonds. The college is supported on the interest from these bonds. Now when your financial plan is perfected in paying all indebtedness and interest in silver dollars, which will be worth in Asia only half a dollar, you can see that the college will be ruined. Therefore do you advise us to sell now all of our bonds and invest the proceeds in English or other foreign securities?

If you do not think this the best plan, would you be willing to suggest to the owners of silver mines to double our investments? They might not be willing to do this from a feeling of benevolence, but they might do it out of gratitude to you, for the free coinage of silver, you know, will double the price of their bullion on hand and the price of all future outputs.

Yours truly, ASIA.

DON'T worry yourself and don't worry the baby; avoid both unpleasant conditions by giving the child pure, digestible food. Don't use solid preparations. Infant Health is a valuable pamphlet for mothers. Send your address to the New York Condensed Milk Co., New York.

THE Deerfield Valley is famous as one of the beauty spots of New England. Take the Fitchburg Railroad Hoosac Tunnel excursion of Sept. 19 through the valley and enjoy a treat. Rate only $2.

IT is actual merit that has given Hood's Sarsaparilla the first place among medicines. It is the one true blood purifier and nerve tonic.

POND'S EXTRACT gives immediate relief from pain. Caution: Counterfeits are dangerous to use.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR, ECKSTEIN } Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, BRADLEY, BROOKLYN, JEWETT, ULSTER, UNION } New York.
SOUTHERN, SHIPMAN } Chicago.
COLLIER, MISSOURI, RED SEAL, SOUTHERN } St. Louis
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS. CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

WHY IS IT that practical painters everywhere use and recommend Pure White Lead and Pure Linseed Oil? Simply because they know their business, have a reputation to maintain, and cannot afford to use or recommend anything else. To be sure of getting examine the brand (see list genuine brands). Any shade or color is readily obtained by using NATIONAL LEAD CO.'s brands of Pure White Lead Tinting Colors.

Pure White Lead

Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

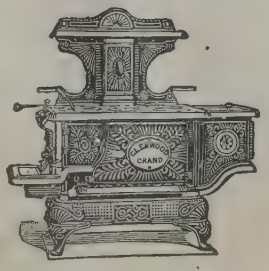
NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New York.

GLENWOOD RANGES

MAKE

COOKING EASY.

THREE GOLD MEDALS.



WEIR STOVE COMPANY, TAUNTON, MASS.
Agents in All Prominent Cities and Towns in New England.

It Never Fails

to cure the most severe Coughs and all forms of Throat and Lung Troubles. It has stood the test of public opinion for thirty years and the continued and increased demand proves its value and popularity.

ADAMSON'S Botanic Cough Balsam

More than 10,000 Testimonials have been voluntarily sent, showing spontaneous and heartfelt gratitude for the miraculous cures it has effected.

Prices, 35 and 75c. a Bottle.

Sold by all Druggists.

B

Grand National Prize of 16,600 francs at Paris

Quina-Laroche

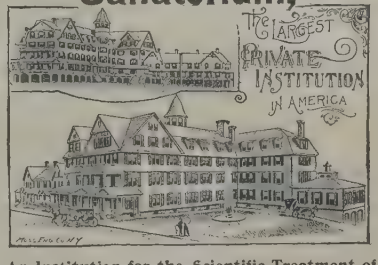
Possesses in the highest degree the entire active properties of Peruvian Bark. Endorsed by the medical faculty as the best remedy for Fever and Ague, Malaria, Poorness of the Blood, General Debility and Wasting Diseases; Increases the Appetite, Strengthens the Nerves and builds up the entire system.

Paris: 22 Rue Drouot
New York: E. FOUGERA & CO.
26-30 N. William St.

DEAF-NESS & head noises relieved by Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums—helps where medicine fails; stops the progress of deafness; concentrates sound waves to one point upon Natural Drum; also takes the place of Natural Drums when wholly or partially destroyed; invisible, comfortable, safe—no wire or strings to irritate. For full information write or call for 144-page book on Deafness and Testimonials, FREE. WILSON EAR DRUM CO.,
Offices { 335 Trust Bldg., Louisville, Ky. R. 851, 1122 Broadway, New York.

IN CORRESPONDENCE SUGGESTED by announcements in our ADVERTISING COLUMNS, please mention that the advertisement was seen in The Congregationalist.

The Berkshire Hills Sanatorium,



An Institution for the Scientific Treatment of

CANCER

Tumors, and all forms of Malignant Growths,

WITHOUT THE USE OF THE KNIFE.

We have never failed to effect a permanent cure where we have had a reasonable opportunity.

Book and circulars giving description of Sanatorium, Treatment, Terms, and References, free.

DRS. W. E. BROWN & SON, NORTH ADAMS, MASS.

ROYAL
BAKING POWDER

Saves Labor, Time, Money—Makes the food more delicious and wholesome.

·ABSOLUTELY·PURE·

HOUSEKEEPERS who are wise will not be persuaded into purchasing the unreliable baking powders which some dealers wish to sell for the sake of the additional profit derived therefrom. Crudely mixed from low-grade, impure ingredients, such powders cost but half as much to make as the highly refined, absolutely pure Royal Baking Powder, although retailed at the same price. They are unwholesome, and are lacking in leavening strength.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER gives the greatest value for its cost, and there is no other baking powder or leavening preparation that will give such satisfaction, or make such pure, wholesome and delicious food, or which in practical use will be found so economical.

NEW.

The first arrivals of our Special Styles in Garment and Suit Department.

New Steamer Capes.

New Tailor-Made Capes.

New Tailor-Made Suits.

New Fall Jackets.

New Flannel Shirt Waists

New Flannel and Cashmere Wrappers.

NEW.

Dress Goods selected personally in Europe this Summer by a member of our firm and by our Dress Goods buyer.

Fancy Wool Dress Goods.

Plaids in bright Scotch effects } 75c to $2 a yd.
Plaids in bright Poplins and Velours } 75c to $2 a yd.
Plaids in rough boucle styles } 75c to $2 a yd.

NOVELTIES in Bourette, Boucle, Canvas, Basket, Diagonal and other fancy weaves, in fashionable color combination..... $1.00 up.

Extraordinary collection of REAL SCOTCH NOVELTIES, styles confined to us.

CLOTHS FOR LADIES' TAILORINGS in Checks, in Venetian effects, in Irish Friese, in Donegal Homespun, in German Broadcloths.

BLANKETS.

ANNUAL SALE

WE ARE SOLE AGENTS IN BOSTON FOR THE SALE OF

"GOLDEN GATE" (California) BLANKETS.

This Celebrated California Mill was the property of the late U. S. Senator Stanford of California. After his death it was closed. It is now running, and making, as it always has, the Finest Blankets that are produced in this country or in any other country.

Though the quality has been maintained and the finish, if possible, improved, the price has been reduced about 25 per cent.

R. H. Stearns & Co.

BOSTON.

It Fastens So

transferring the weight of skirts directly to the shoulders —where it should be—and leaving the form free as Nature planned. Beautiful, comfortable, healthful—the Ferris Waist for Misses. The

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE
CORSET WAIST

is made in styles to suit all figures. For ladies, long and short waist, high and low bust. Children's, 25 cts. to 50 cts. Misses', 50 cts. to $1.00. Ladies', $1.00 to $2.00.

FOR SALE BY ALL RETAILERS.

Volume LXXXI Number 39

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Boston Thursday 24 September 1896

REV. JOHN WATSON, D. D. (IAN MACLAREN).

"God's blessin' on ye'r cannie pen,
'Maclaren,' ye'r a prince o' men,
Wi Burnbrae, ye maun be 'far ben,'
To write like yon;
A bonnier book a' dinna ken—
God bless you, John!

"Ay, 'lan,' ye're 'a lad o' pairts'
An' master o' a' the winsome airts;
Ye'r bookie by its ain deserts
Wull live fer aye;
The benediction o' oor herts
Ye hae the day."

Educational.

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY.
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established, 1855.
3 EAST 14TH STREET, N. Y.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.
4 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y., Chicago, Ill.; and Los Angeles, Cal. 100-page Agency Manual free. EVERETT O. FISK & CO.

THEOLOGICAL.

MAINE, BANGOR.

BANGOR THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
Choice between two courses of study, Classical and English Biblical, in Junior year; one course in Middle and Senior years. Optionals in Hebrew and Cognates, and in Greek. Entrance examination on Wednesday, Sept. 2, 9 A. M. Apply to Prof. C. A. Beckwith, or Prof. G. W. Gilmore, Bangor, Me.

CONNECTICUT, HARTFORD

HARTFORD THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, 63d Year Opens Oct. 7, 1896.
Unexcelled Advantages for College Graduates.
HARTFORD, CT.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

NEW LONDON, N. H.

COLBY ACADEMY.
$200 to $250 a Year. Coeducational. 44th Year.
Send for Catalogue. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, President.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, MERIDEN.

KIMBALL UNION ACADEMY,
Meriden, N. H. New buildings. Enlarged facilities. Beautiful and healthful location. Four-years courses of study. The Departments of Oratory and Physical Culture just established. Young men and women fitted for our best colleges. Students of limited means received on the "$100 a year plan." 82d year begins Sept. 9, 1896. Send for Catalogue.
W. H. CUMMINGS, A. M., Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS.

MASSACHUSETTS, DUXBURY.

POWDER POINT SCHOOL (FOR BOYS).
F. B. KNAPP, S.B., Duxbury, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, SOUTH BYFIELD.

DUMMER ACADEMY (Home School).
Founded 1763. Thorough training for College and Technical Schools. PERLEY L. HORNE, A. M.

MASSACHUSETTS, BRADFORD.

CARLETON SCHOOL for Young Men and Boys. College preparatory and general course of study. Individual teaching. Gymnasium bowling alley, etc. Circulars.
I. N. CARLETON, Ph. D.

MASSACHUSETTS, MONTVALE.

ASHLEY HALL HOME SCHOOL
For Young Ladies.
Ten miles from Boston Music, Art and Languages. Thorough preparation for college.
Miss WHITTEMORE, Principal, Montvale, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.

College of Physicians and Surgeons.
Men and women. Rules of Assoc. Am. Med. Colleges 17th year opens Sept 16. Part tuition for clinical service. 20,000 med. calls in '95. Near Boston City Hospital. AUGUSTUS P. CLARK, A.M., M.D., Dean. (Send for Catalogue.) 517 Shawmut Ave., Boston, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.

HIGHLAND MILITARY ACADEMY,
Worcester ("The Academic City"), Mass. 41st year. Best preparation for College, Professional or Business life. Healthful location. Careful selection and supervision of students. Small Classes.
JOSEPH ALDEN SHAW, A. M., Head Master.

MASSACHUSETTS, DANVERS.

WILLARD HALL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
Tenth Year begins Sept. 22.
College Preparatory and Elective Courses.
Principal, SARAH M. MERRILL.

MASSACHUSETTS, NORTON.

WHEATON SEMINARY
For Young Ladies. Regular and elective courses, literary, scientific, classical. Pupils also fitted for advanced courses in leading colleges. Excellent advantages in art and music. Fine library, laboratory, observatory, gymnasium, bowling alley; outdoor sports, careful physical training. Perfect sanitary arrangements. Best home influences. Beautifully situated, 28 miles from Boston.
62d year. Fall term, Sept. 10, 1896. For illustrated prospectus, address
Miss A. E. STANTON, Principal, Norton, Mass.

CONNECTICUT.

CONNECTICUT, NORWALK.

MISS BAIRD'S INSTITUTE FOR GIRLS,
Norwalk, Conn. 25th year. Primary, Academic, and College Preparatory courses. Music, Art, and the Languages. Careful attention to morals and manners. New buildings, steam heat, gymnasium.

CONNECTICUT, LAKEVILLE.

THE HOTCHKISS SCHOOL,
Lakeville, Conn. Prepares for the best Colleges and Scientific Schools. The next year will begin September 16, 1896.
EDWARD G. COY, Head Master.

Educational.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, POUGHKEEPSIE.

LYNDON HALL SCHOOL.
For Young Ladies. 48th year. College preparation.
SAMUEL WELLS BUCK, A.M., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.

Miss S. D. Doremus
BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
RE-OPENS OCTOBER 1ST.
735 Madison Avenue, New York.

NEW YORK, KEUKA.

KEUKA COLLEGE,
Institute and School for Christian Workers. Institute prepares for college and business. College offers two courses, classical and Latin scientific. School for Christian Workers (interdenominational) aims to increase the efficiency of young people in our churches. $175 covers all expenses. Year begins Sept. 8. Apply to Rev. N. M. CALHOUN, President.

NEW JERSEY.

NEW JERSEY, MONTCLAIR.

Montclair Military Academy,
Montclair, N. J.

If your son is going into business, he will need readiness in figures and the best possible command of the English language. But, even more, he must have such a training that promptness, obedience, order, persistence and honor will be to him not special efforts but fixed habits.

Send for our circular.

J. G. MACVICAR.
Head Master.

HERVE D. WILKINS,
the celebrated organist, says:
"I regard your organs as an illustration of the best ideas extant in regard to organ building."

Church, Chamber and Aeolian Pipe Organs.

Catalogue and specifications cheerfully furnished.

Farrand & Votey Organ Co.,
Detroit, Mich.

Blake Bell Foundry
Established in 1820.
Successors to WM. BLAKE & CO.
Manufacture bells of every description, single or chimes of Copper and Tin. Address
BLAKE BELL CO., Boston, Mass.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS in the World.
PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).
Send for Price and Catalogue
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

BELLS
Steel Alloy Church & School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

IMPROVED
Cathedral Tubular Bells.
CHIMES AND PEALS (Harrington and other patents.)
U. S. Tubular Bell Co. Sole Mfrs., Methuen, Mass.

St. Denis Broadway & 11th Street, NEW YORK.
Opposite Grace Church.
EUROPEAN PLAN.
In a modest and unobtrusive way there are few better conducted hotels in the metropolis than the St. Denis.
The great popularity it has acquired can readily be traced to its unique location, its homelike atmosphere, the peculiar excellence of its cuisine, and its very moderate prices.
William Taylor & Son.

Railroads and Excursions.

I'LL TRY GAZE'S TOURS GOOD IDEA.
52 YEARS OF SUCCESS
Escorted Parties leave as follows October 6:

ROUND THE WORLD	All Included	Choice of Routes	Programs Free By Post
Southern Europe and Italy	By American Line	By North German Lloyd	Sept. 30 and Oct. 3 & 31
Excursions to Rome	Sept. 19 and Oct. 10	Special Rates All Included

53 DAYS $280.00 UPWARD.
60 DAYS $450.00 UPWARD.
Write for Programs of Oriental Tours. Also First Class.
113 DAYS $860.00, All Included.
Independent Travel Tickets Everywhere. Good Steamer Berths by all Lines.
WRITE FOR TOURIST GAZETTE AND SAVE MONEY.
Post Free Upon Application.
H. GAZE & SONS, Ltd.,
113 Broadway, New York, or
W. H. EAVES, New England Agent,
201 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
PROGRAMS WILL BE FURNISHED NOW.

THERE ARE MANY
Cool Retreats
ON THE LINE OF
"The Overland Route."
YOU WILL FIND
Fishing In Rocky Mountain Streams,
Bathing In Great Salt Lake,
Curative Water In Guyer, Hailey and Utah Hot Springs and Soda Springs, Idaho.
UNION PACIFIC THE OVERLAND ROUTE WORLD'S PICTORIAL LINE.
Send for Advertising Matter before you Arrange for your Summer Outing.
E. L. LOMAX, Gen. Pass. and Ticket Agt.,
OMAHA, NEB.

"Where Times are Prosperous"
IN THE
Rocky Mountains
TAKE THE...
ROCK ISLAND ROUTE
To Denver, Colorado Springs, or Pueblo.
ONLY DIRECT LINE TO COLORADO SPRINGS, MANITOU AND PIKES PEAK
4 HOURS QUICKER TIME TO CRIPPLE CREEK
which should be included in your trip, and an investigation of the resources of this place may well repay your visit.
Tourist Dictionary ...Sent Free... Apply for it.
Address JOHN SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Pass. Agent, CHICAGO.

ROUND THE WORLD and HOLY LAND.
Select Parties leave San Francisco Oct. 17 and Nov. 21 for tour Round the World; leave New York Jan. 30 and Feb. 20, 1897, for Palestine. "Clark's Tours," 306 Washington St., Boston.

Opening Display
—OF—
FALL
Millinery

Sept. 28, 29 and 30.

On these days we shall be ready to show you the latest dictates of Fashion, including the choicest conceptions of the world-famous Parisian designers, and a wealth of original creations by our own clever artists.

As you visit us compare and judge. Examine the Trimmed Hats and Bonnets; the splendid assortment of Untrimmed Hats; the vast collection of Ribbons, Flowers and other Trimmings.

With such a stock we cannot fail to gratify every taste.

Prices on everything will be popular because low.

Wm. S. Butler & Co.,
The Leading Millinery House,
Tremont and Bosworth Streets,
BOSTON.

WORLD'S FOOD FAIR AND HOME CONGRESS.
Mechanics Building, Boston.

Monday, Oct. 5, to Saturday, Nov. 7. Daily, 10 A. M. to 10 P. M. Two hundred dealers in food products will distribute samples to the people. Most distinguished men and women in the land to participate in Home Congress (three sessions daily). Mrs. Sarah Tyson Rorer of Philadelphia lectures every afternoon on "Therapeutics of Diet." Season tickets at special rates. Five "Centurion" Bicycles given away to most popular teacher, pupil, mercantile or manufactory establishment employee, letter carrier, street or steam railway employee. It costs nothing to vote. Four hundred Souvenir Silver Spoons given away every day to first four hundred women purchasing tickets of admission. N. Y. Seventh Regiment, Reeves', Salem Cadet, Lafricain's Naval Brigade and Boyle O'Reilly Bands, also the Fadettes, Mendelssohn Club, etc Nothing like it since the Peace Jubilee.

ADMISSION 25 CENTS.

CHURCH ORGAN FOR SALE.
Our Make. Cost $2,400. Price $1,200.
HOOK & HASTINGS CO., Boston.

(Take notice today. This ad. will not appear again.)

$100 IN GOLD | GIVEN AWAY

Who can form the greatest number of words from the letters in READERS? You are smart enough to make fifteen or more words, we feel sure, and if you do you will receive a good reward. Do not use any letter more times than it appears in the word. No proper nouns. No foreign words. Use any dictionary that is standard. Use plurals. Here is an example of the way to work it out: Readers, read, red, sad, ear, ears, dear, etc. These words count. The publisher of WOMAN'S WORLD AND JENNESS MILLER MONTHLY will pay $20 00 in gold to the person able to make the largest list of words from the letters in the word READERS; $10.00 for the second largest; $10.00 for the third; $10.00 for the fourth, and $10 00 for the fifth; and $5.00 each for the eight next largest lists. The above rewards are given free and without consideration for the purpose of attracting attention to our handsome ladies' magazine, twenty-four pages, ninety-six long columns, finely illustrated, and all original matter, long and short stories by the best authors; price $1 00 per year. It is necessary for you, to enter the contest, to send 12 two-cent stamps for a three-months' trial subscription with your list of words, and every person sending the 24 cents and a list of fifteen words or more is guaranteed an extra present by return mail (in addition to the magazine), of a large 192-page book, "The Other Man's Wife," by John Strange Winter, a remarkably fascinating story. Satisfaction guaranteed in every case or your money refunded. Lists should be sent at once, and not later than October 20, so that the names of successful contestants may be in the November issue, published in October. Our publication has been established nine years We refer you to any mercantile agency for our standing. Write now. Address J. H. PLUMMER, Publisher, 905 Temple Court Building, New York City.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST
AND BOSTON RECORDER.

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
- Paragraphs 433
- A Costly Experiment 433
- The End of the Century 434
- Striking Personal Spiritual Experiences 434
- Current History 434
- In Brief 436

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE:
- New York 449
- The Interior 450

CURRENT THOUGHT 439

CONTRIBUTIONS:
- Ian Maclaren at Home. Albert Dawson 437
- A Right Appreciation of Riches. Ian Maclaren 440
- Charity Chance. Chap. XI. Walter Raymond 441
- The National Crisis of 1896. Samuel B. Capen 445

THE HOME:
- The Last Victory—a selected poem 443
- Over the Hills in a Steamboat. Mrs. Harriet W. Dunning 443
- Afield with Young Naturalists. Mrs. S. J. Bucklin 444
- A Good Word for the Sunbonnet—a selection 444
- Closet and Altar 444
- Tangles 451
- Chat about Foods and Drinks 451
- Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 452
- Corner Scrap-Book 452

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for Oct. 4 453

Y. P. S. C. E.—Topic for Oct. 4-10 442

LITERATURE 454

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES:
- The New Brookline Church 442
- The Minnesota Association 456
- Weekly Register 460

MISCELLANEOUS:
- On the Continent of Europe. Significant Events and Conditions 439
- Notices 456
- Business Outlook 459
- Biographical 459
- Noteworthy Forthcoming Meetings 459
- Marriages and Deaths 463

THE CONGREGATIONALIST
AND BOSTON RECORDER.

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849.

Published every Thursday,
At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.

PER COPY, 6 CENTS. PER YEAR IN ADVANCE, $3.00.
TWO YEARS IN ADVANCE, $5 00; FIVE YEARS, $10.00.
IF PAYMENT IS DELAYED, $3.50 PER YEAR.
ONE OLD AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION, $5.00.
CLUB OF FIVE, ONE AT LEAST BEING NEW, $10.00

On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 cents.

RECEIPTS for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.

DISCONTINUANCES.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

ADVERTISING RATES.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 11½ inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.
READING NOTICES, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston.

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Harriet Beecher Stowe.
Her Writings, in a New Riverside Edition. Thoroughly edited and rearranged with a Biographical Sketch and Notes. With Portraits, Views of Mrs. Stowe's Homes, and other Illustrations, on engraved Title-pages. In 16 vols., 12mo, handsomely bound, cloth, gilt top, $1 50 each.

This is a handsome, every way desirable edition of the writings of one of the greatest and most famous of American women.

NOW READY:
THE MINISTER'S WOOING.
THE PEARL OF ORR'S ISLAND.
AGNES OF SORRENTO.

Poems by Celia Thaxter.
Appledore Edition. Edited with a charming Preface, by SARAH ORNE JEWETT. 12mo, uniform with the First Edition of Mrs. Thaxter's "Letters," cloth, gilt top, $1 50; cloth, paper label, uncut edges, $1 50; in decorative binding, $1 50.

This handsome volume comprises all of Mrs. Thaxter's poetical works, except her verses for children published last year, together with some not before printed.

William Henry Seward.
By THORNTON K. LOTHROP. In the American Statesmen Series. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

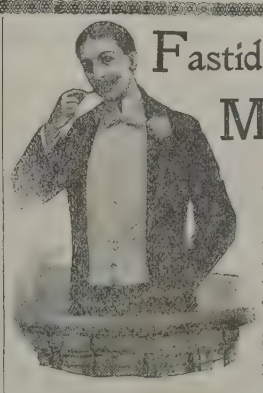
An important addition to a very valuable series, and an admirable volume on a great American statesman.

Three Little Daughters of the Revolution.
Three capital stories ["Dorothy," "Patty," and "Betty Boston's Fourth of July,"] by NORA PERRY, author of "A Flock of Girls," "The Youngest Miss Lorton," etc. With illustrations by FRANK T. MERRILL. Square 12mo, tastefully bound, 75 cents.

A Phrase Book from the Poetic and Dramatic Works of Robert Browning.
To which is added an index containing the significant words not elsewhere noted. By MARIE ADA MOLINEAUX, A. M., Ph. D. Uniform with both the Riverside and Cambridge Editions of Browning. 8vo, $3.00.

A book of unique value, containing the quotable passages in Browning, indexed and with references to the poems in which they occur.

Sold by Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by
HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.



Fastidious Men always insist upon having their shirts made of Pride of the West

Muslin—"as fine as linen, as soft as silk." For sale by Leading Retailers and Men's Furnishers.

A Problem Solved.

Pastors, leaders of young people's societies, and active workers generally, in the churches, are perplexed to know where to find a book of hymns and tunes which combines seriousness and popularity in the best sense—one composed of hymns without doggerel and music bright and melodic without jingle.

LAUDES DOMINI FOR THE PRAYER MEETING is the book.

Cheap only in price, and now used in many of the largest and most successful church prayer-meetings.

It contains 579 hymns and 350 tunes, bound in full cloth, and costs only 50 cents by the hundred.

Send 50 cents for a sample copy—money refunded if the book is returned.

THE CENTURY CO., Union Square, New York.

THE PILGRIM

Pastor's Register.

Prepared by GEO. M. BOYNTON, D. D.

Size, 9½ x 11½. 240 pages. Half Russia. $2.50 net. Postage, 23 cents.

This book provides a place for recording the work done by a pastor. It answers the same need for him which the "Pilgrim Church Register" is intended to supply for the church. It is planned for an active ministry of ten years in a church of more than average size.

He will find a place to record and index his pulpit work at home and abroad, and also such occasional addresses as he may be called to make.

His ministerial functions also find place in a record of marriages solemnized and of baptisms.

He can keep record of councils and other meetings to which he is a delegate, and of the various officers of the church during his pastorate. There is space also to record the church membership.

PASTOR'S

Vest Pocket Memorandum.

Prepared by GEO. M. BOYNTON, D. D.

Size, 3 x 5. 104 pages. Full leather. 50 cents net. Postpaid.

This little book will aid the pastor in keeping before him the residences of his people and the dates of his pastoral visits. The families are arranged by streets, as most convenient for reference, by the way.

It is also a reminder of things to be done, of engagements, of persons to be seen, etc. It has a place to jot down those sudden suggestions as to texts or topics which come often away from home, and which are apt to be most fruitful of all.

Congregational S. S. & Publishing Society,

BOSTON AND CHICAGO.

HIGHEST PRAISE. FOR SABBATH SCHOOLS. $30 per 100.

Christian Endeavor Hymns. $30 per 100.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.,

76 East 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Subscribers' Wants.

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

Soprano, good reader and experienced, desires position in church quartet or chorus. Moderate salary. "H. L. D.," Box 2782, Boston.

Wanted, a young Nova Scotia Protestant cook and laundress, of experience and ability, for a family of two, where another girl is kept, in a pleasant country house with modern conveniences. Address promptly, with references, Box 12, Andover, Mass.

Position Wanted. A middle-aged Christian man desires a permanent situation. Capable of managing a mercantile or manufacturing business. Would assume any situation of trust or responsibility. Moderate salary. Correspondence solicited. J. C. Mather, Norton Heights, Ct.

"THE MARTIAN"

A NEW SERIAL

WRITTEN AND ILLUSTRATED BY

GEORGE DU MAURIER

THE AUTHOR OF

"TRILBY" and "PETER IBBETSON"

Copyright, 1896, by Harper and Brothers.

BEGINS IN

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

FOR OCTOBER NOW READY

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers, New York

A NEW HARVEST SERVICE

In the Autumn Time.

By MARION WEST. With original music and recitations for main school.

HARVEST FRUITS, GOLDEN GRAINS FOR LITTLE GLEANERS, GATHERING IN THE HARVEST, all three for Primary Department.

Harvest Recitations, 15 Cents, postpaid.

Harvest Concert Book, 50 Cents, postpaid.

Complete lists of others free.

HENRY D. NOYES & CO.,

13½ Bromfield Street, - - - - Boston.

THE HOLY CITY.

BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED LECTURES,

Fresh, entertaining, instructive. One thousand new and striking pictures, covering every topic of interest connected with Jerusalem and Palestine. At popular prices these valuable lectures are placed easily within the reach of Lyceums, Churches, Christian Endeavor Societies and Sunday Schools. Bishop Phillips Brooks said: "Dr. Merrill is the most interesting lecturer on Palestine that I have ever listened to." Address

SELAH MERRILL, Andover, Mass.

Religious Notices.

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, etc., published under this heading at ten cents a line.

REV. C. H. WILLIAMS, of Hartford, may be addressed at the Norfolk House, Roxbury, until Oct. 1, by churche desiring his services.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the Society at New York.

JAMES W. ELWELL, President.
REV. W. C. STITT. Secretary.
W. C. STURGES, Treasurer.

OLD BOOKS BOUGHT.

LIBRARIES AND SMALL PARCELS OF BOOKS PURCHASED.

Save the expense and delay of Auction Sales.

W. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Volume LXXXI Boston Thursday 24 September 1896 Number 39

CHURCH CLUB AGENTS
SHOULD BEGIN WORK
NOW.
Send for Terms and Sample Copies.

✠ TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS. ✠
6 Months for $1.00
3 Months for 25 cts. 4 Weeks Free.

MANY reports appear in print of mills and factories shutting down as signs of hard times. But we do not hear of the closing of any colleges. The business of educating youth never flourished more than now. East and West institutions for higher learning are crowded, and with many of them it is becoming a serious problem how to provide equipment for the rapidly increasing armies of students. Hard times help to recruit them, for when business opportunities are poor and the boys cannot get employment they are more ready to use their leisure to fit themselves better for work. Men who have money to give cannot do better with it than to put the best academies, colleges and universities into the most favorable conditions to train young men and women for Christian service of the highest order. Nor can these institutions do better than to instill into their pupils the conviction that "plain living and high thinking" are both objects worthy of ambition. The message of Epictetus to his fellow-countrymen is appropriate to our country, with slight changes:

You Americans will confer the greatest benefit on your country, not by raising the roofs of your dwellings, but by exalting the souls of your fellow-citizens; for it is better that great souls should live in small habitations than that abject slaves should burrow in great houses.

"It has been a sad summer to me, for the families of some very dear friends have been in great sorrow. I never realized before that the household of the sorrowing is so wide. Do you remember a wonderful poem by Edwin Arnold about the woman who went about to find a house in which there was no sorrow, and could not, and then was stronger to bear her own grief because she was not uncompanioned?" These sentences are from a private letter penned by a woman whose calling in life and whose native sympathies bring her into constant contact with her needy, suffering fellow-creatures. They suggest the words of another who once said: "The summer is like a battle. We get together after it is over and count up our dead." The summer, to be sure, is not so different from the other seasons of the year in this matter of grief and bereavement, but it sometimes seems as if the liability during the hot months to maladies of a certain sort involved a peculiar peril to many persons, particularly to little children. Let us remember the homes which have been made desolate the past summer and if our own have been smitten let us hold fast to God and goodness.

Behold how complex is society and how great confusion and far-reaching results a deliberate assault on national credit entails. Several thousand children in New York city are deprived of school privileges and compelled to study "in the streets," because contractors have not finished new schoolhouses or repaired old ones and made them habitable and healthy. Why have the contractors not lived up to their contracts? Because the city has not lived up to its pledges. Why has the city defaulted in payment of its debts to contractors? Because it failed to sell its bonds. Why did it fail to sell its bonds? Because investors lacked confidence in the credit of the metropolis of the nation. Why did they lack confidence? Because at the time the bids were opened men with money to loan did not know whether that which they loaned would be repaid to them in dollars equal in value to those which they loaned. Were they justified in declining to part with their savings? They were.

The churches are gathering their forces together for the autumn work and many are entering on it with renewed enthusiasm, as our church news columns indicate. Pastors read from their pulpits long lists of meetings of various societies. Let us remember that enterprise is shown as truly by doing well the things already undertaken as by projecting new work. While there are many organizations within the church to do specific things, it should not be forgotten that the church itself is a society and that the work distributed through its subordinate bodies is its own work. It is a misfortune for a church to appear like several small bodies loosely jointed together without any distinct relation to the head. It is not a cause for reproach to Christianity, either, that much good is being done in the community which the local churches did not originate and do not control. There are very likely many people more accessible to other influences for good than the church can exert directly. If Odd Fellows and Masons and other fraternal organizations look after their poor and insure their members and bury their dead, let us rejoice that the spirit of Christ goes out into the world through his church and prompts to the service of humanity. While we strive to do good avowedly in his name, we praise him that the work he taught his disciples to do overflows beyond the church and is blessing the whole world.

The provisional committee of the National Council met in the Congregational Library last week, Tuesday, to consider matters relating to the next council, which is to be held at Portland, Ore., in 1898. In the necessary absence of Hon. Nelson Dingley, the chairman, Rev. Dr. Quint, vice-chairman, presided. The attendance was large, including representatives from Iowa and New York State, in the persons, respectively, of Pres. W. M. Brooks and Dr. E. N. Packard. The correspondence laid before the committee from the brethren in Oregon gave abundant evidence of hearty enthusiasm on the ground, pointing to a successful gathering two years hence. The preference of the committee was for the month of October.

A COSTLY EXPERIMENT.

It has been often affirmed of late that our social fabric is based on a mistake, and that therefore injustice is being inflicted by those who own much property on those who own little or none. That injustice is done and suffered is beyond question, though we do not admit that any one class are exclusively the doers, or any other class exclusively the sufferers. But various experiments for relief have been themes of popular discussion, and now the people of the United States are called on to decide by their votes whether or not they will adopt these experiments. It is not proposed to reorganize entirely the social fabric, but the series of experiments to be tried affect vitally the whole nation. Most prominent among them are: placing new limitations on the power of the Federal Government, changing the constitution of the Supreme Court of the United States, transforming private enterprises to public property, and the substitution of silver for gold as the standard of value.

In our judgment the question of the free coinage of silver is not the most important of these proposed experiments. But its effects, if adopted, would be most immediately felt by all the people, and therefore it is the uppermost theme in current discussion. It is affirmed that ministers, whose training has not been in commercial and financial lines, are not qualified to judge this question. When we consider that campaign orators who pose as financiers are positively contradicting their own statements of a few months ago, and laboring to show how utterly unreasonable their former positions were, and when we remember that the same great political conventions have within two or three months unequivocally declared themselves first on one side and then on the other, ministers need not hesitate to admit that they cannot finally decide the matter. Yet they are called to vote on it, and they ought to be able to counsel others as to what moral principles are involved in it. Therefore we are glad to present this week the matured convictions of a business man of long experience, who commands the entire confidence of all who know him. Thousands, we are sure, will read Mr. Capen's article because of the information it gives, and will thereby be better able to form their own conclusions.

The fact which ought to be kept foremost in view is that all these proposals are experiments. They were not presented by the political party now in power, so far as the Administration represents it. They are not advocated by the party which the present Administration displaced. They are remedies which a new organization wishes to try, an organization which has adopted the name, but not the principles, of the Democratic party. With the purpose to correct widespread evils and to remove serious discontent we heartily sympathize. But thoughtful men do not venture on experiments without carefully weighing the risks where failure would insure far greater evils. Confining ourselves to the question of free coinage, the risks appear the greater because those who advocate it do not appear to be at all certain what its results will be. Not only were many of its most ardent supporters as ardently opposed to it a very short time ago, but their arguments for free coinage often contradict one another. To one section they insist that if the Government would put its stamp without limit on every piece of 371¼ grains of silver, when asked to do so, each piece would be worth 100 cents in gold. To another section they as earnestly declare that the same amount of silver would be worth only fifty cents, and that debts could be paid at half the present value. Since both these results cannot follow, may it not be possible that politicians are promising to different sorts of people what those people are supposed to want, without very clear perception of what the consequences of the experiment will be in either case?

But, further, those who fear the bankruptcy of the Government, if it should undertake obligations which other nations refuse, are assured that the experiment may safely be tried, because the Government would not agree to make the silver dollar equal to gold if free coinage should become law. The government would only stamp 371¼ grains of silver as a dollar of the United States, and it would be worth to the owner only the market price of the silver in it, as the Mexican dollar now is. This is true, but we have nowhere seen it stated that if the experiment should fail, and the Government should wish again to resume its place with leading nations, it would be compelled either to repudiate its promise stamped on the silver dollar or to redeem it in gold. That would mean that the people would pay a very high price to recover from the experiment to bring new prosperity by cheapening their currency. The path toward repudiation is an easy descent, but it quickly grows steeper, and with every downward step the climbing back will be harder. Is prosperity to be found at the bottom of that road? The thoughtful citizen does not deny that there are serious evils to be remedied. But he will pause before he votes to adopt untried experiments whose cost he cannot measure, proposed by men who have never shown themselves masters of finance.

THE END OF THE CENTURY.

This phrase in its French equivalent has become the synonym of frivolity. The loose ends of sentiment grown careless or degraded, the thoughtless luxuries and weak self-indulgences of the time, the eccentricities of an unmoral and rebellious pictorial and literary art are all fin de siècle.

Yet to one who looks deeper there never was a time of more profound moral earnestness than these closing years of the century, and hardly ever a time with larger elements of hope. The eddies of the stream may carry froth and scum and carry them backward along the shore, but the current of the stream is deeper than it has ever been and it is moving on toward better days. There may be rocks ahead, like the ledge of Niagara, upon which institutions may be wrecked and opinions perish, but the stream of God's purpose for man's redemption cannot be turned back or greatly hindered by any possible change or revolution.

Evidences of this latent seriousness of humanity in our own time might be adduced from many quarters. Even the rebellious attitude of art and literature is a sign of impatience rather than of despair. That men are tired of accustomed forms, and are venturing into even dangerous and forbidden quarters, does not mean mere blank degeneracy. Such movements have always preceded and prepared the way for the new and sound development of art. So a broad view of the present political campaign lends itself, on the whole, to a diagnosis of popular health rather than disease. The unprecedented confession of ignorance and desire to know in the demand which has circulated books and documents on the money question through the country by the million is a sign of health. The very determination to see justice done in business relations, which stands back of the mistaken positions of the Chicago platform, is a proof of wholesome tendencies. Unrest is not a sign of decrepitude but a movement of life. No age, in fact, has ever had a better right to call itself heroic, both in suffering and action, than this finical and self-depreciatory age in which we live. It does not need a great war to prove that the heroic spirit is not dead. Every railroad accident and fire and shipwreck, if it shows the craven weakness of some is sure to bring out the heroism of others. We lack only an occasion and a leader and the old heroic age will come again. Nor is it only in Christian nations that this unspoiled fountain of heroic deeds still flows. In Lippincott's magazine for October the story is told of a Goorkha private in the British Indian army, who of his own motion saluted the flag, leaped upon the parapet and drew the fire of the enemy, that the little troop to which he belonged might attack them when their guns were empty. Every bullet missed the conspicuous mark and he was a sharer of the victory. There is at least one man in every country village in America who would do as much for the flag. He is not a boaster, probably not much of a talker, but the capacity for self-sacrifice is there and would not fail. And in the endurance and steady faithfulness of the self-respecting poor, of women who count labor nothing and deprivation a delight, if they may help their children upward and make their homes places of strength and peace, there is a fountain of heroism which never yet has failed.

It would be a reproach to God and man alike if the mere froth of the current represented the real tendencies of the time. We may set our faces toward the future with cheerful hearts assured that the end and the beginning of the old century and the new are in stronger and better hands than ours.

STRIKING PERSONAL SPIRITUAL EXPERIENCES.

We may not have them often but probably everybody experiences them at times. They are not always easy to define or describe but they are unmistakable and deeply impressive. They become the turning points of our lives. Whether they be bitter or gracious, they leave us different men or women. Some impart a new, keener, more overwhelming sense of our guilt before God. Some take the form of special mercies. Some afford new revelations of the divine goodness and love. Some teach us as never before the deep meaning and beauty of human, spiritual sympathy and helpfulness.

The particular power of such an experience lies in the fact that it emphasizes our individuality. It singles us out for the time from our fellow-beings and brings us face to face, so to speak, with our Creator and Lord. We perceive more clearly than ever our personal relation to him. We learn afresh that no one can interpose between us and him, that it is he whom we offend by our sins, whom we cause to rejoice when we conquer temptation and whose sympathy and aid are offered us freely.

Our striking personal spiritual experiences may have other features, but this is the secret of their impressiveness. They strip away our excuses and expose our self-deceptions. They reveal the strength of our actual righteousness and the true direction of our future Christian progress. They give us a new and corrected impulse in the spiritual life. Most of all, if we are truly and rightly receptive, we are made more tender and loving, more happy and winsome, in the quality of our piety.

CURRENT HISTORY.

Domestic Politics.

The Republican caucuses in Massachusetts last week brought out an unprecedented number of voters who, in the main, revealed a very decided intention that none but men of the highest character and greatest ability should appeal to the voters of the State at the coming election. In several cases men of decidedly indifferent, if not bad, characters were set aside. As it is generally conceded that a Republican nomination this year in Massachusetts is equivalent to election, save, perhaps, in some county and municipal offices, the action of the caucuses is all the more creditable, for the temptation is strong under such circumstances for the machine to push to the front men of disreputable character, trusting that they will be carried into office by the overwhelming movement of voters toward the party on whose platform they stand. The nomination of Rev. S. J. Barrows of the Christian Register by the Republicans of the Tenth Congressional District is a decided victory for good citizenship. Mr. W. Murray Crane is one of the ablest, most popular and trusted business men of western Massachusetts, in every way worthy of nomination to the office of lieutenant governor.

Rarely, if ever, have we had a better opportunity to see in all its hideous nakedness the pernicious tyranny of partisanship than we are having now in watching the effort of Democratic partisans in the Eastern States to adjust themselves to the new conditions created by the action of the Democratic convention in Chicago. Men in fourteen States who in May and June personally believed in committing their party to the gold standard—or, at least, to international bimetallism dependent upon international co operation—men who in Congress and out of it fought the income tax tooth and nail, men who went to the Chicago convention, fought the free silver majority and when defeated refused to participate in the balloting for candidates, have indorsed the Chicago platform and candidates.

The chairman of the New York Democratic convention held in Buffalo last week was a Tammany chieftain. None of the prominent old-time party leaders were present. Senator Hill really controlled the convention, although not present and in theory neutral. The candidate for governor, Mr. John Boyd Thacher, accepts the nomination with the understanding that he repudiates the Chicago platform but will vote for the Chicago nominees, and it is understood that all the convention did was done for the sake of "regularity." Senator Hill has deliberated so long that nothing that he may do or say will count for much, whichever faction of the party he sides with. The sound money Democrats, who already have elected two electors at large, have called a State convention to be held in Brooklyn this week, and they will nominate men for all the State offices as well as complete an electoral ticket. From this time on there will be a bitter fight between the two wings of the party, and no one who has knowledge of the relative degree of character and intelligence of the leaders of both factions can have much doubt as to the ultimate result.

A letter from Secretary of the Treasury Carlisle, written to a citizen asking for information, in which Mr. Carlisle contends that in certain contingencies it would be the duty of the United States treasurer to give a gold dollar in exchange for a silver dollar were the demand for the redemption made, has stirred the wrath of Mr. Bryan and the friends of silver, but it has served a useful purpose in calling attention to the ominous disparity between our narrow stock of gold in the treasury and the huge structure of national obligation which rests thereon.

Mr. Bryan has been speaking in the South during the past week, and on Saturday last addressed the citizens of Washington, D. C. Mr. McKinley has welcomed 100,000 visitors to Canton and addressed them with customary tact and sense. The candidates of the National Democratic party, Generals Palmer and Buckner, have begun a campaign of speaking which will continue until the election is over. Mr. Bourke Cochran has returned from a tour to leading Western cities like Chicago, Omaha and Minneapolis, where he has drawn together crowds numbering ten thousand and more. Now that Mr. Reed is free to leave Maine he is in greater demand than any Republican speaker, and from this time on will be found hard at work. Ex-President Harrison will soon begin a tour throughout the States of the Interior, speaking from the rear platforms of railway trains. It is impossible to name men of equal caliber who are enlisted in Mr. Bryan's behalf. Senator Teller of Colorado, who had planned to speak in the East, has decided not to do so. Senator Tillman's invasion of Pennsylvania can scarcely be described as successful, and, while Governor Altgeld of Illinois has felt it necessary to reply to the speech of Hon. Carl Schurz, he probably has enough to do to look after his own interests in Illinois without journeying far beyond its bounds. The revised official figures of the Arkansas and Maine elections indicate that the Democratic plurality in Arkansas was 52,451 and the Republican plurality in Maine was 48,461.

Spain's Plight.

With a Carlist uprising at home, a formidable revolt in the Philippine Islands and a long continued and successful revolution in Cuba to face, Spain's present plight would win for her the sympathy of the world, did she deserve it. But this is not an era of sympathy between nations, as none know better than the liberty loving, law-respecting Moslem and Christian subjects of Turkey. Those who have recently traveled through Spain report that its responsible statesmen and its most intelligent citizens realize perfectly how futile is the struggle of the nation to preserve its present possessions. But, impelled by the old pride, the Spanish people struggle madly on, devising new forms of taxation, pledging additional sources of revenue to the money lenders of Europe and shipping off to Cuba the young men and boys, whom they never expect to see again. General Weyler's past failure makes it almost certain that he cannot retrieve his reputation in the future, for the revolutionists, and not he, have gained in strength during the summer season of enforced waiting. Moreover, the extreme measures, military and civil, to which General Weyler has resorted have only served to drive into the ranks of Spain's enemies more and more of Cuba's men of property. Just now the attempt to force Cuban bankers and merchants to accept at par a debased paper money is working as it always does. Business is at a standstill. Those who possess gold are sending it out of the country to safer places of deposit, and men of foresight are preparing for events of decisive import between this and Christmas. Alas, that not a few citizens of the United States, for reasons not altogether dissimilar, have felt it necessary to deposit large sums of gold in Canadian banks during the past two months.

Italy Accepts Abyssinia's Terms.

King Menelek of Abyssinia and President Kruger of the Transvaal Republic can be cited as the best contemporary illustrations of the falsity of the saying that God is on the side of the heaviest battalions. The one, representing the ancient Christian people of North Africa, has defeated in battle and dictated terms to one of the members of Europe's Triple Alliance. The other, representing the sturdy, liberty-loving Dutch stock, has held at bay greedy officials of semi-imperial and wealthy corporations and has outwitted the British colonial secretary. When Italy, following the example of her more powerful European neighbors, began planting colonies in Africa, she necessarily incurred military and financial responsibilities that her internal economy did not warrant. As a consequence today she stands impotent before the dark-skinned, ancient people whom she tried to rob; her burden of debt is far larger than it would have been if a saner policy had been followed; thousands of her sons have perished in a vain endeavor to conquer a warlike people; and now she is told that she must exactly define the limits of her province of Erythrea and then remain within it. In addition 2,000,000 francs must be paid into the treasury of King Menelek, not, however, as tribute money, but as a fair recompense for expense incurred by him while supporting the large number of Italian prisoners of war, captured at the battle of Adowa and treated handsomely by him ever since.

The Sultan Unmolested.

Lord Salisbury, Sir Charles Dilke, Lord Rosebery, and even Mr. Gladstone, have joined during the past week in asking the indignant people of Great Britain whether they realize what it means for Great Britain to attempt unaided to discipline the Turkish assassin. Lord Salisbury did it in a letter sent by his son, Lord Cecil, to a constituent. Sir Charles Dilke did it in one of his weighty letters in the London press analyzing the situation on the Continent and picturing Britain's isolation and weak moral position so long as she clings to Egypt. Lord Rosebery did it by calling attention to the fact that as yet Russia has given no intimation that she has changed the position taken by her in August, 1895, when she served notice that she would not tolerate any interference with Turkish affairs which was not indorsed by the Powers, herself included. Mr. Gladstone did it by refusing to attend or countenance any mass meeting at which resolutions were to be introduced demanding instant and independent action by Great Britain.

As a consequence of this cry of "Halt," British public opinion is not as belligerent as it was a week ago, and while a large number of mass meetings were held last week and while the columns of all the newspapers are filled with communications, reports of addresses and indignant editorials, men at the helm realize that so long as Great Britain is as friendless as she now is and Russia as supreme little can be done without incurring risks that are momentous.

Without an ally in Europe some in Great Britain now ask, Why may not an alliance with the United States be formed? and the question has been asked seriously lately by those who not long since would have scoffed at it. It would require an unlikely chain of events to bring that to pass soon, if ever. Meanwhile some of Russia's present allies may soon be won from her, or while the czar is in Scotland, as he will be for the next two weeks, an understanding between the great rivals may be gained, which will settle not only the immediate crisis in Constantinople but the many questions at issue between the Russian bear and British lion. God speed the day!

From Turkey itself come reports of fresh massacres of Armenians near Kharpoot, of revolts among the Turkish soldiery, of Russian inspection of and assistance in manning the Turkish forts on the Dardanelles, and the appeal to foreign embassies for aid from foreigners resident in and about Constantinople. Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Frances Willard have been over to Marseilles, visited the Armenian refugees there, and they issued an appeal for funds with which to transport them to this country.

NOTES.

The eminent New York city lawyer, Henry Hill Anderson, who died suddenly at York Harbor, Me., last week, was a son of Rev. Dr. Rufus Anderson, secretary of the A. B. C. F. M. for so many years.

Some time next month they are to dedicate a memorial to the war correspondents of the Civil War, which is to be erected at Gapland, Md. Of names known to our constituency Albert D. Richardson and Charles C. Coffin are to have a place on the memorial tablets.

It is gratifying to note that at the National Association of Master Builders' meeting in Buffalo, N. Y., last week resolutions, committing the association and its affiliated bodies to support of the movement for an expert commission to control all Federal architectural work, were adopted unanimously.

Prof. G. Frederick Wright of Oberlin, in

The Nation, describes the political and economic situation of Nebraska, which he has just visited. He reports that the severest critics of Mr. Bryan that he has found are among his neighbors in Lincoln. "His star has already passed its zenith. He never has carried his own State and does not seem likely ever to do so."

Miss Grace Kimball, whose relief work at Van as a medical missionary has made her famous, has arrived in New York. She describes United States Minister Terrell as wanting, not only in diplomacy, but in willingness to help American citizens. Nor does she hesitate to affirm that he is more desirous of retaining the good will of the sultan than he is of succoring oppressed Armenians or serving Americans.

The easy British victory at Dongola, with all that it implies, must cheer the British Ministry and dispirit the force of dervishes in the Soudan, whither the British army will now press on; for there is little or no attempt in Great Britain now to conceal the fact that the real animus of the trip up the Nile is to reconquer and hold forever the territory which naturally belongs to and is necessary for the welfare of Egypt.

The business situation in Japan is far from healthy. The Japan Mail of Aug. 1 says: "The land tax and other imposts due in September, the recent disastrous storms and the depression in the principal staples of export, tea and silk, have brought matters to a crisis. . . . The silk trade is in a desperate plight, the American demand has fallen to next to nothing, waste silk is equally lifeless—no settlements, no quotations."

Not until there is more evidence forthcoming will it be safe to believe that the arrests of Messrs. Tynan, Bell and their colleagues have all the significance that at first was given to them. That they had evil intentions it is useless to dispute, but that a working alliance between Russian Nihilists and Irish Fenians has been perfected and that the czar's life would have been imperiled during his visit in Scotland, had not these men been captured, remains to be proved. France as yet has not given Tynan over to the British authorities, and she may not.

The latest letters from Madagascar, sent by the missionaries of the London Missionary Society to its London headquarters, show how impotent the French are as rulers and what disasters to the cause of Christian missions have already come from the substitution of Latin for Anglo Saxon powers behind the throne Over 200 of the mission stations have been destroyed by the insurgents, business is at a standstill and a condition of chaos bordering on anarchy prevails. News from Mexico tells how on the 15th a mob attacked the Presbyterian church at Aguas Calientes, and on the 16th attacked the Protestant college in the same city. The matter has been called to the attention of United States Minister Ransom.

